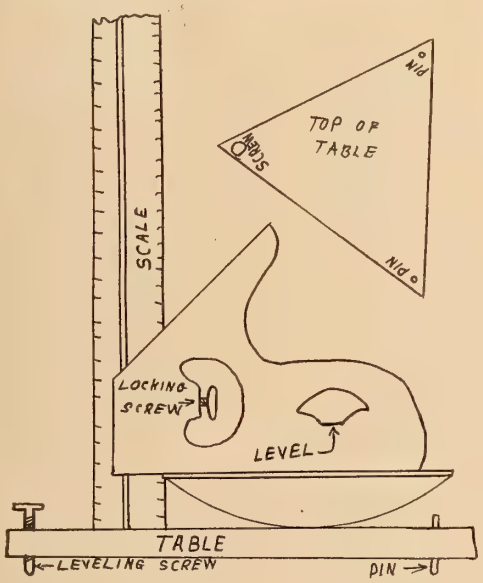
EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Condenser Lenses

Orrin Keuther, Projectionist Majestic Theatre Company, Sheboygan, Wis., has the following to say:

In September 13 issue is an article regarding measuring plano convex condenser lenses. I find the chart accompanying it to be an excellent idea, but do not believe one can measure a lens very accurately by using an outside caliper, because no matter how careful one may be, there is a certain amount of give in so large a caliper. Also, I find it rather hard to find exactly the highest or thickest point of the lens.

However, thanks are due the contributor of the idea, and now I wish to give my own idea of the best method of measuring the focal length of plano convex lenses.



In the drawing the "table" may be a drawing board, or anything with a perfectly level surface. "A" is a top view of one made three cornered, which is a very convenient form for leveling. There may be one leveling screw, with pins in the other corners, or a pin in one corner and screws in the other two.

Having made the table level, lay the lens down with its curved surface underneath, as shown. Next, using a combination scale and level, bring the face of the lens to a perfect level, in the manner shown. Tighten up the thumb screw in the level and you have a correct measurement of the lens thickness. This of course goes with the chart in September 13 issue.

Excellent

The plan is excellent, in so far as securing absolutely accurate results be concerned, but I don't quite see what difference it makes whether the table be level or not. If you set the end of the scale on the surface of the bench or table and bring the sliding dingus down on the flat surface the result is the thickness, whether the table top be level or not, so far as I can see. Of course the surface itself must be a perfect plane, but the plane being level with relation to the earth—well, I don't see that part of it. Many thanks for your thoughtfulness in contributing the idea.

Question No. 156—Suppose you had a heavy projection angle. A sixteen foot picture would serve the auditorium, but the exhibitor demanded a twenty-two footer. Would you protest, and if so what would you say about the effect of the projection angle with relation to increase in picture size?

Question No. 157—Give us your views with relation to the proper limits for picture size, both minumum and maximum, in any given auditorium. Watch your step here. This is one to think over carefully and exercise your gray matter on. I shall hope for some really good answers to this.

Question No. 158—Explain your views as to the relation of picture size and distance of screen from front row of seats.

Question No. 160—Just what is the relation between screen brilliancy and the size of the picture?

NOTE—I have departed from the numbering and wording of the questions as printed in the Bluebook, but this really is advantageous in that it digs a bit deeper into your real knowledge, and that is what we are after. You will find the information necessary to answer every one of these questions in the Bluebook, and mostly you can locate it pretty closely by searching the list of questions therein.

My Opinion

A projectionist no matter who or where he is, I think it best to not publish that—says:

One of our locals near here refused to admit incompetent men, even though they had a license. They had trouble, the courts ruled against their picketing and they are in a jam. Apparently the near-projectionists outside the organization got strong enough to make trouble. At a recent meeting one of our members spoke concerning not admitting any more men to membership unless they were real good, but our Business Agent was in strong opposition to that idea.

Personally I am STRONG for a local composed of competent projectionists, and let those of mediocre ability stay out. What is your opinion?

I don't like to discuss these matters too much, because this department is necessarily "for" good, efficient projection. It is NOT a union organ, or the "organ" of anything else except high grade projection. However, under the conditions that very thing and the union are so badly mixed that it is impossible to avoid discussing the union attitude towards certain things, if this department is to serve its highest and best purpose. Such discussion is, however, ALWAYS WHOLLY UNDERTAKEN WITH THE IDEA OF WORKING FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE RESULT UPON THE THEATRE SCREEN, which latter is in large measure dependent directly upon the ability of the man in the projection room, and this matter certainly has much to do with that.

My Answer

My answer is that if it were a practical thing to do I would certainly NOT admit to membership any man who had served less than one year of actual, bona-fide apprenticeship and who could demonstrate his ability, both as to practise and theoretical knowledge of projection.

BUT unfortunately that apparently is not a really practical thing to do, under present conditions. Here is what I believe to be the only practical thing to do in the situation, until such time as exhibitors as a whole come to a realization and understanding of the value of high grade knowledge in the projection room.

(A)—Use every possible endeavor to secure as thoroughly competent an official examination as possible where there is a license law. Put some real energy into that effort.

(B)—Adopt as high a standard for admission to the local as it seems practicable to do, and stick rigidly to that standard, remembering that admission to the local sets the seal of approval of the union on the man, or it is so regarded by the exhibitor.

(C)—Once the man is admitted, grade your work, strictly along the lines of known ability. That is to say, make it known to the new member that he must start working at the least desirable jobs, and may only be advanced to better or more desirable jobs when by his work AND a further examination he has established his right to do so.

That is a crude statement of my present ideas in this matter. I can see nothing unworkable in it. Its germinal idea is to MAKE IT A REAL OBJECT TO MEMBERS TO IMPROVE THEIR WORK AND KNOWLEDGE. If any of you can see anything wrong with the idea, as outlined, or can offer suggestion for its improvement, let him stand forth and be heard. Name will be suppressed if desired.

What Is It?

John M. Jones, Jr., Charlotte, N. C., hands us a clipping from a daily paper, presumably published in Charlotte, in which appears a want ad beginning: "Wanted—Position as theatre projectorist. Three years' experience and can run any make of machine."

Jones asks for my opinion as to what a "Projectorist" is. Wants to know if it is a hybrid produced by crossing a projectionist and an operator. Well, I dunno! Mebby. Anyhow, I'll bet he can't "run any make of machine." I'd like to try him on a linotype or a billing machine. Bet he'd fall down flatter than a pancake. Maybe he could run any make of motion picture projector, and maybe that was what he meant, but if he is so gosh blamed expert why in heck don't he learn the right names of things connected with his work?

Bluebook School—Answers 128-132

Question No. 128—What range of knowledge is it necessary that the modern projectionist possess?

Daniel Constantino, Easton, Pa., (who also has come in with replies to all the questions in which his name is missing—very good ones, too), James J. Hobdell, East Boston, Mass.; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.; Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; I. L. Langley, San Antonio, Texas; Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ontario and L. D. Morton, Minneapolis, Minn., have all taken a fairly good shot at this one. I finally decided upon Morton's answer as bes tsuited to publication. He says:

The modern projectionist has charge of the reproduction upon the screen of the work of artists of, in any case, high ability. Unless he has the necessary pride and ambition to excel in his work, plus practical and technical knowledge sufficient to enable him to get the best from the various subjects he will be called upon to project that his equipment is capable of producing, then his work will not be high grade, and may be very far removed from that level.

The knowledge requisite to high grade work in projection covers a very wide range. A real projectionist will seek to learn all he possibly can of electrical action, so far as it has to do with power and light in connection with motion picture projection, because unless he has such knowledge he cannot possibly cause his equipment (motors, rectifiers, transformers, light source, etc), to work efficiently. For very obvious reasons he will study light action through lenses, and must have a good knowledge of light action in general. Since he will take charge of and be responsible for the adjustment, and in many instances the repair of a mechanism which must function with extreme accuracy, he must know mechanics and have considerable ability therein.

He must understand the effect of projection angles, and what angles are allowable and what prohibitive. He must have a real and comprehensive knowledge of screen surfaces, particularly with relation to what types are suited to local conditions of auditorium depth and width. He must have a good knowledge of auditorium lighting, insofar as it affects what the audience sees upon the screen, these later named items of knowledge enabling him to talk understandingly and intelligently to the exhibitor or manager, and to induce him to work with him constructively to the betterment of results in the theatre

In addition to all this he must or should have a portion of that intangible thing called "artistic sense," which will enable him to make intelligent judgment as to whether or not the results upon his screen are what they should be.

There, gentlemen, if that is a sample of San Antonio, let us have more from that fair city. Incidentally Hobdell and Fell both made excellent replies.

Question No. 129—In just what way, and to what extent may or can the projectionist be said to redirect the photoplay?

All the before named, plus Karl H. Sommermeyer, Marietta, Minesota, made correct replies. I think Hanover gives us the most enlightening answer. He says:

I think it hardly correct to say the projectionist "re-directs" the photoplay, though it lies within his power to totally alter the effect of many scenes, and to more or less injure the effect or enhance the effect of all scenes in which there are moving objects. It is an indisputable fact that a correct projection speed is absolutely essential in order to display a motion picture scene before an audience at its highest entertainment value. It is also an indisputable fact that wrong projection speed may, and often does render a beautifully acted scene farcial, or even totally ridiculous, thus ruining the effect the director and artists worked hard to obtain.

The projectionist has it within his power to render upon the screen each scene of a photoplay in the way it was originally acted before the camera, or by wrong projection speed to render it upon the screen as something very different, in effect, from what the camera "shot," and to this extent the projectionist certainly can and does alter the effect of the work of the director. Possibly that might or might not be termed "re-directing," but anyhow it is something very close akin thereto.

That is what I call a well reasoned, constructive answer. Put THOUGHT into your answers, gentlemen. That's the real idea of this whole stunt—that and to enable you to really study your Bluebook, and thus be able to get the best possible value out of it.

Question No. 130—In what way is projection hampered, insofar as concerns artistic results, by wrongly made schedules?

Morton, Constantino, Hobdell, Fell, Burnett, Dobson, Langley, Hanover, Dobson and Thomas Allen, Rochester, N. Y., all made good. Burnett, I think, made the best. His reply reads:

Theatres employing a "schedule," of course establish a fixed time for the show, and usually make no real effort to trim or pad the show to fit it. The projectionist is not permitted to vary from the time set for the projection of the production or productions, regardless of the fact that there may be a rather wide difference in footage from day to day.

This of course means that he cannot control projection speed to any extent, in an endeavor to produce naturalness of action on the screen. therefore it of course follows that projection is hampered, and often very greatly, too, by schedules which do not fit the show ,or shows which do not fit the schedule.

Question No. 131—What is the only correct manner of making a projection time schedule?

Burnett, Dobson, Sommermeyer, Hanover, Fell, Langley, Hobdell and Allan all replied essentially correctly, though some answers were not what they might have been in the matter of completeness. I shall publish the reply of Dobson, who sets matters forth thus:

The correct way to make a time schedule is to first project the picture portion of the programme, carefully projecting each scene at a speed which will produce the most artistic results upon the screen, and then either make the schedule time to fit the correct projection time or else trim the footage to fit the schedule at correct projection speed, as determined by the first showing.

It may be necessary to leave out some part of the programme, such as, for instance, a single reel subject.

Question No. 132—What is one of the highest functions of the projectionist, and what have YOU done, or tried to do to impress upon YOUR manager the box-office advantage of having each scene of the photoplays you project placed before audiences at the exact speed of projection best calculated to bring out its highest value?

Dobson, Hobdell, Burnett, Fell, Hanover, Langley, Constantino and Allan made good. Fell, though, has much the best of it because his answer shows that consistent, persistent effort does get results. He says:

One of the highest functions of the projectionists is to project his "show" in a way which will place before the audience as nearly as may be, the idea or ideas of the actors and directors who made the original scene.

I am glad to be able to say that I have always been one who preached projection to my manager, especially with regard to the speed of projection. Many times I have thought it a mere waste of breath and energy when the conversation was finished, and Friend Manager would wind it up with: "That's all right, but the people would not appreciate it any more." I have even tried to induce the organist to back me up by complaining about wrong projection speed, and in one case he did, but with results the same as reward—my own efforts.

Today, however, I am thankful to say the conditions are better. There is not a day that Mr. Brown, my manager, and I don't have our little talk on projection, and to a certain extent I am allowed to time my own show. But even yet there are times when he demands more speed, whereupon I try to point out to him where it is wrong, whereupon he usually says: "Well, do the best you can," which means to me naturalness, even though a slight dent may be put into friend schedule.

Evidently your manager is amenable to reason. I wish there were more of that type. Dobson replied briefly, as follows:

As stated before, the real JOB of the projectionist is to watch the screen and so regulate the projector speed that the action on the screen will be natural—that is, the same as the speed of taking the picture.

My own case as an example: The manager leaves the making of the schedule entirely to me, and when projecting the first show I keep track of the speed of the picture, running it at a speed that will make the action the most natural, then I make up a schedule that will run two hours even, without racing anything, I may only run a news reel once in the entire evening, and some times even run the comedy only once.

I have also talked to Friend Manager and explained to him just the harm there is in running a picture fast, and I'm proud to say that he sees my way about it.

RESULT: We have a rep. for not "jamming them through," under any circumstances.

He Dares Me

Arthur Gray, Boston, Mass., says:

Friend Richardson: I am planning to prepare an article dealing with some of those earlier lectures you delivered, and if you dare to censor one jot or tittle of the credit and commendation I shall hand you—for publication—then, b' gosh, I'll have George Edwards tell the world, through his own excellent little mouthpiece, exactly what he said to me, to wit: "By golly, you can't beat it. The Old Boy's there!" I thought I'd never be able to pry Edwards away from the bundle of old Moving Picture Worlds I had with me.

By the way, I'm in a bad fix. There is a brand new daughter in my home and friend wife will hardly let me in the house for fear I'll name her Cinephor, Parabolic or some such name.

Lay Off "Carbolic"

Lay off on the Parabolic. Don't wish it on kidlets, for all the boys call the parabolic condenser the "carbolic," and say, Nell's bells! you wouldn't want—well, anyhow, if I knew the home address I'd write the squaw to name Kidlets herself—quick!

So Edwards was surprised by the old departments, was he? Well, by gum, I'm a bit surprised myself sometimes when I look through them, hunting for something. I will be interested in knowing just how some one else viewed my lectural efforts in the earlier days, but never mind talking "me" too much. Just tell us what your own reaction to the work I was trying to do was, and what you think its real effect was.

For Ponca City

D. E. Taylor, Projectionist Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, So. Dakota, says:

In one of the September issues a brother in Ponca City Oklahoma, describes trouble he has with his Simplex projectors. If he has not yet located it perhaps I can help him.

In the first place, when you make an adjustment, let it severely alone for a few weeks. One cannot get results and be altering the mechanical adjustments every few days. Let your projectors do a part of their own adjusting. Every mechanism, no matter what it is, possesses some very human traits. Here are a few suggestions: Take film trap out and remove tension shoes. Are the springs even? If they are you cannot judge positively by that. Examine the film trap shoes. One must be worn more than the other. Examine spring in trap on worm shoe side. That one maintains its tension while the other has given in. There are no two springs alike. I have had new springs do that. The remedy is new springs and film trap shoes. If that doesn't effect a remedy, take the springs to a jeweler and have him test them for you. That one set of springs being of uneven tension can ruin the performance of the whole projector, because it may ruin the definition of the picture. What I have told you is what I had myself to do in similar trouble. The trouble might be in the intermittent film guide, but what I have said is what many projectionists do not seem to understand.

In August 23 issue F. S. Goolsby, Brinkley, Ark., says he is considering the installation of Delco for Mazda. Think it over, brother. Why would not a four cylinder machine do better? Delco was made for the farmer, where its performance is not vital to his profits. I would say get a four cylinder machine, at least 100 per cent. over the required capacity. It will pay. Look at the Universal sets made for projection.

I have offered a couple of suggestions Now help me on this: The North West Service Corporation supplies me with highly fluctuating voltage. It is A. C. One minute I may be pulling fifty amperes and three minutes thereafter it is down to thirty. Same on the house lights. Answer this by diagram if possible. Don't let Rich do it all. Let's hear from Gray on this. The months the juice does that our bills are higher.

As I understand it, what brother Taylor wants is a diagram of some plan for stabilizing the voltage ,or equalizing it, rather. So far as I know, that can't be done. There is such a thing as a voltage equalizer or "stabilizer," I believe, but who makes it I don't know, nor do I know how expensive it is. If any one can offer a helpful suggestion let him send it directly to brother Taylor as well as to the department.

Time 1 to 11, continuous. Carbons ⅝ above and below. Arc voltage 50. Amperes at arc 50. Generator to arc 152 feet. Size of circuit wire No. 4. Voltage drop in line 3.81 (Volts or percent.—Ed.) Upper crater diameter ⅜ in. Projection distance 108 feet. Width of picture 12 ft. 4 in. Projection lens working distance 6⅜ in. Face of converging lens to film 17½ in. Crater to face of collector lens 3¼ in. Spot diameter (about) 1¾ in. Plano convex condenser. 6½ collector and 7½ converging lens. Aperture .9062 in. x .6796. Approximate width of master blade of rotating shutter. 5 in.

Film Cements

Clell Jay, Projectionist, New Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., has the following to say about film cements. If it is all true it is enlightening—the many uses he suggests for film cement. He says:

In my cub days when we ran out of "fillum cement" the boss would dash across to the corner drugstore and get a mixture of collodion and ether. His best recommendation was that "it smelled like boughten cement."

In those days the films usually reached us off a "circuit," and we found splices made with glue, chewing gum, "new skin," coal tar and even safety pins, but on our circuit the use of the collodion mixture seemed fairly universal.

After some study and a lot of experimenting I found that cement which was to some extent a celluloid solvent gave best results, since it really, if properly used, made a weld, instead of merely sticking the film together, more or less insecurely. Of course all that is well known now, but in those days what we did NOT know would have made quite some volume.

Acetone of a pure quality is, I believe, the most rapid colluloid solvent known and the celluloid disolves in it without swelling as it does in Amyl Acetate, yet if we use acetone alone the celluloid upon drying has a matte effect, or sometimes it turns white. Also the free acetone is quite thick, and causes the film to wrinkle when drying. However, if we use a mixture of Acetone and Amyl Acetate, varying from equal parts to 40 of amyl to 60 of acetone, dissolving sufficient clear film stock in the mixture to make it of the consistency of syrup, we have what I believe to be an ideal cement. And that's that.

pail or wash tub for instance. Dissolve lye in about the proportions of one can to two ordinary size pails of water. More lye won't do any harm. Into this solution run the film loosely, so that the solution can get at all parts of it. Weight the film down with a board until it is completely covered with the solution. Leave in the solution for an hour, stirring it around once in a while, so that the lye will be sure to reach every part of the film. At the end of that time you should find the emulsion entirely gone, and the film clear and clean.

Many Uses For Cement

It may be of interest to many to know that film cement made as per foreging instructions may be used for many household purposes. It is water proof, acid proof, moisture proof and alkali proof. Oil does not affect it, neither does atmospheric changes. It will successfully mend cloth, wood, china, ivory, glass and rubber which is not under tension, as well as many other things. It is best to apply two or more coats before pressing the parts together, especially articles which are porous. The surfaces to which it is applied must, of course, be clean. It is great around an auto, as it will stand considerable heat, provided there be no open flame. It may be made more elastic for household purposes by the addition of a small and varying portion of castor oil, with which it blends readily.

Sh-h-h! A secret! Sh-h-h! Our old friend "banana oil" enamel bronzing liquid is nothing but a mixture of about four ounces of celluloid, dissolved in about ten ounces each of acetone and amyle acetate, to which mixture something like twenty ounces of benzine is added. Beautiful transparent lacquers are made from the mixtures of celluloid above described, to which varying amounts of white shellac and other fine gums are added.

I rode home today in a beautiful gasoline buggy. Its body was finished in the latest, approved fashion, but it was merely our friend film cement in modified form, for the beautiful weatherproof finish of the handsome joy bus was a pyroxalin varnish, and pyroxalin is merely another name for the celluliod ribbons we projectionists handle every day.

I should have metioned that the cement, in two or three coat applications, is one of the finest shoe repair cements I have ever encountered, as it is possible by its use, and clamping, to apply a leather sole that will stay put without sewing or pegs. The surfaces must be clean and the pores of the leather well filled.

I hope my little talk on film cements and the celluloid ribbons which are our "pie tickets" will be of interest to projectionists, as well as to that other bunch of good fellows' the "operators."

Well I'll be editorially darned. According to brother Jay, when you want to half sole your shoes or patch your pants all you've to do is get busy with the cement bottle. I don't know how much of this dope will work out, but anyhow it is interesting, and you can all try it yourselves. Remember, though, that he speaks only of the acetone —amyl acetate cements.

I Don't Know

W. C. Budge, Projectionist, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, N. Y., says:

Am using the Stillar Arc lamp, taking current through a rectifier. The supply is 60 cycle, 110 volt, single phase. I have the rectifier set for 13 amperes at 55 volts, but there is a fluctuation of as much as three amperes with the distance of the carbons. Am using 11-32 positive and 9-32 negative. With these sizes the positive burns away the most rapidly, which of course forces me to alter the distance of the mirror.

I had a discussion with Mr. DeHart, who seems to think the changing of the mirror makes no difference, but I contend that changing the distance of the mirror is the same, in effect, as though one continually changed the position of the condenser with the regular arc projection lamp.

It seems to me the mirror ought to be in a steady, or positive position, so that all the light which passes through the aperture will be received by the projection lens. Does not the same relation hold good in the matter of divergence of light beam with the mirror as with the condenser?

I had trouble with the rectifier again yesterday. There are two bulbs, each of 7.5 ampere capacity. When I strike the arc the rectifier will only hand out 7.5 amperes, sometimes for a whole reel, then it will suddenly jump up to full load. This rectifier is a new thing in the field, so I suppose there is much to learn about it.

I am handing you herewith answers to questions 140-141-142. I cannot lay claim to the idea set forth in my answer to question 140. Part of it I owe to Arthur Smith, Chief Projectionist Capitol Theatre, New York City, and part from the Fox Film Exchange —with one half of one per cent. to myself.

Friend Budge, I don't care a whoop where you got the knowledge, provided you have it. It is NOT "where I got it," but HAVE I got it that counts.

I'm not going to try to answer your questions about the mirror, because I don't know. I would say that if your positive burns away the more rapidly it either is too small or the negative is too large. Better get different size for one of them.

I'm not certain about this, but cannot you retard the arc instead of advancing the mirror? Guess I'll have to have one of the reflector lamps sent to my office for examination when such things come up, as they doubtless will in the future. Meanwhile suppose you chaps who are using mirror type lamps help Brother Budge out. His address is 218-02, 137th Avenue, Springfield Gardens, New York. You might also put the editor wise, if you will be so kind.

As to the double-tube rectifier—I guess it's new all right. I don't know anything at all about it, and certainly would have to know quite a bit before I could or would recommend it to you.

Oh yes, by the way: I think the same relation exists with regard to the divergence of the beam beyond the aperture, but that it is not nearly so important because the mirror is so much further away from the aperture than was the condenser.

Fire Education

Charles Kasey, Princess Theatre Henderson, Ky., and presumably its projectionist, sends a clipping from the "Henderson Evening Journal" in which two front page columns are taken up with description of a projection room fire at the New Castle Theatre, New Castle, Ky. In this instance the audience, as per usual, made a combined rush for the main entrance exit, even, in its mad excitement, totally overlooking a second available exit. The article says:

Sorrow and regret enveloped the town this morning when it became known that the fire which occasioned the outbrust was relatively small, and was confined entirely to the projection room; also that at no time did it endanger the audience.

One child was killed in the stampede and many were injured. The little play house seated only 250.

Who Was To Blame?

The question arises: who was to blame? Personally I hold that the theatre management itself was, because it should have known that the average audience, knowing little about such things from personal experience, goes stark raving MAD when some excitable idiot sees a bit of smoke and yells FIRE!!! at the top of his or her voice, or when a cowardly save-myself-and-damn-therest chap starts climbing over seats in a RUSH for the exit. Some one, for the good of all concerned, ought to quietly knock him down and then step on his mouth so he cannot yell, but of course this is not done, because exactly at that instant EVERYBODY becomes a maniac.

The Answer

I hold that, as I have often told you, the ONLY SAFE AND SANE PLAN is for projectionists and theatre managers to EDUCATE THEATRE AUDIENCES IN THE FACT that a PROJECTION ROOM FIRE WILL NOT, CANNOT AND DOES NOT INJURE ANY ONE, EXCEPT THROUGH SENSELESS PANIC.

To do this a series of stereopticon slides should be prepared and one should be projected to the screen, with ample time for the audience to read it, every performance for a considerable while, and then at every performance say twice a week for a considerable time and then thereafter at every performance on, say, the first and fifteenth of each month. The slides should set forth the fact that (a) the projection room is thoroughly fireproof and that in case of a fire therein, all that can possible escape from it into the auditorium is some smoke. (b) that there is absolutely NO danger of any sort whatsoever to the patron who, in case of projection room fire, remains seated and waits until those who wish to kill themselves in a senseless rush for the exits have done so, and thus left the way clear for the others to pass quietly out. (c) that it is PANIC, and NOT the fire which kills. That the one who shouts "FIRE" in a theatre, or starts a rush for the exit, is both a coward and a criminal, upon whom rests the direct responsibility for any who may be killed or injured.

The setting of these facts before theatre audiences for a considerable period of time may prove monotonous, but it nevertheless will eventually DRIVE HOME THE FACT THAT PROJECTION ROOM FIRES ARE NOT DANGEROUS, and that it is panic and not the fire which injures and kills.

From Norway

From Eivind Jorgensen, Engene per Roken, Norway, comes the following interesting letter concerning the low intensity arc lamp —reflector type. Friend Jorgensen says:

I receive the M. P. World promptly each week and just as promptly I run through its departments, giving the Projection Department especial attention. I am puzzled about one thing. Why do I so seldom read about the reflector type of lamp.

In this as well as many other European countries this type of lamp has made the high intensity, the ordinary arc and others things of the past. It has, in the recent time, developed to a great state of perfection, and it is only a question of time when the few old type lamps still in use for projection will be discarded. The advantages of the low reflector type lamp are too obvious to us to leave any room for doubt. You will have to step lively, Gentlemen of the United States of America, for in this we seem to be getting ahead of you.

Your projectionists must have neglected the study of this new lamp or there would be more about it in the department. There may be those who will think it unsuited for use in their large theatres. Some may have heard of danger due to increased heat at the aperture. Well, there is no theatre too large for the modern reflector type of lamp, and where it is necessary, cooling devices take care of the excess heat.

Who should be looked to to suggest the most efficient outfit for the projection room. Why the Projectionist, certainly. Does your manager kick about the current bills? Well, just introduce him to the low intensity lamp. Patrons complain of dim pictures? Tell Mr. Manager about the reflector type lamp. More light at less cost should interest him.

Another thing: Where there is A C supply small synchronous transverters produce the necessary D C for these lamps, and they cost but a small fraction of the outlay necessary to get a big motor generator set.

Another Thing

Still another thing. Your projection room is hot? You sweat? Well, with the low intensity lamp you won't. Carbon consumption is decreased, too. Wake up! Start to study the various types of this lamp as soon as you can!

Gosh! I'll say brother Jorgensen is no deadly enemy of the reflector type of lamp! In a footnote he says it has effected a complete revolution over there.

For his information I will say that this lamp is also making headway over here, though slowly. I do believe, though, that it will go forward much more rapidly now as we have several really good types of the lamp. The first ones introduced were very flimsy, and rather ineffective. I think highly enough of the lamp that I expect to include it in the next printing of the Bluebook. Before picking up his letter to dictate this I dictated two requests to low intensity (reflector type) lamp makers to forward full data concerning them to a projectionist in South Dakota—at his request.

I was myself surprised at some of the work I saw the lamps doing while on a trip west last month. They certainly have a future, though I doubt if they will entirely displace other lamps over here. I don't think you will find a screen brilliancy equal to that now used in many theatres here, anywhere in Europe. That's one grouch I have. I'd like to get over there and see just what you fellers really are doing, but whenever I say Europe my pocket book shudders and does a nose dive.

I would like to hear from some of our readers who are using the new lamps, and to have an expression of your opinion of their performance.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

While the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York state during the past week fell short of the average for the last month or so, the records in the Secretary of State's office show that five companies were chartered and that these had a combined capitalization of $105,000. The newly formed companies were: I. D. A. New Automatic Machinery Replaces Human Hands in Manufacture of Prints

MILLIONS of feet of film printed and developed and each inch perfect—that is the outstanding accomplishment made possible by the new automatic machinery that has been installed in the plants of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc.

H. M. GOETZ

This organization, which combined the resources of four leading laboratories, has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on research and experimentation and has perfected the methods and processes of every department to such a degree that the production of uniform standard high quality release prints can be absolutely guaranteed.

Commenting upon the successful operation of this new and exclusively owned machinery, H. M. Goetz, vice-president of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., pointed out the box office value of well made brilliant release prints.

"Few people not intimately acquainted with motion-picture technique realize the remarkable fact that more than 100,000 separate little pictures, or 'frames' as they are called, are flashed on the screen in one average length photo-play."

"It is impossible," declares Mr. Goetz, "to attain the accuracy necessary for the successful reproduction of the wealth of detail comprised in each of these little 'frames' by the old-fashioned methods or in laboratories whose equipment has not kept pace with the latest scientific achievements."

Only those familiar with the technical details of this highly specialized branch of the motion picture industry understand the complexity of the daily task confronting manufacturers of motion picture prints.

The size of the average picture projected in the larger theatres may be more than 40,000 times that of the original appearing on the film, and the slightest blemish or the least imperfection—unnoticeable often to the naked eye—will stand out very plainly when undergoing such great magnification.

To avoid all such defects which greatly hinder the perfect reproduction of the photographic beauty of a picture it is essential to provide ideal atmospheric and temperature conditions in the laboratories where the film is treated and handled. At the Consolidated plants the air throughout is cleansed and moistened in a series of special processes and the proper even temperature is maintained under a system of automatic control that insures perfection.

Similar care must be taken in the matter of lighting and in the quality of the chemicals used and the purity of the water. It is on account of the careful attention to all these details in every department that the Consolidated is enabled to place its guarantee of satisfactory quality on every release print.

"The Eve of the Revolution"

One of the Chronicles of America Series

The Shot Heard Round the World!

150 years ago this coming spring, a little band of farmers, hastily summoned from plough and furrow, gathered awkwardly at Concord and dared oppose with arms the trained troops of the greatest military nation of the time.

Dispersed by the crushing volleys of the red-coats of Britain, they sought the shelter of stone wall and tree; and from those refuges with the coolness of trained Indian fighters picked off the enemy by squads and battalions.

The Revolutionary War had started; the United States was to become an independent nation; the shots had been fired that were heard around the world!

It's all in this picture. No one can be an American and not be thrilled by it. Wave the flag! Make your theatre the centre of a patriotic demonstration that will shake your community

Mary Pickford in "DOROTHY VERNON of HADDON HALL"

From the romantic novel by Charles Major ~ ~ Adapted by Waldemar Young

A MARSHALL NEILAN PRODUCTION

Photography by Charles Rosher

"'Our Mary' was superb as 'Dorothy Vernon.' This little woman of the golden locks—the same that film fandom has learned to love—a Mary with added histrionic ability, rides a horse along a wall to rescue her lover in a manner that even the most blase unloose their hands and add to the rounds of applause. To our mind in that ride she gave her spectators more thrills than any flood or mob scenes in the so-called classics."

The screen's best! It belongs among the few immortal soul dramas that live forever in the hearts of audiences. It is an attraction that is destined for success in every theatre everywhere.

One of Four

"HE WHO GETS SLAPPED" in its world premiere at the Capitol Theatre (N.Y.) established itself as one of the greatest box-office attractions ever brought out of a motion picture studio.

Exhibitors will be delighted to learn that "HE WHO GETS SLAPPED"—big as it is—will be followed by three productions just as great, making FOUR GIANT ATTRACTIONS for forthcoming release that will astound the industry by their magnitude and box-office stature.

"THE GREAT DIVIDE" is unquestionably one of the most sensationally dramatic achievements of film history. It is Reginald Barker's towering screen adaptation of William Vaughn Moody's classic American stage success, with Alice Terry and Conway Tearle in the leading roles.

ERICH VON STROHEIM'S "GREED" comes to exhibitors with advance acclaim such as no picture has ever had to make box-office success a certainty. "GREED" will begin a legitimate theatre run in New York City in December.

In the magnificent screen version of "THE MERRY WIDOW" Erich Von Stroheim has brought his magical touch to this internationally famous Viennese stage triumph. With Mae Murray as The Widow and John Gilbert as The Prince, "THE MERRY WIDOW" under Von Stroheim's master direction constitutes one of the brightest business draws that has ever been offered to motion picture theatres.

We've Got 'Em

I guess I started something. I know I did.

But in all the flurry of words and arguments you don't notice anybody offering to match FACT against FACT with me, do you?

No sir!

I started something. A lot of things are happening. But they don't mean anything.

For example, the chap who lulled himself into somnolence with a myth about "domination" has started to "HIGH-PRESSURE" his circulation.

"HIGH-PRESSURE" is a publishing trade term that has a variety of interpretations. Sometimes it means offering a five-dollar premium to get a three-dollar subscription. At other times, and in the present case, it means desperately rushing five-thousand-a-year men out to do thirty-dollar-a-week subscription soliciting jobs.

I'm letting you in on trade secrets. Here's how it works:

Naturally, you don't send a five-thousand-a-year man to sell individual exhibitors. It wouldn't be physically possible for him to get more than fifteen a week that way. And fifteen a week won't help when you're in a hole.

You send your high-powered man to talk to the circuit heads. If he's good he sells in blocks of twenty, fifty, and a hundred.

It's great stuff. When you are out to save your face. Four or five hundred subscriptions secured that way make a lot of difference in the FIGURES.

But their value begins and ends with the FIGURES.

It's only plain logic. If an individual circuit manager didn't think enough of a paper in the first place to spend three dollars a year for it—his value as a prospect isn't increased when he gets it free as a favor from the home office.

That's plain as day. That's fact.

And here's another fact:

There has been no "HIGH-PRESSURE" work in Moving Picture World's phenomenal circulation gain—merit alone has created the sweep that carried it to leadership.

We've got circuits, certainly. But they came to us.

Yes, sir, I sure did start something.

Some of the advertising men tell me they are now hearing a new swan song. I don't know the tune, but the words are something like this:

"The A. B. C. Audit doesn't mean a darn thing."

That's funny.

It's only two years ago that you were being told the A. B. C. Audit was proof conclusive of "domination."

On the Run!

It's only two years ago that you were told the A. B. C. Audit justified a rise in rates.

It's only two years ago that you were told to pay no attention to any statement not backed up by an A. B. C. Audit.

The same fellow was talking to you then—the same fellow is telling you now that an organization supported by the foremost advertising agencies and publications in the country is a myth.

That's funny in more ways than one.

He certainly has a high opinion of the advertising intelligence of this industry.

Then there is another line of conversation that enables a harried publisher to keep on talking without the necessity of saying anything.

And, if you talk fast enough, enables you to dodge mentioning anything related to FACT.

That is to convey the impression that by some favor from on high you have been anointed as the one and only paper that reaches the "BIG FELLOWS."

I could argue all day about that point and when I got through I wouldn't have expressed any more sense than the other fellow is when he gives you the claim.

That's frank.

Because it is only a smoke screen argument.

Why waste words on it when there is a simple and easy method of getting at the FACTS?

Take any list of "BIG FELLOWS" you care to—define that hazy term "BIG FELLOWS" any way you care to—come into my office and check it against the subscription records and the CASH ORDERS for those subscriptions.

I don't claim any mysterious monopoly on those "BIG FELLOWS."

But I sure will surprise you!

Yes, sir, I certainly did start something.

I can't quite keep up with all the flighty bits of reasoning and twisted arguments that are filling advertising managers' offices these days.

And I don't think I have to.

You men have spent your lifetimes SELLING. You know that when you have a real piece of merchandise to sell your talk is straight, clear and FACT.

You know that you don't use smoke-screen and fast-talking sales methods unless you are in doubt about your merchandise.

in cash prizes will be distributed to Movie Fans of the United States and Canada by FILM BOOKING OFFICES of America, Inc., in connection with our extraordinary exploitation and merchandising plan on Associated Arts' big melodrama—originally titled "Hard Cash"—and now carrying the temporary working title of "ON THE STROKE OF THREE," filmed from a sensational Henry Payson Dowst story that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Prizes for the best titles will be awarded as follows: First prize, $1,000.00. Second prize, $250.00. Third prize, $100.00. Fourth prize, $75.00. Next seven prizes, $50.00 each. Next five prizes, $20.00 each. Next seventy prizes, $10.00 each. Next sixty prizes, $5.00 each. Total, 151 cash prizes, $3,000.00.

Contest starts Dec. 15th, 1924. Ends Aug. 31st, 1925. In the event of a tie, each tying contestant will receive the full amount of the prize tied for. Judges of the contest will be MOTION PICTURE NEWS, MOVING PICTURE WORLD, EXHIBITORS HERALD, ASSOCIATED ARTS, Inc., and FILM BOOKING OFFICES of America, Inc.

An entire line of special advertising material has been prepared that simplifies the whole plan, as this special matter explains the contest quickly and simply to all fans. Special 1 and 3 sheet posters, lobby cards, window cards, throwaways, heralds, slides, etc. Exhibitors not bothered with replies or the handling of any details whatsoever. All the exhibitor will have to do is his regular advertising, announcing the contest two to three weeks in advance by slides, posters, heralds, etc. In order to conform with the United States Postal laws, all matter will carry line reading: "It is not necessary to pay any money to enter this contest. Any person may compete by securing free at the box office of any theatre showing the picture, a synopsis giving an outline of the story, which will enable that person to suggest a title after reading the same." Here is a whale of a merchandising plan that will not only enable your patrons to compete for fine prizes, but which will entertain them with a masterful melodrama starring KENNETH HARLAN, MARY CARR and MADGE BELLAMY, three screen favorites, alone a guarantee of capacity for any theatre.

All F. B. O. salesmen are now in the field selling "ON THE STROKE OF THREE." Ask your F. B. O. salesman to give you more details of the bigness of this merchandising plan.

151 cash prizes that give your patrons just as big a chance to win as any other community in the country. With this plan your audiences get a triple value and a triple entertainment.

First, you show them a great picture; second, you give them a chance to win 151 cash prizes with a total of $3,000.00; third, should any one of your patrons win, you give your patrons an additional thrill by presenting the prize to the winner or winners from your stage on another capacity night.

Here's a whale of a plan for packing your theatre, giving everyone an evening of the most delightful entertainment, plus this contest, with an opportunity to coin some of the 151 prizes of $3,000.00 cash.

WATCH FOR FURTHER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Questions

IS the day coming in this business when feature distribution will be solely in the hands of Paramount, First National, and Metro-Goldwyn?

Is the day coming when it will consist practically of those three organizations with the possible addition of Universal and Fox?

You write the answer—I can't.

But if I had been asked to give the answer in Detroit there could have been no hesitation about it; if I had tried in Chicago it would have been the same answer, only stated more emphatically; with Indianapolis and Cincinnati added to the route the answer hasn't changed decisively, though the emphasis may have been moderated.

And there can be only one answer—so long as we continue to throw six hundred features annually on a market that can completely absorb but half of that number.

That only partly expresses it. We must go further:

There can be only one answer so long as Paramount continues to offer eighty a year of fairly average quality; First National, some fifty more or less, and Metro-Goldwyn a like number. And so long as those organizations leave the starting post with their present theatre connections, theatre interests, and theatre understandings.

When you get through with the possibilities available to that strength there is too much territory where the other fellow must be satisfied with the crumbs, too few spots where he can get the red meat of key city money, and often too many instances where he can't even get the bread and butter nourishment of good old ten dollar a day playing time.

WHAT are we going to do about it? I dunno.

Figure it this way: The symptoms of the illness we know. The cause may be either one of two reasons, or both: Theatre control, or over-production.

Will Old Doc Necessity cure the patient by applying the starvation treatment to a score of producers?

Or will a consultation between Doctors Foresight and Generosity work the cure by bringing about a change of heart on the part of those controlling theatres?

There is the problem. I'd give a lot to know the answer.

Can we ask rightly Paramount, First National, and Goldwyn to ease up the situation by deciding to make fewer pictures, leaving more open time for the other fellows?

It isn't usually done in a bitter world.

Can we ask Universal, Fox, Producer's Distributing, Warner's, Vitagraph, Associated Exhibitors, and the host of independents to gently and quietly retire from the field to save us the painful spectacle of a death agony on someone's part? Or shall we ask them to be satisfied to make cheaper pictures and take leaner pickings?

Not likely—neither the request nor compliance.

Well—now you write a ticket.

WE are resting upon the editor's privilege of merely asking questions. The editor doesn't always have to answer his own queries—especially when he fears he cannot.

In the weeks to come he may try to give an answer. That is a promise given for what it is worth. But at present he is content to ask the questions that persist in mind as you roam the Pullman route, as you travel from Film Building to Film Building.

Questions that, peculiarly, have come to a head when Universal, in many sections, is doing better than ever; when Vitagraph, with "Captain Blood" as a leader, and Producers' Distributing, with a much-improved product and more forceful selling, are in vastly happier condition than they have been for years.

That the questions, which concern a basic condition, should overshadow such temporary facts, is all the greater proof of the existence of a deep and serious underlying problem.

It is time somebody talked about it.

There is just the faintest chance that discussion may arouse independent exhibitors to the fact that they are parties to the problem. Eventually, if not now.

Here's good news!

SERVICE is a synonym for Hamilton National Bank.

Here is news that means: MORE SERVICE.

Hamilton National takes pride in announcing the opening of two additional offices:

A Queens Village office at 21533 Jamaica Avenue.

Just as the main office of Hamilton National takes particular pleasure in being of especially intimate service to the larger interests in the motion picture industry, so will these newly opened offices offer a special attraction to theater owners located conveniently to their facilities.

No better proof of the type of modern banking service rendered by Hamilton National can be given than the opening of these new offices and the opportunity they present to render MORE SERVICE.

Speaking Freely

Lemme see, we left off last week's "Speaking Freely" just as we were about to step out and beard George Trendle in his Detroit den. We intimated that "mebbe" we would get all the fact, and "mebbe" we wouldn't. We placed the accent on the second "mebbe." We were right. George will talk about everything except the Kunsky-Katz deal. As far as we can figure it there is an agreement with the Chicago people to say nothing for publication. But George Trendle can't hide the fact that he is honestly very happy over the new deal. He is enthusiastic, and his enthusiasm is real. As far as the facts go we feel pretty certain you can refer to our last week's story and find nothing wrong.

Walked in on ED BEATTY, of the Butterfield circuit. Not at all polite, for the first question we popped was, "What's all this we hear from exchange managers about allocation of product, about your buying agreements with other exhibitors in many of your cities, and so on?"

ED BEATTY'S response may be summed up, but not entirely interpreted, in the words, "Pish, tush!" But you'll find more about that on another page of this issue.

We had an interesting chat with COLONEL BUTTERFIELD. The Colonel is as happy as a two-year-old over getting settled in the new Detroit offices. Doesn't seem to miss Grand Rapids a bit. We helped him hang the pictures on the walls of his beautifully decorated office. And reminisced delightfully on the good old variety days.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" hasn't had its first run in Detroit yet. First National sure has an easy time selling some of its own partners.

All aboard! Next stop—Chicago! And if Detroit sizzles with the names, Kunsky-Katz—there is no word to describe the way Balaban, Katz, and MID WEST THEATRES dominate the Chicago conversation.

Hardly off the train before we were informed that Balaban and Katz had closed working agreements with Robert Lieber. And that it was only a matter of a few days before similar agreements would be settled with Tom Saxe in Milwaukee and Ruben and Finkelstein in Minneapolis. Nobody knows just what the "agreements" mean, but everybody knows that they are important enough to be talked about in ominous whispers. And if you mention Mid West Theatres to the average independent exchange manager you have to be fortified with a fire extinguisher in your hip pocket.

For social and business reasons we had our first Chicago lunch with FLOYD BROCKELL, general manager of Mid West Theatres. And heard the other side of the story. More about that later.

Floyd frankly confesses that he was just beginning to like New York when Opportunity beckoned back to the Windy City. But he looks happy, talks happily, and has wonderful plans in view for Mid West Theatres.

Landed in the offices of the Chicago Film Board of Trade simultaneously with distinguished visitors in the persons of CHARLES PETTIJOHN and SAM WARNER. Had the honor of being the first man outside the producing and distributing ranks to be allowed to sit in on a meeting. Even made a speech. (Huh?)

Tough luck at that. Because the only news hints we can give on Chicago are the things we heard on Wabash avenue. And we are honor bound to remain mum on a lot of good news that we heard in the meeting.

EDDIE SILVERMAN, Warner manager for the territory, makes one of the most capable presiding officers we have yet seen at a Film Board table. Back in the old Selznick days they used to call Eddie "the boy wonder." He doesn't look any older today but we suppose he would get sore if we tried to use the title now.

JOSEPH ABRAMSON, secretary of the Chicago Board, sure has his hands full. That's a territory, yea, boys!

Here's a bit of news picked up on the street. Maybe they talked about it at the Film Board meeting but that must have been before they opened the doors to us. The exchanges have discovered that the Chicago Censor Board owes the industry thousands upon thousands of dollars. For years they have been charging upon a "per reel" basis, when, somebody has just discovered, the law says "per picture." Joe Friedman is going to step out and sue the board for back excessive payments. The other exchange men fear to say anything because they see reprisals if the industry asks the city for some millions of dollars. And there you are. A simmering kettle. Top is going to blow off soon.

JOE FRIEDMAN, by the way, feels pretty sanguine over prospects. Has HARRY KLEIN, formerly with Metro in Cincinnati, running the works, a good line of product, a fine lot of good-will, and all in all, is pretty cheerful.

Before we saw FRANK ZAMBRENO we had encountered his multi-colored broadside telling exhibitors about his Ninety Pictures for the coming season. There are a number of state right producers who don't spend as much advertising money in a season as Frank spent on this wallop for his own territory. And that's a story that has to be told some day.

Frank, by the way, is more than cheerful. Frank got out his broadside and his salesmen just a lap ahead of most of the other fellows and he has so many dates stowed away in the safe right now that his worries are pretty nearly over.

Encountered a teaser campaign on "PLAYING THE PONIES" in a number of the state rights exchanges. The act is working, Doc. They are interested and alive with curiosity. All asked us what it meant. We didn't tell them a thing—except about Arrow, Doc Schallenberger, and a two-reel race track series that has the active co-operation of the biggest forces in turf life.

"DANTE'S INFERNO" turns them away in Chicago.

AL STEFFES is in Chicago. Just finished organizing Kansas City. Has an urgent invitation from Seattle. MICHAEL O'TOOLE better keep a weather eye on this boy. He is stepping fast—and that only says the half of it.

Gosh, we'll be a matinee idol soon. FRED McQUIGG gives our arrival the main news head on the Chicago American's photoplay page, MISS MANN does the same thing in the Chicago News, VIRGINIA DALE even mentions us, and so it goes. Won't bother to hire that press agent just now.

Chicago news. That may have been around the Astor in our absence, and may not have been. Al Lichtman is going to open a series of state rights exchanges. Intends to parallel the Charnas territories. Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit. Has closed for the Bachmann-Schulberg product. More in sight.

Chicago might just as well have been New York on Wednesday of last week. In town: PAUL MOONEY, SAM WARNER, ABE WARNER, JOE BRANDT, J. G. BACHMANN, CHARLIE PETTIJOHN. Just like home.

At the end of the page. And we haven't mentioned half the Chicago things we should, nor even hinted at Indianapolis and Cincinnati. Oh, well, next week is another week.

"More Big Theatres Europe's Need"

"Just a Small Town Exhibitor" Gives Personal Impressions of the Picture Business Abroad, Stressing Existing Exhibitor Conditions

Exhibitors who read "Straight From the Shoulder Reports" know L. O. Davis through his generous tips. Mr. Davis has been in the picture exhibiting activity of the Virginia Amusement Company, operating three theatres in Hazard, Kentucky, for five busy years. Last summer he went abroad. He saw much of interest to our readers and has with his customary generosity prepared this chat, stating what he thinks of the picture business in the many foreign cities which he visited. You'll possibly want to challenge some of his opinions, but you can't help enjoying his little talk.

By L. O. DAVIS

MANY articles have appeared in American trade journals of late discussing the difficulties and problems of foreign distribution, but very few from "Just a Small Town American Exhibitor" who is not making exhaustive studies on distribution but only looking at the matter from an American exhibitor's viewpoint.

In Paris, as well as all other big cities of Europe, I found a lack of up-to-date movie houses and a sore need of at least two or three large picture theatres located in or near the Place Del' Opera, which I believe would be the best location in Paris for a couple of fine theatres like our Capitol or Strand on Broadway. A couple of theatres of this type where pictures could be given the same class of presentation as they get here with such a location in Paris would be a success from the start, in my opinion.

In Rome practically the same conditions exist and out of many picture theatres there are none that would rank with the class of theatres you would find in an average American city of that size. Pretty much the same is true of Brussels, where I found many movie houses and all apparently run in a small town manner. In London with but few exceptions I found the same conditions that exist on the Continent.

It seems as though very few picture houses of Europe were originally built for the presentation of pictures, but were formerly opera and vaudeville houses that have been converted into picture theatres. Unlike a great percentage of American movie houses that are built solely for the presentation of pictures they are not constructed in the right manner nor do they seem to contain the proper atmosphere for the enjoyment of fine pictures. Good organs are scarce, but most theatres can boast of orchestras and a larger percentage of European theatres than American houses have orchestras.

I would say that in London near Trafalgar Square or Piccadilly Circus there is room for two modern picture houses of the type I would suggest for Paris. In Southampton, a city of 125,000, I found about three or four small town shows and, to be sure, run in a very small town manner. This is a town that could easily stand two up-to-date theatres, for I am sure that we have theatres in this country located in towns half the size of Southampton which cost as much as the entire lot of their houses. I have in mind now of a town of only 8,000 right here in Kentucky which can boast of a house better than anything this English town of 125,000 has.

I would suggest to some of the producer-controlled circuits that are building million dollar theatres in American cities, which are already badly overseated, to take some of their surplus capital to Europe and invest it in a few theatres in some of the principal cities of England and the Continent.

In my opinion the bigger producers of America that are now striving so hard to get proper distribution abroad will never get results as they should until the cities of Europe can boast of a few modern theatres where pictures can be presented in a big way that will command the attention of all classes of people just as our own "Roxy" does on Broadway. Bad presentation through lack of proper equipment, and, no doubt, ability to put the picture over as it should be, is certainly retarding the progress of moving pictures abroad.

I found in most all the picture houses of Europe what I thought bad practices; for instance, the tipping of ushers every time you are escorted to your seat. They even carrry this practice so far as to insult the patrons if they are not tipped.

Smoking is another bad practice which is allowed in all theatres both in England and on the Continent. This should be done away with in all the better houses.

Another idea which no doubt sprang from the ancient idea of class distinction is that every small theatre in Europe has its price scale usually ending in the balcony seats, being the most expensive. This should be handled the same as in America and in these small theatres two prices are sufficient, one for the orchestra seats and another for the balcony seats. The orchestra seats are the logical ones to be worth more and not the balcony, as they have it; which seems to me like placing the cart before the horse.

In one city of Europe I found two theatres in the same building using one big lobby with separate box offices. This same house had a sort of collapsible roof over each theatre which was drawn back on clear nights, and one had nothing but the clear sky and stars over one's head. This was a very good idea and one that might be worked to advantage in most any mild climate.

Another bad practice was running shows which were too long, especially in England, where one would often find two full length features, a comedy and a news reel on the bill. This tires out the patron, I find.

In London I found what I consider a foolish practice of running the same feature in many houses at the same time. Of the fifteen or more picture houses near Piccadilly Circus one could find but a variety of four or five different pictures. This evidently is a circuit of houses that use the same picture in many of their houses at the same time.

In many houses all over Europe one has but to go to the lobby to secure all the drinks they might want and in one house in Brussells I found small tables down the side of the theatre with many colored lights on them where the patrons could sit and enjoy

Is Michigan the Film Sore Spot?

The Editor Goes on the Trail of the "Allocation of Product" Bugaboo and Here Presents the Results

By ROBERT E. WELSH

"ALLOCATION of product by exhibitors has cut the revenue of distributors in the Michigan territory forty per cent in the past year."

Charles C. Pettijohn made that statement to an exhibitor audience at the recent Saginaw convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan.

It is an easy matter in this industry to make statements that, if true, are laden with serious meaning. We have acquired the habit of believing that which we desire to believe, disbelieving that which is unpleasant, and in general giving but idle concern to most of the ponderous statements that are made from time to time.

What about this allocation of product in the Michigan territory? Is it true? Are agreements actually in effect over any considerable number of key cities by which exhibitors have bound themselves to consider only the product of certain distributors? Or is it all a bit of sales propaganda? Is it merely another exchange man's alibi?

The writer decided to journey to Detroit and learn the truth. He didn't attempt to do it by arriving in the Motor City in the morning and departing at night. He wandered about for several days, talked with Tom, Dick and Harry, then checked what they said with Tom, Dick and Harry's customers.

He got one set of "truths" from the lips of exhibitors, another set of "truths" from the exchangemen, put them all in a hat, shook the mixture—and now we'll see what we have.

In the first place, just to keep the record clear, let us state that everybody encountered, even the most rabid of exchange managers, agreed that in his convention zeal Pettijohn probably over-stated the percentages. But that is merely a point to be finicky. Declaring that a revenue has been cut forty per cent is perfectly safe so long as you don't say from what mark the cut has been made. Is the revenue forty per cent less than it should be?—or forty per cent less than distributors hoped it would be?—or forty per cent less than it was last year?

The last-mentioned isn't true. With few exceptions it seems safe to say that the gross of distributors in the Michigan territory is higher than it was last year.

Paramount, it is true, does not seem to be getting the Detroit city business to which it is accustomed. The crusade against block booking can be blamed in part for this. The same fight affected others who stood by their guns on the block booking issue. But the city of Detroit is not the Michigan territory.

And when you mention the state at large you come back to the bugaboo "allocation."

Says H. M. Richey, secretary of the Michigan exhibitor organization: "This talk of allocation is pure rot. The first glaring example they will tell you about is Lester Matt, up in Flint. Well, I know Lester Matt pretty well and I can tell you positively he isn't the type of exhibitor to enter into agreements with anybody. Why should he? When a film salesman comes to him doesn't he know that the salesman hasn't been able to sell Butterfield?

"This allocation talk is just a squawk. They'll go up to Cady and ask him for twelve hundred dollars for Harold Lloyd. When Cady looks at his books and comes back with the honest statement that he has never been able to pay more than six or seven hundred for Lloyd and make money—they wax indignant and wrathful. And then you have another salesman back in Detroit shouting about closed towns and allocation."

That sounds reasonable. You leave the Hotel Wolverine with a pretty clear idea of what it is all about and stride a few steps to the Film Building. And in five minutes you are back where you started.

"Why," says one manager, "we know for a fact that there is a thousand dollar bond up in Flint to be forfeited by the theater breaking the agreement on product." Later the "fact" dwindles to something "everybody knows" and one of these days it will be proved. But the statement persists. One man tells you its a ten thousand dollar bond. They all know there is a bond.

"And Flint isn't alone," they add. "Practically every key city in the state presents a situation that is either tight control or allocation. What's the use of their kidding about it? It's common knowledge. Saginaw, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo — everywhere. They are paying one hundred and fifty for pictures in cities that should bring five hundred first run. Something drastic will have to be done about it."

So you journey into the office of Ed. Beatty, general manager of the Consolidated chain. The Butterfield houses are in practically every key city of the state. If there is allocation then Butterfield must be in the midst of it.

"It's foolish to talk about allocation of product," says Beatty. He's on the edge of getting peeved about it so we knew the question must be heard pretty often.

"Where is the necessity for allocation?" he goes on. "We have played the Paramount product in our houses ever since there was a Paramount. We have played First National ever since 'My Four Years in Germany.' We expect to go on playing them. We are playing Metro-Goldwyn.

"Now look at the calendar—against fifty-two weeks in the year check the eighty from Paramount, the First National list, Metro-Goldwyn, the Lloyds and other specials we play where we can get them—and will you tell me what time there is left? Not much. Perhaps I have some days open in one of the combination houses like the Palace, in Flint. The vaudeville overhead is something like $2,500. Vaudeville does the pulling, the picture doesn't mean much. Because we can't offer more than a hundred dollars for the picture to fill in on the bill, you'll hear a squawk.

"Paramount, First National, and Metro-Goldwyn fill up up pretty well. Now why on earth does the other exhibitor in the town need agreement with us when he knows that fact as well as anyone else, when he knows he is the one and only prospect for about a dozen exchanges?"

Those views, in one way or another, are the burden of the talk you'll hear all about Detroit. They'll tell you that there are eight or more key cities that Warner product hasn't been in for a year or more, because they courageously refused to take the hijacker prices offered. Then the next man will tell you that most of the exhibitors of the state are complaining that while they are doing big grosses they are not making any money because of the rentals paid.

We have to report failure to find any man who could strike a middle ground. So we'll do our own summing up:

It doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether there is actual, concrete, intentional allocation of product in the Michigan territory. As long as we are dumping five to six hundred pictures a year into a territory where, in practically every key center, there are but two theatre interests to play against each other—someone is going to get burned.

As long as Butterfield works in close harmony with Kunsky, and Kunsky starts his booking sheet with Paramount, First National and Metro-Goldwyn—the fellows out in the cold will have to continue as they are now. And that is:: Get their gross out of the hundred and forty odd independent theatres in the city of Detroit, and the four hundred or so of smaller theatres throughout the state.

Some of them are doing it very nicely; others, not so well. But that's another story.

Coming and Going

M. H. Hoffman of Truart left for the West early this week.

E. C. King, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, has left for Los Angeles on a six weeks' vacation.

Norma Shearer is in New York from the Coast on a week's sojourn.

Harry Rowson, managing director of Ideal Films, Ltd., London, is in New York on a business visit.

After a two and a half week's stay in New York, Jesse J. Goldburg, president of Independent Pictures Corporation, has again started west to resume the supervision of the five units which he has working out in the Hollywood studios.

G. M. Davidson, comptroller of Producers Distributing Corporation, has left on an extended visit to all of the eastern branch offices of the company.

Al. Christie left New York this week on his return to Los Angeles after having made arrangements with Producers Distributing Corporation for the release of several big comedy features during the coming season.

C. Hepworth, English producer, wired his American distributors, Cranfield and Clarke, this week that he is on his way from London to New York.

State Senator James Walker sailed from New York this week for London. He will be gone only a short time. There is talk of the formation of a producers' alliance abroad which he might head.

Herbert Brenon, now on the Coast, is expected to arrive in New York early in December.

Major H. C. S. Thomson of F. B. O. returned this week from abroad.

A. E. Rosseau, foreign manager for Pathe, left this week for a ten weeks' business tour of Europe.

J. G. Bachmann, treasurer and head of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, returned to New York this week after a six weeks' absence, during which time he visited the studio of Preferred Pictures in Los Angeles and toured to the company's exchanges.

Ben Wilson has come on from the Coast to confer with W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, regarding the few unfinished productions he has in hand for their 1924-25 program.

Rudolph Valentino and his wife, Nita Naldi, J. D. Williams, Hawley Turner, Joseph Henabery, Joe Jackson and Gustav von Seiffertitz left for the Coast early this week.

Arthur Kelly, Charles Chaplin's personal representative, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York.

Laura Thornborough of Washington is in New York in the interest of her organization, the League of American Pen Women.

Albert L. Grey of the Griffith organization has returned to New York after a short trip abroad.

On Saturday last Rowland V. Lee, Fox director, sailed on a vacation trip for France.

Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph chief, and his wife returned this week from their trip abroad.

Margaret E. Thayer of Pennsylvania is on her way to British East Africa where she intends to make a pictorial record of a hunting trip which she plans upon her arrival.

Early this week Monty Banks arrived in New York from Europe.

Blues Threaten Dayton

Sunday Closing Is Imminent in Another Ohio City

The Sunday closing agitation, it is reported, has now taken root at Dayton, Ohio, which city has heretofore been unmolested in the matter of conducting business on the Sabbath. The trouble, however, did not originate with the theatres, but it now looks as though they would be included in the ban, the placing of which appears inevitable.

The proprietor of a novelty store was arrested a few weeks ago for having his place of business open on the Sabbath day, although the proprietor was of such faith as to observe Saturday as his Sabbath. The warrant was signed by the chief of police, it is said, and his action is claimed to have been entirely voluntary on his part. Said proprietor was found guilty in police court, and he now swears vengeance by threatening to cause the arrest of every other business enterprise or theatre which operates on Sunday.

The Dayton Council of Churches and allied organizations have declared themselves as being in sympathy with the Sunday closing movement, but they disclaim any connection with the original arrest.

In Sensational N. Y. Case

Burns, Ex-Film Clerk, Kills Self After Futile Hold-Up

A man who was identified as William E. Burns, former film clerk, shot and killed himself, on Thursday last in a suite of offices in the Heckscher Building, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, New York City, under circumstances which, the police say, pointed to an attempt on the part of Burns to hold up and rob the occupants of the office. One young woman was shot, and painfully, though not fatally injured by the intruder.

The detectives at work on the case said that Burns at one time was a clerk in the old Mutual Exchange in West 23rd Street. Later he became a detective, in the employ of the Committee on Film Thefts of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, when William A. Brady was President of that organization.

Burns was himself involved in film thefts, indicted on two counts by the New York County Grand Jury and brought back from Plainsville, Ohio, but these indictments were dismissed by Judge Nott in the Court of General Sessions. Burns afterwards instituted a civil action against Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.; Joseph M. Seider, President of the Prudential Film Delivery Service, Inc., and the Prudential as a Corporation. Burns asked for $25,000, alleging false arrest.

The case had not come to trial when the tragedy of last Thursday occurred.

Film Industry Opposes Germany's Import Law

Protests against Germany's action in restricting imports of moving pictures were laid before the State and Commerce departments last week by Will Hays, on behalf of the American moving picture industry.

Under a recent edict of the German government, licenses for the importation of films will be issued only to the extent of export licenses for the same commodity to the country from which the films are to be imported. In other words, German exhibitors will be permitted to import one picture from the United States for every film that is exported to this country.

The protest of the industry was based on the ground that our export trade in moving pictures is far greater than our imports, and that while we send a considerable number of films to Germany we have never imported very many from that country.

A. M. P. A. Hears Rockett

A. L. Rockett, acting general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., was guest of honor at the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held in New York, November 13. Mr. Rockett told the publicity men that the success of the production by himself and his brother, Ray Rockett, of "Abraham Lincoln" was "due to the efforts of the boys in your ranks." He commended the A. M. P. A. for its high ideals and spirit and promised at a future date to tell the inside story of the production with which "I lived for three years." Visitors who were introduced included Albert Cormier, former trade journel writer who was welcomed back to Broadway after an extended absence in business in New England; Will Murphy of the Wampas; Charles Cohen of Renown Pictures; A. W. Kingfisher of First National Pictures.

Buffalo Women Eager for N. Y. Censor Job

Several women Democrats of Buffalo are said to have hopes of being appointed moving picture censor to succeed Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, Republican, whose term expires December 31. The term is five years and the salary is $7500. The appointment is made by the governor. It was said at Democratic headquarters that no Buffalo candidate had been indorsed and it is uncertain what attitude Governor Smith will take on the matter.

Should the governor decide upon naming a woman, it does not follow that he will make his selection from Erie county. Another angle to the situation is that the senate will be Republican when the time comes to make the appointment and a compromise may be sought on political lines on appointments made by the governor. Another vacancy on the moving picture commission will occur in December of next year when the term of George H. Cobb of Watertown, chairman, expires.

Death Claims Thomas H. Ince After Illness of a Day at Beverly Hills, Cal.

By TOM WALLER

THOMAS H. INCE, for over a decade one of the film industry's most prominent figures, succumbed to an attack of acute indigestion at his home in Beverly Hills, California, on the morning of November 19. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Kershaw Ince; three sons, William Thompson Ince, 16; Thomas Ince, II, 13 years old; Richard, age 10; and by two brothers, Ralph and John Ince. The brothers are directors of Thomas H. Ince Productions, Inc., of which the decedent was president.

Mr. Ince became ill only the day prior to his death when he and his family were guests on the William Randolph Hearst ranch in northern California. Attended by two specialists and three nurses he was speeded homeward in a special train, and although his condition was then known to be critical it was little expected that its termination would be in such an abrupt fatality.

Unconscious for several hours before his death Mr. Ince regained his senses just sufficiently to smile at his immediate family and brothers who had remained at his bedside all during the night. Death claimed him before he could articulate a word of farewell.

Was Actor at 7

Mr. Ince was forty-four years of age. He was born in 1880 in Newport, R. I. His parents were theatrical folk and at the age of seven their Tom made his debut before the footlights. He later played in stock companies with which he toured the country. How he happened to enter the film industry is best told by Mr. Ince himself in a signed article in the March 10, 1917, issue of Moving Picture World.

The colorful life, high ideals and business integrity of this man who arose from actor to one of filmdom's most brilliant producers and who, with his own success, was the founder of the fortunes of Charles Ray, William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Douglas MacLean and Frank Keenan, is not without a unique side. Ince possessed an aversion for the very thing upon which he achieved the pinnacle of his prominence. Fate overcame this aversion in the guise of dire need and the circumstances, from Ince's own pen, were these:

"I am frank to admit that I was one of those who regarded the moving picture with contempt. Reared in the atmosphere of the theatre, I grew to look with disdain upon this new art—this art which had been given its start in Coney Island beer gardens and the like. But an unexpected meeting with an erstwhile friend, during the fall of 1910, converted me in a measure.

"Returning to New York, following the termination of a stock engagement in the middle west, I found myself in need of a job. I was walking along Broadway, when I nearly collided with an automobile. As I stepped aside to allow the machine to pass, its occupant shouted a salutation at me, and then I observed that he was a man who had worked for me in vaudeville some months previous.

"I always had believed I was a better actor than he; and yet there he was riding in an automobile, something which I, of course, had coveted but never owned. He told me he was working in moving pictures, and advised me to take a flyer at them myself.

"That night, sadly in need of work, I decided to follow his suggestion. So I went up to the old Imp studio on 101st Street and applied. Tome Cochrane, who was then in charge, must have thought me a good type for a certain part in one of the current productions, for he offered me five dollars a day, which I readily accepted."

The first Imp picture was hardly out of the cutting room when Biograph offered Ince twice as much per day. He held out for $15 and the matter was then of such importance that the extra five had to be taken up with the director general of that company. He got it and made one picture for Biograph when Imp became a competitor once more for his services. This time Imp wanted him for a directorial berth and so Tom Ince stepped on the first rung of his real career since, as he himself said, he felt that directing was his vocation.

The Directorial Berth

In this job Ince was frowned upon by the veterans of the Imp studio but, despite such discouraging environment, he plodded ahead and turned out his first production. As to the outcome of this endeavor Mr. Ince wrote:

"One day I escorted Carl Laemmle, who was president of the Imp Company, to the Fourteenth Street Theatre to sit in judgment upon the first picture I had directed. Throughout the show I continued to implore him to listen to the laudations from all parts of the house, but he didn't have a chance to hear anything, for I kept telling him too unbrokenly what a wonderful picture it was.

"He left the house in such an enthusiastic frame of mind that not long thereafter he sent me to Cuba, at the head of a company. I remained there a good part of the year."

Upon returning from the south Ince accepted an attractive offer from Kessel and Baumann, later known as the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Epes Winthrop Sargent, editor of Moving Picture World's exploitation department and in the front rank of film veterans, recalls that Tom Ince while with that firm first supervised the making of Westerns in the salt marshes of Coney Island, New York.

Ince traveled out to the company's Edendale plant in California. Conditions there, as he later described, were most disheartening, with poor studio facilities including actors of little and no experience. He went to work and spent slightly over a year making pictures of the old Bison brand. Then it was that the canyons and wild country in the Santa Monica region made an insistent appeal resultant in Ince leasing a large ranch and acquiring with it the use of animals belonging to a circus which used this acreage for winter quarters. While there Ince specialized in two-reel westerns centering upon Indian and cowboy skirmishes. The first of these was titled "War on the Plains" and was followed by "Custer's Last Fight." Then came what is recognized to be the first spectacle picture under the name of "Battle of Gettysburg."

Success of these productions caused the schedule to be greatly augmented also the abandoning of the trade-mark Bison and the adopting of Broncho, Kaybee and Domino brands. Such growth brought about an affiliation with Mutual Films and the consequent

WHAT a picture Memory paints! Back to the Kessel and Baumann days, a band-box studio on Twelfth Avenue, New York, a boom-town studio in the West; the rush and swirl of the Kaybee Westerns, the martial thrill of "The Battle of Gettysburg," the pomp and magnificence of "Civilization," the intense human drama of "Anna Christie."

What a picture Memory paints! What a picture of consistent, constructive, untiring work for the industry that had made him, and the industry he had helped to make.

They called Tom Ince a "factory producer." They could give him no better praise than a phrase which tells that he was always part and parcel, bone and sinew, of the Motion Picture. Count the hours of Entertainment that he gave to the world and you count the leaves in his laurel wreath.

The industry can ill afford the loss of Tom Ince. Both as an important factor in its development, and as a Man among its men. The last fade-out brings real and deep sorrow.—R. E. W.

Theatrical Profession Opens Sanitarium at Saranac Lake

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

WILLIAM MORRIS, who perhaps is best known as the manager of Sir Harry Lauder, though this is but one angle of his many-sided activities, tendered a luncheon at the National Vaudeville Association to Dr. Edgar L. Mayer of Saranac Lake, at which the guests were representatives of the various branches of the theatrical profession; perhaps, with a single exception, the most thoroughly representative group ever gathered about one table. The exception was that the motion picture business was entirely without representation except from reporters from the trade press and Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

Among the guests—and speakers—were E. F. Albee, head of the Keith interests; Daniel Frohman, of the Actors Fund; Rabbi Silverman, Robert Hilliard, S. Jay Kauffman, president of the Greenroom Club; the head of the Catholic Actors Guild, the Episcopal Actors Guild, the Jewish Actors Guild, Sam S. Scribner, head of the Columbia Burlesque Wheel and Pat Casey.

Some twenty-five years ago Mr. Morris went to Saranac Lake for his health and liked the resort so well that he purchased a home there, where he spends much of his time now that his son, William Morris, Jr., is able to relieve him of the routine of his office. In the past quarter of a century he has aided many players to derive the benefits of the famous health resort, and lately he interested Dr. Mayer in the establishment of a sanitarium for the theatrical profession. A week or two ago this nucleus—an eight-bed cottage—was opened, and Mr. Morris invited Dr. Mayer to make a trip to New York to interest the profession in the enterprise.

Mr. Albee introduced Mr. Morris and he, in his turn, presented Dr. Mayer. He explained that Dr. Mayer was not trying to talk himself into a job. He has a large private practice and it is his purpose to give his leisure time to the new institution without charge.

Dr. Mayer told the story of the slow fight against an insidious enemy; a siege, long and tiresome. He spoke of his plans for a place where actors could be given treatment without the delays that hamper quick aid in the usual channels of charity.

Dr. Silverman struck the keynote when he told how all classes of men are working to abolish the barriers of race and creed to the end that we may arrive at a real brotherhood. Others expressed the thought differently, but there was always this suggestion.

It had been announced that no appeal for funds would be made at this meeting, which was rather to discuss the means by which a united drive might be engaged in without duplication of effort. However, a number of the speakers pledged sums ranging from $1,000 to $5,000 and between $20,000 and $30,000 was pledged even before the drive was begun, largely on the faith the speakers had in the word of William Morris. E. F. Albee was elected president of the New York Auxiliary.

Catholic Council Head Opposes Censorship in St. Louis Address

DECIDED opposition to legalized censorship of motion pictures was declared by Charles J. McMahon, director of the National Catholic Welfare Council, in an address November 11 before the National Council of Catholic Women in convention at Hotel Statler, St. Louis, Mo.

McMahon stated that either state or national censorship of motion pictures by a legally appointed commission should be the very last resort to uplift the screen.

He complimented the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, headed by Will H. Hays, but deplored the fact that there are few pictures of the calibre of "The White Sister," "The Covered Wagon," "The Ten Commandments," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "America" and "The Iron Horse" in proportion to the numbers of mediocre quality or worse pictures.

"I suppose that this cannot help but be the case, however, when nearly 1,000 feature plays are produced by the industry every year," he explained. He credited the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America with striving for better pictures and stated that an unmistakable improvement in the business and moral tone of the industry had resulted from the work of the organization.

During the course of his address he reviewed the history of motion pictures from the days of penny arcades to the present-day picture palaces and $1,000,000 super-specials.

He strongly advocated educational efforts to better the morale of the screen, saying that in the last analysis the picture-going public dictates the quality of the pictures to be shown as producers cannot help but judge a movie by its box office record.

inception of the old Triangle company. Under these growing conditions Ince was able to expand his five-reel feature product.

With such growth Ince had found it necessary to build studios in Inceville, then a hamlet which he developed with his production work. Ince, who was a firm believer that the East could never replace the West as a producing territory, found himself after a time considerably cramped even in these new quarters. Referring to the quarters he then established in Culver City, Ince wrote:

"We moved from Inceville because we felt there was good reason to believe that by the construction of a new and modern plant, built upon intelligent manufacturing lines, some of the enormous overhead expenses of taking motion pictures could be eliminated, with the result that bigger and better pictures would be made. Culver City is the last word in studio facilities."

Hearing Is Routine

Among the witnesses who were called to testify this week in the Federal Trade Commission inquiry into Famous Players-Lasky, now in session in New York, were: Y. F. Freeman, former manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises Corporation; Epes W. Sargent, editor of the exploitation department of Moving Picture World; Walter Hays, of the Buffalo Strand; Edward A. Golden, manager of Metro-Goldwyn's Boston office; C. L. Yearsley, Ritz-Carlton Pictures publicity director; Reynold Wilbanks, chief booker of Paramount's Atlanta office; Vivian Moses, publicity director for William Fox. Several of those named were declared incompetent as witnesses in this matter and the testimony of those who were permitted to remain upon the stand was for the most part of a strictly formal and uneventful nature.

More European Houses

their drinks during the performance. These tables and the lights gave a very pleasing effect, and no doubt was profitable. I feel sure it would be very profitable if we could serve the same drinks as they do.

I feel almost safe in saying that there isn't a theatre in Europe properly lighted and one certainly needs the ushers' lights. Perhaps that's the reason for them being so dark, so as to show you the many advantages of a flashlight, thereby warranting a bigger tip.

Western pictures and stars I found popular all over Europe and Universal and Fox with this type of product seemed to have about the widest distribution.

With the lead the American films now hold on all the other foreign, I feel sure they will continue to hold this position, but with a few modern theatres located in the centers of population I feel sure the demand for American product would greatly increase.

Italy is the logical center for production abroad and just as our own California lends itself so admirably for the production of pictures so Italy does with her plains, mountains and hundreds of miles of rugged coast line and ideal sunny weather, to say nothing of the many picturesque locations abounding everywhere with backgrounds and settings depicting the tradition and history of a thousand years of glorious Rome. Italy will no doubt some day be the production center of the other side of the world and there is a time coming in the near future when many American producers will be making much of their pictures there. Increased studio facilities is one of the sore needs and time will take care of that. A few more "Ben Hurs" over there and they will have everything needed including the money.

Motion pictures are no doubt truly an American industry and it will take sometime to get it on a basis there as we now have it in this country. With modern theatres in Europe a big stride toward the high plane which they occupy in the American life will be reached, but the people of Europe are just as some of their old buildings, ancient and hard to instill new things into; so it stands to reason that they will never quite outdistance America either in production or exhibition.

Let me say again in closing that I believe the whole trouble of Europe lies in the sore need of better theatres and men who know how to run them.

Appeals to Canadians

London Film Executive Urges Use of British Film

A subtle appeal for support on the part of Canadians for British-made moving pictures and an unusual warning regarding the possible fate of the British film industry are contained in a communication which has been printed in the Canadian press. The letter bears the stamp of official importance, being written by L. B. Roscoe, general secretary of the British National Film League, Limited, 2, Gerrard Place, London, W.1., England.

The communication has been read with a great deal of interest by Canadians but no immediate action has apparently been taken.

The published letter follows:

"There is no doubt that we are in grave danger of waking up some morning and finding no British film producing industry.

"One can almost visualize the lamentation that will spread over the country at such a discovery. Old gentlemen in arm chairs will wax exceedingly indignant. Loudly will they denounce the shortsightedness of the nation who has allowed such a state of affairs to come to pass; others will produce alarming facts and figures proving, as if for the first time, that a film industry is of paramount importance to a country—especially Great Britain with all its colonies and dominions. Too late will they brilliantly discover that, financially, the film industry of the United States ranks third in national importance.

"Cries will fill the air: 'Why has this been allowed to happen?' 'Why is it that while Germany has built up a film industry and backed it so confidently, we have permitted ours to wither away and die?' 'Why . . .?'

"Indignant people will write violent letters protesting at the nation's stupidity. But, too late.

"Our colonies and dominions will and are being educated on foreign lines, foreign language, foreign heroes, foreign propaganda. The responsibility of showing British customs, British history, British industries, British . . . in fact all our most cherished possessions, will fall into the hands of others to be depicted to their advantage rather than ours; for we have yet to find a nation so overflowing with philanthropy that it will put our interests before its own and portray our history, traditions and customs with the full credit that is our due by deed and right."

Midwest Situation Sharpened by Formation of Big Wisconsin Unit

A combine of three of the leading theatre men on Milwaukee's west side has just been revealed as a result of the filing of incorporation papers by the Badger Theatres Corporation. Those listed as interested in the venture are Fred Seegert, of the Regent Theatre, and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of Wisconsin; George Fischer, of the Milwaukee Theatre, and E. W. Van Norman, Parkway.

Just what the nature of the combine is has not been definitely revealed, although remarks made by one of the trio indicate it will serve both as a theatre operating company and for joint booking purposes.

The formal statement filed at Madison declares merely that the object of the corporation is to promote the theatre business.

Considerable mystery surrounds the venture in view of the fact that the daily press carried an announcement recently that a Badger Theatre Corporation was planning to erect a theatre costing $125,000 at Twenty-seventh and Wells streets, opposite a new $500,000 house announced by the Mal Investment Company. However, Seegert and Van Norman strenuously deny that their company has been formed for that purpose and explain that it is a coincidence that a company of the same name should appear at this time.

"The time is not ripe for an announcement regarding our plans," said Seegert. "All I can say at present is contained in the official announcement of our incorporation."

Van Norman, however, hinted at the purpose of the new organization when in response to a question concerning reports that a booking combination was being formed, he said: "That's what this is. The corporation is going to be interested in anything having to do with theatres—leasing, building and booking."

For some time reports have been current in Milwaukee that a strong booking merger was in the making, but efforts to run it down have been unavailing. It was reported that in some respects the combine would function like the Midwest in Chicago and that one object would be to overcome the advantage held by the Saxe organization which controls a number of houses in the city and others throughout the state, making a total of twenty-three in all and including some of the leading theatres in this section of the country.

Jensen & Von Herberg Robbed of $10,000 Week-end Receipts

ON the morning of November 10, Frank Steffy of the Coliseum and LeRoy Johnson of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, met at the Liberty, headquarters of the Greater Theatres Co. (Jensen & Von Herberg), and started for the bank with money bags containing over $10,000, Saturday and Sunday's receipts from the two houses. They were accompanied by an armed guard, Robert Murray, who rode in the back seat. They turned east on First avenue, going up Pine street, but were blocked at the alley by a big Paige car that backed out in front of them.

Two armed thugs jumped from behind the car, pressing pistols against the managers' heads. At the same instant, two other men ran across the street from a hotel front and disarmed Murray. Seizing the money bags, the quartet hopped aboard their car, which had a fifth man at the wheel, and made their getaway north to Queen Anne Hill. Murray commandeered a passing car, as the keys had been removed from Steffy's machine after locking it, and they gave chase as far as the Queen Anne counter balance hills, which their light car could not take on high.

Meanwhile, the two managers had notified the police. Two arrests were made in Bellingham the following day, but the suspects were later released as they proved alibis. The abandoned car has been located in Seattle and the empty money bags were found floating beneath a bridge.

This is the fourth attempt to rob the Greater Theatres Corporation. Steffy has figured in three of them. Two were complete failures, as the victims got only bags of used tickets. On the third attempt, the bandit, since executed for killing three city patrolmen in one night, missed Secretary Robertson with $3,900, but got $528 from the office of the Coliseum. The loss is completely covered by burglar insurance.

TIE-UP TRAILERS WITH ELECTION RETURNS IN WASHINGTON

A stunt in Washington, D. C., on the night of the presidential election served both the interests of The Washington Herald and of Metro-Goldwyn, when a number of Metro-Goldwyn comedies and short subjects, together with trailers on new productions, were flashed on a large screen in front of The Herald's offices to entertain the crowd while returns were being received.

Selznick Liquidates; Associated Gets Features and F. B. O. Shorts

WITH the liquidation this week of Selznick Pictures Corporation, Associated Exhibitors acquired for distribution through Pathe over some eighty features of the defunct organization. At the same time Film Booking Offices secured fifty-two short subjects, embracing four series of shorts for United States and Canadian distribution. These latter were obtained through Standard Cinema Corporation which had originally consigned them for Selznick release.

Both of these deals were consummated when the United States Courts sanctioned the transfer upon the arrival of an agreement between both sides and when it was established that the Selznick creditors were in accord with the move.

J. Woody, general manager of the Associated Exhibitors, on taking over control of the Selznick product, declared that the Pathe organization would begin functioning immediately and that not a solitary exhibitor who had booked Selznick product would suffer in any way. "There will be no confusion in the matter of early film shipments and bookings due to the transfer," Mr. Woody further declared.

On November 15 the productions, records and accessories in the various Selznick branch offices throughout the country were moved to the Pathe Exchanges and without the loss of an hour Selznick bookings and shipments were being taken care of by Pathe's distribution machinery.

The list of productions involved in the deal are:

"Broadway Gold" (certain territories), "Right of the Strongest," "Daughters of Today," "Twenty Dollars a Week," "Is Love Everything?" "Woman to Woman," "The Forbidden Lover," "Defying Destiny," "Queen of Sin," "Bag and Baggage," "Broadway Broke," "Prince of a King," "The Cricket on the Hearth," "Toilers of the Sea," "The Bow-" "Pagan Passions," "Wife in Name Only," ery Bishop," "The White Shadow," "Roulette," "Cause for Divorce," "Missing Daughters," "Stranger of the North," "Broad Road," "One Week of Love," "Love Is an Awful Thing," "Love of Women," "Passions of the North," "Amazing Lovers," "Men and Women," "Outlaws of the Sea," "Timothy's Quest," "Tools of Fortune," "Solomon in Society," "Bohemian Girl," "The Super Sex," "Marriage Chance," "The Danger Point," "That Woman," "The Web of the Law," "One Million in Jewels," "The Grim Stake," "Under the Deep," "Modern Marriage," "Jungle Adventures," "Proof of Innocence," "As a Man Lives," "Prince and the Pauper," "Sign of the Rose," "Sinner or Saint," "Cardigan," "Belle of Alaska," "Daring Danger," "Jan of the Big Snows," "Bluebird Jr.," "The Lying Truth," "Sisters," "Hidden Woman," "The Three Buckaroos," "Man's Law and God's," "My Old Kentucky Home," "His Wife's Husband," "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," "What Fools Men Are," "When the Desert Calls," "Destiny's Isle," "False Fronts," "Mohican's Daughter," "The Challenge," "Milady the Great," "Alone," "Me and My Gal," "How Women Love," "Darling of the Rich," "Truth About Wives," "Trail of the Ace."

The series acquired by F. B. O. include those starring Jimmy Aubrey, Stan Laurel, E. V. Durling's "Screen Almanacs" and Dinky Doodle Cartoons from the Bray Studios.

Washington, D. C. Patrons Dislike Divertissements, Tivoli Discovers

THE impossibility of popularizing a downtown-theatre service in the residential section of Washington is manifest by the change of policy at Crandall's Tivoli Theatre at Fourteenth street and Park road. Since its formal opening on April 5, the Tivoli has been conducted along the lines of the more modern theatres of other cities. In addition to first-run pictures there were offered special musical and stage attractions, combining to make the only distinctly diversified programs presented in Washington.

Crandall employed a well known promotion manager to put the scheme across, but the people of the northwest section of the city simply failed to respond and the beautiful Tivoli has reverted to strictly a residential theatre, with the program changed from three to six times a week. It is to be regretted that the plan failed, but it has been pointed out time and again that this is not a show city in the full meaning of the word, and promotion stunts that bring about unquestioned success in other cities fall absolutely flat here.

The Tivoli was erected and furnished at a cost of approximately $1,250,000 and the claim is made for it that it stands as a monument to the foremost architectural, constructive and decorative skill of the United States. The seating capacity is the largest in town and it is modern in every particular. With the change of policy comes a cut in admission charges so that all seats at matinee performances will be adults twenty cents and children fifteen, while nights, Sundays and holidays the admission charges will be for adults thirty cents and children twenty cents.

Actor Hurt at Niagara

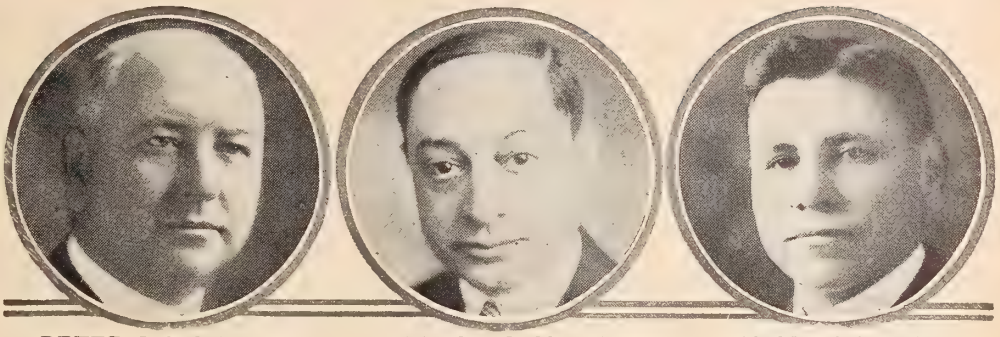
A troupe of 4 picture actors under the direction of Charles Giblin, representing Associated Exhibitors, and three stars, flirted with the rapids of the Niagara river off the Three Sister Island last week, making "The Adventurous Sex," written by Harold Mannon and being produced by Creation Pictures corporation of New York. The stars were Clara Bow, Herbert Rawlinson and Earl Williams. A vast crowd gathered as Clara in flimsy garments was rescued from the rapids by Rawlinson. Later in the week William Tyndal, 23 years old, of New York, was seriously injured when the plane he was flying for another rescue scene over the Falls, was wrecked in a tree. Charlie Hayman of the Strand was on the job and got Rawlinson to make a personal appearance.

Canadian Universal Now Affiliated with Hays

Clair Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal Films, Ltd., Toronto, announced this week that the Motion Picture Distributors' Association of Canada is now affiliated with the Hays organization and that the Canadian distributor body will be known in future as the "Distributors, Producers and Exhibitors' Association." The reorganized Canadian association is to embrace all branches of the moving picture business in the Dominion. The details of the augmented society have not yet been definitely completed but it has been intimated that the organization hopes to work in close harmony with the Canadian Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

New Exchange Building

With leases aggregating approximately $2,500,000 and calling for the expenditure of $300,000, final details are now being worked out for the erection of a two-story, "Class A" film exchange building to be erected on the southeast corner of Washington Street and Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles, it became known this week. Financing of the project will be done by a syndicate of local film and theatre men including Mike Gore, Sol Lesser, Abe Gore and others. Fourteen film agencies, it was stated, have already agreed to take space in the building.



PETER J. SCHAEFER AARON J. JONES ADOLPH LINICK

Fathers of Chicago Pictures Observe Twentieth Anniversary

THE week of November seventeenth has been set aside by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for prolonged celebration in all their theatres, the event commemorating the twentieth anniversary of this prolific trio in the theatrical business.

To be exact, the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer was organized on November 20, 1904. Prior to that time Jones and Linick were united in the manufacture of slot machines under the firm name of the Midland Machine Co.

Jones had tested out "a thing-a-ma-bob" invented by a fellow called Amet and projected by newsboy friend, by name George K. Spoor, and it was this so-called contraption, afterward to be known as a motion picture machine, that caused the uniting of Jones, Linick & Schaefer to introduce the motion picture to Chicagoans. This they did on Christmas Eve, 1904, in a small store-show on the East side of State Street in the location now occupied by the Waterman Fountain Pen.

This was the first motion picture exhibition in their city. The growth of Jones, Linick & Schaefer has been phenomenal and at present they own or operate Woods, the Rialto, McVickers, the Orpheum and Lyric theatres. All these houses will contribute toward an anniversary celebration that is expected to be unique and interesting.

The only original member of the firm in the city at this time is Peter J. Schaefer who is holding down the executive office while his partners are sojourning in Europe and the West.

However, the past year has seen the younger generation enter the business. John J. Jones, son of Aaron J. Jones is acting as a Vice-President, while his brother, Aaron J. Jones, Jr., assists in the management of the Orpheum Theatre.

Valentino Beards Make Guests Sheiks at Dinner to Ritz Star

By TOM WALLER

RUDDY'S latest acquisition is red, if that is the color of an undertaker's crape! That was the consensus of opinion of New York writers. They were assembled by J. D. Williams on the night of November 15 at the Ritz to give the honor guest the once over.

Ritz Carlton Productions at the Ritz Carleton Hotel proved a wonderful combination. In fact it was conceded to be one of the best affairs from the standpoint of conviviality, music, food, cigars, etc., that a unit of the industry has lavished upon the news folk in a long time.

The event marked the first formal introduction of Valentino as a Ritz star. In the gathering of several hundred persons were noticed a few representatives of Paramount, with which the star just completed his contract, to wish him and Producer Williams the best of luck.

Williams' publicity director, C. L. Yearsley, engineered a stunt which immediately broke the ice and put all of the men on an "equal footing" with the handsome honor guest. It was in the form of mustaches and beards of the exact design and color of the crop on Valentino's countenance. Their introduction was as novel as the idea.

Hawley Turner, recently initiated into the Williams' directorate, as toastmaster was deploring the fact that the women to all appearances were ignoring their male escorts and keeping their eyes fastened upon the "sheik." He announced that he was suddenly inspired and forthwith waiters emerged with baskets of hairy adornments. The men plastered said mustaches and beards upon their "maps" and immediately the place seemed to be transformed into a Royal Rotary of shrubbery.

In such disguises a flashlight photo was popped. As most of those present are well known to the film world it will be interesting for you to endeavor to peer through the "underbrush" in the cut on another page. See how many "Valentinos" you can find.

But the best bet of the evening in the form of gifts was the little skit which followed. While Turner was talking about Ruddy's beard and the fact that it is really black instead of cerise a "disorderly" person pushed his way through the maze of waiters to the speakers' table. He represented the Royal Order of Barbers and made known that his mission was to beseech Valentino and his followers to forget about beards. This opened the way to distribute very excellent safety razors among the guests.

ARMISTICE DAY ADDRESSES AT METRO-GOLDWYN OFFICES

Armistice Day was observed at the general offices of Loew-Metro-Goldwyn, when at eleven o'clock work halted for two minutes throughout the whole organization. Afterward a short address on the significance of "The Unknown Soldier" and the meaning of American citizenship was given by Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, U. S. Army, and scenario editor of Metro-Goldwyn.

Washington M. P. T. O. Membership Jumps from 16 to 126 in Year

THE second annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington was a success in every respect. There was evidenced throughout a sincerity of purpose, an enthusiasm on the part of members, that should have far-reaching results. This body of men and women, organized but one year ago with a membership of 16, has grown to 126 exhibitors representing 183 houses.

The convention which met in the Modern Woodmen's Hall over the association executive offices, was brought to order November 11 by Dr. Howard Clemer, of Spokane, president. Welcoming address was made by Mayor E. J. Brown, who spoke on "Service." He was followed by W. J. Hindley, educational director of the Washington Retailers' Association, who gave a constructive talk on organization.

Following the noon recess, an amendment to the bylaws whereby trustees may be elected from the floor of the convention was enacted, and the following one-year trustees were elected: Fred Walton, Bellingham; John Hamrick and Frank Edwards, Seattle. Three exhibitor members to serve on the Board of Arbitration were also elected from the floor: John Hamrick, Seattle; C. E. Swanson, Everett; Frank Graham, Centralia. Mr. Hamrick, who was later elected president of the organization at the trustees' meeting resigned from the Arbitration Board, and H. W. Bruen, of Seattle, one of the retiring members of the board, was re-elected for a second term. Other retiring members were John McGill, Port Orchard; Fred Walton, Bellingham. Immediately following the business sessions, the board of trustees met and elected John Hamrick, Seattle, president; H. W. Bruen, Seattle, first vice-president; Frank Edwards, Seattle, second vice-president, and J. H. Hone to succeed himself as secretary-treasurer. The board also elected H. T. Moore, of Tacoma, trustee, succeeding Ed Dolan, of Aberdeen, resigned.

The second day's sessions, beginning at 1 o'clock, were filled with interesting and constructive papers on the following subjects: "Non-Theatrical Competition," John A. McGill, Port Orchard; "Association Finance," L. A. Drinkwine, Tacoma; "Block Booking and Salacious Films," W. F. Code, Seattle; "Arbitration Board," H. W. Bruen, Seattle. Mr. Bruen reported that out of 28 cases submitted to this board which has no connection either with the M. P. T. O. or the Film Board of Trade, 21 had complied with the rulings of the board, 5 had gone out of business and 2 were still pending. These cases involved over $18,000, and it was the unanimous opinion of the convention that the board is accomplishing much along constructive lines.

Following a thorough discussion of the problem of "Block Booking" a resolution was passed instructing the secretary to write the Northwest Film Board of Trade, also C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization that the motion picture theatres of Washington are opposed to block booking and the deposit system.

A similar resolution instructed the secretary to write M. J. O'Toole of the M. P. P. D. A., advising of the organization's dissatisfaction with the existing uniform contract and recommended that the matter be entered into more fully, and improvements made before the next annual convention.

The Washington boys were mighty enthused. Ben Shearer converted one-half of his big equipment house at 210 Virginia street, into the smallest theatre in the world, with the tiniest stage in existence, and between 8 o'clock and 11, when the big theatrical "Pot Pourri" came off at the Palace Hip, visiting exhibitors were entertained by a snappy little show presented by Mike Newman, premiere showman of the Pacific Northwest. Drapes, stage settings, lighting effects, etc., were exquisite and a big crowd on the street blocked the sidewalk, to watch through the window. It was a happy thought and provided an entertainment that was a spicy preparation for the big show.

The Palace Hip was crowded until the walls fairly bulged with a peppy crowd that cheered eleven special acts for over two hours, and hated to go home when it was over. A Tacoma delegation, eighty members strong, arrived by special train, and blocks of seats were purchased from all over the state. The Pot Pourri will be a mark to shoot at for next year.

John Danz, contributing his bit to the general festivities, by some miraculous methods, managed to get his beautiful new Capitol Theatre open in time for the convention and invited all members of the M. P. T. O. to be his guests during their stay in Seattle. John has accomplished wonders. The Capitol is a beautiful house, handsome in its every appointment and luxurious to the last detail. It was built from the ground up, with nothing but the sustaining walls left standing inside of three months. Workmen are completing the electrical effects, etc., on the outside.

New Schine Theatre

Rialto, 3,000 Seats, Opening at Lockport, N. Y., Is Gala Event

The Rialto, the newest link in the chain of 50 or more theatres, controlled by the Schine Theatrical corporation of Gloversville, N. Y., has been opened in Lockport, N. Y., under the management of J. Raymond Thurston. The formal opening was celebrated, November 11 at which time 3,000 persons attended the two premiere presentations and fully 3,000 more sought entrance.

State Senator William W. Campbell and Mayor Ernest B. Crosby of Lockport both spoke and Gerald K. Rudulph, manager of the Buffalo Fox exchange, made the introductory remarks in which he presented some facts concerning the high standing and prominence of the Schine corporation. Both Mayor Crosby and Senator Campbell praised the company for the fine house which they have given the Lock City.

There was a big delegation of Buffalo film men in attendance at the opening. These folks were the guests of J. Meyer and Louis W. Schine at a banquet in the Tuscarora club, immediately following the first show. In the delegation were: Clayton P. Sheehan, Bill Mahoney and Mr. Rudolph, Fox; Basil Brady and Gene Markens, Pathe; Frank J. A. McCarthy, First National; Fred M. Zimmerman, Producers Distributing corporation; Harry Dixon, F. B. O.; Marvin and Ed Kempner, Paramount; Earl Kramer, Jim Savage and Bob Murphy, Universal; Richard C. Fox and Frank Moynihan, Selznick; Sydney Samson, Bond Photoplays and president of the Film Board of Trade; Colonel Howard F. Brink, Educational; Jack Berkowitz, First Graphic; Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company; Ben Wallerstein of the Broadway theatre and others.

The Rialto has a seating capacity of 1,500, the seats being of a most comfortable type and being done in deep auto type upholstery. The color scheme is in mural stipling of cream and gold. The woodwork is solid gumwood, with a mahogany satin finish.

"Avoid Cliques", New Jersey State Chief Warns New Essex Head

THE officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, at a meeting held in the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, installed the corresponding officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Essex County. Joseph M. Seider, state president, installed Louis Rosenthal, the county president, and this order of installation was followed:

Peter Adams installed William Lesser, sergeant-at-arms. Henry P. Nelson installed Eugene Steinhardt, secretary. William Keegan installed Moe Kreidel, treasurer. Charles Hildinger installed Jacob Unger, vice-president.

In his installation address Seider directed the attention of the new county president, and the combined exhibitor bodies to the need for tireless co-operation if the theatre owner organizations in the state wish to be truly helpful, and carry on their progressive activities at all times, and not to wait until they are hurt or in trouble. And to Rosenthal, he said:

"I cannot urge upon you too strongly the necessity for assuming an independent attitude, in your position as head of the Essex County organization, and adhering steadfastly to that attitude. It is incumbent upon you that you remain free from identification or contact, actual or implied, with any factions or cliques. I earnestly urge you to be firm, open, progressive and constructive; to carefully avoid political scheming, star chamber methods, and proceedings which heretofore have nullified theatre owner efforts to help one another."

Prior to the installation of officers of the Essex County body, Benjamin Schindler, of the State Board of Directors, installed the newly elected members of the county board of directors. They are: Louis Gold, Treat Theatre; Jack Halperin, Savoy Theatre; David J. Hennessey, Rivoli Theatre ; David Mates, Lincoln Theatre; Henry Sabo, Clinton Square Theatre; W. Wellinbrink, Wellmont Theatre, and W. Osterman, Palace Theatre.

Seider presented the Essex County organization with a gavel, the gift of the state body. The gavel had inscribed on a silver band the following: "Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey to Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Essex County, Louis Rosenthal, President, November 12, 1924." In his presentation address, Seider referred to the Essex County organization as "the offspring of the parent body—the state organization."

A luncheon, attended by the members of both state and county organizations, was followed by a meeting of the state board of directors, at which were present: President Joseph M. Seider; Vice-Presidents Charles Hildinger and Peter Adams; Secretary Henry P. Nelson; Treasurer William Keegan; Directors: Chairman Sidney E. Samuelson, Benjamin Schindler, Louis Rosenthal, Arthur B. Smith, I. M. Hirshblond, Leo Juskowitz and Leon Rosenblatt. In accordance with custom, all the members of the county organization attended the meeting of the state body. The state officers were the guests of the local organization.

Secretary Nelson directed the attention of the members to the newest phase of the fight being waged by the theatre owners of New Jersey to keep the motion picture theatres open on Sunday.

The outlook for Sunday movies, Nelson said, was never brighter than now. He called the attention of the theatre owners present to the fact that the grand jury, sitting in Elizabeth, only last week directed its attention to the Sunday situation. The grand jury, after going into every phase of the Sunday motion picture question, not only refused to indict, but proposed that state legislation be sought to legalize Sunday motion pictures, in communities where they are sanctioned by a referendum vote. In other words, this will make Sunday amusements purely a matter of local option.

A delegation of the Downtown Managers' Association attended, and in extending a welcome to them, President Seider expressed the hope that this visit would be the beginning of co-operation and the co-ordination of exhibitor efforts by both organizations. Mr. Shepard, responding, suggested that the theatre owners designate one of their number for membership in the Downtown Managers' Association, and the association would do likewise, for the purpose of establishing a direct contact.

Rosenthal, an insurance broker, spoke on the reduction of insurance rates.

The committee in charge of the dinner to be tendered to R. F. Woodhull, former state president, reported. Moe Kreidel, of Newark, chairman of the committee, stated that it has been decided to hold the dinner on Washingon's Birthday eve, February 21, 1925, at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark. Kreidel said the banquet will be limited to 250 guests, and will start at 7 P. M. One entire floor of the hotel has been reserved. An additional 1,000 guests will be admitted to the ball.

The M. P. T. O. of New Jersey was pledged solidly to co-operate to make "Educational Week" a success in every theatre in the commonwealth.

Charles Hildinger, chairman of the Legislative Committee, offered an optimistic report in which he touched upon the continued efforts of the committee in studying the Sunday motion picture question, and other important matters.

The December meeting of the State Board of Directors will be held in Trenton on the 11th, when the members will be the guests of the Mercer County Theatre Owners.

The Essex County body will meet on Wednesday next when the unfinished order of business, due to lack of time, will be completed.

The Essex County Theatre Owners organization consists of the following members: Kahn Bros., Walnut Theatre; D. J. Hennessey, Rivoli Theatre; Messrs. Lessor, National Theatre; Steinhardt, De Luxe; Mates, Lincoln; Unger, Cort Theatre; Davis, American; Gold, Cameo Theatre; Osterman, Grand; Robinson, Mt. Prospect; Herman, Playhouse; Bratter, Lyceum; Sabo, Clinton Square; M. Kreidel, Grove; Blumberg, City; Goldstein, Liberty; Faulkner, Strand; Reilly, Washington; Rosenthal, Palace; Saides, Savoy; Baer, Regent; Nicholas, Arlington, and Seligman, Brighton Theatre.

Quaker Blues Result in Arrest of Twelve Exhibitors

Seeking to enforce the blue laws of the state, reform interests in Erie, Pa., headed by the Rev. H. C. Shaw, caused the arrest of twelve exhibitors in that city last week on a charge of violating the Sunday laws against the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday. Each of the twelve was required to post $100 bail to guarantee appearance on a hearing, which was adjourned.

Those arrested were: Meyer Slotkin, Olympic; Boyd Neyland, Folly; F. A. Fairgraves, Regent; Joseph G. Seybold, Gem; John W. Hauer, American; Frank Paros, Rialto; F. W. Rickenfelder, Avenue; B. J. Newton, Columbia; N. C. Wagner, State; Hiram Sallan, Perry; T. J. Fordham, Strand, and Creighton Hepner, Keystone.

The avowed object of the movement, according to a statement by the Rev. Mr. Shaw, is to force a small clique of undesirable citizens to obey all the laws in the category of the state statute and force the city administration to enforce them. Entire blame for the operation of Sunday motion pictures, much liquor traffic and a demoralized police department, are charged to the city administration.

The first blow in retaliation was struck when members of the Parade Street Civic club voted to send to Mayor Williams a letter voicing the approval of the club of the manner in which the city is being run under the present administration and opposing any move to close the local picture theatres on the Sabbath.

Harry Nichols Dies

Pioneer of Filmdom Succumbs to Pneumonia in Pittsburgh

Harry E. Nichols, for the past five years with the Fox Film Corporation in Pittsburgh, the past nine months of which he served as manager of the branch, died at the Pittsburgh Hospital, on November 13, after a week's illness of bronchial pneumonia. He was 48 years old.

Mr. Nichols was one of the pioneers in the local film field, having been connected with the business for the past sixteen years.

In 1908 he began his career with Rowland and Clark's Penn and Columbia exchange and the following year he was made manager of the General Film Company, which office he held for six years. In 1915 he was with the Mutual Film Company, and in 1916 he was in charge of the "Fatty" Arbuckle comedy distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky exchange. Next he managed the George Kleine exchange in Pittsburgh during 1917 and 1918. He is survived by his widow, a ten-year-old son, three brothers and three sisters.

Chicago, Slated for 15,522 New Seats Succumbs to Detroit Building Boom

THE theatre building epidemic now raging in Detroit, as told in recent issues of Moving Picture World, has spread to Chicago where it is proving to be proportionately as great. This publication for the last few weeks has received dispatches as to the erecting of a theatre here and there in Chicago. But this week comes from our correspondent and other sources news of theatres under way and in the embryo which in the next few months will increase seating capacity in the Windy City by over 15,522 chairs.

Balaban-Katz Lead

Balaban & Katz announced plans for their eighth movie palace in Chicago, to be located in Howard street near Clark on the North Side. The cost of the theatre and the accompanying property will be about $2,500,000. C. W. and George L. Rapp are the architects. George M. Foreman & Co. have made a loan of $1,250,000. Rapp said that the new theatre as yet unnamed will have 3,500 seats. There will be 2,800 first floor seats and 700 seats on the mezzanine. The theatre is to be built on a triangular plot.

Balaban & Katz will lease the theatre from a building company for 25 years at an annual rental of $90,000. Actual work will start in January and the house will be completed by Christmas of the new year.

The Balaban & Katz picture presentation programs will be featured in the new theatre. The stage will be equipped for any type of production. After the first of the new year Balaban & Katz will have three major theatres under construction in Chicago, the above house, the new Uptown Theatre at Lawrence and Broadway and the United Masonic Theatre to be built on the site of the old Colonial Theatre in Randolph street.

Announcement was made this week by F. M. Brockell, general manager of Balaban Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., that two new houses will be added to this rapidly growing circuit within a short time.

One of the acquisitions will be the Highway Theatre, a $500,000 structure which is nearing completion in one of the outlying districts of Chicago. The other, located in Joliet is now in the course of construction and will probably be one of the most elaborate theatres in the Middle West.

With the completion of this building, the Balaban Kaz Midwest Circuit will have three theatres in Joilet.

According to the Chicago Tribune, Balaban & Katz also have plans to build a huge moving picture theatre in Evanston, north of this city. Evanston is a six-day theatre city, no shows being given on Sunday. Later it was denied by the Balaban & Katz management that they had any plans for a theatre in the big north shore suburb.

Lubliner-Trinz Stepping

Lubliner & Trinz are to erect a 3,000-seat theatre on Lawrence between Artesian and Campbell, north frontage, a 269 by 156 foot site, to cost $1,000,000.

Another 3,000-seat house is announced for the next block on a 183 by 157 foot site on Lawrence 100 feet west of Western, south frontage, under plans by S. N. Crowen, for Clinton B. Yarnell of James J. Redding & Co., general contractors. A 2,500-seat theatre, store, office and apartment block to cost $1,250,000 is planned by the Beacon Theatres Company at the southwest corner of Seventy-sixth and Cottage Grove, under plans by Walter W. Ahlschlager & Co., the site has been purchased from M. Hoffman.

The National Theatres Company will begin erection of a $650,000 2,000 seat theatre, store and apartment structure on Seventy-ninth, 200 feet east of Stony Island, north frontage, under plans by John Eberson. The site is 150 by 125 feet acquired from John R. O'Connor. The new house will be called the Avalon Theatre and work will start at an early date.

The new Karzas Theatre at Robey, Lincoln and Belle Plaine avenue, being built from the plans of Walter W. Ahlschlager will have 2,722 seats instead of 2,000 as stated at the time the news was made public.

Goldberg & Severn expect to open the new Jeffrey Theatre being erected at Jeffrey and Seventy-first street about the first of the year. The house will be up-to-date in every way and will seat 1,800 people.

Industrial Review Film

The Baumer Industrial Film company of Rochester, acting in the capacity of staff cinematographers for the Schine Theatre corporation, has sent representatives to Lockport, N. Y., to produce a civic and industrial review in motion pictures, for historical record. This picture is to contain all of the chief points of local interest, such as the locks, railroad activities, the Rotary, Kiwanis and Zonta clubs, the school system, public buildings and the principal streets. E. J. Baumer and R. A. Momm of the Baumer company are having the co-operation of W. Guy Johnston of the Board of Commerce. After being shown at the Rialto Theatre, the new Schine house in Lockport, the print will be at the disposal of the Chamber, or any of the civic organizations that may care to make use of it for exploiting Lockport.

WOULD INTEREST U. S. IN INTERNATIONAL FILM CONGRESS

Frank Green of the International Cinematograph Corporation, Ltd., is the official representative in America of the International Film Congress with headquarters in London. Green now has temporary offices at the Hotel Astor, New York. He seeks to arouse the interest of the American industry in this congress and plans calling upon leaders of the local trade. The London aggregation desires to expand so that it will include every section of filmdom in the universe.

Film Exports Lower

Less Than Last Month But Much Over Those of Year Ago

Film exports in September failed to maintain the high record set in the preceding month although, on the whole, much larger than those of September, 1923, it is shown in figures just compiled by the Department of Commerce.

Shipments during the month included 5,090,085 feet of raw stock, valued at $100,539; 645,694 feet of negatives, with a value of $116,722, and 16,174,150 feet of positives, worth $525,103. In the same month of last year we exported 6,506,593 feet of raw stock, valued at $79,699; 512,039 feet of negatives, worth $54,286; and 11,476,991 feet of positives, with a value of $439,600.

Staab to Legislature

Wisconsin theatre men are at last going to be represented in the legislature. Henry Staab, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, has been elected to fill a seat at the capital and will transact the duties of a legislator in addition to handling his job for the exhibitor organization.

Censors Accessories

Under New Regime Montreal Plans Sweeping Reforms

The civic administration of Montreal opened its new censorship bureau on November 12 with the new municipal department for the inspection of all theatre and moving picture posters, still photographs and printed display matter. Incidentally, a special tax is now imposed on all posts, window cards and other advertising which passes through the new bureau for inspection. The new assessment which goes to Montreal city treasury for the purpose of maintaining the bureau, ranges from three cents for posters varying from three to six sheets and five cents for all posters larger than the six sheet size. There is also to be a flat charge for window cards and other small sheets.

All posters are examined by the new censor before they can be used in a theatre or otherwise. If acceptable, the posters are duly stamped on the face side where all can see the mark of approval. If a poster is rejected, it is sent back to the film exchange for possible deletion or alteration as instructed by the censor, after which it can be submitted for a second inspection.

The official in charge of the new censorship office is Martin Singher, a former local newspaper man. The censor, according to the present regulations, is entirely independent of the police department but he has the power to institute prosecutions for alleged violations of the poster censor bylaw. Sweeping reforms are contemplated in this line of work, it is officially announced.

Jans-Hoffman Merger

H. F. Jans, who for many years has operated Jans Film Service Inc., at 729 Seventh Ave., New York, has consolidated his exchange with that of M. H. Hoffman, through a merger deal finally closed last week. The new exchange will occupy the offices at 729 and Mr. Hoffman will be in charge. Jans will retire from the distribution of pictures and devote his entire time to production. Jans Productions Inc., has taken offices on the sixteenth floor of the Loew State Theatre building, 1540 Broadway, where the executive end of the business will be handled.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Five Hefty Brothers Control Southbridge, Mass., Theatres

The Blanchard Brothers—five of them—of Southbridge, Mass., are among the leading exhibitors of Massachusetts and they constitute a family that is about as distinctive as anyone could find anywhere. Their combined weights total approximately one-half of a ton. They all wear the same size shirt, suit, in fact, everything, with the single exception of their hats. And they're all the same when it comes to being courteous, not only to their patrons, but to the strange caller. Ye scribe visited them at their Phelps Theatre on a holiday—a busy day, it was—but none of the Half-a-Ton Brothers was too busy to find it necessary to deny us the opportunity of a chat.

These are the Blanchard Brothers, amusement purveyors to the people of Southbridge and in control of the amusement situation of that city: Arthur A. Blanchard, Solomon E. Blanchard, William N. Blanchard, Fred H. Blanchard and Louis L. Blanchard. And what a versatile family they are! Every one is a musician; in fact, it was in the orchestra pit of the Plaza Theatre in Southbridge that they originally obtained first-hand knowledge of the workings of the theatre.

When they decided to become theatrical managers they built Blanchard's Theatre and opened it on Tuesday evening, November 28, 1911, almost thirteen years ago. They spent $50,000 to erect the theatre. This is how the work was divided: Manager, Arthur A. Blanchard; assistant manager, Solomon E. Blanchard; orchestra director, Fred H. Blanchard; treasurer, William N. Blanchard; master of property, Louis L. Blanchard. Arthur is a former trouper in vaudeville.

Their titles such as just given still hold good, except that when motion pictures are shown there is no stage work for Louis. And as for Fred, he is relieved from the orchestra pit during the picture shows by C. A. Price, pianist.

Besides Blanchard's Theatre the Blanchard Brothers operate the Plaza and Phelps theatres, of which they are the lessees. They acquired the Plaza in 1913 and the Phelps in 1917. They took over the Phelps Theatre a short time after it was opened by the builders, who had failed to make a success of the house. The Blanchards also are the owners of the Hippodrome, an amusement structure which seats 5,500, or about one seat for every three residents of Southbridge. The Hippodrome is used for lodge events and dances, but could be turned into a theatre on very short notice as there is a screen and booth already installed.

The policy of the theatres is as follows: Blanchard's, vaudeville, pictures and road shows; Plaza, local affairs; Phelps, films. Here is something unique—on holidays at the Phelps Theatre there are two complete shows on the one day, one bill at the matinee and a different one at night. The Blanchard Brothers find this is a successful plan.

Charles Lafrance is the projectionist at Blanchard's Theatre and he has held that position since the opening of the house thirteen years ago.

Another Adoption

Al Bothner has gone and done it again. And it's one of the most commendable "streaks" in any exhibitor in all New York State.

On three previous occasions Mr. and Mrs. Bothner have adopted children. The fourth arrived at the Union Station in Albany the other day, carrying flowers, and when Mr. Bothner gathered the little tot in his arms his eyes were filled with tears.

Fortunately, the Capitol Theatre, run by Mr. Bothner, is being well patronized these days, and although he may not drive the latest cars, he has a home that is blessed with four little tots being reared in an atmosphere of happiness and contentment.

Buffalo, N. Y.

With a new and striking electric sign bearing the word "Olympic," and with three supplementary changeable letter signs around the marque, the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, presents a very attractive appearance and Manager E. O. Weinberg is the recipient of many congratulations.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Buffalo Loew State, has ordered fifty twenty-four sheets on all his new Paramount pictures. He plans one of the biggest billboard campaigns ever tried out in Buffalo.

Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, whose office is in the Iroquois Building, has been named a member of the board of directors of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, which is headed by L. D. Williams.

Search is being made for burglars who, early on the morning of November 14, robbed the safe of the Happy Hour Theatre in Syracuse and got away with $350. The combination of the safe was blown off.

The Turn Hall Theatre in Syracuse now boasts of a new organ, Manager James H. Roe having just dedicated the instrument with a special program. Mr. Roe, who is president of the Syracuse Theatre Managers' Association, was the third man in the Salt City to enter the picture business there.

Manager Fred Strasser of the Emblem Theatre, Buffalo, celebrated the dedication of his new organ with a special program of music and pictures on Monday evening, November 17.

Canadian Showman Puts Over Another of His Novel Weeks

Ken Leach, proprietor of the Regent Theatre, a highly successful house of Calgary, Alberta, recently presented another of his special "weeks" at the theatre, the program this time consisting of a series of six features in which Tom Mix was the star. Mr. Leach called it "Tom Mix Week" and arranged his bookings so that the program was changed every day. This follows up his previous stunts of an "all comedy week," "revival week" and other booking features.

For "Tom Mix Week" the series was as follows: "Stepping Fast," "Three Jumps Ahead," "Soft Boiled," "Ladies to Board," "Eyes of the Forest" and "North of the Yukon."

For his "All Comedy Week," some few weeks ago, Manager Leach screened a group of short comedies, all on the one program, several of the pictures being modernized reissues. These comedies featured Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Lloyd Hamilton, Al St. John, Ben Turpin and others. Leach's "Revival Week" consisted of the presentation of a series of prominent productions that would obviously bear repeating, a different feature being shown every day.

Manager George Rotsky of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, a big Famous Players house, has adopted the plan of conducting a series of Monday night symphony concerts by an augmented orchestra of 40 musicians. The concert lasts half an hour.

The Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, which is under the direction of Charles A. Meade, played "The White Sister" for two big weeks, the production being presented continuously from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m., six times each day. Manager Meade arranged an interesting price schedule as follows: 10 to 12 noon, all seats 25 cents; noon to 5 p. m., 35 cents, reserved seats, 50 cents; after 5 p. m., general admission, 50 cents and reserved seats, 75 cents. Evening prices were charged all day on the two Saturdays.

The Regent Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, one of the larger downtown houses, has a new manager in Alex Cameron, formerly manager of the Rialto Theatre, Edmonton. Mr. Cameron has been identified with the theatrical business for just 35 years. Previous to becoming an exhibitor some years ago he was active in the producing of musical comedies and other stage attractions. He has organized a new orchestra for the Regent.

Manager Walter F. Davis of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is telling an intimate story in connection with the recent personal appearance of J. Warren Kerrigan, the film star, at the Metropolitan. According to Mr. Davis, Kerrigan was playing juvenile leads in a stock company in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1910 for $35 a week, Mr. Davis being the manager of the company then. For the week's appearance at the Winnipeg Metropolitan Kerrigan received $1,000 and 25 per cent of the gross receipts, Mr. Davis states. Manager Davis says that "Mr. Kerrigan has 'got even.'"

Her Excellency, Lady Byng of Vimy, wife of the Governor-General of Canada, attended a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on November 12, being received by Manager Leonard Bishop.

Second runs of important productions are following quickly in the theatres of Ottawa, Ontario. Only a week or two after the Auditorium presented "The Sea Hawk" at prices up to $1, the First National feature was being shown at the Centre Theatre at Ottawa for regular prices. The same applies to the first Ottawa runs of "The Covered Wagon" at the Auditorium, this being shown again at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, during the week starting November 22 at regular prices. Though the respective runs have been only a few weeks apart at the most, high interest has been sustained, according to Manager Don Stapleton of the Centre Theatre.

Omaha

W. H. Eddy is the new manager of the Iris Theatre at Indianola, Ia.

A new $25,000 theatre is to be built at Blair, Neb., as Mr. Robinson, who operates the Home Theatre there, has already let a contract for such a new structure.

Herbert Bleuchel has bought back the Isis Theatre at Cedar Rapids, Ia., after having sold it some months ago to F. M. Honey, who was formerly at Tecumseh Neb. Mr. Honey has not announced his plans.

A. L. Stone has bought the Paramount Theatre at Harvard, Neb., from George Summer.

Proprietor Kahl of the Cosmo Theatre, Doon, Ia., has reopened that theatre after having it closed for some time.

The Hostetter Amusement Co. has bought the Strand Theatre at Atlantic, Ia., from Dan Burgum.

C. C. McMains has sold the Electric Theatre at Lorimer, Ia., to S. C. Warren.

Troy, N. Y., Showman Misses Good Fight in Own Theatre

Although Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose Theatre in Troy, journeyed to Albany one night last week and spent a couple of dollars attending a prize fight, he could have enjoyed the same sort of thrills during the evening in his own theatre and saved himself the trip and incidental expense to the Capital City. There was no bothering with Marquis of Queensbury rules or three-minute rounds at the Rose Theatre. According to all comments, or at least Mr. Rosenthal's later version of the affair, the fight staged in the projection booth of the theatre was a rather one-sided contest. Anyhow, Lester Smith, who has been projectionist for Mr. Rosenthal for thirteen years, first at the Majestic Theatre and later at the Rose, swore out a warrant charging Harry M. Brooks, president of the Motion Picture Operators' Union in Troy, with assault.

According to Mr. Rosenthal, Brooks came to the booth and started the argument. At any rate, Smith was at a disadvantage on account of the smallness of the booth which might easily have become completely wrecked in the fracas. The noise of the encounter frightened many in the audience and about 300, according to Mr. Rosenthal, ran out into the street. Mr. Rosenthal returned from witnessing the prize fight in Albany and knew nothing of the encounter in his own house until the next morning, when Smith telephoned him and later presented himself with an eye partially closed and with all the appearance of having taken on Jack Dempsey for a round or two.

Recovering from an operation in one of the hospitals in New York City, Samuel Suckno, owner of the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany, complains of being a bit lonesome. He is at Mount Sinai Hospital. Several of the exhibitors and producers in New York City have already been up to see him.

Judging from the class of cars parked by exhibitors along Film Row as they visit the various exchanges, business at the theatres in this part of the state must be decidedly good these days. Cadillacs and Packards are common, with an occasional Lincoln, while Fords and Chevrolets are few and far between. There are no Rolls Royces as yet, but then give Oscar Perrin and a few others a little chance.

Charles H. Leger, who has run the Casino at Loon Lake for seven summers, was in town during the past week and is spending the winter months as a bond salesman.

Jimmy Rose, well known Pathe salesman here, now is an exhibitor. Mr. Rose has just purchased the Bijou Theatre in Troy from Elmer Crowninshield, and is showing second and third runs to capacity business. The house is a residential one, seating about 430. With Mr. Rose's experience it should prove a little mint.

Nothing definite has yet developed toward the sale of the State Theatre in Schenectady under the hammer. Several hearings proving claims against the property have been scheduled from time to time, only to be adjourned.

Louis Saperstein no longer is manager of the Rose Theatre in Troy. Mr. Saperstein came to the theatre about eighteen months ago, and was formerly associated with his brother, Joseph, in handling a house in New Britain, Conn.

It's a pretty tough outlook when three theatres, located in as many villages, draw all told about 125 persons on Armistice Night. And yet that is what happened to L. L. Connors, owner of theatres in Cambridge, Salem and Granville. Mr. Connors, in town during the week, discussing business conditions generally, said that in his particular section conditions were the worst in six years. He cited Armistice Night as a fair sample of the business he is doing. Mr. Connors believes that the present weather conditions are largely responsible, and that many persons, instead of attending the movies, are using their cars much the same as during the summer.

Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany, as well as the Troy and Lincoln theatres in Troy, journeyed down to New York last Wednesday night to confer with Walter Hayes and the powers that be on the new fall product.

Jack Matthews, a well known exhibitor in Plattsburgh, flush with coin after his house had broken every record in point of attendance for two straight weeks, struck Albany the other day. Mr. Matthews is changing his program every two days and using a mixture of vaudeville, pictures and musical comedy. Judging from the crowd he has been drawing, he seems to have hit the nail squarely on the head, at least so far as Plattsburgh is concerned. While in town, Mr. Matthews, who is a great admirer of Governor Smith, gave the Executive Chamber a ring and congratulated the Governor on his recent victory.

The many friends of Sol Manheimer, who looks after Nate Robbins' interests in Watertown, will be happy to learn that Mrs. Manheimer, confined at a hospital in that city, is on the road to improvement.

William Smalley announces the booking of "Girl Shy" for his theatres in Hamilton, Worcester, Stamford and St. Johnsville.

Just showing what competition will do, nearly every week finds either L. H. McAllister, owner of the Rex in Middleburg, or John Mattice, his competitor, shopping along Film Row for the best pictures obtainable. Mr. Mattice was in town Monday and Wednesday and brought Mr. and Mrs. L. H. McAllister, the first time the two have been in town for many months.

"Hot Water" went over extremely big in Syracuse at the Strand last week and is playing this week at the Mark Strand in Albany. The attendance during the first two days at the Syracuse Strand eclipsed all previous Lloyd pictures at that house.

Lew Fisher, booking up for Chatham, has bought "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for December 10 and 11 and will show "The Covered Wagon" on Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Fisher has placed his admission prices at the newly acquired theatre at 15 and 25 cents.

Jack Weinstein, who with Ben Apple runs the American and King theatres in Troy, was give a sure enough surprise party the other night when some thirty or more of his friends flocked in to a house warming in the new home which Mr. Weinstein recently bought in the Sycaway district. Perhaps the best part of it all was that the crowd brought their own orchestra as well as viands, the American Theatre orchestra playing for the dancing. As Ben Apple later on expressed it, it was "a great evening," but then Ben weighs only 290 pounds and has the appetite of a horse.

The Troy Theatre is minus its cat, but Mrs. Walter Roberts is far from being brokenhearted. As for her husband, after throwing innumerable coat hangers and finally batting the cat into the corner where he could nab him, he is as happy as can be that the animal is no longer ranging the house. The cat, which was a handsome Angora, was presented to Mrs. Roberts and for a time behaved itself. Then something went wrong with the animal. According to Mrs. Roberts, it acted like a wildcat. When Mr. Roberts attempted to catch and eject it the animal jumped from pillar to post. Managing finally to nab it, he turned it over to Zeb, the colored man of all work, who is said to have sold it for $3.

There appears to be a good chance of Al Bothner of the Capitol Theatre in Troy driving a somewhat more respectable car than in the past. Negotiations are now pending between Mr. Bothner and M. Weiss of the Hudson Theatre in Watervliet, by which the for-

Chicago Man Ends 14 Years of Service with Thompson

George L. Madison, for fourteen years manager of the Thompson houses, severed his connection with that organization last week when the company sold the Cozy Theatre to Sydney Selig. Madison spent the last twelve years in the Loop and is credited as being the originator of the 10-cent policy in the downtown district. He plans to go into business on his own account.

Theodore Fleischbein, owner of the New Strand Theatre, died at Belleville after an extended illness. He was 69 years of age.

Lubliner & Trinz will put over a personal appearance of J. Warren Kerrigan during Thanksgiving week at the Senate Theatre, their big West Side house, and will have a gala showing of "Captain Blood," in which he stars.

Eugene Saunders will soon open his new picture theatre at Harvard, where he has been managing the Palace Theatre for the past few years.

Sam Warwick of the Family Theatre at Seldon has leased the Crystal Theatre at Watseka and will manage both houses.

Wolf and Young expect to finish their new 2,300-seat house at Gary in time for the holiday business. They also own the Orpheum, Broadway and Gary theatres in that city.

Edward Havercamp has been made manager of the Julian Theatre at 918 Belmont avenue, succeeding Max Slot, who has been transferred to the Shakespeare Theatre on East 43rd street. Both houses belong to the Chicago Theatres Corporation circuit.

The Balaban & Katz theatres put over a tie-up with the Chicago Association of Fur Industries for Fur Week and showed a fur fashion film in colors on last week's bills at the various houses of the circuit.

The National Theatres Corporation put over a tie-up with the personal appearance of J. Warren Kerrigan at the Stratford and Woodlawn theatres on the South Side and the showing of "Captain Blood."

C. W. Ward has taken over the Pattee Theatre at Monmouth.

The Sun Theatre at Madison has been leased by Jesse W. Saunders of Mattoon from Jesse Holwager. It will be an exclusive picture theatre.

The Star Theatre at Lake City has been taken over by Larson and Peterson from R. M. Berman, who will devote his time to other interests.

Earl J. Johnson, C. B. Mead and R. W. Teeter have organized the Brookfield Theatre Corporation of Brookfield, Ill., with a capital of $15,000, to build and operate a picture theatre in that town.

W. H. McGrew has taken over the Family Theatre at Letts and will show pictures exclusively.

The Tivoli Theatre of the Balaban & Katz chain, Chicago, put over a radio week that was a big novelty and packed the house for seven days.

The Lyric and Empress theatres at Harlan have been sold to J. F. Erdman.

August Zilligen, owner of the Drake and Rosewood theatres on Montrose avenue, Chicago, has established a cancer research clinic in the Mallers Building and is associate medical director of the new organization.

Fred Hartman, one of the veteran managers of the city, for the past few years in charge of Ascher's Forest Park Theatre, has been made house manager of the Chateau Theatre, the largest house in the circuit on the North Side. Charles Mensing takes his place at the Forest Park Theatre.

Reuben Levine, who built the new Partheon Theatre at Berwyn and other houses in this territory, is back at his desk after a stay at Mayo Brothers' Hospital at Rochester. He is busily engaged in plans for other new houses that will be started soon after the first of the year.

F. R. Cain, D. W. Kahane and F. T. Platka have organized the Vic Amusement Company with offices at 22 West Monroe street, Chicago, and a capital of 100 shares of no par value, to operate a picture theatre.

The good work of Joe Hopp, managing director of the Illinois association, keeps up. Last week he reported the following members for the organization: A. L. Richardson of the Melba Theatre, Alexis; A. A. Cavin, Lyric Theatre, Stronghurst, and Edgar Churchill, operating houses at Raritan, Sciota and Biggsville. At the rate Joe is going Illinois will soon have a 100 per cent membership.

Manager Charley Ryan of the Milford Theatre, Chicago, has organized a Saturday matinee club for the children in the neighborhood. After they have attended fifteen shows, he allows them to come in without charge for the next three shows. The plan has brought the house a banner juvenile attendance for the matinee shows.

Walter Hadason has been placed in charge of the advertising and billing for the Illinois Theatre.

mer will probably become the owner of the latter's car. Incidentally Mr. Bothner is at the present time checking up on percentage bookings for the First National, leaving his theatre in the hands of relatives.

Ben Apple of the American Theatre in Troy, and leading member of the Kiwanis Club of that city, played the part of host to about 100 boys who competed in the potato raising contest in Rensselaer county, and who were in Troy on Thursday for the judging contest. Along last spring, the Kiwanis Club gave to each boy entering the contest a bushel of seed potatoes with the understanding that this fall they could repay in cash or in potatoes. Each of the contestants brought a sample of his crop and the winner received a watch, a $7 bank account, as well as a trip to the State Agricultural School in Cornell. And then Ben Apple stepped up and invited the whole crowd to his theatre.

Crowds flocked in such numbers to the Rose Theatre in Troy last week that Jake Rosenthal continued his "Harvest Week" for another seven days.

It takes a man like Clark Sanford, owner of the Galli Curci Theatre in Margaretville, to make a success as an exhibitor. The other day Mr. Sanford, thinking that he was to receive one of the Dempsey fight pictures each week instead of every other week, went ahead and advertised the picture only to learn from the exchange in Albany that the series were being furnished every other week. Mr. Sanford finally arranged with the exchange so that the picture was sent him by train, with special instructions to the express messenger to allow him to take it direct from the train rather than to wait until it had been delivered to the express office in Kingston. It was then up to Mr. Sanford to drive over to Kingston, forty-nine miles, get the picture and drive another forty-nine miles back in time for his show. He accomplished the feat and as a result his advertising made good with his patrons.

Joe Saperstein of the Griswold Theatre in Troy is planning to put on a boxing carnival of midgets on the mornings of November 21 and 22 in connection with running one of the Dempsey fight pictures.

Some of Oscar Perrin's competitors are wondering if Friend Oscar repeats "this way out" in his dreams or if he will be called upon to assist St. Peter in the world to come. Mr. Perrin has been playing to capacity audiences at the Leland Theatre in Albany. The house was built about 100 years ago and as a result it sometimes is rather hard for the ushers to handle the outgoing crowds. Mr. Perrin is right on hand, however, and his voice can be heard above the crowds as he sings "this way out."

The Majestic, Butler, Pa., a Revelation After Changes

John H. Harris, son of Senator J. P. Harris, can pin another medal on his ample bosom for the manner in which he directed the opening of the rejuvenated Majestic Theatre at Butler, Pa., on November 10. He, of course, shares honors with the new manager, M. M. Wear, who came from Charleston to manage the house, although the work was well under way before Mr. Wear arrived.

The house is a revelation to all who knew it in the old days. A young fortune has been laid out in making the theatre attractive, comfortable, clean and new. The Senator himself selected the color scheme. The walls and ceiling are carried out in sky blue and white panels. On the walls a stencil design in gold is laid over the blue panels. The carpet is rich burgundy. The draperies are a rich velvet of the same color. The entire house was repainted and all worn parts and old equipment was replaced.

The opening attraction was "The Covered Wagon" and sensational business was enjoyed.

Bart Dattola, owner of the Alhambra Theatre, New Kensington, is the proud daddy of a brand new baby girl, born recently, and who has been christened Laura Domenica Dattola. Mother and child are doing fine.

November 10 was Tenth Anniversary Week for Rowland and Clark's Regent Theatre in East Liberty. Manager Jack Donovan presented delightful little souvenirs in the way of gaily colored quill pens to all women patrons attending performances during the week. Incidentally, Jack Donovan has been on the job ever since the Regent opened.

M. E. Smith of the White Eagle Theatre, Sykesville, was a visitor to Film Row the week of November 10. Mr. Smith is a long way from Pittsburgh and his visits to the exchange center are few and far between.

On November 6 the Borough Council of Vandergrift, Pa., leased what is known as the Iris Theatre, in the Casino Building, to Wister M. Elliott of the same place, and who now controls the three picture theatres in the town. Mr. Elliott at once assumed control, and after redecorating the house reopened it on Thanksgiving Day.

Six exhibitors from Vandergrift and nearby towns contested for this lease, and until the bids were opened it was unknown who was to prove successful. Those bidding included John Wiseman, Edgar Shaffer, Howard MacDonald, John Crancos, Harry Wood and Wister M. Elliott.

Charles Dortic, manager of the Camera-phone in East Liberty, has resigned in order to accept a proposition with the Universal Film Exchanges, with which he will act as eastern division accessory sales manager. Dortic will be succeeded at the Camera-phone by John A. Fullwood, who, although new at the picture theatre business, has been in the theatrical game all his life. He is the son of the late Captain W. W. Fullwood, for years dramatic editor of the old Pittsburgh Leader.

Frank Fairgraves, until recently manager of the State Theatre, Erie, is now resting but says in the spring he will buy a roadster and start for the West.

George Sarvis, manager of the Library Theatre, Warren, injured several weeks ago in an automobile accident, has been removed to the General Hospital at Buffalo and would like to hear from his friends in the local industry.

News From St. Louis

Through the medium of special newspaper ads, Herschel Stuart, manager of the Missouri Theatre, Paramount first-run palace, keeps in touch with his patrons and finds out what they like and dislike about the Missouri's programs. "Lend us your brains and a 2-cent stamp," Stuart appeals. Many letters come in every week and this advice enables Stuart to keep his bill right up to the minute.

Out-of-town callers of the week included: Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Bob Cluster, Johnston City; Mrs. I. W. Rodger, Cairo, Ill.; C. E. Brady, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.; Mrs. C. E. Lilly, Hannibal, Mo., and Melville Paul, Mexico, Mo.

Sam Norman has succeeded Maurice Stahl as manager of the Tivoli Theatre, owned by the St. Louis Amusement Company. This change necessitated other switches among the St. Louis Amusement Company managers. John Weaver succeeds Norman at the New Lindell, while Harry O'Brien moves over to the Gravois from the Maffitt to fill the vacancy caused by Weaver's promotion.

The Easton Amusement Company is now operating the Aubert Theatre, Easton at Aubert avenue, and the Chippewa Theatre, Broadway near Chippewa street, that formerly were owned by Miss A. L. Ketchum. George Skouras and Maurice Stahl are the guiding spirits in the Easton Amusement Company.

The Star Theatre, Paris, Mo., is now under the management of L. C. Crow.

The Cella-Tate interests will reopen the Columbia Theatre, Sixth and St. Charles streets, St. Louis, Mo., November 23 as a dramatic stock house. Until it closed several months ago the Columbia was a combination picture and vaudeville theatre.

In a recent fire the O. H. Theatre at Metropolis, Ill., was destroyed. One of the Gould theatres in Lawrenceville, Ill., also burned recently.

Death took a heavy toll from the family of Dr. C. A. Tetley, well known theatre owner of Flat River, Mo., and Farmington, Mo. His mother and brother died in one week.

Fred Leber, owner, and Harry G. Redmon, manager of the Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., have been sued in the United States District Court there by the Leo Feist Company, New York City. The plaintiff asks $250 damages,

W. J. Etherton has taken over the Edinburg (Ill.) Theatre and changed its name to the Grand Theatre.

A number of theatres in this territory have closed. In the group are Essex Theatre, Essex, Mo.; Whiteway Theatre, Peach Orchard, Ark.; J. and J. Theatre, Hume, Ill., and Alton Theatre, Alton, Mo.

The Star Theatre, Paris, Mo., is now being conducted by L. C. Crow, who bought it from J. E. Hurley a few weeks ago.

Ruben Spivak has taken over the Chouteau Theatre, Jefferson avenue at Chouteau avenue.

Leo Delaney has announced that his new house in Brunswick will open in December.

Texas

Exhibitors in Dallas enjoyed a banner week There were 6,000 dentists here attending the national convention of the toothpullers. Strong programs were carried at all theatres. The Palace billed "Flirting With Love"; Jefferson, "Queen of Sin" and vaudeville; Melba, "Worldly Goods" and vaudeville; Capitol, "Vanity's Price"; Old Mill, "The Sea Hawk"; Rex, "Mademoiselle Midnight."

Death has claimed George Anzy, about 70 years old, former manager of the old Opera House in Dallas and friend to legitimate and motion picture men all over the Southwest.

Early settlement of the differences between members of the Motion Picture Theatre Operators' Union in Dallas and suburban theatre owners is expected. The difficulties arose over the wage scale.

Will Horwitz, well known Houston, Texas, motion picture man, has purchased the Milwaukee Cafe on Main street there from Scholl Brothers and converted it into a high class cabaret.

A cordial invitation has been extended "Ma" Ferguson, the first woman governor in all history, to be present at dedicatory exercises for the new $300,000 theatre the Saengers have erected at Texarkana, Texas. The theatre is to be dedicated in a few weeks.

Gainesville, Texas, now has four picture theatres running regularly. The Palace is the newest entrant. It was opened by S. Bertram and J. H. Thiesen, veteran showmen, this week. The Cozy was opened by J. H. Greenhill at the beginning of the fall season, while the Majestic and Lyric have been running regularly for several years. With a potential oil field discovered at Gainesville's very doors on November 9, it would seem that all four exhibitors are destined to prosper. When this correspondent visited the new oil well near Gainesville on November 10 thousands of visitors were thronging the streets and excitement was running fever high.

A. R. Daniel has opened his new theatre at Idalou, Texas.

W. M. Brand will build a new picture theatre at Harrison, Ark., soon.

The Crystal Theatre at Jennings, Okla., has closed for remodeling.

The new Ritz Theatre at Fort Worth, Texas, is being remodeled.

The Palace Theatre at New Braunsfield, Texas, is being built.

The Laura Theatre at Augusta, Ark., has reopened.

The Cruce Building at Port Lavaca, Texas, is being remodeled for a theatre.

Cold Weather Brings Throngs to Detroit Picture Theatres

Cold weather has finally set in on Detroit and as a result box office reports from downtown and neighborhood theatre managers have struck a decided trend toward the uppish mark. The variable weather of a late Indian summer was not relished in the Michigan section. Harold Lloyd's "Hot Water" has just closed a four weeks' run at the Adams, beating records established at the same house by "Girl Shy," while all other theatres in the downtown section report that their business has increased all the way from 15 to 40 per cent during the past ten days or two weeks. "The Thief of Bagdad," playing a road show run at the New Detroit Opera House, is also sharing this weather-made prosperity. It is now on its fourth and final week, but it is reported from good authorities that the picture had at the end of its third week grossed far more than "The Ten Commandments" did at the end of its fifth and final week.

"Sundown" opened at the John H. Kunsky Adams last Sunday, succeeding "Hot Water," and business opened so good that it doubtless will be held for a run. A big exploitation campaign was placed in back of it.

W. S. Butterfield played host to about fifty exhibitors and exchange men Wednesday of this week, the occasion being the formal opening of the new Butterfield offices in the Film Building. Butterfield, who operates more than a dozen film and vaudeville theatres in Michigan cities, recently moved his headquarters from Battle Creek.

John Wuerth's theatre in Ypsilanti, a short distance from Detroit, was smashed open by thieves the other night, who got away with about $400. Fortunately for him, at least, the money did not belong to Wuerth but to a restaurant owner next door, who requested that he be allowed to place the money there for safekeeping.

George W. Trendle, general manager for the John H. Kunsky enterprises, is in New York City attending the regular meeting of the First National executive committee.

Montana

Merle Davis, formerly general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, has leased the Broadway, Ansonia and Orpheum in Butte and hereafter he will be his own manager. This is good news to Butte as Mr. Davis has long been one of the most influential as well as one of the best theatre men of the state. His keen interest in the civic affairs of the city gives him an unusual ability in giving Butte theatre fans just the program they want. He has had the Ansonia Theatre remodeled so that now it is one of the most up-to-date show houses of the West.

R. P. Sutton, veteran showman, known from coast to coast as one of the rail blazers for the amusement game, died in Los Angeles, and the body was brought to Butte for burial on October 7. Mr. Sutton was endearingly known as "Uncle Dick." Here in Butte he made his fortune and lived for over twenty-five years, managing both legitimate and picture theatres.

The Silver Bow Amusement Company of Butte has been remodeling the American Theatre and as a result the new lighting, decorating and furnishings make it one of the most attractive theatres in the city as well as one of the most modern of the state. "The Sea Hawk" was given as the opening performance last month. While it was shown three nights the eager crowds could not be accommodated.

Three new theatres have recently opened in Montana. One at Bear Creek is called the Happy Hour, with N. Cennis as manager. At Lame Deer, W. Wheeler has charge of the Opera House. The third theatre at Fairview is known as the Orpheum, with T. Johnson as manager.

The Temple Theatre is Butte's latest and it is one of the most picturesque in the Northwest. The capacity is 1,500, with a perfect vision of the screen from every seat. Manager Wisner opened with "Stranger Welcome." For a few weeks he has had the house open to movies but last week he decided to try vaudeville for a time.

Cincinnati

Arthur Ilg, Lorain, Ohio, is reported as contemplating the erection of a 1,000-seat house at Lorain, Ohio, to replace the Wonderland Theatre, which was damaged by the tornado last summer and which has since been closed permanently.

Mrs. Jennie Zost, who operates the Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is grieving over the loss of her pocketbook containing a large sum of money.

John Schwalm, manager of the Rialto, Hamilton, broke all previous house records with a six-day showing of "The Sea Hawk," his Sunday receipts exceeding the previous highest takings since the house opened several years ago.

The Duncan Theatre, Falmouth, Ky., has been taken over by L. E. McHatten, who also operates the Thelma Theatre at Butler, Ky.

David Sullivan, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Corning, Ohio, has returned from a trip abroad, during which he visited his native country, Syria.

Millard Blattner, who formerly managed the Southern Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has been appointed manager of the Gayety Theatre, Dayton, which was recently taken over by the Keith interests. Charles Widener has been made manager of the Southern of Columbus.

J. O. Brooks, who formerly ran the Burnet Theatre, Avondale, and who is now operating the Tivoli, formerly the Aragon, has accomplished wonders at this house since he took possession last spring. The Tivoli is a residential theatre catering to the working class and located on Upper Vine street.

Hunt Stromberg presents Harry Carey in "The Flaming Forties." Released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Milwaukee

There's a new boss in the Weisfeldt home in Milwaukee. His name is Donald and he is the three-months-old baby that Eddie J. Weisfeldt, director of production at Saxe's Wiscon Theatre, has just adopted.

"A born showman, if there ever was one," says Eddie, as he passes out the cigars and throws out his chest in true daddy fashion.

Ted Snyder, popular song writer, was one of the numbers featured this week by Leo A. Landau at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee.

Alterations to the Radio Theatre on Fond du Lac avenue in Milwaukee are to be made at an expenditure of $20,000 according to reports. It is understood that approximately 300 more seats are to be added by extending the rear, giving the house a capacity of 800. An organ also is to be installed.

M. J. Weisfeldt, district manager of the Northwest territory for F. B. O., with headquarters in Minneapolis, is in Milwaukee on a business trip during which he is the guest of his brother, Eddie J. Weisfeldt, director of production at Saxe's Wisconsin Theatre.

Harry Greenway is the new publicity director for Saxe houses in Milwaukee. Greenway, who hails from Chicago, will fill the position left vacant several weeks ago by the resignation of Jack Cuddy and whose place two other men have since held for only a week apiece.

San Francisco Concern Adds Four More Houses to Chain

Following a period of three weeks, during which no additions were made to the chain of houses controlled by the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corporation, the management of this amusement concern made up for its remissness the second week in November by taking over four picture theatres in the North Beach district of San Francisco, the houses being the Verdi, Washington Square, Broadway and Crescent theatres. The deal was negotiated by J. R. Saul, local theatre broker. These North Beach houses are now linked in a chain of fifty houses in Northern California, which will be further increased upon the completion of five theatres now being built, the new houses to be in San Francisco and the east-bay suburb of Oakland.

The Thousand Oaks district of Berkeley, a charming east-bay suburb of San Francisco, will have its first theatre some time during the coming year. The house is to be built by Max Blumenfeld and associates, who conduct theatres at San Rafael, Sacramento, Gilroy and Oakland, and who are building a fine house at San Mateo. A site for the Berkeley house has been purchased on Solano avenue, near the Alameda, and plans are being prepared by a San Francisco architect. The theatre will seat about 1,000 and will be known as the Oaks Theatre. It will be of an especially high type and will be equipped with a splendid organ.

A new musical policy has been placed into effect at the two Park-Presidio District theatres of George A. Oppenheimer and Alex. E. Levin, San Francisco. Ben Black and his band, for a year at the Alexandria, have been transferred to the Coliseum, the house recently taken over, and Giovanni Coletti has organized the Alexandria Orchestra and will offer the popular classics.

Harold Lloyd in "Hot Water" has proved even a greater attraction at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, than was anticipated and Manager Charles M. Pincus is preparing to extend the run, originally set for four weeks. The house is being opened an hour earlier than usual and ten shows are given daily, with thirteen on Sunday. "Hot Water" will be followed by Al and Ray Rockett's "Abraham Lincoln" and a publicity campaign has already been launched on this, although the date of opening is unsettled.

Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal organization, recently visited San Francisco and called upon R. R. Boomer, manager of the Cameo Theatre, complimenting him upon the showing being made by this house.

The California Theatre, under the direction of Nat Holt, recently offered a style film, "Furs and Fashions," and succeeded in getting a tremendous amount of publicity through unusual sources. A style show was put on in connection with this event, but instead of this being presented on the stage it was put on on the mezzanine lounge, to which interested persons were invited.

The third anniversary of the opening of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, was celebrated recently with a special program.

The T. & D. Theatre at Watsonville, Cal., operated by West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, was destroyed by fire on November 8, with a loss estimated at $80,000. It is believed that the blaze was caused by defective wiring.

Seattle

A rumor that Jensen & Von Herberg are interested in Aberdeen, Wash., seems to be substantiated by a printed report that H. T. Moore of the Moore Amusement Company, Tacoma, has bought out W. G. Ripley's interest in the Dolan and Ripley string, comprising five houses in Aberdeen and two in Hoquiam.

A consolidation is reported as under way in Kelso, Wash., but no details are available as yet.

Will Starkey and J. W. Bishell have reopened the Rex, Lewiston, Idaho. They also own the Theatorium.

Spokane has annexed the community of Hillyard. This automatically makes G. W. Newton's theatre a suburban house, Spokane's first and only suburban theatre. He has of course been a first-run exhibitor, but difference will undoubtedly be straightened out, as Hillyard would not have been entitled to a run until after Spokane, previously.

Milburn Kenworthy of Moscow, Idaho, has reopened the Kenworthy Theatre, after a complete remodeling, finishing and seating.

Fulton Cook of St. Mary's, Idaho, plans a new theatre. He has been east looking 'em over, so to speak. Mr. Cook operates the Bungalo.

E. J. Reynolds has been doing a bit of building himself. He has constructed a beautifully finished, high-class dance hall beneath his Liberty Theatre, Pasco, Wash.

Manager Al Finkelstein of the Strand was host to Civil War veterans at a special Friday afternoon performance of "Abraham Lincoln."

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

Associated Exhibitors

CHEECHAHCOS. (7,600 feet). Selected cast. I paid a big price for this, thinking it was a good buy, but did the poorest Friday and Saturday business in eleven years, with perfect weather. Fair tone. Possibly Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Draw merchant and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

LONE WOLF. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. A fair crook story with a little action. People seemed to like it. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

LONE WOLF. (6 reels). Stars, Dalton and Holt. A fair program show that brought out a big crowd on Saturday. Dalton and Holt proved a good drawing card. A show good for the action lovers. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Appeal fair. Draw better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Have done pretty well on the last few MacLean pictures, but for some unknown reason took an awful flop on this, and it's no fault of the picture. Many said it was better than "Girl Shy." One of the things I cannot figure out is why it did not draw better. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

THREE MILES OUT. (5,700 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. This is the first Madge Kennedy picture that ever did any business for me. Plenty of life and action in this one but not as much "bootlegging" stuff in it as the press books claim. Tone good. All classes, town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

F. B. O.

FASHIONABLE FAKERS. (5,000 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. For me, 100 per cent. cheese, and limburger at that. Bogus, punk, no good. Doorkeeper and operator stayed to see the finish; every one else had left by the end of the fourth reel. Tone, nothing-minus. Sunday, no. Audience apeal, zero. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. Typical Talmadge action stunt picture that pleased the followers of this star. If this lad should ever land with the right director in a real story he will make it talk. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

FRED THOMSON'S SERIES. Here's another Mix at last. Buy this first series and second, too, if you can. They are good drawing cards. Tone, usually good. Sunday, questionable. Middle class, city of 23,125. Admission, 10-30. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (450 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fine. Great picture. All Fred's go here. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. City and country class, town of 2,000. Admission, 10-25-35. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre (400 seats), Hollis, Oklahoma.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Played to biggest Monday and Tuesday business since opening theatre three years ago, and it pleased 100 per cent. Have asked for return date. Just could not keep from telling this to the whole world. It's a plum good 'un. T. W. Sharp, New Theatre, Little Rock, Arkansas.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. Star, Harry Carey. This picture is too slow; in fact our fans want lots of action. This is an old picture and shows its age. Tone, yes. Sunday, No. Audience appeal, not much. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25, specials 25-50. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This boy is a comer. He is a big favorite here now and I have run only two or three of his pictures. This one is up to his standard. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Large audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission, 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MICKEY. Star, Mabel Normand. Ran this old classic for about the third time and cleaned up with it. You may be able to do likewise. City of 110,000. Admission, 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

ON TIME. Star, Richard Talmadge. This picture failed to please and failed to draw. Talmadge is good, but such support and such rotten stories are killing him. All classes. Paul L. Shaw, Rivoli Theatre, Clinton, Indiana.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star cast. A box office attraction that's a wallop. Tied up with Boy Scouts and Marine recruiting. B. H. Wallerstein, Broadway Theatre, Buffalo, New York.

First National

CYTHEREA. (7,400 feet). Star, Lewis Star, Johnny Walker. For me, 100 per cent. some reason or other. One of the troubles was that it was too drawn out. Small towns, look before you book. Tone not so good. Sunday, yes. Poor audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

ONE REELERS THAT BUILD BIG BUSINESS—SEE 'EM!

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS

DADDY. (5,735 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Best Coogan we have ever played and it pleased a hundred per cent. Boys, you can't go wrong on pictures like this. Print was in perfect condition, without a single misframe or punch hole to mar its perfection. Film was clean and photography was perfect. Patrons surely did compliment us for showing this one. Knew this would be good, by Straight From the Shoulder reports. Excellent tone; sure for Sunday. Appeal a hundred per cent. Draw general class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Fine picture, good print and, oh, we jammed 'em in on Saturday night. Two full shows made our hearts glad and pocketbooks "gladder." Bought it right and made some money. Boost it big. Tone, best. Sunday, any time. Big attendance. Small town and country class, town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

ENCHANTED COTTAGE. (7,120 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Patrons come to the theatre to be entertained and amused. "Enchanted Cottage" may be an intellectual treat but it flopped, and flopped hard, when called upon to entertain or amuse my bunch. I have had more knocks on this picture than on any other I have ever used. Didn't find a soul who liked it—I didn't see it. Draw all classes, small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

ENCHANTED COTTAGE. (7,120 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. This is one of the finest pieces of acting I have ever seen. May McAvoy is almost a second Lon Chaney. Barthelmess equally as good. This picture will not please one hundred per cent because of the slow action. Tone excellent. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal good. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

ETERNAL FLAME. (7,452 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Good program picture. Nothing to rave over. Scenes very beautiful. Not much drawing power to it. Picture overrated, I think, from a special standpoint. Cotton mill class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South Carolina.

GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE. (5,630 feet). Star, Larry Semon. Nothing to it, and a poor piece of business when Semon was put in big pictures. Better keep him in little ones or out altogether. Lost me money. Made me mad. Almost lost my religion. No laughs in this one nor anything else. Tone, no. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, no. Mixed class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,723 feet). Star cast. A fine high class comedy. Well liked by ninety per cent of my patrons. Business good. Audience expected a different sort of picture, but well pleased with the disappointment. The last two reels are a riot. Tone good. All classes, town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

HOTTENTOT. (5,963 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A real picture from every angle. Good for any house, any time. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Great appeal. Draw all classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,700 feet). Star cast. Good entertainment if your patrons understand Jewish characterizations. All those who were successful with "Potash" should go better with "In Hollywood," for it's really better. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

LOVE MASTER. (6,779 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). A real picture of the North, with plenty of action. Strongheart's best. Good attendance. Tone okay. Sunday, no. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LOVE MASTER. (6,779 feet). Star, Strongheart. I thought this a real good show. Not so much action, but different, and good acting parts for an animal show. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Draw family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MADONNA OF THE STREET. (7,507 feet). Star, Milton Sills. In my estimation best picture yet. Has an appeal for every type in your audience. Action, sensual, religious, direction, romance are all there. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Great audience appeal. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MARRIAGE CHEAT. (7 reels). Star, Percy Marmont. A South Sea Island picture. Some beautiful scenes and big ocean storm. Very good story and entertainment. Tone good. Fair attendance. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

OMAR THE TENT MAKER. Star, Guy Bates Post. I got by and no one took a shot at me. The day has passed for this sort of stuff in Weiser. All classes, town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (250 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

WANTERS. (6,871 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Pleased my audience. A good story with several good comedy situations worked in. Tone, good. Good attendance. General class town of 3,480. Admission 10-15-25. L. Miller, Grand Theatre (450 seats), Bay City, Texas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Since this dependable tip department is run for exhibitors and by exhibitors, it is mighty gratifying to have the boys take active interest in the way it is run and in the things that are used, such as our report blank.

L. O. Davis comes in with a suggestion about our blank. It strikes me that there is a lot of good stuff in what he suggests.

On another page I'm broadcasting his suggestion. Write in and let me know what you think about it, because I always want you folks to have the final say, and I'll abide—as always—by your judgment.

VAN.

Fox

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures shown here in months. Looked like serial cut down. Plenty of action and thrills. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Admission thirty-five cents. Cameron & Ryan, Celtic Hall Theatre, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, Canada.

EYES OF THE FOREST. (5 reels). Star, Tom Mix. Pretty good picture, although Birmingham fans want straight westerns. Fair tone and audience appeal. Draw middle class, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good program picture that pleased a majority. Fair tone; maybe for Sunday. Eighty per cent. Draw general class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. 'Tis a sad, sad story. It's all about the loves of two men, one old and the other young, for a young girl. "You take her"; "No you take her!"—and finally the young 'un gets her, while the old man suicides in a novel way. It's good melodrama, and that is what it's meant for. Tone, good for a church. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, "a good cry." Draw better class, city of 55,000. Admission varies, 30 cents to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

IF WINTER COMES (10 reels). Type, sad. I did not like this picture, though it drew a crowd because of the well known nature of the story. I think the picture overemphasizes the unpleasant side of life and takes about five reels too much to tell the story. Sunday, yes. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Here's a knockout. A well made picture from a Zane Gray story, and Tom Mix is the star! Everybody's satisfied and the cashier was busy all the time. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. Draw better class, city of 55,000. Admission varies, 30 cents to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

LONE STAR RANGER. (5,259 feet). Star, Tom Mix. An extra good western and should please any audience. Also Zane Grey's name along with Mix is an extra drawing card, so it got the business and pleased the crowd. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

MILE A MINUTE ROMEO. (4,800 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Made to order for Gem Theatre. Tone splendid. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, more Mix. All classes, city of 40,000. Admission 10-20. M. Pois, Gem Theatre (440 seats), Wichita Falls, Texas.

NOT A DRUM WAS HEARD. (4,823 feet). Star, Buck Jones. I don't know why they pan this. It's very good. The name means

What Friend Davis Suggests for Our Blanks

"Van, your report blanks are O. K. and I like them fine; but may I make a suggestion along this line?

"We small town exhibitors have a hard time picking out our Specials from all the supposed-to-be Supers the companies are now turning out, and I think this little suggestion as to whether the picture is big enough for a Special or not would help—Also, 'the drawing power' I believe would help on these reports.

"Title—producer—star: Merits of Production: Drawing Power; Is this big enough for a Special? could be included.

"Perhaps you may get an idea from this; or it may not be worth anything. Nevertheless, I want you to feel that it is offered only in a spirit of helpfulness.

"I am enclosing a few reports." L. O. Davis, Virignia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WHAT DO YOU SAY, FELLOWS? SHALL WE CHANGE THE BLANK?

LET'S HAVE YOUR IDEAS.

nothing to the picture but it's all there and the crowd said so. Tone good. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Fairbanks

THIEF OF BAGDAD. (Douglas Fairbanks Prod.). (12,000 feet). Most marvelous production ever made. Women in particular come, to rave for days after seeing it. You never will hear such bombastic comments from your patrons; they love this picture. Excellent tone. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal a hundred per cent. Draw better class, city of 55,000. Admission varies, 30 cents to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

Metro-Goldwyn

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This one is good but it could stand to be cut down a reel or two shorter. The children all liked it and most of the grown-ups praised it too, but business is poor and this did not draw like Jackie usually does. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

IN SEARCH OF A THRILL. (5,500 feet). Star, Viola Dana. The usual Dana. She always pleases my crowd. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star cast. Don't be afraid of this one. Go after this one and it'll clean up for you. Went after this one and surprised. B. H. Wallerstein, Broadway Theatre, Buffalo, New York.

Paramount

BELLA DONNA. (7,100 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Pola does some mighty nifty acting in this, as does Conway Tearle, but there is very little to say for anything else. There is a lot of good moral tone mixed with too much rotten tone. Tone, no. Sunday, no. No audience appeal. High and social class, town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. This cast and title will sure bring them in. However, the story is draggy and padded too much. They did not seem to like the bull fighting. Valentino is not the toreador that he is a sheik. Tone good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. High and social class, town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

BOOMERANG BILL. Star, Lionel Barrymore. Very good, but title misleading to our patrons, though they were not disappointed. Tone, okay. Sunday, not very suitable. Audience appeal, good. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Best appreciated Zane Grey I have shown, due to lack of gun play, etc. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. Rural class, town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star cast. Nothing extra to this one. Audience did not like it, as it ended too funny. The audience said it was not all there. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CODE OF THE SEA. (6,038 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. This makes a fairly good Saturday night show for us. It is a good story of the sea. We had good attendance. A program picture that should please. Tone, okay. Fair audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CODE OF THE SEA. (6,038 feet). Star, Rod LaRocque. A very good sea picture. A coward redeems himself. Good attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. General class, town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (797 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of the poorer Meighan pictures and wasn't it for the star's following would have flopped badly. Give Tom a real story and we will dust off our S. R. O. signs. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. An absolute knockout for my class patronage. They will gladly pay 50 cents for a picture of this calibre. If you play average pictures one day, play this one two. Advertise big. Tone, good. Audience appeal, 90 per cent. General class, town of 1,200. Admission 15-25, regular. T. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Yes, I played it, too, and Paramount made considerable money, but we didn't make very much. A fine picture and a darned shame the showman is not allowed a chance to get money also. Glad it is all over. Feller just has to play. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Extra good audience appeal. Best class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. It got away to a big start yesterday and pleased 100 per cent. It is all they say it is. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, the highest. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Good, as you all know, but has to be put over with good music, which a small town cannot afford to do. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Resort class, town of 2,400. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Knocked them for a goal. Best box office attraction this year. Universal appeal. Direction great. Acting of all beyond anything ever done by these actors. Ernest Torrence steals the picture. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War, in town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Bayard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

EMPTY HANDS. Star, Jack Holt. See what happens when an ultra-modern, self-satisfied daughter of the idle rich is whisked away from luxury, luxurious gowns and wild parties to a wooded wilderness with a he-man that she has scorned. "Empty Hands" bridges the gap between the new and the old order of things, which shows human nature to be the same the world over, now and since the beginning. Managers using this picture will fill their box office exchequers, both afternoon and evenings. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good. Patrons liked it. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

EXPERIENCE. (7 reels). Star cast. Oh! if all young people would just heed the lesson put on by this feature. Very interesting and lavish setting. Fine tone. Sunday, fair.

A FRANK E. WOODS Production

The most striking and original story in motion picture history

DIRECTED BY JOHN G. ADOLFI

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

Audience appeal, very good. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

FAIR WEEK. (5 reels). Star, Walter Heirs. Just a little program show that went over with the uncritical ones and was panned by the rest. The opinion of the majority was, however, that it was a passable program picture. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star, Julia Faye. Different. Romance, poignant, powerful, thrilling, tremendous in its scope. Dressed in a glowing color, fashion, luxury, dazzling beauty, a veritable dramatic "cloth of gold" such as only DeMille can weave. With a climax that will make screen history. You will never forget "Feet of Clay" after once having seen it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star, Vera Reynolds. Very good feature. Elaborate sets. Very interesting story. High entertainment value. Unique finish and happy ending. Patrons praised it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Farmers, merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Business exceptionally good. Jacksonvillians liked it. An unusual picture which created much favorable talk and kept them coming. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Guy O. Kinemer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. While this picture didn't draw any record breaking audiences it pleased those who saw it and the comments were rather favorable. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FOR THE DEFENSE. Star, Ethel Clayton. Fairly good picture, but star don't take here. Didn't draw at all. Only pleased about fifty-fifty. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

GOOD PROVIDER. (7,753 feet). Star, Vera Gordon. Oh, boy, this sure was good, and they all fairly raised the roof. Step on this. Tone, fine. Sunday, good. Audience appeal, very good. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

GREAT MOMENT. (6,372 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is one of the best society features as well as a touch of western scenery, etc. Good; boost it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

HELL DIGGERS. (4,277 feet). Star, Wallace Reed. This is one of Wallie's good ones. A good fight as well as the love story. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

The Sort of Approval You All Deserve

"Dear Van, and 'Gang': Am enclosing a few reports, after so long—
"I am still using The World as my guide in selecting my pictures.
"I have always considered The World as first in everything, as I have been a constant subscriber, for ten years in March, 1925.
"I often quote Straight From the Shoulder in my advertising: and it often acts as a stimulant to me for me to read over reports on my current pictures.
"Thanks for the favor of a chance to return the favor or pass along same."—T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

HER GILDED CAGE. (6,249 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good picture with plenty opportunities for exploitation. Gloria never fails to pack them in for us. She not only is the best "Clothes Horse" in the business, but she carries any part she plays to near perfection. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. High and social class, town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADE MARK. (5,101 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one was one of Gloria's best. Lavish setting and gowns, etc., as well as plenty of pep for a society picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats). Grafton, Nebraska.

HER LOVE STORY. Star, Gloria Swanson. Another link has been forged in the Gloria Swanson chain of entertainment. Her latest picture, "Her Love Story." When she was first seen in "Zaza" many people wondered that she could do such a role, and "The Humming Bird" only served to demonstrate further her versatility. Then came "The Society Scandal" and "Manhandled," each entirely different from the other, each supreme in its class. Now comes her greatest, a combination of everything she has done before. It is a story written by Mary Roberts Rinehart, combining thrills and royalty, wonderful gowns and exotic settings, and last a beautiful, enthralling romance that will be long remembered. Any and all exhibitors using this picture can make no mistake. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Played two days. This is the best feature Swanson has ever been in. She acts in this one only, and here is the hitch: We paid too much for the show in proportion to the business we did. The first night's attendance was fair. The second night's attendance was poor. Swanson is not a big enough drawing card for two nights running in our town. We only grossed enough to barely pay our expenses. The weather was good and I can't see any reason why they did not turn out except that we are running against ten cent competition. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, good, but it did not draw. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE. (5,612 feet). Star cast. Very good comedy of married life which seemed to please. Lots of laughs, and nearly everybody satisfied. What more do you want. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, very good. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE. (5,612 feet). Star cast. This sure was a scream that made even the sour ones laugh. Tone, okay. Sunday, fair. Very good audience appeal. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. This is as good as a western. Lots of horsemanship and plenty of action. Introductory scenes very interesting. Some of the dancing could have been omitted without being missed, but taken as a whole, a very good picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Rural Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Audience well pleased, Several stopped coming out and told me it was fine. Gloria does some wonderful acting. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Excellent attendance. General classes, town of 3,480. Admission 10-15-25. L. Miller, Grand Theatre (450 seats), Bay City, Texas.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. (5,795 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A good, peppy one. One with lots of action that Jack can give in his pictures. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers and small town class, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

MORAL SINNER. (5,455 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. This was a very weak sister and the receipts surely bore it out. Flopped in every house and as a consequence I played it at a loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MORAL SINNER. (5,455 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just a program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farmers, merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MORAL SINNER. (5,455 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Only fair. I ran it as part of double feature program and in this way it went over. Pretty weak to run as a single feature. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MORAL SINNER. (5,499 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A crook story a la Dalton. Rather melodramatic and tedious at times, with the same old plot worked overtime in the movies, but after all a pretty good story if you don't mind and will please most audiences. James Rennie, in support, could be improved upon, but he is good looking and the husband of Dorothy Gish, and that counts for a good deal with the girls. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30.

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

Davis Answers Martin's Trailer Query

"Since this trailer question has come up I want to say a few words along this line.

"I am now using a regular trailer service and making five changes a week this gives me a trailer on every picture which enables me to do without all slides and since I have installed this service I have had many compliments on it from my patrons. They say it gives them some idea of every picture and helps them to decide the picture they want to see the following week. I sure do consider it well worth the $25. per month and especially so to a house that runs several shows a day as we do.

"Now of course I have my doubts about the worth of this service to the small houses that only run them once a day but any town of five thousand or more ought to be able to run this service and make it pay for itself and then some."—L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. The film we got seemed to be all right, but the story as screened was very much disconnected. Canal zone scenes were authentic, although I think the picture would have been enhanced had a few more shots of the canal been interjected. Price on this out of proportion to its entertainment value. Use as program picture only. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission, 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

NEXT CORNER. (7,081 feet). Star cast. An imposing feature with a big cast that didn't mean anything. People walked out on it and the consensus of opinion pronounced it a lemon. That indeed it was to me when I totaled up my loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. (4,770 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Here is a feature well worth showing in any small town. Good acting and a good western. Pleased one hundred per cent. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE. (4,770 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Here is where Mr. Holt gives western kick to his work. Interesting, beautiful scenery. Fine tone. Fair for Sunday. Audience appeal, very good. Farmers and small town class town of 800. Admision 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

RACING HEARTS. (6,400 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A very good picture Some comedy touches. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. General class town of 2,000. Admission 5-10-20. A. S. Carlos, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Jeanerette, Louisiana.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Star cast. This sure was an interesting mix up of rich and poor folks that made up a good entertainment. Tone, fine. Sunday, fair. Good audience appeal. Farmers and small town class town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Grafton, Nebraska.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,881 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fine, crowded houses. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Great audience appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is much better picture than I heard it was. Gloria is showing that she can act as well as pose and wear swell clothes. Tone, Okay. Sunday, yes. General class town of 2,000. Admission 5-10-20. A. S. Carlos, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Jeanerette, Louisiana.

STEPHEN STEPS OUT. (5,152 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. This is a very weak program picture and did not please here. We played an "Our Gang" comedy with it so that helped it out, but they expect to see more than a good comedy when they come to the theatre. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Poor audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. While this picture is not a special still it could well be played for one as it is an A-1 picture. The popularity of the book and its wide appeal ought to make this picture a money maker anywhere. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. High and school class town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Very good for program use. Should please any Saturday night crowd. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. Shipped us by mistake and with no chance to publicize it, the business was extremely poor considering the class of the picture. It pleased tremendously for us, as do most Cecil DeMille pictures. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better class city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This is a fair picture but far from being a knockout. The story is not so very convincing and no emotions are stirred. Unless bought at a reasonable price you won't be able to get by. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star, Glenn Hunter. This one did not go over very good for us, also the title is not one that will attract attention, on the whole it is not a special by any means and would rate it as a fair program picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, not in the majority of small towns. Audience appeal, not very good. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

ONE REELERS THAT BUILD BIG BUSINESS—SEE 'EM!

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS

Pathe

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (the horse). Not a special as we expected from the good reports it gets. This is not worth any more than an ordinary program picture. It pleased the kids and some of the boys but it didn't get the women and girls to come out. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

Preferred

VIRGINIAN. (8,010 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. This is fine. Good comments. All seemed to like it. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Fine audience appeal. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

AT THE SIGN OF THE JACK O'LANTERN. Star cast. An old picture but good comedy drama for children as well as grown ups. Will please. Edward P. Totten, Magnet Theatre, Fairhope, Alabama.

CRITICAL AGE. (4,500 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. Good action picture. Some said the acting was crude and others liked it so there you are. Personally I called it good for small town showing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

DESERT GOLD. Star cast. Good picture, beautiful scenery, good acting, had good house. A good lesson in this one. Richardson & Wildeboer, Opera House, Wall Lake, Iowa.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star cast. If we could get a picture like this one once a year we would be pleased. One hundred per cent box office attraction in every respect. Bigger than any Harold Lloyd ever run in our house. A. L. Child, Wells Ward. Ams., Salt Lake City, Utah.

MIAMI. (6,317 feet). Star cast. A great big dressy picture. Business fine. Fredonia Opera House, Fredonia, New York.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good picture. Had good house. People well satisfied. Prints in good shape. Good photography. Richardson & Wildeboer, Opera House, Wall Lake, Iowa.

BUCK JONES
Appearing in William Fox photoplays.

NIGHT HAWK. (5,115 feet). Star cast. Very good western. Pleased. Played Saturday. No exploitation. P. J. Poag, Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas.

NOT ONE TO SPARE. (5 reels). Star cast. Paper on this subject carries the line "the wonder picture of the year." Protest should be made against this as it is not a special or anything wonderful about it. Just a common ordinary picture. Rubin Frels, Victoria Theatre, Victoria, Texas.

RIDERS OF THE DAWN. Star cast. A number one first class picture. Good acting, prints, good. Had good house. Book this, a money getter. Richardson & Wildeboer, Opera House, Wall Lake, Iowa.

TIGER THOMPSON. (5,700 feet). Star cast. Plenty of action, thrills, and light comedy. Should please any audience. Prices right. Fred P. Hornscheid, Gem Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star cast. One of the best shows I played within last season. Climax of show so strong some of the audience became hysterical from laughter. Highly recommend this show to all exhibitors. Bell Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Selznick

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY. (7 reels). Star cast. Played this a week to good business. Majority of people liked it. Few who didn't thought it too sensational. Fine audience appeal. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

FLAPPER WIVES. Star cast. Played this three days to good business. Picture well liked. Fine audience appeal. Middle class city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre (400 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

ROULETTE. 12 star cast. A five reel program picture with a lot of well known names but nothing to waste a date on. Passable tone, Sunday no. Fair audience appeal. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. Found it hard to understand, not having seen "Prisoner of Zenda" first. Good picture but not very exciting. Tone, good. Rural community town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

United Artists

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. A beautiful production that I lost money on: satisfied all who saw it, and guess I must have slipped up on putting it across as I have been able to pay the same price for other Pickford pictures. However, I believe this star is worth considerably less, in my town, today, than she was two years ago. This picture is really very fine and I expect to use it for a second run sometime. It has more action and combat than most of Mary's pictures. Chas. Leehyde, Grand, Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

RICHARD THE LION HEARTED. (7,298 feet). Star, Wallace Beery. An excellent show. Well produced and acted. It did not draw well for us and we lost money, but the show really deserved better patronage. Tone, good. Fair audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RULING PASSION. Star, George Arliss. The first appearance of this star in our community although the attendance was not up to standard, the picture was received with approval. The title misled some, as a triangle situation was expected, but do not think it was a serious disappointment, as there were no complaints and some compliments. Although an old release, the print was perfect. Used regular advertising, and drew less than average business. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WOMAN'S WOMAN. Star, Mary Alden. Would advise any exhibitor to lay off this one. Nothing to it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Country class town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

Universal

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Stars, Virginia Valli, Percy Marmont. One of the best of the fall releases (ran week 12-18). Got off to a big start and held up seven days. Tone okay, appeal good, yes for Sunday. Draw family class, city of 300,000. Admission 25-35-50. Jack H. Rath, Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Good comedy drama. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Plenty of good comedy situations. Good program picture. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

RAMBLIN' KID. (6,395 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This one is worth the money you pay for it. Don't fail to buy. It's a one hundred per cent pleaser. Good tone. Draw all classes, town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

F. E. Wheeler, Strand Theatre, Scotland, South Dakota.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star cast. A very nice picture that makes a good program but not a special. Will please any small town audience but don't try and set the town on fine with this one. Town of 5,000. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

RIDGEWAY OF MONTANA. (4,842 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Boys, this is, I think, one of Hoxie's best yet. Went over splendid. Pleased all. This picture is a little above the ordinary westerns and has a good plot. Photography good. Tone, none. Good audience appeal. Cotton mill class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South Carolina.

ROSE OF PARIS. (6,362 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. Nothing to speak of. It matters not whether they see or not: Mary Philbin as delightful as ever, but the story is the thing. Audience appeal, sleepy. Draw better class, city of 55,000. Admission varies, 30 cents to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Excellent production, very intense climax and an exceptional drawing card. Good tone. Hundred per cent audience appeal. Draw better class, city of 55,000. Admission varied—30 cents to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

SPORTING YOUTH. (7,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Holley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

THUNDERING DAWN. (6,600 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. The best Universal Jewel I have ever played. Picture drew fairly well and satisfied the majority. Paper is fine. Good paper on a feature is as good as a twenty-five per cent reduction on the film rental. It helps to draw them in more than all the yelling you can do in a month. Print was awful, but, then, all the Universals I ever saw were in that same category. As far as the quality of the print is concerned, when booking with Boston exchange handling Universal it is well to remember "Blessed is he that expects nothing," for that is what you get. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

YOUNG IDEAS. (4,095 feet). Star, Laura La Plante. Seems the afternoon they made this comedy they were in a hurry to get through for dinner. Good moral tone. Draw middle class, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star cast. Substituted for "Between Friends." Did good business. Good audience appeal. All classes, city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

BETWEEN FRIENDS. (6,900 feet). Star cast. Had this booked for week but had to take it off after three days. Good picture but little drawing power. Weak audience appeal. All classes, city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

BORROWED HUSBANDS. (7,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. This one is all right. Seemed to give satisfaction as we heard no kicks. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Country class, town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

BORROWED HUSBANDS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A good first class drama with a real bunch of actors. Good enough for anybody. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua Ohio.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star, John Bowers. This is a very good picture. I raised my prices and didn't draw as good as expected; maybe it was on account of the raise. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000.

SHIRLEY MASON
In Fox's "My Husband's Wives."

Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

Warner Bros.

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. If there was ever a one hundred per cent. audience picture "Conductor 1492" is the one. Everybody sang their praises in a very decided manner. Did not hear a single kick. Tone okay, yes for Sunday. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

COUNTRY KID. (6,300 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. As usual, Wesley was good in this one, and the picture is sure to please both the young folks and the grown ups. William Noble Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star, Johnny Hines. While this one is not as good as "Conductor 1492," it is a strictly A-1 feature in every sense of the word and pleased a good sized audience. Plenty of comedy, thrills and everything that goes to make up a rattling good entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

LUCRETIA LOMBARD. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A high grade picture, splendidly directed, ably acted and intelligently adapted. A splendid attraction. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats); Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. (7 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Just an average program picture that seems to lack heart interest. It is not bad, in fact has many good points. However, it cannot be classed as big in any way. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Rural class town of 85'0. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

TENTH WOMAN. Star, June Marlow. A very good picture, and well worth seeing. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THIS WOMAN. (7,000 feet). Star, Irene Rich. Good entertainment. Sort of an artificial story of a singer who is down and out. Through a coninecidence she is brought to wealth. Creighton Hale is also in the cast. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). A wonderful novelty special far above the average. Patrons fairly raved over Rin-Tin-Tin—in my estimation the peer of all dogs. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Comedies

BARNUM JUNIOR. (Educational). Star, Johnny Fox, Jr. A good juvenile comedy. It had some fine gags in it that made the youngsters and grownups chuckle with laughter. Tone, okay. Average audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BIG MOMENTS FROM LITTLE PICTURES. (Pathe). Star, Will Rogers. This comedy did not take well here. They laughed at some of it but after the show a lot of them said "it was a rotten comedy." I think they were right. These Rogers comedies do not seem to please. Good tone. Sunday, yes, fair appeal. Draw student and family class, city 80,000. Admission 10-20. Mirror Lake Theatres (800-1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

DIZZY DAISY. (Educational). Star, Louise Fazenda. Good comedy that brought out a few giggles. Action fast and furious. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DON'T FAIL. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. So-so. Not quite as good as some of the Cameos we have had, nor as bad as the poorest, either. It's a fifty-fifty comedy. Tone O.K. Fair appeal. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DUSTY DOLLARS. (Educational). A very, very good one-reel comedy, lots of action, stunts, etc. I think Cameo's are best one-reelers available. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, okay. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

HANDLE 'EM ROUGH. (Pathe-Dippy Doo Dads). This is a good animal comedy; it is more of a novelty than comedy, but it got a few laughs and quite a lot of comment. These go pretty good once in a while, but they are tiresome if run too often. Good tone, fine appeal, yes for Sunday. Draw family and student class, city 80,000. Admission 10-20. Mirror Lake Theatres (800-1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

HORSE SHOES. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Another boomerang with Larry, with thrills and laughter packed in every foot. If you want something speedy in comedies get "Horse Shoes." General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

KICK IN HIGH LIFE. (First National). Two reel comedy, very poor. Tone, none, Sunday, no. Audience appeal, nix. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

LUNCH BRIGADE. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. As good as the average Cameo Comedies. It had a few laughs in it, that was all. It served its purpose. Tone O.K. Fair appeal. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NERVE TONIC. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. An average Christie. The first reel is rather slow but the second reel peps up and brought some good laughs from our audience. Tone O.K., fair appeal. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). Running second series. Every one a knockout. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Big audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

PEST OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (Educational). Star, Louise Fazenda. A poor addition to any program; silly, not funny. Fair tone. Yes for Sunday. Appeal, none. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE COWS. (Pathe). Fine. Good entertainment. Lots of laughs. A real comedy. Business, farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SAVING SISTER SUSIE. (Educational). Star, Dorothy Devore. Fair comedy, which was played with "When Odds Are Even." Miss Devore played leading feminine role in both pictures and fans had good opportunity to compare her work in comic and serious roles. Good tone. Sunday, sure. Good appeal. Draw general class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Sedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SHORT CHANGE. (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. If Hiers had been in two-reelers years ago it might have saved some grief in the film industry. This is a good two-reeler. Let's hope Hiers has some more like it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

They turn around and reciprocate the favor done them, by sending in their tips.

HAVE YOU BECOME ONE OF THOSE WHO USE TIPS AND SEND TIPS?

SNUB POLLARD COMEDIES. (Pathe). These comedies are clean and clever and class with any I have run. I make an effort to see them myself, which is recommending them. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

WHOLE TRUTH, FULLY INSURED. (Pathe). Star, Stan Laurel. Both good. One-reelers that call out the laughs. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Serials

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star, Jack Mulhall. I reported on this serial when I was about half through with it. I am now on the last episode and if possible am even more enthusiastic about it than before. I can now say without hesitation that I consider it the best serial ever made. All you have to do is get them in on the start. Tone okay. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-20-30. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

LEATHERSTOCKING (Pathe). A good serial. Is not breaking any box office records but holds up all right and I'm not ashamed of it as I have been with some serials that I hated to finish. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Short Subjects

ANIMALS' FAIR. (Pathe-Terry Aesop Fable). The best little single-reel on the market. Whenever I have a long feature I always run one of them at the end. They are always full of pep and that is what is needed after a long-drawn-out feature. Mirror Lake Theatres (800-1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

GIRLS AND RECORDS. (Pathe-Sportlight). This is a pretty good short subject but not as good as most of the series. The print I got of this subject was rather poor. Good tone and appeal; yes for Sunday. Draw student and family class, city of 80,000. Admission 10-20. Mirror Lake Theatres (800-1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

PATHE NEWS. (Pathe). Even the boys look forward to this news each week. We wouldn't do without it, for it covers so much ground and does it well. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, yes. Rural community, town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

PATHE NEWS. (Stars—you and I, maybe—if we die). I am not enthusiastic about the News Reel. I guess this is as good as any of them, but believe the small town is a little too far away from the events shown therein to be interested in the stuff when it finally gets around to us. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PATHE SHORT SUBJECTS. These are as good as any and are priced where I can use them. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SKY PLUMBER. (Pathe). Star, Arthur Stone. This is a knockout. Kept the house in an uproar from start to finish. Business, farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SO THIS IS PARIS. (Universal). Star, Jack Dempsey. Better than any two-reel comedy and going over big. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SPORTLIGHT. (Pathe-Grantland Rice). A very good single-reel entertainment. Will appeal to the sporting blood and to the intelligence. It is educational and very interesting to many. It is priced where one can afford to use it. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

TELEPHONE GIRL SERIES. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. I have just finished this series and it certainly has been a pleasure to run them. In my estimation they are the best two-reel series on the market. Full of comedy, punch and thrills and sporting a fine cast; they can't help but draw and please for anyone. Good tone, fine appeal, yes for Sunday. Draw oil and farm class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

Miscellaneous

BAFFLED. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill Jr. A fair western with lots of action, and think Buffalo Bill will make a western actor. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BAFFLED. (State Right). Star, Franklin Farnum. A good, fair western with plenty of action and a good cast. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BROADWAY GOLD. (Truart). Star cast. Very good show. Could have been cut down to six reels and not hurt it a bit. It is worth showing, at any rate. Tone good. Sunday, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

BROADWAY GOLD. (Truart). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Went over in good shape and seemed to please a good-sized audience. Star well liked. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Draw rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

DARING YOUTH. (Principal). (5,975 feet). Stars, Kerry, Daniels. Nice little comedy-drama in which the stars, supported by Lee Moran, do some fine work. Good tone. Sunday, no. Fine appeal. Draw oil and farm class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

DISCONTENTED HUSBANDS. (C. B. C.). Star, James Kirkwood. A fair program picture. The lightning in this show could have been improved upon. It did good business for us on a Saturday night and pleased fairly well. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

"The Girl of Gold" Secured for Florence Vidor; to Follow "The Mirage"

Following "Barbara Frietchie" and "The Mirage" the third starring vehicle for Florence Vidor on the producers Distributing Corporation program will be an adaptation of the Cleveland Moffat and Anna Chapin novel "The Girl of Gold."

This story is a sensational narrative of society life with many spectacular situations that are admirably suited for screening and in selecting the story for the star's third picture, Regal Pictures will be offering Miss Vidor in a series of roles each of which is entirely different in character and motif.

"The Girl of Gold" will go into production at the Thos. H. Ince studio as soon as a director and the supporting cast are selected and the feature will undoubtedly be scheduled for early release.

Lloyd Film Big Hit

"Hot Water" Breaks Box-Office Records at Kansas City and St. Louis

Harold Lloyd's latest Pathe comedy "Hot Water" proved to be one of the biggest money-making pictures in the history of Kansas City and St. Louis.

At Newman's Royal Theatre in Kansas City the business on the opening day represented six and a half capacities according to the following telegram received at the Pathe Home Office from Oscar Morgan, Southern Division Manager for Pathe:

"Hot water broke all existing opening date records at Frank Newman's Royal Theatre topping best previous matinee by many dollars and best previous Sunday by hundreds of dollars. Sat through last performance and packed house shrieked. Business on day represented six and a half capacities."

J. E. Storey, general sales manager for Pathe received the following wire from Spyros P. Skouras of St. Louis:

"Just completed run of Harold Lloyd's 'Hot Water.' Greatest box office attraction for the year. Accept my congratulations. Regards."

In New York "Hot Water" continued through its third week at the Strand, equalling record made at that house by the last Lloyd production "Girl Shy."

"Reckless Romance" Has World Premiere at Forum Theatre

AL. CHRISTIE'S big feature comedy "Reckless Romance" was given its world premiere showing at the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles last week accompanied by ballyhoos and highly favorable newspaper comment.

The Los Angeles newspaper critics were especially pleased with the feature comedy. There were seven new pictures opening in town during the week and L. B. Fowler in the Daily News said: "Winning the prize this week for pure, clean wholesome entertainment is the Al. Christie feature, 'Reckless Romance' which is one of the peppiest farce comedies that has ever occupied a screen. Its reaction is dynamite that shatters the walls of the Gloom Institute; a tonic for indigestion, an hour and a half's massage for the funny-bone; medicine that is unusually pleasant to take, medicine which one would not hesitate to recommend to one's best friend. It is therefore suggested that you lose no time attending one of the three daily shows at The Forum, be converted and boast of it to your neighbors."

The Times gave the review of "Reckless Romance" the featured spot on the dramatic page with the only big headline of the day, stating: "For sheer amusement and spicy comedy the Forum Theatre this week presents a play that is unbeatable. The play is by far the funniest that has invaded Los Angeles in months."

The Los Angeles Express said: "A gloom dispeller indeed is this hodgepodge of uproarious fun now on view at the Forum Theatre. Sunday's audience just doubled up and roared. Frankly, this Al. Christie production is about the funniest thing we have seen since 'Charley's Aunt' and that time-honored play was a fun knock-out."

The Los Angeles Herald said: "A fast moving comedy of domestic tangles. The action of the piece is fast and furious from the first scene to the last and keeps the audience convulsed with laughter."

"Dynamite Smith" Classed as One of Best October Films

IN the monthly resume of pictures the Chicago Tribune this week classed "Dynamite Smith," Charles Ray's first production under the Ince-Pathe banner, as one of the ten best photoplays released during the month of October.

The critics of Detroit were also loud in their praise of the Charles Ray drama. The Evening Times stated:

"Charles Ray is back. There is no doubt about it after seeing his latest picture 'Dynamite Smith,' which is being shown for the first time in Detroit at the Colonial Theatre this week."

The Detroit News devoted almost a full column to Charles Ray and his marvelous come-back to rural roles. Part of the News review is as follows:

"In seeking to return Charlie Ray to the enviable position he once held as the most popular movie delineator of rural roles, Thomas H. Ince has set out to duplicate the dramatic ingredients of 'The Coward.' It will be recalled that 'The Coward' was the picture that sent Charlie's stock up next to that of the late Wally Reid and a few other big drawing cards that held forth at that time.

"It is easily the best typical Ray production since the days of 'Peaceful Valley.'"

In addition to the Chicago Tribune's tribute to "Dynamite Smith" as one of the ten best photoplays released during October, the photoplay critic of the Chicago Herald-Examiner expressed the following favorable comment:

"Now Charlie Ray is back again, doing expertly the things we like him to do; the timid hero, the bashful lover, the coward who conquers his fear of the villain."

"The Parasite" Gasnier's Next

Helen Martin's novel, "The Parasite," has been added to B. P. Schulberg's schedule of Preferred Pictures for the year. This will be filmed in the early future under Gasnier's direction.

"The Parasite" will be put into production immediately upon the completion of "The Triflers," by Frederick Orin Bartlett, upon which Gasnier is now engaged.

Prominent Cast Picked for Principal's Third Wright Film

SOL LESSER, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, has wired his brother, Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of the organization, that Principal has a big production in Harold Bell Wright's "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," work on which is now progressing.

"There is everything to make this picture great," wires Mr. Lesser. "The cast is powerful, the direction of Sam Wood fully up to his usual standards. You are safe in telling every exhibitor that this will be the great picture of 1925."

In the cast of "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" are Kenneth Harlan as Brian Kent; Helene Chadwick as Betty Jo; Mary Carr as Aunty Sue; ZaSu Pitts as Judy and Rosemary Theby as Mrs. Kent.

This is the third of the Harold Bell Wright stories to be picturized by Principal. The first, "When A Man's A Man," a First National Attraction, established new records; the second, "The Mine With the Iron Door" is proving tremendously popular. Principal not only has the motion picture rights to all of Wright's stories, but Mr. Wright is collaborating with the producers.

It is expected that "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" will be ready for release January 15.

Latest Mix Production Will Be Given Broadway Showing

"THE DEADWOOD COACH," which as completed recently at the Fox West Coast Studios is declared to be the greatest Western picture in which Tom Mix has been starred according to officials of Fox Film Corporation who have viewed this production. This picture is scheduled for a Broadway showing and may be the next special production to follow "Dante's Inferno" into the Central Theatre.

Adapted from Clarence Mulford's novel, "The Orphan," there is more action, humor, pathos and romance in this Mix production than the Fox Western star has had the chance of portraying before. Lynn Reynolds directed the picture and also wrote the scenario. One of the best supporting casts Mix has ever had includes the following well known screen players: Doris May, George Bancroft, De Witt Jennings, Buster Gardner, Lucien Littlefield, Norma Wills, Nora Cecil, Sid Jordan, Frank Coffyn, Jane Keckley and Ernest Butterworth.

The story of "The Deadwood Coach" concerns "The Orphan," a reckless outlaw who is feared throughout the West but who, in reality is the enemy of only one man. As a boy, the outlaw witnessed the murder of his father by an outlaw named Tex Wilson, and the "Orphan" dedicated his life to vengeance. The way he fulfills this vengeance and wins the respect of the community as well as the hand of a girl makes as thrilling a two-fisted western drama as has ever been presented on the screen.

Most of the scenes for "The Deadwood Coach" were taken in Zion Canyon, Utah, one of the most picturesque spots in America. The result is that the thrilling incidents in the picture-fights, chases, stage coach hold-ups, all have a beautiful natural background of massive canyons, glaciers and cliffs.

Ince to Star Jacqueline Logan

Jacqueline Logan has signed a contract with Thomas H. Ince which will place her under his exclusive direction for a period of more than five years, according to word embodied in a statement from the Ince studios at Culver City, Cal. Miss Logan is the seventh star Mr. Ince has signed to a long-term contract in recent months.

Release Date Set

Hal Roach's "The White Sheep" Scheduled For December 14

"The White Sheep," Hal Roach's second full-length Pathe picture to feature Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey, is set for release December 14. Tryon's previous feature-length production, "The Battling Orioles," is meeting with nationwide success and the Pathe forces predict a much bigger success for this newest picture. "The White Sheep" is in seven reels and was adapted from a story written by Hal Roach. Roy Clements and Hampton Del Ruth co-directed.

The story is laid in the state of Kansas in the earlier days. Glenn Tryon is the non-fighting son of a very much battling family. Blanche Mehaffey adds the romance and love interest.

Critics Unanimous

New Yorkers Praise "East of Broadway," Noting Its Humor

Associated Exhibitors' production, "East of Broadway," playing the Cameo Theatre, New York, the week of November 9, came in for an unusual amount of praise at the hands of New York newspaper critics.

Quinn Martin in the New York World said: "If there's any sense more important than the five generally recited it's the sense of humor. 'East of Broadway' has a sense of humor and as a result it is an amusing and generally entertaining picture."

The New York Evening Bulletin is quoted as follows: "Melodrama and comedy combine in 'East of Broadway,' and when these two elements are found in a film play, the result is usually entertaining. This result is arrived at in 'East of Broadway.'"

Following a half column story praising the individual work of the players, Dorothy Herzog, motion picture critic for the New York Mirror, said: "'East of Broadway,' written and supervised by Paul Schofield, is good entertainment for those who relish a dash of spice and humor."

Clara Bow in Two Features

Clara Bow, who has been in New York for the past four weeks, has arrived back in Los Angeles to play the lead in two B. P. Schulberg Productions. The first of these is "Capital Punishment," now in the making. Following the completion of this orignal screen story she will be featured in David Belasco's play, "The Boomerang."

"Declasse" To Be Next Picture

Corinne Griffith's Production Starts December 1; Robert Vignola to Direct

Corinne Griffith's forthcoming production, "Declasse," will be started December 1, according to E. M. Asher, vice-president of Corinne Griffith Productions. Robert Vignola has been assigned the task of directing the picture and is now engaged on the script and in assigning his aides to their respective duties prior to the first word of "camera."

Antino Gaudio, who has been chief cameraman for Norma Talmadge since that popular First National star came to Hollywood, has been loaned to Miss Griffith through arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck and Asher. Gaudio will grind the first camera on "Declasse" and will have charge of the entire photographic department of the production.

"It is our intention," said Asher, "to make 'Declasse' Miss Griffith's greatest endeavor for the screen. We are not rushing into production until everything is ready. Production will be made at United Studios, Hollywood, and the date of December 1 has been selected as the beginning of the picture."

New Aywon Press Book

An elaborate press book has been issued for the first of the six new Marlborough productions being distributed by Aywon Film Corporation. The book is on "The Law and the Lady," and in addition to being printed in two colors, contains just about everything necessary for the exhibitor to put the picture over successfully. Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon, announces that the next production in the series will soon be ready and also that he has been closing up territory on this series in remarkably quick time.

Fox Weekly Releases Include Four Big Productions

FOUR of the biggest special productions to be presented this season by William Fox are announced for release the week of November 30 by Fox Film Corporation. Two of the pictures were announced previously but their release dates were changed due to revised production plans. A Sunshine Comedy and Nos. 16 and 17 Vol. 6 of Fox News also will be released November 30.

One of the most important releases of the week will be the screen version of Robert W. Service's novel "The Roughneck," which is listed among the six best fiction sellers in America. John Conway directed this production and Charles Kenyon adapted the story which is almost world-wide in the scope of its action.

George O'Brien will be seen in one of the best roles of his screen career in this picture. Billie Dove has been cast for the feminine lead opposite the star. The other members of the cast are Harry T. Morey, Cleo Madison, Charles A. Sellon, Anne Cornwall, Harvey Clark, Maryon Aye, Edna Eichnor and Buddy Smith.

"Troubles of a Bride," another of the big specials released this week, was made from the original story and scenario by Thomas Buckingham and John Stone. The production was directed by Thomas Buckingham. Robert Agnew has the leading male role and Mildred June plays the heroine. The other principals include Alan Hale, Bruce Covington, Dolores Rousse, Charles Conklin, Lou Harvey and Bud Jamieson.

The third of the feature productions will be "Gold Heels," which has been adapted from the famous racing melodrama "Checkers" by Henry B. Blossom, Jr. W. S. Van Dyke directed this picture and John Stone wrote the screen version of the play.

Robert Agnew, who had the lead in "Troubles of a Bride," also plays the leading male part in "Gold Heels." Peggy Shaw is the feminine lead. The remainder of the cast includes Lucien Littlefield, William N. Bailey, Carl Stockdale, Fred Butler, Harry Tracy, James Douglas, Winifred Landis, Katherine Craig, Buck Black and Betty Hisle.

The screen version of Ouida's novel "Strathmore" which has been titled "Flames of Desire" is the fourth of this week's releases. Denison Clift directed the production and the scenario was written by Denison Clift and F. Forwell. Wyndham Standing and Diana Miller have the leading parts in the cast which numbers among the principals Richard Thorpe, Frank Leigh, George K. Arthur, Jackie Saunders, Claire Dubrey, Frances Beaumont, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Hayford Hobbs, Charles Clary and Eugenia Gilbert.

The Sunshine Comedy "A Movie-Mad Maid," completes the week's releases.

Signs Long Term Contract

Frank Currier, who returned to New York last week from Rome after completing his role of Arrius in Fred Niblo's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Ben Hur," has signed a long-term contract with this company, and will shortly leave for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's studios at Culver City.

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS

"Playthings of Desire" Now Ready for Showing

THE first of the series of six new productions being made by H. F. Jans has been completed. It is "Playthings of Desire," which is being cut and edited by Director Burton King and soon will be ready for public presentation.

"Playthings of Desire" is an adaptation of the much discussed novel by J. Wesley Putnam which was published by the Macaulay Company and has caused discussion through its being apparently based on a particularly sensational divorce case.

Mr. Jans is warm in his praise of the work accomplished by Mr. King and has this to say about his production:

"I honestly believe that 'Playthings of Desire' will prove an outstanding feature on the independent market as it has everything that goes into the making of a box office success. The story is wonderful screen material and it has been handled in expert fashion by Burton King, my director, who has made some of the most tensely dramatic scenes I have ever seen on the screen. He has injected some dandy thrills in a sequence showing a canoe shooting the rapids towards the waterfalls, and those who have seen the picture agree with me that we have unusually elaborate sets and exceedingly fine locations."

"The Iron Horse" Playing to Big Business in Chicago

THE big William Fox Special "The Iron Horse" which started an indefinite engagement on November 2 at the Woods Theatre, entered the second week with seats in steady demand and with long lines of buyers thronging the lobby all day long.

The Chicago newspapers have devoted unlimited space to the production, with several sending their dramatic critic to write a review in addition to that written by the regular motion picture critic. The following words of the dramatic critic of the Chicago American give an insight into the enthusiastic reception given the production: "The greatest entertainment thrill of the year. You will be glad you went and you will be more proud than ever that you live in the U. S. A."

No let-up has been made in the intensive campaign behind the production, despite the capacity business and the uniformly favorable notices. Window displays running into several hundred have been obtained, radio broadcasting has been utilized to the fullest extent and other dignified methods pursued to the utmost to get the public interested.

Stop Sale of Tickets Twice in One Day for "Abraham Lincoln"

THE human appeal of the Rockett Brothers' photoplay, "Abraham Lincoln," continues to mark this production as one of the outstanding pictures in the history of the industry.

On the second day of its showing at Guy Wonders' Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, it was necessary to stop the sale of seats twice. Business taxed the capacity of the theatre throughout the showing. The picture was given an astounding reception by its audiences and the newspaper reviewers were lavish in their praise of its dramatic and appealing presentation of the human qualities of the great President.

"Abraham Lincoln" has been booked in the very heart of the South—at the Metropolitan Theatre in Atlanta, where it will be given an early showing. A private screening of the film was recently given in Atlanta which was attended by Governor Clfford Walker of Georgia, Mayor Sims of Atlanta, the faculties of the universities in Atlanta, educators, physicians and laymen to the number of about 800.

The reception of the photoplay by this audience was beyond all expectations; it applauded various sequences, and at the end of the screening, with whole-hearted enthusiasm. Not one adverse criticism was made.

The picture has been sold to the West Coast circuit.

Second Reed Howes' Complete

Announcement is made this week from the offices of Rayart Pictures Corporation that the second of the series of six pictures starring Reed Howes has been completed at the California Studios of Harry J. Brown and is called "Geared To Go."

Albert Rogell, who recently completed the first Reed Howes picture, "Lightning Romance," also directed "Geared To Go," which is from a story by Wesley Grey and Henry Simonds. In addition to Reed Howes, the cast includes Carmelita Gerahty, George Nichols, Melbourne MacDowell, Joe Butterworth, Cuyler Supplee and George Williams. Ross Fisher at the camera. "Geared to Go" is scheduled as a January release on the Rayart program.

Editing First St. Regis

The first St. Regis Picture, made under the direction of E. H. Griffith from J. C. Brownell's novelette "The Ultimate Good" for Associated Exhibitors release is now being cut and titled. Arthur Hoerl, who prepared the screen play for "The Ultimate Good" is writing the titles for the picture which will be ready about the first of December. The production will not be released until after the first of the new year.

Scenes from Pathe's "Are Blond Men Bashful," a two-reel comedy, starring Arthur Stone, produced by Hal Roach.

Arrow's 1924-25 Program Is Practically Completed

THE Arrow Picture Corporation occupies a well entrenched position in the independent field. W. E. Shallenberger, its president has a wide knowledge and intuition for exchange and exhibitor needs. He realizes that it is essential for the independent exchange to have a well balanced program to offer the exhibitor. Arrow productions for this program are nearly completed. This comprehensive program is made up as follows:

Twenty-six Arrow "Great Westerns," eight Arrow "Great Westerns" starring Ben Wilson with Marjory Daw, Mildred Harris and Violet La Plante, six Arrow "Great Westerns" starring Yakima Canutt, twelve Arrow "Great Westerns" starring Richard Hatton, supported by Marilyn Mills and the Wonder Horses, "Star" and "Beverly."

Four "Pinto Pete" Stunt Pictures starring Ashton Dearholt.

Thirteen Broadway Comedies starring Billy West, supported by Ethlyn Gibson.

Thirteen Mirthquake Comedies featuring Bobby Ray and Glen Cavender, directed by Jess Robbins.

A fifteen chapter serial, "Riders of the Plains," starring Jack Perrin and Marilyn Mills, directed by Jacques Jaccard.

"The Lost Chord," a sentimental masterpiece produced by Whitman Bennett, starring Alice Lake, David Powell, Dagmar Godowsky, Henry Sedley and Faire Binney.

One of the biggest epic dramas ever filmed, "Winning a Continent," in many scenes of which there are over 10,000 characters in action. Two more big specials are about to enter production.

Of this program more than three-quarters is finished. Dr. Shallenberger and his staff are now working on the 1925-26 program, which will be announced early in the year.

Picks Cast for "One Year to Live"

M. C. Levee has selected an all-star cast for his next production for First National release, "One Year to Live," from the novel by John Hunter which recently appeared serially in sixty big city newspapers throughout the country, with a big contest feature.

The cast includes Aileen Pringle, Antonio Moreno, Betty Bythe, Tully Marshall, Marc MacDermott, Robert Edeson and Marjorie Daw.

On Fox Program

To Release Five Short Subjects During December

Two Educational Entertainments, a Sunshine Comedy, an Imperial Comedy and one of the Van Bibber series, together with the regular twice-weekly issues of Fox News will be released during December by Fox Film Corporation. The Fox release schedule offers a diversified short subject program.

"Uncommon Clay," to be released December 7 and "The Last Word in Chickens" to be issued December 21 are the Educational reels. The latest of the two-reel comedies adapted from the famous Van Bibber stories of Richard Harding Davis will be "The Burglar" and will be released December 7. A Sunshine Comedy, whose title will be announced later, is included on the month's schedule. The Imperial Comedy will be "Up on the Farm," and will be published December 7.

"Ain't Love Grand?" Buddy's Next Film

Buddy Messinger's latest comedy for Century is "Aint Love Grand?" now going into production under the direction of Charles Lamont.

As his leading lady, Buddy will have Beth Dardington, who has been leading lady for Will Rogers, Charles Chase and Eddie Lyons for the last two years. Miss Darlington's first part in pictures was with Shirley Mason in "The Lamplighter."

Title of New Wiley Picture Changed

"Up in the Air," the first of the new picture Wanda Wiley is making for Century Comedies, has been changed to "Looking Down."

In "Looking Down," which is the first of the series written by George Fouret, the noted French humorist, Miss Wiley is supported by Joe Moore, youngest brother of the famous Owen, Matt and Tom Moore. Jessie Robbins, the noted feature and comedy director, weilding the megaphone.

Closes Contract for First National's New Leader Group

ANOTHER big contract in an important key city point on First National's new Leader Group of productions for the first half of 1925 has just been closed with Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, the finest theatre in the city. The contract includes showing the pictures at the North Park Theatre also.

This contract, which was closed by Frank McCarthy, manager of the distributing company's Buffalo branch, and A. W. Smith of the Home Office, assures First National of practically 100 per cent. representation in Buffalo on its new product.

First National's distributing department is pardonably proud of this remarkable tribute to the character and quality of its production, which assures its forthcoming releases of such advantageous showings in a big and important key city point. The exhibitor knows from past experience that First National, with its production, directorial and acting forces, is turning out the finest kind of box office attractions, and knows with equal certainty that, with the material it has in work, the pictures in the new Leader Group will surpass its present releases in popular appeal.

Added to Cast

Lewis Stone, Marguerite de la Motte and Paulette Duval have been added to the cast of Robert Z. Leonard's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Cheaper to Marry," from the Samuel Shipman stage success. Conrad Nagel, Claude Gillingwater and Dale Fuller have already been announced for important roles. With this cast, actual shooting will be started at once.

Will Soon Begin Production on Banner Picture "Speed"

"SPEED," the Saturday Evening Post story by Grace Sartwell Mason, purchased by George H. Davis and Samuel J. Briskin of Banner Productions Inc., for production by Ben Verschleiser on the Coast, will be put into production during the first week in December.

Miss Mason's story, a melodrama of a most modern type, offers unusual possibilities for high-powered picturization, it is said, and it is planned to produce it on a scale far more ambitious in cast and settings than any feature hitherto presented by Banner. It will follow "Three Keys" in the Verschleiser series released by Banner.

Contracts were signed this week with Betty Blythe to play the featured feminine role in a cast of headliners and the balance of the talent, which is being selected with the greatest care, will be engaged as rapidly as possible. It is hoped by the end of the coming week that the complete cast can be announced.

Edward J. Le Saint will handle the megaphone on "Speed."

The picture will be listed as the third of the Ben Verschleiser series in the Banner release schedule, following "Empty Hearts" and "Three Keys."

POLA NEGRI

As "The Czarina" in her latest Paramount picture "Forbidden Paradise," directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

Director and Cast Signed for "Capital Punishment"

B. P. SCHULBERG'S statement that "Capital Punishment" would be presented as one of the greatest showman's pictures ever made, is realized in the announcement this week of a prominent director and a cast of twelve big players to be featured in this special production.

James P. Hogan has been selected to handle the megaphone for this story, the theme of which has received millions of dollars worth of free advertising through hundreds of newspapers during the past few months. It will be remembered that he was responsible for "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?"

Heading the cast for "Capital Punishment" is Clara Bow, who completed work last week on an Estabrook picture in New York and left for the West Coast immediately. Hogan recently directed Miss Bow in "Black Lightning," just released.

The supporting cast includes Elliot Dexter, George Hackathorne, Mary Carr, Margaret Livingston, Robert Ellis, Alec Francis, Edith Yorke, Joseph Kilgour, Dewitt Jennings, Eddie Phillips and George Nichols.

The story of "Capital Punishment" was written by B. P. Schulberg himself and he has endeavored to put to use his years of experience as writer and producer to include in the plot all these ingredients which are sure-fire audience material. The adaptation of Mr. Schulberg's story was prepared by John Goodrich.

It is planned to give "Capital Punishment" immediate release upon its completion in order to take advantage of the tremendous interest in the subject which has recently developed not only in the United States but throughout the entire world.

Advertising on an elaborate scale is being prepared to give exhibitors every aid in ballyhooing the production to the public. Posters and other accessories will emphasize the widespread importance of the picture's sensational theme.

Exchanges Buy "Flattery"

The Merit Film Corporation of New York, and First Graphic Exchanges, Inc., of Buffalo, have purchased "Flattery" for distribution in their respective territories. "Flattery" is being released by Chadwick Pictures Corporation as an added unit to this organization's independent product this season. It is not included in the famous independent series, the Chadwick 9.

Ince to Make "Enchanted Hill"

"The Enchanted Hill," by Peter B. Kyne, will be Thomas H. Ince's next production for First National release. The story appeared as a serial in the Cosmopolitan magazine and has recently been issued in book form.

"Battling Buddy" on Leviathan

"Battling Buddy," one of the popular Buddy Roosevelt series, distributed by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, was featured in the elaborate program of screen entertainment furnished passengers on the S. S. Leviathan, which sailed from New York, Saturday, November 15.

This series, which consists of eight features of five reel length, dealing with typical Western stories is being produced on the Coast by Approved Pictures Corporation, under the supervision of Lester F. Scott, Jr.

"Cyclone Buddy," the sixth and latest of the series, has just been completed.

Scene from "Darwin Was Right," the William Fox novelty super-comedy.

Scenes from Banner's latest production "Those Who Judge."

Philadelphia Critics Acclaim Ince's "Barbara Frietchie"

FOLLOWING a brilliant presentation and a splendid opening day for "Barbara Frietchie" at The Fox Theatre in Philadelphia the newspaper critics of the Quaker City acclaimed the Thomas H. Ince Civil War romance in exceptionally laudatory criticisms in all of the Philadelphia newspapers and an accurate reflection of these criticisms is contained in the following excerpts:

"The picture is vivid and delightful. American history has on more than one occasion been responsible for the creation of superfilm that has reached the height of photoplay entertainment. To this class can now be added 'Barbara Frietchie.'"—Philadelphia Record.

"It is superior to most photo-plays dealing with the Civil War. Has all the glamor of anti-Bellum days and a great deal of the spirit of the actual strife; and sentimental episodes add immeasurably to the interest of the film"—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"A remarkably artistic rendering of an extremely difficult subject. 'Barbara Frietchie' is far above the rank and file of historical dramas."—Evening Ledger.

"One of the most interesting pictures of historical significance which has appeared here for some time. Besides being attractive from an historical viewpoint the story in the film can stand on its own feet. Pathos and touches of human interest have a tremendous appeal."—Philadelphia North American.

"There are places where you laugh—places where you might cry—and places where your heart speeds up a little bit with the roll of drums and flash of cannon."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Extend "Frietchie" Run

"Barbara Frietchie" the Thomas H. Ince special starring Florence Vidor, so far exceeded the expectations of Martin Printz of the Circle Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, that the production has been held over for a second week's run.

In a telegram to Paul C. Mooney, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, Mr. Printz pays a high tribute to the production in the following words:

"'Barbara Frietchie' pleased all last week at the Circle Theatre on its initial showing here and business has been so satisfactory that we are holding it a second week. Congratulations and regards."

New Buck Jones Feature

Fox Film Corporation announces that the latest Buck Jones feature, an Imperial Comedy, an Educational Entertainment and Nos. 14 and 15, Volume 6, of Fox News, will be released the week of November 23. The latest of the William Fox series in which Buck Jones is starred is "The Man Who Played Square." Al Santell directed. Wanda Hawley has the feminine lead. "Roaring Lions at Home" is the title of the Imperial Comedy. The Fox Educational Entertainment will be "Salt of the Earth."

Bachmann Completes Releasing Arrangements in St. Louis, Omaha and Canada

J. G. Bachmann, who is in charge of the distribution of Preferred Pictures through B. P. Schulberg Productions, has negotiated important contracts for the release of this product in St. Louis, Omaha and Canada.

Skouras Brothers Enterprises have been named as the franchise holders for Schulberg in the St. Louis territory. Through this arrangement the same firm which handled the output of the old Preferred Pictures Corporation will also distribute the releases of the Schulberg company.

In Omaha the new Preferred Pictures will be distributed by Monskey Brothers of the Liberty Film Company. For Canada George S. Jeffrey becomes the Schulberg franchise holder.

Novel Exploitation Trailers

As part of the exploitation service furnished on the Buffalo Bill, Jr. and Buddy Roosevelt series of thrilling action melodramas, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, which is releasing these popular brands, is preparing novel 300 foot trailers, which will shortly be available at exchanges handling these features.

These trailers will show: How to saddle a horse properly; How to tie a "cinch" knot; How to ride a horse; How to handle and throw a lariat.

Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., will demonstrate before the camera, the particular methods used by them in performing these different functions and it is believed by Weiss Brothers that the new trailer service will be highly productive as a box office builder and a valuable exploitation aid to exhibitors showing these popular series.

Finishing Rayart Serial

Dell Henderson, director and producer of Rayart's Western fast-action serial, "Battling Brewster," announced this week the completion of the tenth episode. The serial will be in fifteen episodes and features Franklyn Farnum and Helen Holmes. The story is by Robert Dillon, author of a number of successful serials.

Mr. Henderson is also making preparations for another Rayart serial, to be produced immediately following "Battling Brewster." For this, Henderson is considering either an annual serial or a race track story. "Battling Brewster" is scheduled for release in December by Rayart Pictures.

Two Chadwick Pictures Go in Work This Week

WITHIN a few days I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will give the word that will begin production on two big features scheduled for the independent market this season as part of the famous independent unit, the Chadwick Nine. These two are Lionel Barrymore in his third starring vehicle for Chadwick this season, and the next John Gorman production "The Street Singer." Both will be produced in the East. Arrangements are now being made for studio space and a staff of technical experts in rushing forward preparations so that actual production may begin as soon as the scripts are ready.

"The Street Singer," which may undergo a change of title before the picture is completed, will be begun first. John Gorman will be in charge of the direction. The script is being arranged by Garrett Fort. Mr. Gorman has been assembling the cast these past several weeks.

Mr. Barrymore's earlier two pictures already released by Chadwick Pictures Corpoation are "Meddling Women" and "I Am The Man," both highly successful.

Out on the West Coast in production are "The Tom Boy," produced by Mission Film Corporation for Chadwick release, with Herbert Rawlinson and Dorothy Devore in the leading roles, and "The Wizard of Oz," Larry Semon's new feature-length comedy from the famous book and the play that made Fred Stone a star and broke records all over the world. "The Tom Boy" is practically finished and a print is expected east momentarily; "The Wizard of Oz" is nearing completion rapidly, and is expected to be ready for the holiday season, at which time I. E. Chadwick plans a country-wide exhibition embracing more than 200 first runs.

The rest of the Chadwick Nine are: "The Romance of an Actress," from Langdon McCormack's great play, and "Sunshine of Paradise Alley," by Denman Thompson, author of "The Old Homestead."

Independent Corporation Dividend of 15 Per Cent.

INDEPENDENT PICTURES CORPORATION, of which Jesse J. Goldberg is president, made known last week its declaration of a 15 per cent. co-operative dividend on its outstanding capital stock. With this new figure, the total for the year is now 35 per cent.

Mr. Goldburg said: "The Independent Pictures Corporation has created a reserve fund equivalent to twice the amount of any dividend that is declared on its common capital stock. This reserve fund is for the purpose of acquiring any unusual productions aside from those which are regularly produced by my organization.

"This is rather an unusual situation in regard to state right or independent producers and distributors, and certifies not alone to the prosperous condition of the Independent Pictures Corporation, but more essentially to the profitable and prosperous condition of the independent market generally.

"It is my opinion that the years 1925 and 1926 will be the biggest the motion picture industry has ever seen, not alone for the national producer but even more essentially for the independent man. Those of us who have already recognized that the independent producer has a definite job in the industry, and that that job is catering to small town houses and popular priced theatres in the large cities, rather than trying to compete with the first-run people, are finding conditions more promising and more firmly established than anyone had ever dared hope they would be.

"I am not trying in any way to compete with the national producers because I know that I would be swamped in the attempt. Instead, I have set myself to the task of giving the state-right exchanges the type of picture that their patrons require, at a cost that allows both the exchange and the exhibitor to make a fair margin of profit.

"I have attempted to put my business on a sensible commercial basis, to shoot square with everyone with whom I do business, and to build the foundation for an organization that no industry slump could unbalance.

"Because the independent producer in general has now accepted this attitude rather than the skin-flint game at one time prevailed in this branch of the industry, the independents are steadily and unbelievably rapidly attaining a place of prominence in the trade.

"Formerly it would have been impossible for an independent producer to get money from the banks. Today this is no longer true. Daily I see the number of banks willing to advance credit to independents increasing, and I interpret this correctly when I say that it is recognition that the independent producer is in the market to stay."

Universal Acquires Broadway Play for Laura La Plante

Evidence of the co-operation between the Universal Pictures Corporation and the vast army of readers of Carl Laemmle's advertising column in the Saturday Evening Post comes to light with the announcement that Universal has bought "The Teaser," a Broadway stage play, as the result of a suggestion by one of the readers. The man who made the suggestion is J. A. Shaw, of the Washington, D. C., School of Indentification.

Shaw received a check from Laemmle for his suggestion. The Washington man, who is a Laura La Plante fan, convinced the Universal chief that the title "The Teaser" would be an excellent one for a La Plante picture.

An Expected Hit

All indications point to another success from the studio of Warner Brothers in "A Lost Lady," starring Irene Rich, which was given a pre-view last week in the Roosevelt Theatre, Los Angeles. Advice from the West Coast says that the picture is the best thing Warner Brothers has done, with the exception of "Beau Brummel," and establishes Miss Rich as one of the "greatest emotional actresses of the screen."

The direction is by Harry Beaumont. The featured players supporting Miss Rich are Matt Moore, June Marlowe, John Roche and George Fawcett. It will be a November 18 release.

New Mack Sennett Comedy

The adventurous life of a street car conductor is the basis for the latest Mack Sennett comedy, "Off His Trolley," featuring Ralph Graves. Hal Conklin and Tay Garnett are responsible for the story, which has many humorous situations.

The direction was handled by Eddie Cline with titles by J. A. Waldron. In addition to Ralph Graves, the cast consists of Alice Day, Natalie Kingston and Marvin Lobach.

"Galloping Hoofs" Nearing Completion

The new Patheserial, "Galloping Hoofs," featuring Allene Ray supported by an all-star screen cast headed by Johnnie Walker, is nearing completion at the studios in Fort Lee and will be released December 21.

The picture is in ten chapters and is based on a race track story. It is being produced by Malcolm Strauss and directed by George Seitz from an adaptation by Frank Leon Smith.

Principal Film Booking Fast

Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures Corporation, reports many new, big bookings on Harold Bell Wright's "The Mine With the Iron Door," which is being distributed through the franchise holders of Principal. Among these are Jensen & Van Herberg's Circuit; the Strand, Milwaukee; Rubin & Finkelstein's Strand, Minneapolis; Stanley Chambers' Miller Theatrical Enterprises; Keith's Mary Anderson, Louisville; Ike Libson's Walnut, Cincinnati; the Casino, Spokane; Sam Harding's Liberty, Kansas City, and many other houses.

Eschmann Sales Drive Over; Quota for Country Exceeded

THE Eschmann Month sales drive, staged by Charles M. Steele, A. W. Smith, Jr., William J. Morgan and Stanley Hatch, Mr. Eschmann's assistants in First National's distribution department, as a tribute to their chief, is over, with the standing of the country at large 111.73 per cent. of the assigned quota. Inasmuch as the quota assigned to each district and each branch was the best previous sales record, the fact that the quota was exceeded by 11.73 per cent. speaks volumes for the zeal and enthusiasm of the field force at large.

While the districts and the branches have been credited with all of the contracts written within the eight weeks' period over which the drive extended, prizes will be awarded only upon the bookings which are actually played between the start of the contest and January 31, 1925, so that the following standings of the three highest branches and districts does not necessarily mean that they have won the prizes offered. Contracts played by January 31 will change the standings to a certain extent and the leaders are close enough together so that the winners of the prizes cannot yet be told.

The contest covered the period of October, but in order to give the branches time to get into the momentum of a drive by October 1, it was started two weeks earlier, and two additional weeks in November were allowed for the "mopping-up" process.

At the end of the contest, Omaha led all the branches with a standing of 148.05 per cent. of its assigned quota. Des Moines was second with 146.98 per cent. and Portland, which was in the lead from the drop of the hat up to and including the seventh week, in third place with 146.17 per cent.

Twenty-four branches exceeded their assigned quotas, standing well above 100 per cent.

Among the districts, the Western district stood first with 129.65 per cent. of its quota; the Central district was second with 123.20 per cent. and Mid-west district was third with 114.68 per cent.

The prize money going to the branches will be divided so that each member of the personnel participates. Fixed cash awards go to the manager, the assistant manager of record, each salesman, the head booker and the head cashier, with all of the other employes of the winning branch receiving a week's salary; those of the second branch three-fourths of a week's salary, and those of the third branch half a week's salary. In no case can the winners be known until after January 31, when the standings of the districts and the branches will be determined upon played contracts.

Universal's "Fast Worker" Wins Newspaper Praise

"THE FAST WORKER," the Reginald Denny-Laura La Plante picture which had its Broadway premiere at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre last week, and which is one of Universal's Fall Jewel releases, received almost universal praise at the hands of the New York newspaper reviewers. Besides creating an enviable impression upon the crowds which filled the Broadway every day of its run, crowds which rocked with laughter from start to finish, its newspaper reports have built for it an exceptional popularity in the metropolitan district of New York.

The reviewer of the New York American characterized it in part as follows: "The male element of the audience certainly did enjoy the irresponsible Mr. Denny and all the mishaps that befall him in 'The Fast Worker.' The women, while not so loud in their laughter and not so pleased with Mr. Denny's bad luck, enjoyed Laura La Plante's frocks and smiles and the love making that is a part of this up-to-the-minute comedy.

"The fun is fast and furious, the best situation being the automobile race. I have never seen a funnier race than this, which treats the automobiles much as if they were the property employed in a slapstick comedy."

Mordaunt Hall, in the New York Times, said: "The experiences of Terry Brock in 'The Fast Worker,' the film feature at the Broadway this week, yesterday stirred an audience to much laughter.

"This is a nice little comedy, which is well acted by pleasing personalities. It has been produced without a scintilla of vulgarity and without any silly slapstick stunts. The situations are worked out cleverly and those wishing light amusement will enjoy this pictorial effort."

Mildred Spain, of the Daily News, had the following to say: "Reginald Denny can make you like any picture, and when he gets a vehicle like 'The Fast Worker' he cuts loose and shows us just what he can do in the laugh-making line. . . . 'The Fast Worker' is great fun."

To Make Personal Appearances

Bill Cody, who is now engaged in the filming of a series of eight westerns characterized by the daring and skill rarely seen on the stage, has been signed by Independent to make another series.

However, before undertaking the new assignment, Jesse J. Goldburg, president of Independent Pictures Corp., with whom Cody is signed, will send him on a country-wide personal appearance tour.

Starts Fourth Desmond-Holmes

News has been received from the Hollywood studios, where the William Desmond-Helen Holmes unit is at work on a series of eight society stunt dramas, that J. P. McGowan, director of the series, has completed the casting and has already begun to shoot the fourth picture under the working title "Roughneck."

Working on "Ultimate Good"

Work is well under way by the newly organized St. Regis Pictures Corporation on its first production, temporarily titled "The Ultimate Good." The company, which includes Conway Tearle, Madge Kennedy, Charles Emmett Mack, Bela Lugosa and Lucile Lee Stewart, is working at Tec-Art's Forty-eighth street studio under the direction of E. H. Griffith.

Reviews all over the country proclaim that this is the greatest railroad picture of the age.

"Spat Family" Comedy in Pathe November 30 Films

PATHE program for the week of November 30 shows a strong array of short-subject releases. Heading the list are "The Spats" in their latest Hal Roach comedy, "Deaf, Dumb and Daffy." As laugh promoters this trio is fast forging to the front, and the work of Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook and Laura Roessing in their latest comedy is considered the best of their career on the Hal Roach lot. Jay A. Howe directed.

"The Cannon Ball Express," a Mack Sennett comedy, was directed by Del Lord from a story by Felix Adler, with Billy Bevan, Sid Smith, Bud Ross, Andy Clyde, John J. Richardson and Madeline Hurlock in the cast.

The eighth chapter of the Patheserial, "Ten Scars Make a Man," is also scheduled for release. This chapter is entitled "Liquid Gold." Allene Ray is supported by Larry Steers, Rose Burdick, Jack Mower, Leon de la Mothe, Frank Whitson and Frank Lanning.

Sport lovers will be interested in the Grantland Rice "Sportlight." It is entitled "Champions" and embodies intimate "shots" of the various champions in the sporting world. Aileen Riggin, Babe Ruth, Vincent Richards, Charley Paddock, Ethel Lackie, Walter Johnson, Sybil Bauer, Johnny Weissmuller, Bobby Jones, Agnes Geraghty, "Big Bill" Tilden and members of the Yale crew as seen in action.

Aesop's Film Fables offer an animated cartoon comedy under the title of "Lumber Jacks."

The principal feature for Pathe Review Number 48 for the week is the third installment of the series of subjects entitled "The History of Fashions." This is an exclusive and authentic review of the gowns of all ages. This installment has to do with that period of dress between the years of 1840-1900. The two other subjects are: "Ebony Lumberjacks," showing how hardwood is harvested in Madagascar, and a Pathecolor presentation of views of the city of Phoenix.

"Topics of the Day" No. 48 and Pathe News, Nos. 98 and 99, complete the Pathe program for the week.

"Romola" to Open in New York

Lillian Gish in "Romola" will make her bow this season to New York motion picture audiences at the George M. Cohan Theatre on the Monday evening of December 1. The event will mark the world premiere of Henry King's long-heralded Inspiration production, based on the George Eliot novel which was over a year being filmed at Florence, Italy, with Dorothy Gish iu a featured role. "Romola" will be distributed by Metro-Goldwyn.

Bookings on Special High

Bookings in important key city points on the three special productions of First National Pictures which have been marketed during the summer have reached unprecedented proportions, according to information emanating from the company. E. A. Eschmann appointed A. W. Smith, Jr., to have charge of the special sales and gave him a staff of salesmen who devoted their time entirely to those productions. The results speak for themselves.

Out of 243 key city points, having a population of more than 25,000, contracts on "The Sea Hawk" have been closed in 222 towns, of 91.6 per cent. "Secrets" has been closed in 216 towns, or 88.8 per cent. "Abraham Lincoln" has been booked in 173 cities, or 71.1 per cent.

New Title for Woods Film

The forthcoming Frank Woods production featuring Wanda Hawley and Pat O'Malley which is now under way at the Peninsula Studios under the working title of "On The Shelf," will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation under the more magnetic title of "Let Women Alone."

"Let Women Alone" is scheduled as the first release by Producers Distributing Corporation in the new year.

Name Distributor Soon

The distribution arrangements for "The Last Frontier," Thomas H. Ince's film version of Courtney Ryley Cooper's stirring story of the early West, may be announced within the next week or ten days, according to a statement from the office of Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of the Thomas H. Ince Corporation. Negotiations on this deal have been in progress for several weeks.

Weber and Fields Starred in Producers' "Friendly Enemies"

A. H. SEBASTIAN of the Edward Belasco Productions, producers of "Welcome Stranger," has purchased the screen rights to the well known and highly successful stage play "Friendly Enemies" in which Louis Mann and Barney Bernard registered big hits in New York and Chicago several seasons ago.

Mr. Sebastian has also closed a contract with Weber and Fields the famous team of stage stars to fill the Mann and Bernard roles in the screen version of the play and has arranged for the distributing of the feature through Producers Distributing Corporation on the 1925 program.

"Friendly Enemies" is by Sam Shipman and Aaron Hoffman and was produced as a stage play by Al. Woods at the Hudson Theatre in New York where it enjoyed a long run and was then moved to Chicago where it played a full year. Five road companies also played it in practically every important town in the United States.

Nazimova to Play Lead

Nazimova has been selected to play the lead in Edwin Carewe's next production for First National Pictures, "My Son," from Martha Stanley's stage success now running at the Nora Bayes Theatre in New York.

Scenes from "The Beloved Brute," a J. Stuart Blackton production for Vitagraph release.

Warner Brothers Putting Ideals Into New Pictures

CO-OPERATING in every way toward a general endeavor on the part of motion picture producers to elevate the standard of their output, Warner Brothers put into production last week at their Hollywood studio "The Man Without a Conscience," a drama of high ideals with an entertainment punch, from the pen of Max Kretzer, talented European writer, whose novels have made Continental Europe sit up and take notice.

So important is this production in connection with the future policy of Warner Brothers that H. M. Warner, in charge of West Coast production, has seen fit to make the following statement:

"In production of motion pictures, or in any other business for that matter, we sometimes lose sight of the real things in life. I am an optimist and I know that the motion picture industry, along with humanity in general, is seeking higher ideals every day.

"During my recent visit to New York my brothers and myself discussed, with a number of authors of international repute, the subject of higher ideals in motion picture stories. The conference was fruitful in that we decided to unite our efforts in making pictures which, while not of the so-called 'high-brow' type, will be truthfully idealistic and at the same time realistic.

"With this object in view, we have put into production 'The Man Without a Conscience,' in which we prove the folly of a man who disregards the ideals which are born in every one of us and seeks through his dynamic personality to smash his way through to his own selfish ends."

The adaptation of this important picture was in the hands of Hope Loring and Louis Leighton, and the direction is by James Flood. An all-star cast will interpret the story, headed by Willard Louis and Irene Rich, who will be supported by June Marlowe, Robert Agnew, John Patrick, William Orlamond and Helen Dunbar.

Lila Lee to Play Opposite Meighan

Lila Lee has been selected to play opposite Thomas Meighan in his next starring picture, "Coming Through," it is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

Miss Lee has arrived in New York from the Coast with her husband, James Kirkwood, and baby son. Her decision to return to pictures, after more than a year's absence, was made through the persuasion of Mr. Meighan and Mr. Lasky.

"Coming Through," which is an adaptation of Jack Bethea's novel, "Bed Rock," will be put into production at the Paramount Long Island studio next week.

"Dante's Inferno" Making Records in Several Cities

"DANTE'S INFERNO," produced by William Fox from the classic of literature, enters its ninth week at the Central Theatre, New York, and is finishing the fourth week of an indefinite run at the Munroe Theatre, Chicago, with no apparent decrease in the public demand for this attraction. The success of these two big city engagements has resulted in a large increase in bookings for this Fox special production.

Two important engagements next week for "Dante's Inferno" will be at the Lyric Theatre, one of the Poli circuit houses in Bridgeport, Conn., and a day and date run at the Kings and the Rivoli theatres in St. Louis, Mo. The Circle Theatre in Cleveland, where "If Winter Comes" had a record run last season, is playing "Dante's Inferno" all this week. One of the best bookings obtained for this production was in the Boston territory where the Fox special was booked into the Fenway Theatre, a Famous-Player house. The Fox special started an engagement at the Fenway last Saturday.

"Dante's Inferno" has just completed a record week at the Imperial Theatre, one of the most important houses in San Francisco. The Fox special has been booked by Jensen and Van Herberg for the week of December 13 at their Peoples Theatre in Portland, Ore.

Great Publicity Precedes "Chu-Chin-Chow" Premiere

THE premiere showing in the United States of Metro-Goldwyn's "Chu-Chin-Chow" at Loew's Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C., was marked by what was perhaps the most successful publicity campaign in the history of the capital.

"Chu-Chin-Chow" is Herbert Wilcox's production of the phenomenal stage success by Oscar Asche and Frederic Norton which ran five years in London and several years in New York. Betty Blythe is the featured player. The compaign, put over in Washington by H. S. Ansley for Metro-Goldwyn, was the first in this country. "Chu-Chin-Chow," because of its spectacular colorful nature, and because of numerous features connected with the production, offers showmen unlimited opportunities, which were made the most of for the Washington premiere.

Interest bordering on a riot was created in the daily appearance on the streets of a sedan-chair containing a young woman effectively gowned in royal Chinese raiment and carried by two men made up and costumed as Chinamen. The young woman was Miss Shirley Holmes, who distributed thoussands of cards announcing the showing of "Chu-Chin-Chow" at the Columbia. This effective bally-hoo was continued for two hours each day throughout the week preceding the showing.

At Osgoods, the exclusive art store of Washington, Miss Holmes gave a fashion show of Chinese costumes which drew large crowds about the window and into the shop from the street. This exhibition was continued from 4 to 6 p. m. for five days, the crowds growing larger each day. The event was advertised daily in each of the Washington papers.

Stills and cards were used in the prominent jewelry store windows on F and G streets. These stills were framed and attracted unusual attention. Baker's Art Store carried stills and oriental pictures in its windows, with appropriate advertising material. Four O'Donnell drug stores displayed oriental perfumes, with burning joss sticks and cards announcing the showing of "Chu-Chin-Chow" at the Columbia.

A special lobby display completed the campaign. Enormous crowds attended the presentation of the picture in consequence, the management of the Columbia reporting crowded houses throughout the week.

On election night two large screens were erected in front of the Washington Herald-Times building, one screen being used exclusively for motion pictures, donated by Metro-Goldwyn. Ansley was given charge of this service, and exhibited slides announcing the showing of "Chu-Chin-Chow" at the Columbia twenty-five times during the evening. 9:30 p.m. an announcement was thrown on the screen to the effect that Miss Holmes would appear and shower free passes over the crowd. Her appearance brought forth tremendous applause.

An Outstanding Cast

Many of Screen's Best Players in "Is Love Everything?"

This week marks the release of Murray Garrson's first production for the Associated Exhibitors, "Is Love Everything?" To date the picture has received considerable prerelease praise in screen circles because of its excellent cast. There are seven big names on its roster, headed by Alma Rubens. The chief supporting role is H. B. Warner. Others are Walter McGrail, Lilyan Tashman, Marie Shaeffer and Irene Howley.

The outstanding situation in the film is an unusual one. A husband finds his wife in the arms of her lover and he is powerless to do anything about it. A shipwreck, storms and an impressive fight at sea lend themselves to various sequences of the picture. The adaptation of the story was made by Raymond S. Harris. It is scheduled for release by Associated Exhibitors on November 30.

Steel Industry Is Locale of New Earl Hudson Drama

THE United States steel industry is to form the majestic background for a super-feature picture to be made by one of the Earl Hudson units which were recently transferred from Hollywood to the East, according to an announcement from First National, which further states that actual production will begin within a few weeks.

During the past six months a staff of a dozen technical experts has been quietly at work at Hudson's instigation, studying the great steel plants throughout Pennsylvania, ferreting out historical data, conferring with mill officials and living among the workers.

Although the steel drama has been in contemplation for a considerable time, public announcement had been held back until the romantic story to be woven into the fiery-forge historic skeleton was agreed upon. Hudson announced yesterday that the story is to be based on R. G. Kirk's narrative, "United States Flavor," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

The Kirk story, according to plan, is to be elaborated into a drama of heroic proportions, a fitting screen epic of the vastest of all industries on which modern civilization is propped. Supervision was assigned to Hudson because of his past experience in producing super-feature dramas.

"United States Flavor" will be Hudson's third big spectacle. Those preceding were "Sundown," recently released, commemorating the passing of the cattle barons of the West and "The Lost World," which First National is sponsoring in conjunction with Watterson R. Rothacker—a million-dollar adaptation of Conan Doyle's adventurous novel which will be completed soon, after seven years' effort.

"United States Flavor" will be filmed in the actual settings in Pittsburg whenever possible. Studio scenes will be "shot" in New York. Production will start as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

Hudson is now engaged in the supervision of two First National features, "The Interpreter's House," co-featuring Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon, with Lambert Hillyer directing, and "One-Way Street," which John Francis Dillon is about to begin directing, with Ben Lyon and Anna Q. Nilsson in the featured roles.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Student Tickets Are Valuable Feature at Rowland & Clark Pittsburgh Houses

MOST theatres issue student tickets now and then for some special attraction, but the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, issue season tickets to the pupils of the University of Pittsburgh, Carnegie Tech and the various high schools, and find that it not only makes for business, but has the more important effect of gaining the approval of the various faculties.

The main point is that the distribution of these tickets gives emphasis to the fact that the motion picture possesses a strong educational angle. Many of the stories are derived from standard literature, and the news weeklies, film magazines and travel reels all supplement school studies.

It is recognized that many pupils cannot afford to attend the theatres regularly at the schedule prices and the idea back of the pupil's tickets was a genuine desire to aid the students to see the desired films.

Makes Money, Too

That the results have been very satisfactory financially is a development that was not figured closely into the original scheme, but it works for the house in a number of ways.

There are no figures available on the high school attendance, but the University and Tech have more than 14,000 pupils on their rolls. Not all of these have applied for concession tickets, but a very large proportion have done so, and the tickets are regularly used in large numbers.

These are issued by the various houses upon application by the student, with proof that he is entitled to the courtesy. The ticket itself is on hard stock and the name of the pupil and his school are written in.

The Price Concession

When presented at the box office of any Rowland and Clark theatre, the ticket is good for one admission at a reduced price. This price varies with the house. At the Liberty and Regent, the matinee price is 40 cents, and the student is given a rate of 25 cents. At the Strand the rate is 25 cents and at the Manor it is 30 cents. In each instance the student is charged 20 cents.

These price concessions are not large, but they do count where the pennies must be counted by the ambitious student, and at the same time business is bettered in the afternoon at all these houses.

Apart from this, there is the valuable angle of personal publicity. Naturally these students mingle with many persons, and if they like the shows they are apt to tell of the good picture at this or that theatre. They are more apt to tell because they are proud of their tickets. In this way several thousand personal press agents work for the pictures.

Works Anywhere

This stunt will work in any town where there is a high school. It might not be wise to issue tickets to pupils in the grade schools, save in isolated instances, but the benefits to the high school pupils are such that it generally will be found possible to distribute the tickets through the schools themselves.

In a college town the idea works even better, and the smaller the college the better it will work, since there will be a greater number of students who will appreciate this reduction.

Stresses Educational Value

In all cases it serves to stress the fact that the motion picture possesses strong educational advantages, and this is something that every manager needs to advertise to offset the maunderings of the truly righteous who see only the small proportion of evil in all things in life.

Sixty Guessed

Prior to the playing of The Sea Hawk at the Main Street Theatre, the Journal-Post published the novel in serial form, and for five days before the opening a picture of one of the leading players was printed in the paper.

The fifth day a coupon was added, to be filled in with the identities of the five persons shown, and fifty tickets were offered the contestants.

Although several hundred replies were received, only 60 of the blanks were wholly correct, so the limit was raised and all correct guessers were given singles.

Toast to Gloria Sells Love Story

When Herschel Stuart had Her Love Story at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, he offered $10 for the best toast to Gloria Swanson, with 25 pairs of seats for the best.

It worked so well that Lem Stewart broadcast the idea for use on Her Love Story, giving the stunt as Herschel laid it down, including the requirement that the first line should read "Here's to Gloria Swanson" and that there should be not more than four lines.

Charles A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, was the first to report on the idea. He writes that it helped the general clean-up and that Her Love Story went to extra business. The winning toast ran:

> Here's to Gloria Swanson,
> The cleverest on the screen!
> May she often come to Houston
> And always to "Our Queen."

McFarland also used the voting contest between bobbed and long hair, but he put his ballot boxes in the lobby instead of tying to a newspaper.

The box was placed in the foyer and on the way out you took a card from the rack and dropped it in the box. Red cards ran for bobbed hair and blue slips for longer locks. No prizes. You just got it out of your system.

This dates back to the days of Mary Pickford in Lord Fauntleroy, when you voted for Cedric or Dearest, both parts being played by the star.

AN OPEN ALL NIGHT LOBBY MADE FROM SECOND HAND STUFF

Jean Wildenstein and his helpers in the Princess Theatre, San Antonio, framed this very nice display from old material, the local light company loaning the wired lanterns. Then Windenstein put on a midnight matinee and batted a home run business.

Fifteen Merchants Were Open All Night

Two sound novelties were worked on Open All Night by Jean Windenstein, of the Princess Theatre, San Antonio.

He dug up fifteen men whose business continued through the twenty-four hours, and these contributed to a co-operative "Open All Night" page. They were not all lunch rooms, either.

But even better was a midnight matinee used to start off the show. This was worked the night previous to the opening of the run, following the preceding attraction, but at an additional admission. You could stay in and pay or come just for the special show.

Some local talent was employed to help things along, a jazz orchestra supplied the music instead of the regular house bunch, and paper hats, rattlers, horns and the rest of the cabaret stuff added to the local color, the noise and the fun.

He not only made a big profit on his show, but he sent out a large crowd of boosters to talk about a picture they had seen under the most favorable conditions.

His lobby was mostly second hand stuff, even to the city skyline banner. The lanterns were loaned, already wired, by the electric light company and the cash outlay was almost foolishly small, though he made one of the best flashes of the season.

Used Raffles Idea for Silent Watcher

Adapting an idea from the New York Graphic, which in turn is an adaptation of the prizes for careful autoists stunt, Irwin R. Franklyn, of the Ohio Theatre, Cleveland, got a lot of special publicity for The Silent Watcher.

He hired a carefully selected girl to be the Ohio's silent watcher for deeds of kindness. When she saw one, she handed the doer a coupon which could be exchanged at the Ohio box office for a reward ranging from a pair of tickets to the show to a $5 bill.

Each day her route was announced in the newspapers, and by stores where she was advertised to visit. The route was laid out to include several store stops each day, street car rides, tours of the street and visits to railroad stations and other places of assemblage.

No effort was made to induce the merchants to contribute prizes. Cleveland has not been trained to co-operation and Franklyn felt that he was doing well to get mention in the advertisements and in the windows.

In most towns the merchants can be tied to the prize end and a newspaper can be induced to take over the stunt as a circulation scheme.

There is no identification necessary, wherein this stunt beats the Raffles. The girl merely hands out the coupons, unasked, to those she thinks deserve them. The avoidance of the identification removes the danger of rowdiness which has hurt the straight raffles scheme in many places, and lets the stunt come clean.

Generally perambulator books serve to conceal their motive power, but the big book is new in Montgomery, Ala., and perhaps H. C. Farley figured that the pedestrians might be scared, so he built a five-foot book for The Alaskan and had a man dressed as an Alaskan drag the outfit around town. Being new, it was a fine seller.

One Town Knows

One town knows what a sheik is, for the Lyric Theatre persuaded the Republican-Gazette to offer prizes for the best answers, and now all Lima, Ohio, knows what a sheik is.

Of course some opinions of sheiks are unprintable, but on the other hand there were some clever replies and even poems, and the paper got a lot of free reading, the theatre making good the prizes, which were passes to see The Arab, the cause of all the curiosity.

Lapel buttons reading, "Member of the fast set. Adolphe Menjou, President," done in white letters on a blue ground, tickled the college boys who gathered to witness the Georgia Tech-Penn State football game in Atlanta. Five employees of the Howard Theatre distributed several thousand of these and could have used more. It proved helpful to the William De Mille production.

Makes Big Town Ads His Local Heralds

George E. Planck, who rates as accessory clerk in the First National exchange at Kansas City, but who does a lot of exploitation for the smaller towns, has been working on Abraham Lincoln lately.

He has found that in most places the picture is its own best advertisement. Each day it stays the business grows, and his aim has been to sell the picture to the largest possible first-day audiences that they may go out and send the others in.

In Topeka the picture was booked into the Opera house for a five-day run. Only one other picture had been opry housed there in the past six months and that died a terrible death, so the Lincoln film was a little late in getting started but once under way it built up so rapidly that it was decided to hold the picture over for three days of the following week and this fact was blazoned in the Sunday ads.

That was where Planck got busy. He arranged with the circulation manager of the Topeka paper for two thousand copies at a nominal price, in consideration of the value of the stunt to the paper. These were delivered to him in Manhattan and Lawrence, nearby towns.

He met the paper train and blue penciled a "See page 11" on the front of each, ringing the special advertisement on that page. These papers were then put into the homes by a special squad of boys, and got him a pair of nice houses the following day when the pictures opened in those towns.

This is a stunt that can be worked by any theatre close to a large city, particularly if it plays close to the city date. And the circulation manager will cut the price of his papers to get the advertising that would cost him a great deal more than the price concession if he worked it himself.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

THROUGH an arrangement in the bookings, the Frank Lloyd production, "The Silent Watcher," was secured for Armistice Week, owing to the theme in it which refers to the Unknown Soldier. Around this photoplay was built a program of seven diversified incidents, two of which were included especially because of Armistice Week. The remaining five incidents ranged from light vocal numbers to a group of Italian numbers. Out of a show which ran for two hours and one minute, 30 minutes were given over to the musical numbers, 1 hour and 24 minutes to the feature photoplay and 7 minutes to the Topical Review.

The first of the Armistice numbers was an especially arranged overture for the orchestra, which depicted in allegorical fantasie the departure, the heroic struggle and the return of our gallant soldier boys. Illustrated art titles were made up especially to run on the screen while these numbers were being played. These were as follows:

The Assembly—the approach of the American troops, marching to the boats.

The voyage across and the arrival in France.

Songs of the Doughboys.

Battle Scene—above the confusion and strife the Anthems of the Allies are heard and then—a touch of Johnny Comes Marching Home.

The Assembly—a tribute to departed heroes.

The Return—Home Again—Home, Sweet Home.

Lights for this number included: large stage in blue; light blue flood on orchestra from dome; two light pink spots on musicians from transparent windows; spots crossing on ceilings, red, white and blue. At the finish of the final title as the gold draw curtains close, the orchestra is flooded white from the dome.

The second of the Armistice numbers was programmed as "The Unknown Soldier" and at opening disclosed a marble shaft upon which was posed a woman representing Victory. At the base of the statue knelt a doughboy. All spotless white. A basso, dressed as an American doughboy, entered from the right and sang one verse and chorus of "The Unknown Soldier," at the finish placing a wreath at the base of the statue and kneeling as the curtain closed in on the number. Pure white overhead spots covered the set. The whole was backed up by deep blue plush cyclorama. An amber spot followed the basso during his song. The ceiling spots on the large stage were red, white and blue. This number required 4 minutes.

Estelle Carey, soprano, appeared on the apron of the large stage, under a light pink spot from the dome. Her number was "Given Me One Rose to Remember," by Gray, which was followed by "Wonderful One" as an encore. The front lighting showed the large stage in blue, with the gold draw curtains closed across the production stage. Magenta and green arch spots hit the pleats of these curtains, augmenting the blue floods from booth and dome. Amber spots through the transparent windows at either side of the orchestra covered the musicians. Four minutes for this number.

Neapolitan Songs and Dances embraced 5 selections as follows: "Margarita"—Ritz Male Quartette and Mark Strand Ballet Corps; "Carmela"—Carlo Ferretti, baritone; "Tarantella"—Mark Strand Ballet Corps; "O Sole Mio"—Carlo Ferretti, baritone; "Funiculi, Funicula"—entire ensemble.

This scene consisted of a transparent Venetian back drop in front of which was a string of varicolored lanterns. Open box lamps of light pink and blue behind the back drop gave additional color to the set. White amber and straw spots from sides and overhead picked out the various singers and dancers as they did their stuff. The musicians were covered by a light amber from the booth. Thirteen minutes for this number.

The organ recessional was Wagner's "Tannhauser March."

Candy and Fags to Help the Flapper

Hooking into a new brand of cigarettes got a lot of special work for The Perfect Flapper of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Nashville. A Louisville concern was launching the Clown brand, and sent down a girl and a dwarf to ballyhoo the town, linking the brand to the title of the play. The girl gave out samples of the smokes, with a match for each, working a tobacco store through the day and the house lobby evenings for two weeks in advance.

If you did not smoke you could have Beech Nut fruit drop samples, though this did not last as long as the fifteen day swing of the clowns. Both stunts were worked by W. R. Arnold, of First National.

A number of good windows were obtained on rather light hook-ins, and there were teaser advertisements in both newspapers.

The special work had the usual effect.

Sold to S. R. O. on a Local Film

With no outstanding feature, the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., sold standing room on Saturday night after a successful week.

The answer is a local film, "Who's Who in Greenwood."

Perhaps you know the scheme, for it is often worked; a locally produced picture with the scenes laid in part in front of the stores of the local merchants who contribute to the cost of the film.

That part of it is old. So is the other part, but the combination is still good.

The real kicker was the showing of the backs of twelve well known local people, and $50 were offered for the most complete identifications. This attracted so much attention that many of the patrons came every night to check up their previous guesses.

The entire cost, including the prizes, was only $15 to each of the participants.

The same thing can be done with a still camera by making secret shots and then putting these on lantern slides. It is one of the contest ideas offered in Picture Theatre Advertising, and has been a money maker for a great many years. It beat the feature films in Greenwood.

Why not give it a roll for a few weeks? The local angle is of general interest.

Supplied Bulletins

During the World Series baseball games the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, had printed up a score sheet with an advertisement for the current attraction, room for nine innings with the summary. These were gummed on the back and designed to be pasted to the window fronts of radio and other stores giving the results.

It's a stunt that will pay only where there are enough stores to justify the cost of printing the sheets, but it is fine for the larger cities.

One Picture Got All Four Records

There are four standard records. You can get a record for receipts or attendance for a run or for a day. George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., busted all four, largely on his personal endorsement of Feet of Clay, plus a private showing to the Better Films Committee.

He used a straight newspaper and poster campaign with no stunts other than this special showing, but he broke his records for a three-day run for both money and attendance and then got the best Saturday from the same angles.

But he did supplement his regular newspaper advertising with scatters in the classified ads, especially the personals, and he got in a number of special stories, starting well in advance of the booking.

He figured that stunts might be out of place since he was playing for the church element on the other world scenes. You can play Feet of Clay as a glorious leg show or you can play up Heaven. It all depends upon your clientele. George knew his crowd and took the angle that would bring him the most money.

How About It?

Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, made a lot of trouble for some perfectly innocent men in New London, Wis.

Bill stopped over to suggest a stunt for Men at the Grand Opera House. Quoting Pola Negri to the effect that a woman needed at least one-seventh of her husband's income for her clothes, Bill offered prizes for the best letters on the subject.

The contest only ran a week, but the domestic battles are still on. Next time Bill drops off at New London he would do well to wear false whiskers.

A PRETTY WINDOW PLANNED FOR SECRETS BY H. B. CLARKE

These were used in a drug store window and by their neat appearance did much to suggest the class of the production. The picture did an unusually good first-three-day business because the advertising was made to appeal to patrons.

Mechanical Display Shows Three Women

Emphasizing the title, J. B. Carroll made an effective animated display for Three Women in the lobby of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

On a stand of irregular outline he painted a spider web on which was imposed a large figure three. In the upper part of the figure was a cutout of Lew Cody.

In the lower curve was an opening, back of which operated an old bicycle wheel, covered with compo board and having pasted upon it the heads of the three women who figured in the affair.

The wheel was operated by a fan motor geared down to permit each face to show at the opening for three or four seconds, the heads passing in rotation.

The sign was not particularly striking, but the motion made it get attention and it won more sales than the average giant cutout without motion.

Something of the idea has been done before, the first being reported on The Passer By, but the idea is still good and particularly apt on this title.

If you make one of these outfits, lightly outline the position of the circle on the wheel for each of the three displays before you paste these down.

Another Revolver for Three Women

Earl Settle, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, was another to use a revolving display on Three Women.

His attractor was a spoked wheel with a cutout figure of Lew Cody standing below with his upraised hand touching the rim of the wheel. Back of this was a revolving disc with the pictures of the three women. This was turned by a motor.

The three portraits were mounted so that they were all in proper position at one point in the revolution and all standing on their heads at another.

This does not work as well as the device with an opening in which the women appear in rotation. It does, however, show all three women all of the time.

Where this is done, it would be well to go to the additional trouble of mounting the three cutouts so that they hang loosely from pins at the rear, the lower portion being weighted to keep the heads always in an upright position. This involves a little more work, but it will be found to be well worth the additional trouble.

Gladdened Omaha

Following Welcome Stranger Week in Omaha came the Mayor's proclamation declaring Glad Heart Week and calling upon each and every citizen to do one good deed each day.

It looked all right until it was discovered that Arthur Cunningham had Christine of the Hungry Heart at the Strand Theatre. By that time the merchants were all tied in and they went through for a wow.

If this thing keeps up the public will begin to grow suspicious even of Christmas and the Fourth of July.

Universal Hustler Makes Permanent Ad

Generally the services of an exploiteer end with the run of the attraction he is helping, but Andy Sharick, of Universal, is staking his customers to a continuous hook with so simple a stunt that anyone can swing it along the same lines.

For example, Andy went into Akron, Ohio, ahead of Wine. Among other things he landed the ten cent store with a sign and while he was at it he made it read: "Music in this window featured by the orchestra of the Temple Theatre in connection with the showing of Wine week of October fourth."

This was made so that the Wine can be taken out at the end of the run and a card with a new title substituted. There are openings for a number of stills.

All the theatre has to do is to supply a small card each week, lettered with the title and date of the new show, change the stills and tell the store manager what songs will be played.

You can't ask for anything easier—or better.

Voted on Hair

The use of a wig by Gloria Swanson in Her Love Story was the basis of the campaign used by R. T. Newton, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock. He sold a newspaper the idea of running a voting contest on whether Gloria looked better in long locks or the Swanson bob.

In spite of the fact that there were no prizes, the women bit hard and a large poll was made. Of course the women felt they had to see the play before they voted, so it helped business, though there was no requirement that they should first visit the show, since there were plenty of stills in the beauty parlors and shop windows.

It sold to big business and cost nothing. Just goes to show that if you get a point of interest you do not need prizes.

Mr. Newton used the teaser ads supplied by the home office and which were written by Harry Reichenback for the New York run.

USING BOYS TO TAIL A PARADE WITH NAVIGATOR BANNERS

This was used by Loew's Vendome Theatre, Nashville, to tag a parade advertising a football game between the Marines and a local college. This was a part of a general tie-up with the Navy recruiters on this nautical title. It helped.

America Beat This Record of Lloyd's

Down south when they beat Harold Lloyd's record in a house they feel they have been doing something. Thomas G. Coleman did the best three-day business on the books with America at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., and topped Lloyd by several hundred dollars.

He did it largely on a special showing to the D. A. R., the Legion, Better Films Committee, the Public Librarian and the newspapers. The librarian permitted the posting of stills about the library and there was a meeting of the D. A. R. at which the good word was spread. The rest was reported through the newspapers, both in the news stories and the house advertising.

About the only house work was a special illuminated six sheet on the top of the marquise a week in advance, with red, white and blue bulbs all through the lobby and on the front the showing days.

Endorsement seems to be better than stunting for pictures of this type, and Mr. Coleman made an intelligent selection of advance witnesses.

HOW THEY ADVERTISE BUSTER KEATON IN DENMARK

This is a very effective banner for Our Hospitality from Det Lille Theatre, somewhere in Denmark. In Copenhagen they used the Keaton impersonator used for earlier releases by this star. The arrow on the left points to the entrance.

Got Ambitious

A 24-sheet may mean little in your managerial life, but it meant a lot to the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., so Harry Hardy decided to do something to get back the cost of a 24-sheet on America.

There are two small colleges in town. He interviewed the presidents of both institutions and they agreed that the students should see the picture for its historical value, so they shut down and let the students go Monday afternoon.

Hardy also laid in a stock of heralds. These were delivered to the houses by boys who rang the bells and waited for someone to answer the call before handing in the sheets. That helped to impress, too.

Got a Bunch

Either they have about a hundred newspapers in Syracuse, N. Y., or Cliff Lewis is cheating a little, for he sends in the photos of his newsboys' parade for The Sea Hawk with several hundred kids in line. It's the biggest kid bunch we have had in a flock of months.

Old stuff, but Syracuse never saw it before and it was a splendid send-off for the big picture at the Strand.

Just to wring out the last few drops, Cliff offered prizes for the best criticisms from his guests, and of course the newspaper printed these. That's one you can tail onto your next newsboys' parade.

Four Merchants Aided The Enemy

Getting four merchants to help him advertise brought good business to A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., for The Enemy Sex.

In a dry goods store were a number of stills of the story, with Miss Compson in her gladdest rags and the message, "Betty Compson is the best dressed woman on the screen. If you wear our gowns you will be the best dressed woman in Gadsden. See how she does it in The Enemy Sex. Imperial Theatre."

In a jewelry store it was told that Betty Compson pawned her diamond ring when she needed some money in The Enemy Sex, adding that "Diamonds are always safe investments."

A florist placed a large bouquet in the lobby of the Imperial, carded "To Dodo from The Enemy Sex," and then placarded its own window with: "The large bouquet of flowers in the lobby of the Imperial Theatre came from this shop. Flowers help to win The Enemy Sex."

And lastly an automobile concern advertised that the trip to see the play could most comfortably be made in a car of its make.

All of these were illustrated with suitable stills.

This cost only four window cards, but it brought large returns to both the theatre and the co-operators, particularly to the dry goods store.

Stopped at Seven

Several dozen clocks in the window of a jewelry store in Tampa, Fla., were stopped at seven o'clock to tie up to the idea on the one sheet for His Hour. For a centerpiece J. B. Carroll used a frame in the shape of a mantel clock with a pair of kissing bugs obscuring the dial, the cut-out which gave the idea for the rest of the display.

It helped pull in several hundred dollars better than the average.

and apparently this poor typography has been passed without attempt at correction. Exclusive of the title, there are 21 lines in this space for Tarnish. Of these there are only six in upper and lower case. The others are all light line capitals, some of them as wide as five inches. The Indianapolis newspapers may be shy a variety of faces on the machines, but possibly they could be induced to give a liberal advertiser some hand-set display lines if enough of a fuss is made about it. In a house with such a variety of advertising appeals and with a clientele loyal to its favorite theatre, there is less harm done than where a house has to fight for business, but since display advertising is paid for at a reasonably high rate, it would seem that someone would be interested in getting display instead of this stuff.

Makes a Feature of a Local Reel

Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, takes a special box for the contents of the house's local news reel. It realizes that these local picture records will bring money to the theatre. All who saw the event or who were "atmosphere" in the big scenes will want to see it over again, and the house can pull as much money with the football work of a local eleven as it can with Keaton in his latest comedy. This leads to the suggestion that the same thing can often be done with the regular news reels. More people are interested in the news events than most managers realize. They regard the business as governed wholly by the feature, whereas often a comedy will sell more tickets than the rental costs where the feature has to run on the house momentum. Some people get the habit of coming every week. Others come to see the feature, while some are drawn by one of the small features. The Aldine gives a full half of its space to the small stuff even though it has one of the best Keatons for the big appeal. It sells this adequately with "Your money back if your sides don't ache," and then it goes on to sell the rest of its program. And even in Pittsburgh it appears that the personal guarantee will work, as witness the box signed by Louis K. Sidney. When this is strictly reserved for the exceptional picture, the idea is as good in the cities as the hamlets, for even a big town clientele will be impressed.

Large Space Gives Room for Reverse

This four column display on The Yankee Consul at the Columbia Theatre, Portland, Ore., is about 14½ inches deep—205 lines to be exact. In so large a space it is possible to use a reverse with some assurance that the lettering will come through, and in so large a display the mass value of the black makes it worth while. A two column advertisement with this proportioning would not be as good, but a four gives enough black to make it worth while. When it comes down to the small letter lines the artist very sensibly shades off to get regular type, ingeniously breaking the change by running the scene drawing into the black. This avoids an abrupt transition from black to white, which both relieves the eye and holds the two parts together better. It is very seldom that so good a combination is made and the artist, whoever he may be, is to be complimented upon his good judgment; the more so because good judgment is so rarely found in the ranks of newspaper have been with too heavy an impression, for that would have given only a black smudge where here you can see that it is a picture of a woman and can get a suggestion of the features. It is partly the fault of the cut and partly the presswork, the latter fact being demonstrated by the poor result on the signature. Between the reduction in size and the better press work, the signature will probably come up all right on this page, but in the original it looks weatherbeaten; black in spots and grey in others. But the newspaper is not wholly at fault. Probably it gives about the same grade of press work right along, and the house should have foreseen what would happen to the cut. The trouble is that most managers look at the original and not at the result they are likely to obtain. Probably this looked well in the press sheet, for the sheet was printed at slow speed and with some make-ready. It looked well, so it was adopted for local use, regardless of the fact that it would not get the same careful printing. The result is that the display falls short of anticipation—does not suggest much of anything. Don't look at what you have, but what you are likely to get, and order a cut that can't be hurt in the local handling. Even as it is, the display gets over, but this is more largely due to the white space than to the cut. On a coated stock this would make a real appeal, but if your press work is poor, do not use finer than a 60 screen and then only when the cut is strong in contrasts without too much black in any one spot. If managers would only figure local conditions onto nice reproductions and original drawings, a lot of money would be saved.

Washington Offers Early Circe Space

This is one of the first of the advertisements on Circe the Enchantress. It comes from Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C. The cut gives a good idea of the modern atmosphere of the story and probably was selected with that end in view. Very few might suppose that Mae Murray was being offered in a classical play, but it is just as well to be definite where this is possible, and the presence of the jazz band is very positive assurance that

PROVING IT MODERN

Miss Murray is not trying to play the original bearer of that name. The cut of the star faces down a little, but you get the general idea. We scarcely like the "author of The Four Horsemen and other great hits." Ibanez writes "successes" rather than "hits." The line will not impress those it is particularly intended to reach. We think the best sales idea in this production is that the Spanish novelist wrote this directly for the screen and with Miss Murray in mind. That would be the appeal to those who follow literature. They would be interested in seeing what the famous author had done as a scenarist. They would pay to find out. Miss Murray's own large clientele would come on the title and the assurance that she was in her regular line of presentation. "Specially written for her by the author of The Four Horsemen" would have been a better line since it could have gone in larger type.

Works Plan Book in Good Display

H. E. Sills, of the Lyric Theatre, Kitchener, Ont., sends in a display for Lily of the Dust based on a plan book cut. This is 12½ across three, and since the local paper uses the old 13 em columns, the cut fits well into the border. The cut was sized to go into a border with a twelve em width, but with the additional space there is room for a larger border. Mr. Sills apparently has cut away the bottom of the cut to let in "A German story. Set in a German town. Made by a German director." That would have been no recommendation at all a few years ago and we are wondering whether he used this for an appeal or an alibi. Typographically the display is very good, though the type face used for the vaudeville stars is of a very clumsy cut. Down at the bottom you will notice what seems to be "Treav Ak" though in reality it is all one name. The slant of the V and of the A are such that when the types rest against each other there is too great an interval, while on the other side the same letters get together too closely. It does not matter much, but it shows you what you are likely to get if you do not watch the type faces carefully. The V-A in any face is a bad combination, but it is worse with this trick italic. But getting back to the display as a whole, we think that Mr. Sills has achieved a very nice layout, uncrowded and inviting.

Truth Paid

George Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., is very careful not to overstate in his advertising. This stood him in good stead when he wanted to put over Feet of Clay.

He just hammered away on the fact that the DeMille production was one of the best pictures of the year, and the Imperial was too small to hold the crowds he got out.

And as he spread his campaign into the outlying districts, his Saturday business drew people from as far as fifty miles away.

"Forbidden Paradise"

Pola Negri Production Directed by Ernst Lubitsch Is Clever, Amusing and Delightful

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

For the first time since both came to America, Pola Negri in the Paramount production, "Forbidden Paradise," appears under the direction of the man who made her famous on the other side, Ernst Lubitsch.

Notwithstanding the fact that director, star and locale are European, Mr. Lubitsch has once again demonstrated that he has grasped the American psychology of entertainment and has made a picture that is a delight. He has taken a plot that is daring and sophisticated and in which sex is always uppermost, concerning the love affairs of the queen of a small Balkan country, especially her relations with a dashing lieutenant in her army, and presented it as a romantic comedy, handling it with such skill and deftness and with such a pleasing lightness of touch, always keeping the humorous angle to the fore, that it should not offend anyone, but prove decidedly pleasing.

Into a colorful drama of love and intrigue, without sacrificing the dramatic values, he has built up the human side of his characters and injected such fine comedy as to really make this the predominating point of appeal in the picture. And such comedy! His players all act entirely true to life and everything they do seems perfectly natural and convincing, but there is a delightful comedy twist to nearly every situation at the most unexpected moments. The climax to this picture is one of the cleverest comedy touches this writer has ever witnessed—subtle, but at the same time tellingly obvious.

Pola Negri is excellent, doing wonderful work; in fact, she has never given a better performance, playing with fire and seductiveness, making the Czarina a thoroughly human but at the same time an intensely regal queen when the occasion demands. Rod LaRocque gives a fine performance as the young lieutenant and Pauline Starke does good work as his sweetheart whom he neglects. Strikingly effective is the performance of Adolphe Menjou. Always a good actor, he displays unusually fine subtlety and finesse in the role of the court chancellor, the only one who really understands the queen. On his shoulders falls most of the clever comedy, and he deftly puts it over, many of his biggest points being registered by the lifting of an eyebrow or an almost imperceptible gesture.

"Forbidden Paradise," with its risque theme, magnificent direction and acting and its unusually clever humor, is a picture that will immensely delight the sophisticated and at the same time, we believe, it will register with the great majority of patrons, who will class it as well above the average in entertainment value.

Story

The Czarina of a small European country decides to give audience in person to the French ambassador when she learns he is a favorite with the Parisian ladies, but in the meantime, Alexei, a young officer in a border town discovers a revolution is in progress and hurries to the palace, forcing an entrance into the Czarina's presence. So impressed is she that she forgets the revolution and the ambassador and bestows her favor on Alexei, who finds himself a popular favorite and is made captain of the royal guard. Alexei neglects his fiancée Anna, the queen's lady-in-waiting. At a banquet he discovers four other officers wearing the insignia of the queen's favor and when he reproaches her she chides him to avoid scandal. Disillusioned he joins the revolution and tells the queen she is under arrest. The chamberlain has bought off the leaders and Alexei is courtmartialed and sentenced to death. The Czarina, unable to win him back graciously pardons him even knowing that he will marry Anna. The French ambassador is ushered in and soon reappears wearing one of the telltale decorations.

"The Siren of Seville"

Producers Distributing Corporation Offers Priscilla Dean in Pleasing and Colorful Spanish Romance

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Priscilla Dean makes her debut on the program of Producers Distributing Corporation in "The Siren of Seville," a story of modern Spain, with a background of romance and the bull-fighting arena.

The story concerns a fiery peasant girl who succeeds in making her sweetheart the greatest matador in all Spain, only to have him throw her over for a vamp. She becomes a noted dancer and turns him down when he rescues her from an assault by the villain and comes to her repentant, but her real love comes to the fore and she finally saves his life by rushing into the arena and killing the maddened bull that is charging upon him after he has been rendered helpless by drugged wine.

"The Siren of Seville" is a dashing, colorful romance which serves as an excellent vehicle for Miss Dean. It has been given an elaborate reproduction and Director Jerome Storm has made H. H. Van Loan's story into a picture filled with dash and animation and moves forward with pleasing snap and rhythm. It should prove a pleasing attraction for the majority of theatregoers.

Starting off with a rural scene in which there is good comedy, with the hero fighting a fake bull, the story moves forward with good continuity and holds the attention. None of the scenes is allowed to lag and the action progresses rapidly and smoothly. There is plenty of action and dramatic conflict, with good suspense and snappy fight scenes, including one between the two women that looks very real. There is a quota of thrills, including somes scenes of bullfighting which have been realistically handled and provide plenty of excitement. The big scene is where Miss Dean, after a wild ride through narrow streets, rushes into the fight enclosure, pushes her way madly through the audience and, leaping into the arena, seizes a sword and gives the bull a death thrust. While obviously worked up and lacking in conviction, it certainly does provide a thrill.

The role of the fiery, dashing senorita provides Priscilla Dean with excellent opportunities to appear to advantage, and she is assisted by a thoroughly capable supporting cast headed by Allen Forrest as her sweetheart, Bert Woodruff as her aged father, Stuart Holmes as a polished villain, Claire DeLorez as the vamp and Matthew Betz as a famous toreador.

"The Siren of Seville" should appeal to those who like stirring, dashing, colorful romance with melodramatic thrills.

"The Fast Set"

William DeMille Produces Striking, Highly Sophisticated Domestic Drama for Paramount

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Excellently directed and acted, William DeMille's Paramount picture, "The Fast Set," will please audiences that like the ultra-sophisticated drama, with clever, stabbing comedy touches. The public can depend upon William DeMille, the past has shown, for fine workmanship in every picture he directs, and "The Fast Set," though differing in type from the usual DeMille vehicle, is fully as polished a piece of work as its predecessors.

The story, taken from "Spring Cleaning," a Broadway stage play, while stretching the imagination at points, has real dramatic values and good suspense. The problem of a husband and wife unable to maintain happy relations because the one is wrapped up in his work and the other travels a fast pace is always interesting and in "The Fast Set" is worked out dramatically. The conclusion is logical enough; it is only in some of the preceding scenes that the characters seem not to run true to form. For instance, it is hardly probable that the quiet novelist would have invited a woman of the streets to his wife's dinner party as an object lesson to her, and then have as roundly insulted her guests as the story has him do. But while the realism may suffer, the interest in the outcome of the complex situation does not, because of its very complexity.

Betty Compson, Adolphe Menjou, Elliott Dexter, ZaSu Pitts and the other artists do uniformly excellent work, with Menjou excelling as the popular batchelor with a sense of humor, the lion among the ladies who causes the crisis in the novelist's home. ZaSu Pitts also must be credited with a bit of fine acting as the woman of the streets, especially in the dinner table scene where she introduces effective comedy.

In conclusion, it may be said that, from the viewpoints of story and technique, "The Fast Set" rates well up in the column; and from the viewpoint of sophistication as well. It is lavishly produced.

Differences in tastes and a lack of understanding of each begin to alienate them, and Ernest Steele, leader of the fast set, hastens the crisis by making love to Margaret Sones. As an object lesson to his wife, Richard brings a woman of the streets to his wife's dinner party and tells the guests that her presence should not be resented as she is a professional in the same game they play as amateurs. Margaret decides upon a divorce until she learns that Steele is not eager to marry her. Steele then takes a hand, convincing Rcihard that he has been too inattentive and showing him how to win back his wife, who really loves him.

"Barriers of the Law"

William Desmond and Helen Holmes in Bootlegging Story Presented by Independent Pictures Corp.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Bootlegging furnishes the theme for "Barriers of the Law" which Jesse J. Goldburg is presenting through Independent Pictures Corporation. William Desmond and Helen Holmes are the featured players and the story concerns the efforts of a revenue officer to break up a big bootlegging syndicate. It is complicated by the fact that he marries a former member of this gang without knowing her past.

This melodramatic story moves forward at a good pace and has the advantage of being timely and ostensibly showing the workings of the newest type of lawbreakers. There is plenty of action and some thrills, including the destruction of a barge loaded with whiskey and the chase of a tug by the officers, also the climax in which the heroine is rescued from a blazing freight car attached to a "wild" engine.

While there is considerable punch to the situations, their effect has been weakened for the discriminating public by slips in direction, notably two different scenes in which the heroine is imprisoned and escapes through unguarded windows with surprising ease. The coincidence of the girl when she escaped, seeking refuge in the rooms of the very man who is after the gang stretches the credulity and it would also hardly seem probable that this man would not allow any explanation of this unusual incident. The continuity also lacks smoothness.

William Desmond does capable work as the revenue chief and Helen Holmes is satisfactory as the girl. J. P. McGowan and Al. Smith do good work as the boss bootlegger and his assistant.

This picture will probably prove a satisfactory attraction with patrons who place action and thrills and a timely theme above the other considerations enumerated

Story

Revenue officers by a ruse, are about to capture a scow loaded with whisky when Rita one of the gang destroys it, her father, the tugboat captain is captured however. Steve the head of the bootleggers refuses to aid him and Rita quits Steve's employ. He imprisons her in a notorious house but she escapes and climbs into a window, falls and is unconscious. The apartment is occupied by Brandon, the revenue chief who is fighting Steve's gang. He marries Rita and prepares to jail Steve. Raiding his house, Steve tells Brandon that Rita was an inmate of the notorious place and to save her from scandal, Brandon resigns taking the evidence with him. Rita later discovers him down and out and sends Leila to take him to a mutual friend. Leila tells Brandon the truth about Rita and he determines to redeem himself. Rita in order to help him has again joined Steve's gang and she gives Brandon information which enables him to catch the gang with a big shipment loaded in freight cars. During the raid, Rita is locked in a car which catches on fire and is attached to a train which Steve starts moving and then jumps out of the engine. Brandon in an auto manages to get aboard the car and rescues Rita and all ends happily.

"Classmates"

Story of West Point and the Jungle Starring Richard Barthelmess Offers Fine Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Several years ago Margaret Turnbull and William DeMille wrote a play, "Classmates," which proved a big success on the stage and was later made into a film by Biograph. This story has again reached the screen, this time as an Inspiration Pictures production, distributed through First National, starring Richard Barthelmess.

With Barthelmess in the role of a poor country boy who goes to West Point, is expelled in his final year because of a fight forced on him by the villain, and who, to set himself right in the eyes of the girl he loves, he goes into the jungles of South America and after enduring severe hardships brings this fellow back and wins not only the girl but reinstatement at West Point, it furnishes excellent entertainment.

"Classmates" is a picture that gets well away from the beaten path. About half of the footage is taken up with his career at West Point. This part of the picture is unusually compelling, with the advantage of being unhackneyed. The atmosphere of this noted school where the pick of the U. S. manhood is prepared for officers in the army is excellently depicted and there is the fascination in these scenes that is found in Charles King's famous stories with the same locale. Filmed at West Point with the active co-operation of the authorities, they are authentic and give a wonderful insight into real West Point life that should interest everyone, thrill the young manhood of America and, with its military glamor, fascinate the young ladies. These scenes are by no means cut and dried; there is a lot of good comedy and human interest and a wonderfully touching scene that will tug at the heartstrings when Barthelmess leaves in disgrace. But above all is the strikingly effective portrayel of the way in which the splendid spirit and discipline of the institution is instilled in the cadets.

With the introduction of the scenes in the jungle there is a decided change of tempo, with the hero and his companions undergoing hardships and privation, caused by the treachery of their guides, the scourge of fever and the fact that they become lost. Even though the finding of the villain in the jungle under the circumstances is a strain on the credulity, the excellent direction and acting makes these sequences strikingly effective and realistic and the spectators' interest is held tensely. A particularly well handled and exciting scene is the rescue by means of a heliograph when the ray of light finally strikes a pan which Barthelmess has hung as a signal on a tall tree.

Richard Barthelmess has a role that fits him well and he gives a very fine performance. James Bradbury as one of his companions also does excellent work; in fact, the entire cast is high class. Madge Evans, who many will remember as a child actress a few years ago, makes her debut in grown-up roles opposite the star.

John S. Robertson has admirably directed this picture. It is fine entertainment as it is and should prove a worth-while attraction and a box office winner, but we believe that it could stand a little more cutting.

He is in love with Sylvia Randolph, whose family are wealthy snobs, and her cousin, Bert, openly insults Duncan. When Duncan is in the graduation class, Bert comes to West Point and resents being ordered about by the upper classmen, especially Duncan, who he considers his social inferior. Finally, he insults Duncan, who strikes him. Feigning blindness, he finally leaves the academy and goes on an expedition in the jungles of South America after giving Sylvia an erroneous account of the fight. Duncan, who has become an engineer, meets Sylvia, who refuses to listen to his explanation and tells him she is engaged to Bert. Word comes that Bert and his companion were lost in the jungle and probably died. To clear himself, Duncan and his pals go to try and rescue Bert. They meet all kinds of hardships, including the desertion of their guides, but are finally rescued by one of the chaps left behind with the supplies. In the meantime, they have found Bert, still unrepentent. All return to the States and when Bert tells the real truth, Duncan is reinstated and when he gets his commission he marries Sylvia at West Point.

"The Lover of Camille"

Warner Brothers Offer Artistic and Well-Acted Adaptation of Guitry's Tragic Stage Play

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of the sensations of a recent New York theatrical season was the success of Sacha Guitry's "Deburau," for notwithstanding the undoubted force of the story, its wonderful dialogue and the magnificent acting of Lionel Atwill in the title role, its theme was tragic throughout.

It is a story of unrequited love and fallen pride, of a master pantomimist, a pierrot who at the height of his success on the stage left his wife for a woman who held his love lightly and who, disappointed, forsook his career, waited patiently for years until she returned broken in health, and who in the end had the double disappointment of marrying her just before her death when in her delirium she thought he was some one else, and of himself suffering an utter breakdown on the stage to which he returned at her behest, his only reward being in seeing hsi son take his place as the idol of the populace.

Under the title of "The Lover of Camille," Warner Brothers have faithfully transferred this play to the screen preserving its sad note even to the unhappy ending, and for their commendable courage in the face of screen traditions they deserve credit. Praise is also due them for giving it a production that is artistic and technically excellent, well directed and capably acted.

While this is a story of an undoubtedly great love, the fact that Deburau leaves his wife for an unworthy woman while increasing pathos weakens sympathy and will not appeal to the conventional-minded, nor will the matter-of-fact be impressed with his giving up his career and just waiting for her return.

There is also the fact that in transferring this play to the screen only a small portion of the wonderful dialogue could be used and this contributes extremely striking and effective subtitles. In its place there is a wealth of detail which while adding to the atmosphere and helping to build up the characterization slows down the story perceptibly. This is especially noticeable as the picture is essentially a character study without strong dramatic conflict or sustained action.

Noted especially for his clever light comedy and dramatic work such as in domestic drama, Monte Blue will surprise many by his fine performance as the pathetic Deburau. Effective throughout, he is at his best in his pierrot-clown makeup and proves to be an unexpectedly good type. Marie Prevost as the Lady of the Camellias while giving a good performance is not exactly ideal for the role. Rose Dione as Deburau's wife scores in the one sequence in which she appears. Willard Louis gives a good performance and is responsible for comedy touches which while clever and amusing are a bit jarring and cynical. The remainder of the cast are satisfactory.

As a play, this story exerted its greatest appeal to the artistic and highest class of clientele and as in its screen form it is a faithful adaptation, minus of course the dialogue it would seem that it would prove most attractive to the same class of patronage.

Jean Gaspard Deburau, the clown of a pantomime theatre in Paris, is the idol of the populace. In a box is an attractive woman who waits for him after the show. Immediately he falls in love with her. After a time he return to find his own wife has left him for his friend Robillard. To the woman, Marie, Deburau's love has been but a passing thing, and returning to her he finds her in the arms of a wealthy fellow, Armand. Dissillusioned, he quits the stage, finding a little happiness in his son Charles. Years pass, Deburau clings to the idea Marie will return, and finally she does, broken in health, telling him Armand has left her. She pleads that he return to the stage, Ill with fever, she becomes delirious and Deburau marries her while she thinks he is Armand. At the first performance he breaks down because of his sorrow, and Marie dies. Hiding his broken heart, he dresses his son as the clown and finds some happiness in seeing him acclaimed by the populace.

"The Brass Bowl"

Edmund Lowe's Second Starring Vehicle for Fox is Corking Good Crook-Mystery-Adventure Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Edmund Lowe's second starring vehicle for William Fox, "The Brass Bowl" an adaptation of one of Louis Joseph Vance's popular novels is a corking good crook-mystery-adventure picture that should immensely please the majority of patrons.

The story is based on the situation of a wealthy young chap, fond of adventure, who surely succeeds in finding it. The mystery element is supplied by the fact that the action also involves a noted jewel thief who is the double of the hero and is continually being mistaken for him, and of course uses this likeness to further his own ends. There is also another mystery angle which supplies the romantic element, in the person of a girl who is also seeking to rob the hero and who turns out to be an amateur who only desires to secure papers that would incriminate her father.

Director Jerome Storm has skilfully directed this picture keeping the interest at a high pitch, introducing complication after complication in which the spectator is continually guessing whether the person on the screen is the real hero or his villainious double. This creates a high degree of suspense that intrigues the imagination. Edmund Lowe, of course portrays both roles and dresses the two parts so much alike that only the most discerning will at times be able to tell which is which, and even in the situatons in which you feel sure of the identity the other players are entirely at sea. This serves to heighten the snap of the picture.

Naturally with a theme of this type, there is action in plenty with melodramatic situations galore, with fights, chases etc., and the climax, a running fight in an office building with the thief and his accomplices in one elevator and the hero and police in the other seesawing up and down and continually firing at each other, is a real thriller.

Edmund Lowe has a part that suits him well and gives an excellent performance, noticeably fine is his makeup in a scene where as the thief he poses as a detective and binds the hero. There is a genuine "kick" when the spectator finds out his real identity. Claire Adams is entirely satisfactory as the girl and J. Farrell MacDonald contributes amusing comedy by continually letting the thief go and trying to arrest the hero.

There is fine snap to this picture and we can heartily recommend it to anyone who likes exciting entertainment with good comedy relief. "The Brass Bowl" overflows with it.

Then follows a series of exciting situations in which Anisty poses as Maitland, confusing everybody and leading to a variety of complications which are finally straightened out when Maitland succeeds in capturing Anisty after a running fight in the elevators of an office building and declares his love for the girl who confesses she turned thief only to get papers from Maitland that would have incriminated her father.

"Oh, Doctor"

With Reginald Denny as Star, Universal's First White List Picture Is Corking Clean Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With the presentation of "Oh, Doctor," Universal inaugurates its new White List of productions and certainly gets them off to a fine start, and with Reginald Denny as the star this picturization of a Saturday Evening Post story by Harry Leon Wilson should prove a winner.

"Oh, Doctor," is a farce comedy concerning the adventures of a chap who imagines he is afflicted with a variety of diseases, afraid of his shadow and so sure that he will die in a very short time that he is glad to sign over his inheritance for a moderate sum. How all this changes when the right girl comes along, and he blossoms out into a regular daredevil, finally wins her and through her cleverness gets back his money, furnishes a thoroughly enjoyable story.

While there are a number of situations which will get good laughs, these are simply the high spots in a story that will make you chuckle often and keep a smile on your face all the time. The humor is natural and not dragged in, and every bit of it is absolutely clean and wholesome, with not a single situation that the whole family cannot enjoy.

To enumerate the humorous moments would mean practically referring to every scene and situation, for there is not one that falls flat; but especially good are the sequences with the osteopath, the buying of the racing car and its tryout on the speedway, the motorcycle ride and finally the climax in which the frightened hero paints a ball on top of a high flagpole.

And there are thrills, too, in abundance in a lot of these situations, and adding to the interest and enjoyment is the fact that there is something behind these daredevil capers—the hero knows he is a moral coward and is fighting to overcome fear by doing the things he is most afraid of because he believes that women like men who are not afraid of anything.

Harry Pollard has excellently directed this picture, keeping it moving at a rapid clip, and the continuity is fine. After having portrayed a variety of he-man roles, Reginald Denny's portrayal of a regular sissie type of weakling, even afraid of a pork chop, as he expresses it, and the way in which he sustains this characterization even after he begins to find himself is a surprise and delight. Mary Astor is attractive, capable and an excellent foil for Denny in her role of a nurse. Otis Harlan, William V. Mong and Tom Ricketts as three eccentric old men add to the fun, as does everyone else in the cast, even to the dog.

With its good, clean, wholesome comedy, combined with thrills and human interest, we can recommend "Oh, Doctor," as a picture for any class of patronage.

Story

Reared in luxury, Rufus Billop had all of his life believed he was a weakling and liable to die at any moment, ill with about every known disease and afraid to eat substantial food. Visiting his aunt in Hollywood, an osteopath nearly kills him. Another doctor arranges with eccentric capitalists to loan him money for more treatment after assuring them there is nothing the matter with Rufus but his imagination. All is changed when a pretty nurse appears on the scene. Rufus, learning women like courageous men, resolves to conquer his fear. He buys a racing car and has a wreck. Then comes a spill from a motorcycle. Finally he explains the situation to the nurse and when he offers to paint a flagpole she secures the consent of the frightened capitalists to demand only their loan in place of the whole estate if he lives till the end of the contract. This done, she threatens not to marry him if he doesn't come right down off the swaying flagpole. So he hurries down and gets up enough courage to take her in his arms.

"The Fugitive"

Ben Wilson the Director and Star of Dramatic Arrow Western

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Ben Wilson is the director and star of "The Fugitive," an Arrow "Western," written by Jacques Jaccard. The story is of a man forced to flee for his life after killing three men who wronged his sister. He is befriended by a girl who realizes that she faces the life of a dancing girl in a saloon and sees her salvation in escaping with him. Thus it may be seen that the story has undoubted dramatic values, and with the exception of a few lapses into exaggerated sob stuff these are well presented.

The fans of westerns will see plenty of hard riding, a thrilling fist fight and tempting views of cowboys slaking their thirst after dust-raising dashes across the plains, but these scenes familiar to a western are, after all, only incidental to the plot, not being featured. This shows how fate intervenes to ruin the life of one girl—she commits suicide—and nearly drives another girl to a like end. The picture opens with scenes of an entire family weeping, continues with the suicide and then comes the killing of the three desperadoes.

Ben Wilson's work as the hero varies. In some of the scenes he is a dramatic figure; in others he over-acts. A bit more editing and this fault could be largely corrected, as some of the shots are held too long. Ruth Stonehouse satisfies as the heroine, scoring heavily in the saloon scenes when, with her assistance, the hero holds up a mob of desperadoes single-handed. Also, the storm scenes are well done.

Story

Bringing his sister back to the ranch, to be loved and forgiven after she has lived a fast life, the man leaves the wagon for a moment and three desperadoes wrong her. She kills herself and the man follows the desperadoes and kills them. The man flees through a storm from pursuit and finds refuge with a dance hall girl who faces an existence like that of his sister. Together they hold up the man's pursuers at the points of their revolvers, and then escape to begin life anew together.

"Lovers' Lane"

Warner Brothers' Production Is Excellently Titled and Provides Pleasing Entertainment

Reviewed by Tom Waller

There are very few towns which have no strolling ground frequented by amorous couples. Up until a few years ago the enraptured pair actually strolled but now most of them "roll" up to the favorite haunt in some kind of a car and "park." As a tradition and an actuality such trails exist in cities and towns today. Therefore the title "Lovers' Lane," alone, should attract young and old to the box office which is featuring this Warner Brothers production.

The picture is typical of the title. Its locale is in a New England hamlet where the old-timers still predominate and where they are rather loath to relinquish the buggy for the "lizzie." This town's lovers' lane, with its uniquely hewn hickory limbs, stands out, as prominently as a speed limit sign, at the entrance to a delightfully wooded realm. It is in this region that the story realizes its inception and one is given a very accurate glimpse and perspective of the leading characters.

There is very little action in the early footage. In fact if some of the conversation between the young but staid physician and his wealthy but adventurously inclined sweetheart were cut the interest would be more quickly aroused and less time would be taken to get into the meat of the story. As a whole the plot is light, but after the first few hundred feet the picture becomes very entertaining.

When the young doctor is called to witness the marriage of his sweetheart to a stranger by the physician's father, a local minister, a stirring scene takes place. Another witness is needed and a divorcee, housed with her crippled son in the rectory, is called. The marriage is thwarted by her identifying the stranger as her former husband.

Another part of the story which has great appeal and much pathos is where the doctor operates upon the cripple. At first it is believed the youngster is permanently invalided as the result of the operation, but later, in the effort to reach the side of his weeping mother, the child regains the use of his limbs. The reunion of the divorcee and the stranger and the happy understanding arrived at by the physician and his sweetheart, together with the success of the young surgeon over an old practitioner who is adverse to modern methods, bring "Lovers' Lane" to an appropriate and satisfying termination.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Stolen Sweeties"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

William Fox's clever four-footed comedians, Pep, Max and Moritz, are the stars of this two-reel Monkey Comedy. Beginning with a scene at the seashore in which one monkey appears as a lifeguard, one as a girl and the other as her sweetheart, with the exception of a few scenes in which these animals "stand on their own" and perform some intelligent and amusing stunts centering around the attempts of several chaps to peep through a hole in a bathhouse and the efforts of one monkey to chastise the offenders, the entire action shows them as paralleling the experiences of some of their human friends. There is a beach beauty, her sweetheart and a lifeguard also. Events lead up to a double wedding, with the disappointed suitors kidnapping the two prospective brides and chase by the expectant fiances, ending in their getting their girls back. The ability of monkeys to imitate humans is used to advantage and these animals are shown as "aping" practically every move and gesture of their human companions. There are a number of amusing scenes, but this comedy is not as clever nor does it show the monkeys to as good advantage as the majority of this series.—C. S. S.

"Omar Khayyam"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Omar Khayyam, the famous Persian poet of centuries ago, whose "Rubaiyat" is a classic of literature, furnishes the subject for the newest of Universal's Hysterical History comedies. About the only way in which the action is burlesqued is in showing Omar as using a typewriter several hundred years ago. He is of course shown as the apostle of wine, woman and song, but the action, which shows him getting into comedy difficulties because of the verses he writes to order and his going into a harem to rescue a beauty in distress only to find out she has a hubby who thanks him when he succeeds after being thrown out several times, follows the lines of the usual slapstick comedy with an Egyptian or similar setting. There are some amusing moments but it is not as clever as the majority of this series.—C. S. S.

"The Double Cross"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

Billy Sullivan is the hero of this Universal two-reeler which is based on a familiar plot. A crooked lawyer tells the villain that he will inherit a relative's wealth if the hero is married by the next day. In order to accomplish this, the villain secures the aid of stranded circus performers who stage a frame-up and force the hero to marry the girl. It develops, however, that, unable to go through with it, her brother impersonated the minister and the marriage therefore is illegal. The picture has considerable action and there is a certain amount of drama in this situation which will make it acceptable to many patrons. However, as a whole it is hardly up to the standard of the usual Universal two-reel drama.—C. S. S.

"All Wet"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the best of Hal Roach's Charley Chase comedies yet offered by Pathe. It differs from its predecessors in that there is less of the slapstick and more of real reason in its bids for laughs. The gags are clever and well directed. The subject opens with a conventional scene of a boarding house crowd highly excited because Chase has received a telegram. This announces the arrival of a consignment of dogs via express, and our hero sets out in his tin lizzie to get them. The rest of the fun centers around scenes of the auto stuck in the mud. One of the best is where Chase, under water, signals with an uplifted hand for various tools, and the mechanic, sitting idly by on a box, asks for a match and the time, Chase readily obliging. The absurdity of a match remaining dry under water characterizes the humor of the comedy.—S. S.

"Salt of the Earth"

(Fox—Educational—One Reel)

A commodity that everyone uses every day and which is in fact absolutely essential to human life, that is, salt, furnishes the subject of this Fox Educational reel. There are interesting scenes showing how it is mined and also obtained from salt lakes by evaporation, then how it is broken up into sizes for human use, packed, transported, etc., until it reaches the ultimate consumer. —C. "Deaf, Dumb and Daffy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a pippin of a comedy; easily one of the best yet featuring Hal Roach's Spat Family. Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook and Laura Roessing do some great work, getting more laughs out of the situations than we have seen in any recent comedy. The first reel presents a tea at the Spats' home, with, of course, everything going wrong—circumstantial evidence that Mr. Spat has flirted with the maid, a set-to between a cat and a dog, various smashed dishes and headlong falls. The second reel shows the Spats putting up a tent for a lawn fete, the mystery of the disappearance of the "eats" and the final catastrophe when a truck carries off the tent. The humor runs to burlesque. Every bit of the rough-and-tumble work is great. Director Jay A. Howe is to be congratulated.—S. S.

"A Fat Chance"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Walter Hiers Comedy produced by Christie and directed by Scott Sidney depends for its claim to humor upon a fat man's attempts to become thin enough to satisify his "best girl." The initial scenes are of a gymnasium and deal with Walter's rebellion against the uselessness of trying to reduce. You see him in the steam room, boxing and wrestling; then tied to a wall while a near-sighted man practices throwing knives around him. Failing to reduce much Walter adopts corsets, but they disintegrate during a party with disastrous results to all concerned. The girl's rich uncle develops a preference for fat men, and promises that the girl can marry Walter if he is heavier than his own fat son, so Walter's gymnasium work goes for naught. Pig iron and sand in his trousers break the scales and Walter wins the girl. There is some good comedy in this, especially in the csenes of the dance, and it will appeal especially to stout men and their wives. The second in the Hiers series for Educational, it is not quite up to its excellent predecessor, but well worth booking.—S. S.

"The Cannon Ball Express"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Mack Sennett's latest comedy contribution to the Pathe schedule is possibly the best that has come from his studio in some time. The foundation is railroading, with Billy Bevan as baggage master, Sid Smith as train dispatcher, Bud Ross as the railroad president, Andy Clyde as the station master, John J. Richardson as a promoter and Madeline Hurlock as his assistant. The best fun develops after a feud between the railroad president and the promoter, and takes the form of a race between the pathetic train and an auto bus sponsored by the promoter. Of course there is dirty work at the crossroads but the villain gets his. The sight of the feeble train alone is enough to convulse an audience, and the gags worked out around it are wonderfully effective. Del Lord did an excellent bit of directorial work.—S. S.

"Champions"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

In this Grantland Rice "Sportlight" the co-ordination of mind and muscle that makes sports champions is clearly shown. Among the various headliners pictured are Aileen Riggin, Babe Ruth, Vincent Richards, Charley Paddock, Ethel Lackie, Walter Johnson, Sybil Bauer, Johnny Weismuller, Bobby Jones, Agnes Geraghty, William T. Tilden and last year's championship Yale crew. Some slow motion is introduced to clearly portray the technique of the champions.—S. S.

"Go Easy"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are, as usual, the featured players in this Cameo Comedy directed by Albert Ray. It is built on a slight idea and the gags are familiar, yet it may please dyed-in-the-wool slapstick fans, for the action is lively. The young lover tries to take his girl and her whole family out in a Ford sedan but it falls to pieces under the strain. A hired car is smashed by a train. A taxi stops on a wharf and father falls into the water. After he is rescued, the party goes off in a motorboat without the youth, who remains to pay the taxi driver.—S. S.

"League of Nations"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

This is one of the best of Max Fliescher's clever Out of the Inkwell series, showing a vivid imagination and a wealth of skilfulness in delineation. The famous clown peeps through a telescope and thinks he sees an army gathering on Mars to attack the earth. He summons clowns from every nation on earth and they prepare to repulse the enemy. The mobilization is cleverly depicted, with the clowns appearing in real shots of their native land.—S. S.

"Lumber Jacks"

Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Aesop's Film Fable by Cartoonist Paul Terry shows a whole gang of mice and cats engaged in felling trees and transporting them via chutes and a river. The comedy, as heretofore, lies in a series of chases staged by an enraged cat, the facial expressions and gymnastics of the animals being fully up to the Terry standard. In fact, the cartoon will be considered by many as even better than the average run of Terry cartoons.—S. S.

Scene from the Warner Brothers Classic of the Screen, "Age of Innocence."

Pathe Review 48

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The principal feature of this Pathe Review is the third installment of "The History of Fashions." It has to do with the styles in dress popular between the years of 1840 and 1900, with a few views of current fashions. "Ebony Lumberjacks" show how hardwood is harvested with primitive implements in Madagascar, and there also is a Pathecolor presentation of the picturesque city of Phoenix, Arizona. The views of old-time styles in women's clothes are particularly interesting.—S. S.

"A Kick for Cinderella"

(F. B. O. Series—Two Reels)

In the latest offering in F. B. O. "Go-Getters" series, there is more of the comedy element and not quite so much of the action-thrill-melodrama angle as in the previous episodes. The comedy centres around an attempt on the part of Kit Guard and Al Cooke to pose as tennis champs when they know nothing about the game. There are a lot of good laughs in this. The subject ends with Alberta Vaughan being accused of stealing money but her innocence is proved. There is also a good prize-fight scene between George O'Hara and Stanley Taylor. This variety of action makes it an attractive offering that should please the spectators.—C. S. S.

Herbert Woodbridge.....Craufurd Kent
Dr. Stone.....George Periolat
Mrs. Woodbridge.....Frances Dale
Rev. Singleton.....Norval McGregor

Adapted from the Clyde Fitch play by Dorothy Farnum.
Directed by Phil Rosen.
Length, seven reels.

Story

When Dr. Singleton tells his sweetheart, Mary Larkin, that even though he loves her he will not surrender his practice in their small New England town she becomes peeved and encourages a stranger. Dr. Stone, an old-timer and anti-modern method practitioner, has told a divorcee that her lame child is incurable. Singleton takes them both into his home and is successful in his operation upon the youngster. Mary decides to marry Woodbridge, the stranger, and calls upon Singleton's father, a local minister, to perform the ceremony. Tom is a witness, and when the divorcee is also called it develops that she divorced Woodbridge for non-support. Seeing his child reunites Woodbridge and his former wife, and after that Dr. Singleton has everything his own way.

"The Passing of Wolf MacLean"

Melodramatic Western Full of Action and Sticks to Plot—Lots of of Old-Time Thrills

Reviewed by Tom Waller

A melodramatic western of the old school is "The Passing of Wolf MacLean." It is chock full of action which is kept within the confines of a high-pitched and colorful story. Rough riding, near hanging, shooting and drinking, gambling, card sharps and the dreaded criminal right in the midst of his terrified populace in the garb of a preacher comprise the material of this Russell production.

"The Passing of Wolf MacLean" may not prove such a success with high-brow and sophisticated audiences but it is just the type of picture which many audiences and school boys especially will "eat up."

Because of its good melodramatic touches and its adherence to the boundaries of the plot "The Passing of Wolf MacLean" stands out, from the standpoint of entertainment for the classes mentioned, as a good western.

There is a youngster in it who does some improbably heroic things such as arresting a six-footer, after stealing his firing irons, and then collecting the reward from the sheriff before the man is really identified as the fugitive. But the implausibility of this is lessened when the kid aids his captive to escape.

The climax is of the thrilling kind which should get the children whistling and many of the adults stamping their feet. Just as the six-footer is about to be hanged the minister bares his chest and discloses himself as the deep dyed, hard shooting terrorizer of the countryside. Immediately shot by one of his comrades, he reveals that some of the leading lights of the community have been in league with him. Town politics are clarified by the jailing of these prominent offenders and the six-footer marries the youngster's sister and their father stops drinking and gambling and makes of his little son a partner in a grocery business.

Bert Granger gambles, drinks and runs a saloon in which his two children, Benny and Alice, are the entertainers. The Stranger comes along, stops a drinking bout, gets into a fight and is victorious. After that he and Alice become interested in one another. Bert loses his property to card sharps. Young Benny sees a big reward for the arrest of "Wolf MacLean" and as the stranger tallies with the description he arrests him. The old man reforms and makes Benny a partner in a new grocery business. Benny aids the stranger to escape. The stranger is just about to be hanged by the card sharps when Parson Williams makes known that he is the criminal and that the sharps are his confederates.

PROJECTION

Editorial Error

In the account of my trip West I spoke of a pair of pliers brother Bennewitz uses for removing sprocket taper pins. I wrote from recollection, of course, and Bennewitz was not long telling me that the projectionist who tried to get a pair of pliers like the one illustrated in my crude drawing would be calling me a no-such-a-thing very soon, as there was, so far as he knew, no such animal. He now sends a most excellent drawing of the plier, plus the following:

Dear Friend: * (Stars represent uncomplimentary remarks on my bum drawing, and my bummer description of the tool). The taper pin tool I showed you when you were here is made from a pair of six or seven inch pliers, the jaws of which are not to exceed one quarter of an inch in width. The plier I used was a "Red Devil," the number of which I have been unable to ascertain. Either a "Winchester," No. 2457-7 inch, or a "Kraeuter" 1903-7 inch plyer may be used.

First file the jaws as per A, figure I (Can you file them? Aren't they too hard? I suppose not, as you apparently have done it. I thought such plier jaws were tempered fairly hard.—Ed.) After you have filed them fairly even and true, apply a small amount of grinding compound to the hub of an old intermittent sprocket and grasping it lightly with the plier at point A, grind until you have a good, true, smooth surface. Next drill a ⅛ inch hole in the center of one jaw, as at A A figure I. Drill the hole so it is at right angles to the gripping surface. Lengthwise in this jaw file groove B, figure 2. Groove B should be just deep enough to hold a taper pin in place when laid on the jaw. The purpose of this will be explained further along.

Now place D, Fig. 3, against recess A, Fig. I, so that pin E, Fig. 3, will be in the center of hole A A, Fig. 1. Now clamp it in a vise and bend sides C C, Fig. 3, over the top of the jaw. Next file sides C C, Fig 3, down so they are about 1/32 of an inch thick. This may now be slipped on or off, as the work demands.

And now we come to figure 4, and the purpose of groove B in figure 2. We of course all know that end play in the intermittent sprocket is bad, and not to be tolerated; also when placing a new sprocket on a star or pin cross shaft, it is impossible to turn the sprocket after the pins are properly seated in some instances. By placing a taper pin in groove B and placing the shank of a screwdriver across the pin you can bend it by applying pressure to the pliers. When pins are placed in the sprocket, as per pin F, Fig. 4, and pressed in, they will crowd the sprocket away from the bearing. When placed in at at F F, they will crowd the sprocket toward the bearing.

I have used this tool for the past four years, and find it to be one of the best time and trouble savers that I have in my tool kit.

All of which seems excellent, except that I don't quite understand what is meant by "It is impossible to turn the sprocket after the pins are properly seated in some instances." I should hope it would be. If the sprocket could be turned after the pins were seated, then the pins would certainly be one bum fit. I suppose Benewitz merely has not made his meaning clear, or has made some error in wording.

The tool is a very practical thing, and the pin bending to take up end play looks practical too, provided the pins be set down good and tight, so they won't turn in the hole. Many thanks for the excellent description and drawings. Any competent projectionist should be able to make a tool for himself from Benewitz's description. He has some other things which maybe he will "loosen up on" bye and bye.

Question No. 161—If the exhibitor or manager were to ask you what effect an increase in size in picture would have on emphasizing the defects in the film, such "rain," etc., just what would you say to him?

Question No. 162—Suppose your employer had two theatres, one a wide house but not a deep one; the other a narrow but very deep auditorium—say one fifty feet square and the other twenty-five feet wide by 130 feet to rear row of seats. He asks your advice about screens for the two theatres. Let us hear just what you will say to him.

Question No. 163—Just what is meant by "picture light," as distinguished from other light?

Question No. 164—What is the function of a screen surface and (this is hard) what would you regard as its principal characteristics when viewed from the standpoint of effectiveness? Think over that "effectiveness" awhile before you try to answer the last half of that question.

Question No. 165—Explain why it is impractical to compare screen surfaces and form an intelligent opinion as to their respective merits by looking at screens in different theatres.

As to Schools

Donald L. Anderson, 326 Olive Avenue, Dubois, Pa., asks:

I have been an apprentice in the Carlton Theatre, this city, for the past eight months. Have one of your books on projection, which same is a wonderful help to me.

Would you be good enough to advise me as to whether or not there is a school where they teach projection. If so will you give me its address?

Once more I will say, for the benefit of all, that I know of no school which I could come within a mile of recommending. Sure, there are so-called "schools." They get your money, stuff you with learned-by-heart replies to examination questions, and—that's that. They purport to teach you in from one to three months that which cannot be well learned, even under practical working conditions—theatre work plus study—in a year. These schools are annually turning loose upon the defenseless industry hordes of one-eighth baked (NOT half-baked) projectionists—men who have absolutely no practical experience at all, and very little of anything else.

At least one "school" I know of guaranteed employment as projectionist in a theatre as soon as the course was complete. It made good too, by gum. It had an arrangement, with a small theatre of low class, which worked this way: When a dupe had finished his "course" in the "school" he was immediately "given a job" by the theatre at really good wages. The regular projectionist made his temporary exit and took his ease while Mr. Easy Mark "took charge." He found the projectors all threaded up and ready. Of course he could start them all right, and unless something went radically wrong he could project the first reel. Sometimes he lasted as much as one whole hour before getting fired bodily. Then the school, to which he would return with his tale of woe, merely said: "Well, we did as we agreed. We got you a job. If you could not hold it that was not our fault. Outside! Bingo!!"

Moral: The fool and his money are soon parted.

My advice to you is to study the Bluebook and stick to your apprenticeship until you feel competent to go forth and do battle, then gird up your loins and go to it, BUT keep right on studying.

Bluebook School——Answers 133-137

Gosh! This lot of questions seems to have made about all the old timers nervous. They took to cover, but it did bring a number of answers from men who have not previously sent acceptable replies. Yet this list is a really very important one, from which I had hoped and expected to get some perhaps very informative replies from those who have worked so faithfully on about all the previous questions.

It is probable the nature of the questions caused them to "dig themselves in" temporarily. The questions are, however, of HUGE importance. They were intended and designed to bring home to you the foolishness of making little or no persistent, consistent, prolonged effort to IMPRESS THE EXHIBITOR AND THEATRE MANAGER WITH THE FACT THAT REAL, EXTENSIVE KNOWLEDGE IS NECESSARY TO EFFICIENT WORK IN THE PROJECTION ROOM AND TO THE PROJECTION OF A REALLY HIGH GRADE PICTURE, and that YOU HAVE THAT KNOWLEDGE.

It matters not how much knowledge and high grade skill may be required, or how much of it you may have, if the exhibitor and theatre manager be not impressed with the necessity for that knowledge, and with the fact that you have and are applying it, very naturally it don't count for much of anything IN THE PAY ENVELOPE, or in securing for you the respect of those over you.

Question No. 133—Do you make any real, persistent effort to impress upon your manager the fact that there are real problems involved in projection, and that you have an adequate understanding of them? This question is very long. See page 345, September 27 issue, for the rest of it.

Of the familiar names, only those of Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ont., and A. F. Fell, Collingswood, N. J., show up with answers to this one. However, C. L. Dutton, Mobile, Ala.; Thomas Sinclair, St. Louis, Mo.; W. D. Woods, Los Angeles, Calif., and T. M. Robinson, Butte, Mont., all have creditable answers.

Friend Woods' reply seems to be best, but first I shall print that of Dobson, which says a lot in a few words:

This is a rather peculiar question to answer because there are Projectionists and operators, exactly the same as there are managers and others who call themselves that, but who should prefix the "Manager" with a "Mis."

My personal opinion is that the average theatre manager, and even some mis-managers, are willing to listen to any argument the projectionist cares to advance, always provided he thinks the projectionist KNOWS WHAT HE IS TALKING ABOUT. (Right there, in the last half of that sentence, Brother Dobson hit a g-r-e-a-t B-I-G nail a wallop on its head with a g-r-e-a-t B-I-G spike maul.—Ed.) I have never yet been fired from any position I have held, and that covers nearly nineteen years; also I have never experienced any large amount of trouble in getting any needed supplies.

I make it a habit—some say it is a good one, and some a bad one—of talking to the manager about the whole show, giving him my opinion about things in general. When I am in need of new parts, or supplies of any sort, I go to him and show him why I need these things, explaining, if necessary, the improvement the desired parts or supplies will make, or the damage their lack will work. For instance: When Cinephor condensers first came out I talked with my manager about them. Then, being convinced they were what we needed and that their installation would show real results (If a man has not sufficient confidence in a thing himself to "take a chance" on it, by what right could he advise the manager to do it—not that I would recommend this stunt as any general practice?—Ed.) I bought a set myself, installed it and tried it out. I then showed the manager what an improvement it worked, whereupon he immediately instructed me to instal them on both projectors. (And next time such a thing comes up he will naturally have increased respect for your recommendation.—Ed.)

I believe every man should make it a practice to explain to the boss just WHY things are needed, and show and prove to him that you do know what is best. Once get that latter idea driven home and you won't have so much trouble getting the recognition due the projectionist of real ability, BUT remember this: you can't come on the job five minutes before the show is due to open, squirt some oil on the projector mechanisms in a general sort of way, SLAM a show through them just any old way, slam the reels into their cases, also any old way, toddle home, and expect the manager to regard you as a real, honest-to-grandma PROJECTIONIST!

Read and PONDER that reply.

Friend Woods says (And here is where you get a genuine surprise alrighty right):

I am not a projectionist, but one of the apparently not very well loved Manager class. I've been interested in your Bluebook school, because in my humble opinion it is exactly what the projectionist and the operator (Yes, I agree with you that there are both) needs, and needs rather badly.

It struck me that this question is one upon which an expression from the manager's viewpoint might be both welcome and valuable, so here it is.

I have been occupying managerial positions for fourteen years, both in large and small houses—one a very fine one indeed. Just now I am resting, due to a severe nervous breakdown. I hope to resume work within a month.

Answering the first part of question No. 133, I will say that in all my experience I have never yet had any machine operator make any sort of effort to impress me with the idea that there is ANY problem connected with projection except how much money they can get and how little work is necessary in order to get it. Now mind you that is NOT said nastily at all, but merely as a plain statement of fact. I have never even had a projectionist try to impress me with the fact that real problems calling for accurate knowledge exist in projection. On the other hand I have had both operators and projectionists sneer when I have suggested that they read your department and get a handbook, though not all of them do that, by any means, and I think the number who respect you and the work you are doing is rapidly increasing.

I can honestly say that in most cases when I have sought the advice of the "operator" on screen surfaces, and even upon projection room equipment, he has INVARIABLY impressed me with the idea that he knew next to nothing at all about the theoretical side of such matters, and even the projectionist has not measured up very well with a few shining examples, in such tests.

As a manager, you will readily understand that I am not given to wasting time discussing things with an employee unless I feel that the employee understands them himself. On the other hand, on two occasions I have had real projectionists—men of real ability who took a real interest in their work and tried hard to give real service—and I have found that these men INSISTED in interviewing me with relation to such things as they deemed of importance to their work.

I found that, when I was convinced that they really did understand their business and take a REAL interest in trying to deliver the goods, I thereafter did seek their advice with relation to all projection matters, and their views had lots of weight with me. I only turned down their recommendations when there was some very valid reason for it, and I made it a point to explain to them just what that reason was.

In closing, Mr. Richardson, I want to apologize for thus intruding, and to assure you that, in my opinion, you are absolutely correct in your views that the projectionist CAN get adequate recognition from theatre managers, as a whole, if they go about it in the right way, and that the right way is to put some energy, both mental and physical, into their work, making adequate effort to impress the manager with the fact that there are real problems in projection which have an immediate connection with the box office receipts, and that THEY UNDERSTAND AND ARE ABLE TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH THOSE PROBLEMS.

There, gentlemen! There is the viewpoint of the Manager, or of one manager, anyhow. Read it over and see where you can pick ANY holes in its argument. Friend Woods need offer no apology. Such letters are very welcome indeed to me, and I am sure they will be welcomed by all readers of this department.

Question No. 134—Do you think projection and the projectionist can ever be elevated to a real plane of importance without a consistent, prolonged effort, such as is hinted at in Question No. 133?

All the above, except Woods, replied to this one creditably, also J. K. Albertson, Providence, R. I.

Sinclair says:

Just so long as the men make no effort to compel respect to and for their profession by convincing the exhibitor and theatre manager that it IS in the nature of a profession by reason of real skill and concrete knowledge requirements, AND that THEY, as a body, HAVE that knowledge and skill, how can we expect advancement to a high plane, or to any remuneration beyond what a labor organization is able to FORCE from the exhibitor? The exhibitor as a class, like every one else in this world, respects real skill and ability. Like every one else, while he admits that mere labor (pick and shovel) is very "honorable," still he seriously objects to paying very much for it, nor does he do much raving over its standing in the affairs of men.

In other words, in order to reach a really high plane we, as a whole, must convince the motion picture industry, as a whole, that we are worthy of it, and the best way is to convince the exhibitor and manager by exactly the process outlined in your question No. 133. Once they are convinced, the rest just naturally follows.

Which same is quite some answer.

Question No. 135—Do you see any incongruity in a thirty-to-fifty-dollar-a-week man placed in charge of the reproduction of the work of a many thousand-dollar-a-week "star" on the screen, when just how great a value his or her work will have with audiences depends to a large extent upon the knowledge and skill the projectionist is able to, and does apply to his work?

All named as replying to Question 133 and 134, except Woods and Fell made very good replies to this one.

I have concluded to publish the reply of brother Dutton, who says:

There certainly is incongruity in such a situation, and plenty of it. The thing may be best discussed, it seems to me, by dealing with the facts as they exist today. The idea has, through many years of error, become fixed in the exhibitors' and managers' minds that what it needed in the theatre projection room is merely an ordinary "mechanic" capable of adjusting and acting as attendant to the machines. It was only after Richardson appeared upon the scene that anything beyond that was deemed to be either necessary or desirable. The manager, who himself, usually is merely a business man of greater or less ability, and who himself knows either little or nothing about projection, has the idea that it is up to him to employ a man merely capable of "operating a machine," and himself ordering how projection is to be done. In all too many instances artistry in the projected picture means absolutely nothing in his young life. He has a man who changes the carbons, starts and stops the "machine," and changes the reels, and to him that's that. He really merely intends to employ an attendant to a machine, just as the boss of a machine shop employs a man to feed raw stock into a screw cutting machine. To his mind, just as in the case of the screw cutting machine attendant, the machine does ALL the rest of it, and THAT IS PRECISELY THE IDEA MEN WITH THEIR "BOOTH," "MACHINE" and "OPERATOR" ARE FOSTERING, and the thing Richardson is FIGHTING against, to the extent of his ability. The "Operator" represents the "machine attendant" idea, the Projectionist the other, which is that the machine is merely an incident—an important item, truly, but an item only—and the MAN HIMSELF THE IMPORTANT THING—THE MAN AND HIS SKILL AND KNOWLEDGE.

There certainly IS an incongruity amounting to an absurdity, in placing the art of a high priced director and high priced artists LITERALLY AT THE MERCY OF A MAN WHOSE ABILITY IS MEASURED BY THE SUM NAMED IN QUESTION 135. If you doubt or question this, you have but to look at any high grade production screened by a mere machine operator, and then projected by a real, competent projectionist. In the one case, even allowing for the crime of an unelastic time schedule in both cases, you will find the projectionist putting on a rock steady, brilliant, sparkling reproduction, so far as his equipment and other limitations permit. In the other you will find something very different, and of VERY much less box office value. The sooner theatre managers awake to the possibilities of the projectionist, and to the damage done to box office receipts by placing a few dollars in weekly wage and the privilege of "bossing" a cheap man, who usually has little or no pride in his work, above high grade, ARTISTIC reproduction of the work of high grade artists, the better it will be for all concerned.

Question No. 136—The theatre manager may select some or all of the musical numbers to be played, but he does not dream of telling the musicians how to play them, nor would either he or his organization permit such a thing to be done. Have either you or your organization made the slightest attempt to have projection placed in your hands, instead of tamely permitting a theatre manager, who does not even pretend to have any expert knowledge of projection, to order you how to project the picture?

I think brother Fell is the only one who has made an answer worthy of real consideration this time. He says:

I believe the projectionist should, at every opportunity, try to convince his manager that he, the Projectionist, ought to be made solely responsible for projection, in all that entails, exactly the same as the musician is made responsible for the music. The musician STUDIES music, and lays claim to knowledge—expert knowledge, if you please—of his end of things. If he does not produce, and his goods do not please the public, out he goes, and another is brought in, BUT he is NOT told how to play his music. He is presumed to know that himself, and no theatre manager would have the nerve to instruct him.

The projectionist should be the projectionist, in every sense of the word. If there is a time schedule, then he should be allowed to use his own judgment about fitting the show to it. If his work is not liked by the public, then let him get out, or be put out. But that does not hold when he must do his work at the dictation of a manager whose orders make high grade work impossible. After all, it is the picture the theatre is selling, and the projectionist is the one who must put it on the screen 100 per cent. perfect, or have the box office suffer for what it lacks in that respect.

If the manager wants to run YOUR end of things, then step out and let him do it, becoming responsible for results. Nine times out of ten you will, in a very few moments, hear a squawk for the projectionist, and the bleat will come from Friend Manager.

Don't forget that you are projecting a picture to please the PUBLIC, not a theatre manager.

That last will bear a lot of thinking over before you jump on it, my good friend. Brother Bell speaks TRUTH. Again citing the musician, he seeks to please his PUBLIC. YOU seek to please a theatre manager. There is a basic difference.

Question No. 137—Give us, in a general way, your idea of just what is the best way to secure that recognition from exhibitors which is due for energy, skill and knowledge applied in the projection room.

The replies to this vary considerably, though only Dobson, Fell, Sinclair and Dutton made acceptable replies. Fell wins, I think. He says:

First of all let the projectionist be sure he understands his work, in all its phases. Let him be very careful never to make a statement or a suggestion which he cannot back up, and never start an argument with the manager which he can't finish. If he does, he is licked, and the manager right then and there loses some of his confidence in him. If it happens too often he marks you down as a bluff. Before you tackle Friend Manager, be in position to talk to the point, and convincingly, except of course when you speak of things no one is yet certain about, such as a new lens system, for instance. Even then you should have all the facts that are known about it available.

Next, let the word "cleanliness" be your outstanding motto. Have a clean picture, both M. P. and slide. Have your projection room and its equipment clean, and, last but not least, keep YOURSELF clean. A dirty room, a slovenly man and a "fuzzy" picture speak volumes in condemnation.

Righto! Work? Sure it takes work, BUT remember that "THERE IS NO EXCELLENCE WITHOUT GREAT LABOR," in all this wide world.

He Disagrees

In October 18 issue my good friend Van Powell printed a suggestion for change-over signal. I had been shown it by Van, and myself suggested that he use it. Whether a thing itself be good or bad the printing serves an excellent purpose in that it provokes discussion and brings out the views of various men as to its excellence or lack of it.

And now comes H. Y. Ballou, member local 150 I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., Los Angeles Motion Picture Projectionists, who lands on the idea thusly with a hammer in both fists. He writes Van, sending me a copy of the letter. He says:

I have something on my chest which I just must get rid of, so here goes. Get an October 18 issue and glance up in the northwest corner of page 589, where the sticker change-over signal is described and commended by H. Warren Ribble, Mayfield Theatre, Meyfield, California.

The Universal exchange, in Los Angeles, is using this type of change-over signal and I arise to remark, as emphatically as I may, that it looks like the very His Santanic Majestic on the screen. Have you ever seen one of those stickers? They are only about ¾ of an inch wide by three frames or so long. The beautiful, but dumb inspectors place one of these beauty spots (????) from three to six feet from the end of each reel. It is some sensation to see, and FEEL one of those (scratched out by censor) things go through about every eleven minutes. The Cow Eye, on horseback, is chasing the villian. He is almost up to him and ready to gr-r-r-rab him. The action is intense, and folks on the edge of their seats, then—wham !!!!! One of those (deleted) stickers arrives on the job and —Oh h--l! What's the use!!! They just simply MUST be seen to be thoroughly appreciated.

I am AGAINST any form of change-over signal such as stickers, punch marks, scratches, etc. But if the "Operators" just must mutilate film, then the punch marks are preferable to the three-frame sticker, or any other kind for that matter.

Proper Way

The only proper way is the method used by the projectionist—NOT the mere "I-call-myself-projectionist" who really is merely an operator, but the real projectionist. He makes a written cue sheet, which requires but a few minutes to do. It is the ONLY proper way.

Let us hear more about this sticker business, before it is adopted by other exchanges in other sections. Almost all exchanges in Los Angeles are attaching a blank stock opaque trailer at the end of the action in each reel of film. This I look upon merely as a safety measure. The Projectionist should not and never will allow it to reach the projector aperture, the change over being made as it leaves the magazine, or just before. However, should the projector not pick up speed as soon as it is expected to, then the trailer prevents the white light being flashed on the screen to dazzle the eyes of the audience, or the "End of Reel" trailer to show.

Where a man has up-to-date equipment he can open the upper magazine door of the working projector and watch for the white trailer to leave the hub of the magazine, when he should change over. This will obviate the need for a cue sheet.

At the end of the note on page 588 Van speaks of "adopting the stickers nationally." I, for one, rise up on my hind legs and say N—O!!

I had no idea that the stickers were any such absurd size as that. Gosh! What I understood it to be was a very small sticker. Like yourself I am against ANYTHING in the form of a change-over signal which will be conspicuous on the screen. Like yourself I hold the written cue sheet to be the thing. Several very good signals in the form of a buzzer ring, or a light lighted at the light-up time, and another at change-over, have been invented, but for some reason they never seem to have got much of anywhere.

I personally see no real objection to the upper magazine having a wire glass center, say six inches in diameter. With such a really practicable window—one in each door, the interior of the magazine could be lighted well enough that the projectionist could watch for the end without opening the door—which is a safe enough proceeding in the hands of some men, but unsafe with others, mainly because by the time they had opened it a few times they would just leave it open all the time—too much work to close and open it, y' know.

Anyhow, I'm against any such absurd sticker as you have described—against it as strongly as you can possibly be.

They Stick

W. R. Gwynn, Projectionist, Longmont, Colo., sends answers to some of the Blue-book School questions, and remarks:

Dear Brother Richardson: It has been five or six years since I have handed in anything to the department. However, my interest in projection has not in the least waned, and I have continually been benefited by your thorough discussion of projection problems.

This is not printed to "brag" or "blow," but merely as illustrating the fact that, as many letters of this sort show, this department is constantly reaching and helping thousands from whom we seldom or never hear. Those who start reading the department usually continue, sometimes, as I have learned, even after they have quit projection for a long while, because, I think, this department tries honestly to give real service. It is not perfect. What is? It commits errors of judgment. Sure! Who does not? But for all that it does what it honestly believes is for the best interests of all concerned, hewing to the line, without regard to where the chips may fall. In other words, whatever its errors may be, it is HONEST.

It Could Be Done

J. C. Shanley, St. Louis, Mo., asks:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am the owner of two small-town theatres near this city. In both I have installed Mazda, with excellent results. In both cases I have a condition which calls for a large diameter projection lens, which compels the use of a very wide shutter master blade. Is there no way in which this could be reduced—the width of the master blade, I mean, without running into travel ghost? I know it seems impossible, but I have noticed through the years I have followed your work that you have found a way around a good many things which we all thought were impossible.

One Way

Yes, there is one way in which the diameter of the projection lens might be made a negligible matter, insofar as has to do with the rotating shutter, and that is by increasing the diameter of the shutter itself.

Since the speed of the edge of the shutter blade determines the time it will take it to travel a certain distance, and since the lens diameter is a fixed quantity, it follows that if you increase the diameter of the shutter and locate the lens at the same distance it now is from its periphery, the time required for the edge of the shutter blade to cut across the light beam is reduced, hence the lens diameter becomes less important.

Suppose you were to do this, carefully remembering that "this" is a perfectly feasible thing to do: Make a shutter blade two feet in diameter, retaining the relative proportions of your present shutters exactly. Be careful to have it perfectly balanced, which may be done by adding solder to the rim at the right points. Have a suitable ball bearing made for it, of a sort which may be bolted to the front projection room wall. Then, by means of suitable gears and shafts, gear it to the present shutter shaft of your projector—again not at an impossible thing to do.

You must, of course, so locate the shutter bearing that the light beam will pass through its openings right close to its periphery. You MUST also have the blade made from sheet aluminum, and have it mounted on a bearing —a ball bearing.

If you will stop and think for a moment, Friend Shanley, you will see that with such a shutter the effect would be about the same as using a lens one inch in diameter with your present shutter. Cost? Sure it will cost something to build it—maybe as much as fifty dollars for the two complete, but after all what is that if you get less flicker tendency and decidedly more screen illumination?

As a matter-of-fact, but for the size of the shutter, and therefore its unwieldyness as a part of the projector itself, I would advocate the making of a large diameter rotating shutter in place of the present ones, whose only recommendation is the ability to "hang it on" the projector itself.

Read and Ponder

The following clipping from a daily paper was sent me by Brother H. Y. Ballou, Member L. U. 150 I. A., who now works in Hollywood, Calif. He sent this note with it:

Dear Friend Richardson: Attached article was printed in this morning's Examiner. I have read it three times. Parts of it contain a world of truth. When you read it, have in mind the projectionist, instead of the woodworker.

This short article fits every mother's son of us who project motion pictures; not only the highest of the high class men, but right down the line to those just breaking into the profession.

Framed

There are parts of it which should be framed and hung in a CONSPICUOUS place in EVERY projection room in this broad continent. It most certainly is a worthwhile article.

With all of which I heartily agree, brother Ballou. The article is titled: "Thoroughness." It is by Bruno Lessing. In reading it, just substitute our profession and its terms for furniture, woods and the terms therein used, so that the first sentence, for instance, reads: "Karl Schmieg projects motion pictures and understands artistry in a screen image. He gloats and purrs with joy over an unusually well photographed production with as keen a delight as the collector of paintings experiences when he comes into possession of a Rembrandt." The BIG points in it are LOVE OF YOUR WORK AND THOROUGHNESS IN ITS DOING. The article reads:

Thoroughness

Karl Schmieg makes furniture and understands woods. He gloats and purrs with joy over a piece of unusually fine wood with as keen delight as a collector of paintings experiences when he comes into possession of a Rembrandt. He knows woods by their Latin names and by their local names and by their trade names. Professors in the forestry departments of colleges and universities consult him.

He has the history of period furniture at his fingers' ends. One of his associates said that Schmieg could tell the difference between a Chippendale and a Sheraton piece blindfolded and without touching them—just by smelling and listening.

And he can make any article of furniture with his own hands from the cutting of the log to the final touch of delicate varnishing. On his next vacation Schmieg is going to South America to visit some of his woods in their homes.

There you have a man who is thorough in his work. It seems to be a rather rare quality these days. Of course there are other men just as thorough as Schmieg in their various lines of effort but compared with the vast army of toilers in all industries, such men are very scarce.

The invention of machinery did much to minimize the human factor in workmanship. The growth of many industries to such huge proportions that workmen were compelled to specialize in some one detail did even more.

There is much slipshod work going on in the world and there are many workers who are more interested in the number of hours they work than they are in mastering all the details of their occupation.

Thoroughness in one's work, however, is a quality worth developing. A man who is ambitious to succeed is foolish if he does not first study all the details and all the ramifications of his present task.

It also improves workmanship. Genius has been described as nothing else than a capacity for taking infinite pains. Alas, very few workers are geniuses!

But, even beyond such reasons for being thorough, there comes a reward in the form of satisfaction that we have done our best and a diversity of interests that we acquire by exploring and snooping along the lines that touch our own, out of which we can often derive real pleasure.

The musician who does not know the history of music, the painter who knows nothing of how paints are made, the farmer who does not study the chemistry of the soil—such people belong to the kingdom of mediocrity. AND THEY USUALLY STAY THERE.

Carbons and Craters

Karl H. Sommermeyer, Projectionist Amuzu Theatre, Marietta, Minn., says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Carlisle Anglemier some while ago asked why his spot diameter diminished as the carbons burn shorter. Griffiths is correct in that the crater moves away from the lens, but I think you are in error when you say the crater itself gets smaller, as my own spot diameter increases when I maintain the correct crater distance.

I have 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C., and use ¾-inch White Flame carbons, employing the jack-knife set recommended by the National Carbon Company. Mine is a one-projector installation, hence I have marked on the wall the correct position for the crater image projected through a pin-hole in the left side of lamphouse. I am therefore able to maintain the correct crater distance, merely by keeping the projected crater image in position.

During the two hours of the first show the spot increases in diameter by about fifty per cent. When I strike the arc again for the second show, the spot is still larger. This would seem to indicate a change in the condition of the carbons. I also noticed that after a carbon has been used a couple of hours it burns away a great deal faster than it did at first.

I installed a Preddy condenser mount inside my lamphouse, and put the converging lens in the place heretofore occupied by the collector, but was obliged to place it with the convex side toward the aperture (I don't get you there a' tall. Explanation yourself. —Ed.). Apparently it does not set up any bad condition, and it would seem to be that inasmuch as the beam of light from the collector is divergent there would be less loss from reflection.

Will some good brother who is using a mirror arc see if the beam therefrom has a ghost zone? I have not been able to learn whether or not the mirror separates the light into its primary colors. I think it does not, in which case there could be no chromatic aberration or ghost zone.

Hanover, in his answer to Bluebook school question No. 59 (August 2 issue), says: "It (E. F.) is equal to half the distance between the front and back combination plus distance from face of back combination to the film." The Bluebook makes no mention of a lens which automatically changes its E. F. with every change in working distance.

Apologies

Apologies. That portion of Brother Hanover's reply is not correct, of course, and I should have noted that fact, but overlooked it. However, the error is mitigated by the fact that he did give other correct explanations of the meaning of E. F.

As to carbons, I don't exactly agree. In the old days when I was projecting motion pictures, I used A. C. a great deal, and found the jack-knife set to be thoroughly unreliable. True, it gave a slightly higher illumination to the collector lens when everything was exactly as it should be, BUT I have yet to find the man who can keep everything exactly as "it should be" when using the jack-knife set. I find the straight D. C. set to be much better, in so far as concerns general results.

A Theory

To come right down to cases, I believe ("believe," I said, mind you) the enlargement or non-enlargement of the crater as carbon consumption progresses would depend to a considerable extent upon conditions. I don't believe there would be any enlargement if the correct size carbon be used. On the contrary, I believe the tendency would be for slight reduction in diameter of crater, hence of the spot. As I see the matter (I am only using my reasoning powers on the matter now), if a carbon too large for the amperage —a carbon not working up to its normal capacity—be used, then at start the large body of relatively cool carbon near the crater, and the relative coolness of the lamphouse interior, would tend to hold the crater diameter to minimum. As everything got well heated up, might it not follow that the action of the current would be to moderately increase the crater diameter? I think so.

On the contrary, if the carbon be working to normal capacity, then as things got hot there would be a sort of super-heating effect, and that might, and I think would tend to slight penciling near the crater rim—reduction of crater diameter, hence spot diameter.

Now, mind you, I am NOT advancing that as known fact, but merely as what seems to me to be reasonable probability. Think it over.

As to the carbons burning faster as consumption progresses—well, I know of no reason why that should be, except that they might be more thoroughly dried out, of course. It is also possible that the action of the current, and the heat set up throughout the entire length of the carbon, acts to eliminate some portion of the carbon composition, though I think that unlikely. The question is one which could only be authoritively answered by the carbon manufacturers' engineering departments. Certainly I could not undertake to do it.

As to your condenser proposition—well, I guess you will have to explain it a bit more clearly. What do you mean, put the collector where the converging lens was; also why did you have to reverse its position? The only effect of such reversal, so far as I know, is a possible slight difference in reflection losses, as you have noted, and a greater amount of spherical aberration.

As to the mirror and chromatic aberration, I understand there is none. Chromatic aberration is the result of prism action, and there can, it seems to me, be none of that in a concave mirror which is very nearly a surface mirror.

By the way, I guess you probably mean you have retarded the whole lamp and condenser, though I don't see how you could do that to that extent, or why it would necessitate a reversal of the converging lens.

Exterior and Interior Views of the Balboa Theatre, San Diego, Cal.

Balboa Theatre Is One of the Finest on the West Coast; $800,000 Is Invested

"FIRST of all, I thought of comfort, I wanted a spacious lobby, and a foyer that wouldn't remind me of a box of sardines, and above all, seats where a person can stretch his legs all he wants to. Then, I thought of beauty and the pleasure that comes from beauty, and I visualized soft, alluring lights that would beckon one in to a fairyland of melody and charm. And after my visualizing, I set out in the hopes of realizing my dreams."

That the dream which Robert E. Hicks, builder of Balboa Theatre, San Diego, Cal., tells about in the foregoing paragraph has been made into substance is mutely evidenced by the tall, dome-topped, buff colored building which occupies the corner of Fourth and E Streets, and which was recently opened.

The new theatre which Hicks has built at a cost of $800,000 takes its place with the finest playhouses of the country. Placing harmony above ostentation, simplicity of design above arrogance of furnishings, it is a gem of theatre construction which will not fail to delight the most fastidious.

The exterior of the structure is of Spanish Mission renaissance architecture; appropriately so, for the playhouse has been named by its owner after the discoverer of the Pacific, and everything about it is suggestive of the beauty of Spain and the history and traditions of early San Diego.

The architecture is simple, rather than ornate, and its black and gold tiled dome is virtually its only embellishment. The structure besides the theatre which occupies a major part, also houses thirty-four offices and six stores.

The spacious lobby of the show house, entered beneath a sheltering marquise, leads into the handsome foyer. Through the foyer the auditorium is entered, and from it, on the right, a sloping corn tile floor paves the way to the balcony and plaisance.

The plaisance is a special feature of the new theatre, designed as a lounging and meeting place for patrons. Davenports and comfortable chairs invite leisure and undisturbed rest; soft music emanates from grills to charm the ear; the decoration of the room was done by the same artists who decorated the famous Theatre Internationale in Mexico City, delights the eye.

The auditorium, spacious, comfortable, beautiful, is an ideal of theatre construction, leather cushioned opera seats, thirty-six inches apart, engage the sloping floor from the rear of the room to the orchestra pit.

The orchestra pit will accommodate seventy-five players. Two doors, one on either side, lead the musicians into club rooms which have been provided for them in the basement.

The dressing rooms for the feature act performers also are in the basement. They will accommodate eighty persons, and more room can be improvised. Other compartments are for electricians, carpenters and stage hands.

The feature of the interior decoration of the Balboa, said to be unique, is the replica of the world famous water falls, created by falling water and the superb lighting effects of the show house. For this, two immense grottoes, twenty-five feet high, have been built into the wall on either side of the proscenium arch. The lights play on the water, which represent cascades, during intermission, providing delightful diversion.

The lighting arrangement for the Balboa is declared among the best in the State, having four colors—red, blue, white and yellow—which will produce any blend desired, and creating scenes of entrancing beauty. Cast upon the ceiling of the auditorium they will reveal a decoration having the appearance of a beautiful Persian rug; on panels of the side walls, rich tapestry. The hues used to decorate the theatre's interior are finely blended and harmonized.

"Music in these days of strenuous endeavor is as essential as food or drink."

Bearing in mind this thought, expressed by an eminent authority on human happiness and longevity, Robert E. Hicks in building San Diego's newest picture theatre gave great consideration to the part music is to play on the Balboa's entertainment program.

As fine a pipe organ as can be found in any theatre in the land, supplemented by echo organs, which was built by the Robert-Morton Organ Co., has been installed by Hicks in the new picture house. As if that were not enough he has engaged the service of professional musicians for a symphony orchestra and has placed over them as their director Robert Gaderer.

Playing the Game By White Principles

By ANNA AIKEN PATTERSON

Editorial from EXHIBITORS HERALD

What Does This "White List" Mean?

There is a man in this industry who has but very little to say and the little that he does utter means just what it says. This man is Mr. Robert H. Cochrane of Universal.

Recently, speaking of Universal's "White List," Mr. Cochrane said to the writer:

"It's on the level. We are really trying to set a new pace for the business by hitting 100 per cent on white pictures, white contracts, white treatment and white everything. It isn't just merely a stunt. We are going through with it and we are pounding home to every man in the Universal organization, particularly our sales force. It's good business but, better still, it's good principle and if it does nothing more than give a slight boost to the general tone of the industry it will have been well worth while."

With respect to "The White List" were included in what was probably a goodly number who thought it simply meant a new list of pictures, a new sales policy in the usual or just an exploitation effort in new dress. Mr. Cochrane's word to presents the proposition in a new different light and it makes it out as something of very real genuine importance to the industry generally and particularly to owners.

White pictures, of course, might mean anything. But we are now satisfied that in this case, at least, it means that Universal is to make a determined and conscientious effort to offer pictures that have not been skimped or cheated in any way.

There is no doubt about what white contracts and white treatment mean. A white contract can only mean a thoroughly fair, legitimate and equitable agreement, without trick clauses, without substitution and without the multitude of other evasions and qualifications that result in keeping the exhibitor in a constant state of fear, suspicion and worry.

We can only congratulate and cheer Universal and Mr. Cochrane on this proposition and we know that our word of applause will be swelled into a huge volume of acclaim by theatre owners who have been looking for—and have a right to expect—"white treatment."

The goodwill of exhibitors toward Universal is a huge asset of that organization.

This new policy, which Mr. Cochrane's word enables us to accept unqualifiedly as meaning business, will tremendously enhance this asset meanwhile giving to exhibitors the security of investment and peace of mind which can only come through "white treatment" by the exchanges with which they are trading.

White Pictures

THERE is more to Universal's White List of pictures than the fact that a good advertising campaign has been put behind it. Louise R. H. Cochrane's statement that it is not merely a stunt. We are going through with it and we are pounding it home to every man in the Universal organization, particularly our sales force. It's good business but, better still, it's good principle and if it does nothing more than give a slight boost to the general tone of the industry it will have been well worth while."

We quote verbatim the Vice President of Universal because no one will mistake his sincerity. He means business.

White pictures clean pictures are good business.

When we interested ourselves in the People's Home Journal we found a magazine that for forty years had carried nothing but "white" stories, as clean as a whistle and because of it had established itself securely in the hearts of several million readers. So we unmuffled that in recasting pictures for this publication we would review only those pictures whose stories coincided with our own fiction policy. Exhibitors not only here but in England, are today asking for the People's Home Journal list of pictures. They are the kind of pictures an exhibitor may advertise as good for the whole family. And most every exhibitor today will subscribe to the words of W. S. Lester who in this week says: "If, have used all sorts of pictures you have ever seen in my theatre, Over the Hill, Home Journal and made money on them. We need more of the same kind."

Clean entertainment pays at the box-office because the whole family will pay to see it. Carl Laemmle is a shrewd observer. When, before sailing for Europe, last Spring he announced his faith in family pictures he knew what he was doing, not merely for his company in this country but to strengthen its strong position abroad.

And this good business for Carl Laemmle is good business for the industry.

The matter of institutional advertising—whereby the industry sets its best face to the public—is being seriously discussed by our business leaders today. We don't know of better institutional advertising—better for the whole industry—than that in which one company, as Universal is doing, declares its business faith in "white pictures" and "white treatment" in its business dealings. That, in our opinion, will do more to convince the public that we mean business, that we are in dead and practical earnest than all the abstract statements that could be put in printers ink.

The best way to indicate high ideals is to suggest them continuously in business announcements. That beats preaching all hollow.

The public knows or ought to know—and if not we ought to tell the public—that whatever pictures we produce must pay. That is the stimulus back of our industrial effort. We are commercially minded, of course. It would sound as insincere as it is idle to claim anything else. So when we announce ethics because ethics pay; when we tell of constructive progress because it puts money in the till, as it surely does, then we are on the way of securing and holding the public confidence.

We take off our hats to white pictures and white picture advertising.

C. J. McGuinness

Editorial from PITTSBURGH MOVING PICTURE BULLETIN

"The White List"

We have seen and heard much the past few weeks about "The White List". An especially good teaser campaign was carried in the trade papers on this subject. Its source was the deepest of secrets, and many, including the writer believed that some producer would soon announce a production known as "The White List." However, "The White List" is no longer a secret. It is not what we and many others supposed it to be. In fact, it is far different. "The White List" is now announced by the Universal Film Exchanges as their newest list of pictures—twenty-one of them. In other words "The White List" is not a picture—it's a policy.

To our mind "The White List" means something. The Universal exchanges which have always been noted for their fair and square dealings with the exhibitors, have had little of the braggadocia about them. They have gone along and made many thousands of exhibitor friends. Now they come out with the direct statement that their "White List" means white pictures, white contracts and white treatment. "The White List" stands for a policy that is revolutionary, and is not only good business, it is good principle as well. Surely the development and realization of the idea should give a good boost to the general tone of the industry.

Carl Laemmle and his Universal exchanges have always been a friend to the exhibitor, and it appears to us that such a project as they choose to call "The White List," should prove worthy of special consideration from theatre owners everywhere.

Our hats are off to Universal.

Who is this Sternberg?

All the industry is asking that question: "Who is this Sternberg?"

In this issue of Moving Picture World is told, for the first time, the real inside story of the making of a motion picture that overnight brought a thirty-year-old unknown to the heights as Mary Pickford's next director.

It's the most thrilling success story that this industry has known since the days of the pioneers. Turn to Page 496 if you yourself want INSPIRATION and renewed life to your COURAGE.

Of course, the story is told in the paper that is FIRST IN THE FIELD.

"Silk Stocking Sal"

SHE'S coming soon in a thrilling melodramatic underworld female crook picture that will make your patrons gasp with surprise. Hurricane action—dramatic situations, adventure brought to its zenith. And what a box office title —"SILK STOCKING SAL"—to be backed by a whale of campaign of exploitation of the sensational result-getting F. B. O. type that every exhibitor in the land knows about. Watch for "SILK STOCKING SAL." . . . Leave an open date. . . . Here's a box office crasher if there ever was one.

A GREAT LOVE MELODRAMA!

Two shall be born the whole wide world apart
And there o'er unknown seas, to unknown lands,
Shall cross, escaping wreck, defying death;
And bend each wandering step to this one end—
That some day, out of darkness, they shall meet,
And read life's meaning in each other's eyes.

What's wrong with Press Sheets—if anything?

Sol and Irving Lesser set out to find out. They got a list of three hundred and fifteen of the most important exhibitors and advertising managers in the country from the Will Hays office. They sent them a questionnaire that asked direct, point-blank questions; the replies call a spade a spade.

Moving Picture World has arranged for exclusive publication of a series of articles disclosing the results of the survey. The articles name names and state facts. If your business is motion pictures you won't miss a word of the series starting on Page 498 of this issue.

The grim, dark shadow= Mid-west Theaters!

Midwest Theaters—rumors and rumbles—What does it all mean?

The Editor of Moving Picture World journeyed to Chicago to get the story of Midwest Theaters from the men on the ground. He got the bitter words and dark forebodings of those who see in Midwest a potential octopus; and he got the frank views of the men who are directing Midwest.

It's a film story— for film men. You'll find it on Page 501.

And naturally, it appears in the paper that is FIRST IN THE FIELD.

Whether you are planning on chicken, turkey, goose, or duck, by all means include "Dark Swan" on your Thanksgiving menu!

It is a feast indeed, to be had at The Piccadilly Theatre!

I enjoyed this picture from beginning to end. It is made up of the never-ending interest — a pretty girl, a homely girl, and an eligible man!

Warner Brothers have gathered together an all-star cast to portray this picture, which is made after Ernest Pascal's "best seller" of that name. Marie Prevost is the pretty, irresistible, selfish girl; Helene Chadwick is her plain, sensible, sincere foster-sister. Monte Blue is the likeable rich man. Lilyan Tashman appears as the frivolous friend who asks Cornelia to come to her apartment and lend dignity and respectability to the place when the uncle of her beau comes to meet her.

It is in that way that Cornelia meets the interesting Mr. Dike. They fall in love. Everything is going along fine with their romance until, in a cafe, he admires a pretty girl dancing by. The pretty girl happens to be Eve, Cornelia's foster-sister. She says nothing and they leave before Eve sees them. Not long after Mr. Dike calls on Cornelia and meets Eve. Eve doesn't tell him Cornelia is downstairs in the antique shop. He leaves without seeing her, and much impressed with Eve!

Cornelia does not see him again. She accidentally discovers that Eve is seeing him! In fact Eve has vamped him away from Cornelia! Cornelia is heart-broken and tells Mrs. Quinn, her foster-mother, that Eve "cannot have him!" The phone rings and Mrs. Foster gleefully announces that Eve has just married Mr Dike!

Dike provides Eve with every luxury, but she goes on in her same ruthless way. She vamps Wilfred Meadows, a lounge lizzard, away from the rich Mary Robinson, played by another screen star—Mary MacLaren.

Eve deceives her husband, until at last he discovers her duplicity by finding pawn tickets in her purse signed by this male parasite. Things happen then.

I throughly enjoyed "The Dark Swan."

The Piccadilly has arranged a delightful Thanksgiving program besides!

NEW YORK GRAPHIC

"The Dark Swan," this week's feature at the Piccadilly Theater, is a box office attraction, which is recommendation in itself. It is a modern story of two sisters and comes pretty near proving that "skin deep" is deep enough for beauty to be. The production boasts some lavish sets, beautifully gowned women and peppy party scenes besides a lot of heart interest—complete ingredients for the successful cinema.

As revealed at the Piccadilly this week, the feature is an engrossing and often moving narrative of two foster sisters, one beautiful and admired, the other ugly and loveless. When, at last, the ugly duckling's modesty and good breeding win for her the love of a good man, the half sister steals him.

Though they both live under the same roof, Eve Quinn (played by Marie Prevost) and Cornelia (Helene Chadwick) go different ways. Eve is frivolous, gay to the danger point and perhaps beyond (movies can't even hint at what authors boldly state); Cornelia is sedate, old-fashioned, like the antiques she sells in the Fontanelle store.

Although she doesn't approve of all Eve's trends, Cornelia is loyal and helps her half sister at every opportunity. For which kindness she is repaid with rue and bitter herbs.

Finally, more or less for spite, Eve marries Lewis Dike (played by Monte Blue). But she continues to go on gay parties with social morons. Dike finally discovers how shallow his wife is and after a hectic scene he leaves Eve to try to find Cornelia. Knowledge has come at last, as the title writers might and do say. And Cornelia indicates she will wait for Dike till he is free again.

Not particularly heavy stuff, nor particularly true to life, nor thrilling, nor educational—but the stuff that brings the flappers, young and old, male and female, to the movies. It won't drive them from the box office surely.

The Piccadilly, Broadway's newest movie palace, has in "The Dark Swan" the best picture it has presented since it opened several weeks ago. This is a Warner Bros.' version of Ernest Pascal's best seller of the same title and, as was the case two weeks ago, it has as its featured players Monte Blue and Marie Prevost, with Helene Chadwick as an added starter.

In this picture Miss Prevost and Miss Chadwick give the most convincing performances we have seen in months—the former as the conniving, gold-digging flapper and the latter as the sensible, modest sister. Marie is so convincing when she pulls her wiles on her sister's sweetheart and steals him away that we felt we could have spanked her had she been near. And Miss Chadwick, who is one of the prettiest young women on the screen, forced us while the story was unfolding to believe that she is the plainest thing in the world.

"The Dark Swan" is a well-directed, well-acted film with never a stop from one jazz party to another.

Helene Chadwick is at her best in her role of Cornelia. She manages to look plain without looking ugly which is an achievement for a beauty like Helene. Monte Blue is likable as Lewis Dike.

The rest of the cast is filled with splendid players, Lilyan Tashman as the sweet Sybil, Carl Miller as Tim, Mary McLaren as a society girl who hopes to marry John Patrick—and John does some good stuff himself as the uke-playing, wife-kissing ballroom bounder.

The film was taken from the novel by Ernest Pascal. It and Marie Prevost rate 100 per cent.

"READ IT AND WEEP"—

IF YOU HAVEN'T BOOKED 'EM

A WINNER!!!

Laurence Reid, in Motion Picture News, Says:

'THERE is no mistaking this being one of those "up and at 'em" westerns. Really there is something doing every minute. The target which the director has aimed at is speed—and from the moment that the cowboy is introduced cleaning out a restaurant in the opening scene to the conclusion when he takes the girl in his arms and calls it a day, the spectator is treated to a fast and exciting line of action.

Like most other westerns it uncovers several gaps—and if one wanted to dissect the plot and hunt for logic it wouldn't afford much trouble to find flaws. But who is hunting for logic in a picture which capitalizes rip-roaring action? Who is hunting for flaws in a film which brings out the best of western exploits—such as skillful horsemanship and quick work with trigger fingers? "$50,000 Reward" will surely please the action lovers. They will also see a new cowboy "find" in the personality of Ken Maynard, who needn't take a back seat for any star of westerns. He certainly lives up to the war cry of the West—"Ride 'Em Cowboy."

The action is enlivened with snappy incident. There are several escapes and pursuits on horseback, and a genuine thrill is featured as the hero rescues the girl from a runaway team. It is a picture of physical action and its speed and incident and good atmosphere are certain to appeal to lovers of lively westerns. A group of Hollywood bathing beauties decorate the cast.

The Buyer's Year

"I WISH I were an exhibitor this year," said an exchange manager to us in Cincinnati. "If an exhibitor isn't making money this year—then he never has, and never will."

Before we left Cincinnati another manager said the same thought to us in slightly different words.

Another manager in Indianapolis, once a theatre owner himself, had expressed the thought with emphatic feeling. In Chicago we had heard it, and in Detroit.

This is certainly "the buyer's year."

At least, if you listen to the exchange managers.

And, while one never expects the exhibitor to glow with outward cheer over conditions, there is a certain smiling satisfaction about the theatre men when you discuss buying conditions with them.

This is "the buyer's year."

SOME five to six hundred pictures are available to the average exhibitor in most territories. Striking an average, there are a greater number of those pictures ranking "fair" or "better" in entertainment value than is usually the case.

If a particular exhibitor's opposition has the call on Famous, First National, and Metro-Goldwyn, he still has some three hundred pictures from which to pick.

What is the result?

Said one Detroit city exhibitor: "I don't think there is a night that there aren't five or six salesmen around to my theatre. They are falling all over each other. One hundred and fifty theatres in the city of Detroit, and if you kept an accurate record, I'll bet your chart would show a half dozen salesmen calling on each one every night. They miss some nights—but they make up for it, and the average holds."

Said another exhibitor: "I was up in Grand Rapids last week. A handful of theatres—and there were fifteen salesmen, special representatives, and managers in the town."

It's a buyer's year—but even while exhibitors are telling you how pretty their situation is, you find the more observant of them asking: "Who is paying the terrible sales cost? Who is paying now—and who will pay in the end?"

THERE are too many pictures; too many pictures mean too many salesmen; too many salesmen mean too great a sales cost—and the end of the crossword puzzle is going to mean some bad finger burning.

The man who is selling the biggest block isn't worrying; nor, probably, is the man who is buying it. But with the playing time eaten up, all the rest are left to squabble like hungry dogs over the little that is left.

And, strangely enough, there are exhibitors who are beginning to worry. "What," they are figuring, "will happen if the present situation and present methods result in starving out a few of those now out in the cold? What if that five hundred good pictures is reduced to about three hundred?"

Aye, there is the rub. There are "buyer's years"—and "seller's years."

And when it is all checked up and the balance struck, it is pretty certain that the "seller's year" is going to take more from the theatre man than "the buyer's year" has given him. For even in a "buyer's year" there is the pressure of salesmanship at work on him.

There is material here on which the independent theatre man can base considerable thought. Heavy thought. A "buyer's year" is not all milk and honey. It brings responsibilities. Is he taking full advantage of the "buyer's year" with due thought to the FUTURE—or is he following the line of least resistance, and helping the present "buyer's year" to hasten an unprecedented "seller's year"?

Independents must give a thought to independents—and independence.

The Hamilton National Bank

130 West 42nd Street

The value of "word of mouth" advertising can never be exaggerated or over-stated.

We have just had an experience of our own.

Last week saw the opening of two additional Hamilton National offices, latest step in its remarkable growth.

And "word of mouth" advertising must have preceded Hamilton National. For the first day of the new offices saw the opening of a number of accounts that banking authorities say is remarkable.

The welcome given these new offices exceeded our expectations.

Just as the welcome that we will extend to any motion picture theater owner who can avail himself of the convenient location of these new offices will undoubtedly far surpass his experience in banking.

There is the 170th Street Office—at 96-98 East 170th Street. And the Queens Village Office—at 215-33 Jamaica Avenue.

Step in, say "Hello," and get acquainted with the type of service that has made Hamilton National so favorably known to the important motion picture factors.

Speaking Freely

The best way to handle a street rumor is to print it and then catch the denial on the rebound. If they give us time to get all the Balaban and Katz rumors into the cold light of print we will probably clear the air. Tom Saxe, of Milwaukee, greeted us Monday morning with a telegram, denying that he was in any way associated with other organizations in booking agreements. Tom leaves no doubt and needs no qualifying phrase. "I wish to make denial," he wires, "of the report that I have joined or made affiliation with any organization with reference to any booking combination or otherwise." Then Tuesday finds Danny coming forth with similar denials from the Lieber office and from Balaban. So there you are.

All of which probably won't make much difference in Chicago conversation. Each day has to bring its new B. & K. rumor, the next day it reaches Detroit, a week later it comes drifting into New York.

It would seem that with Sam Katz in Europe the rumor market would be rather dull. Not so. Someone is still on the job, starting a new whisper every day. There's a lot of smoke, so much so that it doesn't seem entirely accidental. Someone, somewhere, is supplying the matches.

Oh, well, there are more pleasant subjects. For example, the figures that Frank Brunner and R. L. McCurdy hung up at the Woods on "The Thief of Bagdad." Decidedly pleasant. This boy McCurdy knows Chicago, Chicago's newspaper folks, and the appeal to which Chicago patrons will respond.

There's prosperity in the air in Chicago, if you do no more than add up the dollars and cents of new theater building. The way humanity is packed into each square foot of the Loop half the folks have to fall into picture theaters as a means of escape from the crush. Up in Detroit the air is different. There is real fear that the Motor City will be overseated downtown when the new Kunsky and Katz houses are completed. And if Warners go through with their house—there are Detroiters who will tell you they saw the signed option "only yesterday"—then it certainly looks like a real downtown battle.

But George Trendle is holding all the aces in the deck. If the outlook promises over-seating, it is the other fellow who has to worry now. If the results prove over-seating — George can turn to the Real Estate Department and not only get relief—but also get some very juicy profits.

Outsiders in Detroit seem to think that the Adams would be the first to go on the block, by turning it over to the Shuberts, probably. But it may be stated more authoritatively that the Madison—a prize location if ever there was one—offers more tempting real estate prospects.

Besides, the Adams is hitting wonderfully as the long run house, and it would be a shame to tamper with such golden success.

Gave Indianapolis a hop, skip, and a jump once-over. Couldn't find enough enthusiasm to prompt a longer stay, nor enough gloom to tempt investigation. After the sizzling Detroit atmosphere, and the rush and hustle of Chicago, Indianapolis comes as a peaceful chapter.

No booking agreements to worry about, though forces formerly identified with the Indiana exhibitors league are understood to be promoting one—with non-commital reports on progress.

"They don't need agreements nowadays," said one manager. "The way exhibitors get together, talk prices over, and exchange all varieties of information they get the results without the agreements."

And that's a story you will hear almost everywhere. Terribly bad habit these exhibitors are getting into, that of "talking it over."

As usual, Paramount seems to have got the early season jump in Indiana. And as usual, a few other wise ones high-pressured their way through too, by giving more thought to playing time than to "policies." And again as usual, one or two have been badly burnt. The field story being that home offices held too rigidly to "policies" until it was too late—and the time was gone.

Suggested for an editorial in almost every city you visit: Why don't home offices put more confidence in their managers who are on the ground? And if they haven't got men in whom they can put confidence why don't they fire them and get the right men? It isn't the managers who suggest this to you oftenest, either. It is the more prominent exhibitor. The men who say to you, "Isn't it only logical that I am going to give more respect and confidence to the manager whose home office backs him with real authority? Isn't it certain that my attitude is going to be different and my methods different with the man who is only allowed to act as a messenger boy between my office and New York?"

Found one chap in Indianapolis feeling pretty well satisfied and confident. William Esch, Universal manager, is sitting rather pretty on the first half-season product, and already had "White List" contracts on his desk. We saw them.

Said one thing that we heard in various ways in many cities. "Universal is collecting on good will that has been years in growing. It makes a fellow feel pretty happy to go out and sell an organization that gets the friendly, human, reaction from exhibitors that Universal is getting."

There IS good will in this business. Universal is demonstrating it, for one. And Vitagraph, also, is collecting good will dividends these days.

Exhibitor good will doesn't pay many dividends when your product is light; there's no sentiment in the box-office. But when you step out with a "Captain Blood" you get all that is coming to you, and "just a little more" on the break, when good will is there.

Gosh, that reminds us. We've passed Chicago without mentioning a fine hour with a dandy pair of regulars, J. M. Duncan, District Manager for Vitagraph, and Chicago Manager, John A. Steenson.

They couldn't have staged the visit better if they had tried. All the time we were in the office the phone was ringing with exhibitor calls about "Captain Blood" dates.

Something of interest: Both Detroit and Cincinnati have tightly controlled first-run situations, Libson even more strongly than Kunsky. And in both cities we find even managers who are unable to place many pictures with those organizations anxious to say good words about their methods and fair-dealing. In both cases the exhibitor is czar. You might expect almost any sort of harsh report. And you get the opposite. George Trendle has a mountain of good will. Libson is called fair— in a situation where his word is law. You do find managers who complain that Lisbon doesn't exploit or advertise enough. He doesn't think he needs to—people have no other theatres to go to. The managers think he'd get more folks to leave the fireside, and they KNOW he'd add greatly to the value of the pictures following the first run.

Von Sternberg!

Who Is He?

By Sumner Smith

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Here, for the first time, is told the real inside story of the making of a motion picture that, overnight, brought a thirty-year-old unknown from obscurity to the limelight as Mary Pickford's next director. There have been hints and rumors to the point where all the industry is asking, "Who is this Von Sternberg?" Here on this page is his photo, and below the answer.

IT may have been because they are really great artists, or because they were acting their own life story before the grinding camera and the struggle of the characters toward happiness seemed very real. Whatever the reason, Hollywood just now is in a furore over "The Salvation Hunters," a six-reel picture made by a practically unknown director and a cast half of which was composed of extra players. It has aroused almost unprecedented enthusiasm. Charlie Chaplin says that it is the finest picture he has ever seen. Mary Pickford has signed Josef von Sternberg, its director, to direct her next production. George K. Arthur, Georgia Hale and Olaf Hytten, extras to whom fame was only a dream, are sitting on top of the world. And the cost of this remarkable picture, produced on a shoe-string, was not much over $5,000.

Personally, the writer considers it an imposition to introduce a moral into most stories of great successes. But in this instance the moral is so striking that it can't be dodged. It is this: that dreams sometimes do become realities, that hope deferred stores up energy for the time when opportunity smiles.

Remember, the people who made this $5,000 masterpiece were unknown to the industry, had suffered bitter disappointments and were without money.

For the purposes of this narrative the story begins a few months ago with the actual production of the picture; really it begins on that day long ago when the first motion picture extra wondered where to find the next sandwich and cup of black coffee. This isn't the place, however, for a history of the industry and the skeletons of ambitions strewn along its path.

Let's go.

Josef von Sternberg, 30 years old and of Viennese birth, had been doing this and that around the studios at Hollywood, hoping for an assignment to direct a picture. During the early days of the industry he had written and edited photoplays. William A. Brady had told him that he had directorial ability, but young von Sternberg didn't think so at the time, though he knew the technique of motion pictures and held several degrees from the University of Vienna, notably that of doctor of philosophy. This last summer in Hollywood he was certain he could direct but no one shared his belief in himself.

A youth, George K. Arthur by name, came to him one day with a story he had written and suggested that von Sternberg and he might join forces in raising money and producing it. Von Sternberg did not like the script but he did like the boy. Together they went over to San Pedro Harbor. As they watched a mud dredger at work and visualized the dreary existence of the laborers, the story of "The Salvation Hunters" began to form in von Sternberg's mind. There was the atmosphere—mud—and a theme—that all of us, of high or low estate, are striving for happiness, and that though we may be humble we have our chance to win it.

Von Sternberg took Arthur by the collar and shook him.

"Can you raise any money?" he asked.

"Sure," said Arthur with all the optimism of youth.

It was far easier said than done, though the youth is credited with possessing real financial genius. Arthur went about his job systematically. The goal was approximately $5,000. He divided this into sixteen shares of stock at $281 each, or a total of $4,496. Then he spent weeks trying to make a sale. Finally the boy's earnestness impressed Robert McIntyre, casting director for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and he decided to take a chance, buying one share.

On the strength of that little success Sternberg and Arthur began looking around for players and a cameraman. They convinced pretty Georgia Hale, an extra, it was worth while taking a chance with them without salary. Olaf Hytten was similarly persuaded. Everybody concentrated on raising the money. It came in driblets, $10 here, $50 there. Baby Bruce Guerin, Otto Matiesen and Nelly Bly Baker, who are recognized players, joined in the crusade without salary.

At last they were ready to begin production. A studio was leased for five days, old sets were borrowed and redressed with painstaking care and their bank account was minus $76. The rest of the money they then had went to the cameraman and for 400 feet of film and incidental expenses. They happily began work and were satisfied with their efforts.

But von Sternberg decided that at least one outstanding artist was needed to give the picture prestige. Again Arthur went on a still hunt for money and came back with $100. An effort was made to persuade Stuart

The Inside Story of a True Success Romance

Holmes to take pot luck with them but he insisted on spot cash. So they paid him the $100 for a day's work and, the story goes, "worked him to death."

About this time luck began breaking against them. Von Sternberg developed neuritis but carried on. They had to have $500 immediately.

"I'll try Soandso, the banker," Arthur said, and though he was weary from sixteen hours on location, he went to the banker's home and awaited his return. The banker was late in arriving and Arthur fell asleep in his chair, to be roughly awakened by the very man he hoped to impress.

"You've been drinking, young man," the financier said as a preface to a long lecture on the evils of alcohol. Arthur failed to convince him that he was not drunk but near the point of exhaustion. The interview terminated abruptly and the youth left without the sorely needed money.

That was a big disappointment. It hurt the morale of the little group. But a few days later Arthur joyously 'phoned von Sternberg.

"I've got the five hundred," he shouted.

They went to work again, buying another 400 feet of film and finishing the picture. Von Sternberg cut and titled it, and a friend ran it off in a projection room. It looked mighty good to them.

Von Sternberg went to the Writers' Club.

"I've got a really good picture," he said. "Won't you let me show it to you?"

"Nothing doing," they said.

"Just one reel," von Sternberg begged.

They told him they could not be bothered.

Von Sternberg and Arthur then determined to aim high. For weeks they concentrated on reaching Chaplin and Fairbanks and Mary Pickford. At last, through a friend of Chaplin, they got the great comedian's consent to see the first reel.

They were "extras." Would you believe it?

They were shaking in their shoes.

"Show me the rest of it," Chaplin said; then, when the 6,000 feet had been run off, "It is the finest picture I have seen, a marvel of composition and rhythm. Every scene has the authority of genius."

Von Sternberg had known it was good but the others weren't so sure. He merely looked the happiness he felt; they went into hysterics of joy.

Chaplin got Doug and Mary on the 'phone and they came over. "The Salvation Hunters" was run off again. Mary said, "Von Sternberg is far ahead of anyone directing pictures." Doug had a lot to say about simplicity, subtlety, dramatic sweep, optimism and punch and "a plastic art which no one has hitherto brought to the film."

Then Doug said, "How much do you want for it?"

Well, to make a long story short, Doug Fairbanks and Joseph M. Schenck each bought a quarter interest in "The Salvation Hunters," paying a very considerable sum of money, for von Sternberg knows enough psychology to be a good bargainer and young Arthur knows finances. The other half interest is split among the players, Bob McIntyre of Metro and the gamblers who risked their ten and twenty dollar bills in response to Arthur's persuasions.

Mary promptly engaged von Sternberg to write the story for her next picture and direct it, which is about the best evidence possible of what she thought of "The Salvation Hunters," and the players began the pleasing pastime of wondering which producer's contract to sign. The releasing arrangements haven't been announced yet, but it is considered probable that United Artists will be the company.

What's Wrong with Press Sheets? —if anything

By Tom Waller

FIRST NATIONAL and Famous Players-Lasky consistently get out the best press sheets of all producers in the industry. This is the verdict of 54 leading exhibitors in the United States, who answered questionaires on the subject sent to all sections of the country by Principal Pictures Corporation.

The mailing list was secured from Will Hays who heartily sanctioned the movement by Principal to determine from the man for whom the press sheet is written its present status as a sales medium, its good and poor qualities and some suggestion as to how it may be improved.

Of the 54 theatre owners who answered the questions compiled by James Loughborough, well known former newspaperman and Principal's publicity and advertising director, several named two and three companies in answer to the second question: "What company do you believe consistently publishes the most useful press sheets?"

This brings the total number of votes on that proposition up to 74, of which Paramount and First National both received 23; Metro-Goldwyn, 6; Warner Brothers, 4; United Artists, 4; Universal and Principal, 3 each; Goldwyn and F. B. O., 2 each; Associated Exhibitors, Vitagraph, Fox, Producers Distributing Corporation and Pathe 1 each.

This movement had its inception a month ago when Loughborough received what he considered a "very sarcastic letter" from a publicity representative for a Connecticut theatre. He wrote this man requesting more information on what was wrong. The reply was to the effect that this writer was not singling Principal's press sheets with which to find fault but was registering a condemnation of the dope programs gotten out by producers of the industry in general.

Stories of too great a length and with too fantastic a background—in other words hokum that will not get by the city editor of any sizable daily or even the editor of a small town weekly, was this writer's chief complaint.

At the following meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers Loughborough read this letter and immediately thereafter compiled the questionaire.

JIM LOUGHBOROUGH, of Principal Pictures, sent a questionaire on Press Sheets to three hundred and fifteen of the livest managers and theatre advertising men in the country. The quiz asked point blank questions—and the replies call a spade a spade. Moving Picture World has secured exclusive right to publication of a series of articles analyzing the returns.

Sol and Irving Lesser, president and vice-president, respectively, of Principal Pictures Corporation are responsible for this data on exhibitor opinions relative to the press sheet situation.

The consensus of exhibitor opinion, judging from these replies, calls for shorter readers in press sheets; matter which does not have to be re-written in order "get by" the city desk of a newspaper and material conforming with newspaper style, not overflowing with superlatives. The summary of these answers also witnesses a demand by the exhibitor for the elimination of "greatest yet" reviews and stories of preposterous origin and exaggerated originality of an over worked mind. The cry, judging from this summation, is for press sheets to be gotten out by a writer of sufficient newspaper experience who will be governed by that experience in his new work.

From the answers at hand, these 54 theatre owners, representative of exhibitors throughout the greater expanse of the United States, are all of the opinion that press sheets in general could be greatly improved. As shown by their reports on the first two interrogations in the questionaire the greater majority are divided into two classes. One characterizes many of the present press sheets as "good" and "fair," while the other side, equally as strong, heralds such percentage as "terrible" and "bum."

The quiz sheet led off with the interrogation: "What do you think of press sheets in general as now issued?" This was immediately followed by the question as to what company in the opinion of the writer consistently issued the best press sheets, and why. These questions in their respective order were answered as follows:

E. Beatty, Butterfield Circuit in Michigan: "Very good. Associated First National Pictures, because they not only display the stuff in their press sheet but also send it to the exchanges. Their advertising layouts have the kick and their mat service is almost perfect."

Charles M. Pincus, Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.: "They are useless. None, because they all try to copy one another's style. Paramount has possibly the poorest press sheet. Every sheet tries to sell the picture to the exhibitor from F. P.-L. Kent's sales talks are funny."

H. J. Campbell, Majestic Theatre, Hartford, Conn.: "While they may have shortcomings they are of great value. Press books issued by Metro-Goldwyn cover the field very well and they contain about everything the average exhibitor needs as to stories, etc., ads., exploitation suggestions; these suggestions are by no means practical in many instances but they make one think."

Eller Metzger of the Strand and Willard, Creston, Iowa: "Some are pretty much O. K. —others worthless. First National—but there is room for some improvement in their's too. They have a good line of display ads.—good readers—usually provide a comprehensible line on the picture — Cover all the points exhibitor requires information on."

Nat L. Royster, Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama: "Not complete. Metro, Associated Exhibitors and Goldwyn because they carry more usable publicity aids."

Reeves Espy, Shouras Brothers Theatres, St. Louis, Mo.: "Paramount and First National, because they have good line drawings and because they are printed on news print paper."

Rialto Theatre, Macon, Georgia: "Paramount and First National O. K. Others terrible."

George E. Guise, Miles Circuit of Detroit Theatres, Detroit, Mich.: "Some good, majority incomplete. Goldwyn press sheets issued on subjects released in 1917 were the best of any gotten out, in my opinion. Get one and check it up. Contained more real news matter than any I have seen."

G. E. Brown, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.: "Some good, some bad, some impossible—generally, fair, however. Paramount, First National, Warner, because they have good cuts, right length stories, diversity, reviews, advance."

Milton D. Crandall, director of advertising and publicity for Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa.: "Can be improved. Associated First National Pictures because their press sheets come closest to fulfilling our requirements."

Harry Spiegel, press representative of the Comerford Amusement Company, Scranton, Pa.: "Very good. Universal, with its separate press sheets besides its large display sheets and introduction. Every sheet is separate and written on one side so that in a small town a man would have one side of press sheet and not look for the other."

Morris Rosenthal, Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn.: "Terrible. First National, because they have a greater variety of stories, ad. layouts, exploitation ideas."

John Hart, Jr., National Theatre, Richmond, Virginia: "Not enough attention given to artistry—stress laid on 'flash.' First National, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn because they have consistently 'usable' stories and always good suggestions for outside tie-ups."

Vic Gauntlett, Blue Mouse Theatres, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland: "Fair, Paramount and Warner, because their stories are more of a newspaper style."

A. F. Dagon, Gaiety, Princess, Vaudette, Springfield, Ill.: "Would be lost without them. Famous Players-Lasky, because they have good advertisements, news and reviews."

R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa: "Good enough. One on 'Mine with Iron Door' is excellent because it 'peps' an exhibitor up to the fact that the picture is pretty liable to be classy also."

H. Barnes, Rialto Theatre, Burlington: "Rotten. Metro-Goldwyn because they have the best exploitation suggestions and much good newspaper copy and reviews for large cities."

H. Lawrence, The Bellevue, Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "A great help. Goldwyn, because the ideas presented feasible and not so dizzy."

Barry Burk, Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas: "Very good but could be improved upon. Paramount, because they have more live stories, good stories about stars and the sheet has better looking ads. in it than others, especially showing white space."

E. W. Berg, D. F. R. Enterprises, Wichita Falls: "Of great help of course but most of them could be improved. First National and Paramount, because they usually contain a variety of matter, ads. are usually good and can be cut to suit large and small space."

Ludy Brown, Manager of Palace and A-Muse-U Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa: "Not so good. First National and F. B. O. Specials because they have more real exploitation ideas. Exploitation should start right in the press books."

Earle F. Dorsey, Loew's Palace and Columbia, Washington, D. C.: "As a rule usually terrible in most departments. Paramount for ads., Metro for stories; unfamiliar with others except for an occasional First National and Vitagraph, and ads in these poor. Paramount employs a real art staff for ads.; this is where an exhibitor can be helped the most."

In the forthcoming articles of this series Tom Waller will take up the specific details of the questionaire—such as the type and size of cuts desired, definite suggestions on catch-lines, advance reviews, etc.

Sayre, Greater Theatres, Seattle, Wash.: "Mostly poor. First National and Paramount."

A. S. Wieder, Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "Poor. First National because it contains enough of everything and has no unnecessary junk."

Harry Castle, Palace Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "Poor. First National and Paramount because they have good pictures of stars."

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "Universal, First National and Paramount because they have better illustrations, more description and catch lines in ads."

L. W. Brophy, Yale Theatre, Muskogee, Oklahoma: "Majority are good. Paramount, because they have something to help sell the picture."

W. H. Youngblood, assistant manager of Majestic and Edisonia Theatres, Johnson City, Tenn.: "Terrible. Paramount, because the story and cast are played up better."

George C. Greenlund, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Washington: "Show lack of knowledge of what is needed by exhibitor. Associated First National, because they are so arranged their art work and layout in the ad. mat that you can exercise your judgment as to copy and the press stories are fair."

F. M. Hamburger, Circle Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "Of great benefit and positively indispensable. Famous Players-Lasky, because they have men who know how."

M. L. Overman, Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill.: "Not so good but getting better. Universal for their Jewels; Famous second; First National, third; Metro the poorest of all national distributors. Universal for Jewel pictures because cuts are workable and press matter is not too exaggerated. They don't claim each picture to be the best yet, although they claim the pictures to be clean and entertaining."

Raymond B. Jones, publicity director for Southern Enterprises, Dallas, Texas: "The most of press sheets now issued are worthless—largely. Paramount publishes a fairly good press sheet, First National, Warner Brothers and others on special accasions. They contain ideas, stories, suitable mats for ads. and other material to put a picture over properly."

Ben T. Hall, Elmira, N. Y.: "First National because they meet demand for various sizes and are varied."

J. Victor Wilson, Robbins Theatrical Enterprise, Inc., Watertown, N. Y.: "Some of them are great help; others absolutely useless. First National, because their stories are concise and they do not, as a rule, fill up space with a lot of material that has nothing to do with the pictures."

William H. Bauch, general press representative of Lytle Theatres: "Some are alright, but as a whole just fair. Famous Players-Lasky, First National and United Artists have the best editorial matter. They have advance stories, reviews and good ad. mats."

D. F. Shea, Tremont Theatre, Boston: "Of mixed value—many lacking usefulness for this territory's needs. Metro-Goldwyn because of their variety of material—less freaky and unexaggerated, better newspaper copy."

David F. Perkins: "Few are adequate. Paramount and First National, because both have reading matter that has to a certain extent 'news' matter that will get by a city editor adverse to 'press' bunk and their ads. have sufficient 'white space' and pertinent selling copy."

W. A. Clark, Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio: "This paper would have to be asbestos to hold my answer. First National and Paramount. Their press sheets do not, as most press sheets do, contain reams upon reams about what face powder the star prefers; whether she approves of mah jong and a hundred other asinine yarns about the star, when it should be something worthwhile."

J. S. Phillips, Rialto Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas: "Too much on star personality and incidents."

D. J. O'Brien, Mirror Theatre, Manchester, N. H.: "Pathe, because stories are short and mats of illustrations are good."

Ralph Thomas Kettering, general representative for Jones, Linick and Schaefer Theatres, Chicago: "Are of great assistance when properly written. United Artists, because articles are short, concise and newsy."

Ed. C. C., Bijou Liberty Theatres, Greenville, South Carolina: "O. K. Vitagraph, Producers Distributing Corporation and Fox Film Corporation."

B. Aronson, Raleigh, North Carolina: "Some are very poor. Metro-Goldwyn, Ideas!

Gathered Along Broadway By W. Stephen Bush

[Editor's Note—It is the purpose of this new department to make a brief record of new ideas in presentation on Broadway. Every new angle in presentation, which seems to meet the approval of the audience will be set down and described. No doubt other showmen in other cities are helping their box offices with original ideas. Every theatre owner is invited to send reports of interesting and successful new ideas to the Moving Picture World, when full credit will, of course, be given.]

THE CAPITOL audience applauded nearly every number, or as the program has it, every "unit" of this week's bill, but it reserved its most generous tribute for unit No. 2, which was called "FAREWELL," a ROBERT E. BRUCE Wilderness Tale. The picture possesses merit, no doubt, but the sustained applause which came at the end was due as much (to say the least) to the remarkable musical score by which it was accompanied. The music caught every shade and subtle variation of the picture and thrilled the audience visibly. It must be remembered, too, that the audience was still new and cold, having only heard the musical introduction. A performance capable of producing such an effect deserves to be recorded here. The length of the reel was slightly beyond that generally allowed to a short subject and without its musical setting no audience would have given it such an enthusiastic reception. The way it was handled there can be no doubt as to its special suitability for a Sunday program in a first-class theatre. The music was taken from the largo from the "OLD WORLD SYMPHONY" by DVORAK, known to Roxie's radio audience as "Going Home." It can, of course, be found in any good musical library. Incidentally, it may be remarked here that the music of this composer in many of his minor works has a fine combination of charm plus power and dignity and lends itself pre-eminently to scenics and educationals of the finer type. Dvorak is entitled to a place of honor in the musical library of first-run houses and is full of rich material for music incidental to presentation in the smaller houses as well.

The other "units" on the program were of even excellence, but there was one angle that deserves special mention. I am speaking of the clever way in which the builder of the program knew how to create atmosphere in little more than a flash for a pretty solo, "AH, MOON OF MY DELIGHT," from "IN A PERSIAN GARDEN."

It was done in this way: The news reel, or CAPITOL MAGAZINE, was brought to a close with an episode from the current PATHE WEEKLY bearing the caption: "Cairo, Egypt" and showing Arabian pilgrims on their way to a religious festival. Arabs are seen leading their camels through the desert and then stopping for a rest. The audience gets a brief but very distinct glimpse of this bit of Eastern atmosphere which fits strikingly into the Persian setting for the solo immediately following.

The effect of the song and the stage setting was enhanced considerably by this preceding flash on the screen.

Resuming my observation of the audience it was clear that Unit 2 quite conquered them and thereafter they were in the applauding view right up to the end of the show.

AT the RIVOLI, Gloria Swanson overshadowed both the picture and the program. The prologue consisted of a spirited Neapolitan scene with appropriate singing and dancing. An easy effect for the introduction of "WAGES OF VIRTUE" is a bit of Neapolitan music with "O SOLE MIO" in the foreground. The picture itself was most cleverly scored with a pleasing variety of music in which room was found for Neapolitan airs. A good deal of French military music, a hit of Broadway with one or two fox-trots and a good infusion of Oriental tunes. The mixture added greatly to the entertainment value of the feature and was obviously enjoyed by the audience. In the scene where Carmelita prepares a meal for Luigi, the strong man and villain, she fishes a huge mass of spaghetti out of a pot which was greeted by the orchestra with the first bars of "OH, MARIE." It brought a good laugh.

A problem that has vexed the students of presentation for many years is the patron who arrives in the middle of the feature. In Europe there are theatres that make it a rule to encourage a patron to wait in the lounging room until the feature starts anew. Such a rule would probably prove impossible of application here. How are we to let the late arrival know what has preceded the time of his entrance. We can flash part 1, etc., on an electric bulletin but that, too, is unsatisfactory. A brief synopsis, divided into chapters and displayed in the lobby has been suggested for Sundays and holidays when there is a rush.

We will be glad to have exhibitors give us the benefits of their views and experience. An adequate solution will be worth many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

AT the STRAND the outstanding novelty, if it may be called that, was the sumptuous prologue to the Valentino picture, "The Sainted Devil." No less than thirty people were employed in its presentation. A Spanish courtyard, Spanish songs and Spanish dancing. The costumes were gorgeous being, in fact, the same as were used in the play.

The big crowds coming to see the picture very much appreciated the prologue, which was greeted with prolonged applause at every performance. One of the features of the prologue was the work of HURTADO'S ROYAL MARIMBA BAND.

LEE A. OCHS of the PICCADILLY has adopted a successful method of insuring a good Sunday matinee. Every Sunday he arranges a high class concert for 12:30 p. m., admission to this concert is eighty-five cents and includes the right to remain for the first performance of the entire Sunday program. Week before last he had an all-Wagner concert, this week an all-BEETHOVEN program. The offering is strongly advertised one week in advance. The result has been highly satisfactory. Not only have the Sunday matinees been exceptionally well attended but a new kind of patronage has been gained for the motion picture entertainment. Attendances at the Sunday matinee have been "building up" and that is the best answer. I understand that the same experiment has been tried in some cities of the West, particularly by Kunsky in Detroit, with the same gratifying results. Here is the Beethoven program which was very much appreciated by the audience:

Midwest Theatres

What Do They Say in Chicago?

By ROBERT E. WELSH

WHEN you sit at a desk in New York it doesn't sound so terribly ominous to say that Balaban and Katz Midwest Theatres, Incorporated, controls from ten to fifteen important picture centers in Illinois.

When you sit at a desk in New York it doesn't even take on the aspects of a tragedy if you add to those fifteen towns the strength of Balaban and Katz, who sit rather pretty in the Chicago situation.

Yes, this is all important, but it doesn't impress you with such gloomy pall that you rush headlong to the nearest undertaker for a Winter outfit of darkest crepe.

But, oh, what a difference when you are standing on South Wabash Avenue, Chicago!

Especially if you are talking to an exchange manager who doesn't send his weekly reports to Famous, First National, or Metro Goldwyn.

What gobs of murky gloom!

"I don't know what it is coming to," said one exchange manager to us in a Film Row office. "If they have fifteen more towns of equal importance in their ranks this time next year there will be hardly any worth while first run money left in the territory."

We think this man was unusually gloomy. But there are others who feel almost as pessimistic. Said the next manager who opened his doors to us:

"There is no way of bucking the Midwest game. If there is a cure for this problem New York will have to supply it. I, for one, am ready to throw up the sponge.

"Midwest goes into an exhibitor's box office and says, 'Let's see what prices you are paying for film.' He shows them a few of my contracts which he has just signed. 'Ye gods!' they shout, 'Why, man, we can save you thousands of dollars in a year on your film rental.'

"Then they go further and they show the exhibitor their own contract prices for towns of the same size on Famous Players and First National pictures that are probably ranked better than the particular ones I sold him. He looks at the figures goggle-eyed. And I don't care how much money he has made on my pictures, how happy he has been for years with his booking, you are not going to get him away from the idea that all he has to do is to become a Midwest man and he automatically saves thousands of dollars a year on film rental. When you say 'saves' the exhibitor is thinking 'makes'—for it looks like clear profit to him.

"The next time I make the town I find that I have to look for my first run in the suburbs. It is my last run too. And there are some dozen towns that might just as well not be on the map as far as the independent exchange managers of Chicago are concerned.

"I often wonder what they think back in New York when they get these reports from the boys just outside the Loop. I guess they just put them down as a new set of Complete Alibis from the Alibi Hounds. But it is about time New York woke up to the fact that there is a rapidly developing problem here which New York will have to meet in the end—so why not now?

"At present the only New Yorkers who don't have to do any worrying are Famous, First National, and, to some extent, though not so completely, Metro-Goldwyn. But suppose B. & K. and Midwest reach such tremendous proportions that they shape up even bigger than some of the present productions leaders? What might happen then?"

You roam down the street in the hopes that the next manager may feel more cheerful. But all he presents is a different angle.

"It isn't a fact that a number of independent firms don't get pictures into Midwest towns," he says. "They do. But they have to take rentals away under the figures secured when dealing with the exhibitor as an individual, and away under the rightful scale for the house. And there is the far-reaching effect. Other exhibitors throughout the territory are hearing about these things, and they are talking it over and by other means bringing rentals down to the lowest point. It certainly is a cloudy outlook for independents."

About this time you are sorry you ever came to Chicago. All the joy has been taken out of life. In addition to the sorrow about Midwest as it stands, there is the fear of what Midwest might be some day. And at any moment you can pick from the air a new Balaban and Katz or Midwest rumor. One man sees gloom in the fact that B. & K. are now casting their eyes over the Chicago suburbs. Just as you found in Detroit that the Kunsky booking proposition has as its main thought the building of suburban strength back of the downtown houses to fortify the general position.

Of course there is another side to the story. In general terms it is also "the other side" to the Kunsky booking group in Detroit. We got it this way from a B. & K. associate:

"Just realize the millions of dollars that Balaban and Katz, or any other big theatre organization, has invested in solid, immovable, physical assets. That is, assets so long as everything is running smoothly. Then give a thought to how quickly those millions of dollars can become a millstone around your neck if everything does not break right.

"Get that set in your mind—now realize how transitory, ephemeral, and shifting is the strength of any of the producing and distributing factors.

"Weigh both those sides—and then will you tell me why on earth any man with millions invested in bricks, mortar, concrete, ironwork, mortgages and bank loans should neglect any move that will give him insurance against the fluctuations of the production and distribution market? Why, he would be foolish. You know this industry—and how quickly the apparently impossible can come to pass. If trouble comes you can fire players and directors—but will you tell me what you are going to do with millions of dollars worth of theatre property with yawning doors?

"The wise big theatre man is looking ahead and setting himself so that no matter who is MAKING THE MOST GOOD PICTURES at any particular year in our history, his theatre strength will have first call for those pictures. If he acquires the strength to demand the BEST that the market offers he never need worry about his sources of supply."

All of which, while it doesn't make it any easier for the boys out in the cold at this minute, sounds very reasonable. But the point untouched is—where will the less favored independent exhibitors be about the time these elder booking groups reach their adult growth? Perhaps that is something for those independents to think over today—as well as for independent producers. If there be a Solomon among our readers who knows the course of conduct to be followed, or the eventual answer, let him come forward.

We can't close this survey without giving another-view on the more favorable side of the Midwest proposition. The words to follow won't change the harsh opinions of the exchange men quoted above—we can tell you that frankly—but they come with frank conviction from the lips of Floyd Brockell, General Manager of Balaban and Katz Midwest Theaters.

"Please get it out of your head," said Floyd, "that the principal purpose of Midwest Theatres is to bring the general rental average down. It would be just as well for exhibitors to get that idea clear, too. The man who wants to come with us simply for the sake of cutting rentals is not the man we want, nor will we take him.

"Balaban and Katz Midwest Theatres are directly interested in all of their houses. It isn't merely a booking proposition. We are aiming to put the strength and resources of a big organization back of each individual house. We can hire specialists in each branch of theatre work, where the individual manager has in the past had to be a jack of all trades. A specialist in advertising, a specialist in presentation, a specialist in projection and physical features of the house, all these are back of the Midwest man.

"Our task is not to make money by attempting to save money beyond reasonable limits, and thus eventually starve quality production. Our job is to MAKE money by SELLING MORE SEATS. Any theatre man who looks on his own problem, or that of Midwest, as merely one of price-bargaining is foolish. The problem of the whole industry is to get more of the public into our theatres. And that, we hope to prove by results, will be the chief aim and benefit of Midwest."

That Second Forty

By ROBERT E. WELSH

THE enthusiastic "Van," who conducts our "Straight From the Shoulder Reports," has a knack of sympathetically accepting exhibitor worries and quite an army of loyal friends who lean on his shoulders. They write to "Van" for confidential advice on all sorts of questions. "Should I put in an organ?" "Do you think I paid too much for this group of pictures?" "Would you advise me to buy the other house out at the price he asks?" and so on.

Here's one of this week's letters to "Van" that must have left him guessing for a reply, because he passed it on to me:

National Theatre
M. W. Larmour, Manager
Graham, Texas

Van,
M. P. World.
Dear Van:

I wonder if it would not be a good idea to ask exhibitors what they think about Paramount's Second Forty. Before we buy is the best time to form an opinion, and the opinion of a group of exhibitors should be better than the opinion of one man.

Personally, I do not believe they will be as good. I know they will not do as much business, for the biggest part of them will be shown during the summer months. There are but two Swansons, and one of them is a costume picture. That hurts. About the best things I can say for them is: There is only one Pola Negri picture in the bunch.

I intend to buy them if I can do so without putting another mortgage on the theatre—but, I do not think they are worth as much to me as the First Forty.

Sincerely yours,
M. W. LARMOUR.

Well, I dunno, Brother Larmour. If we open the gates to a country-wide discussion of the Second Forty, in all fairness we would have to do the same on any other product that was announced by any other company, wouldn't we? If we do that—before you know it we'll have seven thousand exhibitor readers in a merry cross-fire of varied opinions—and you can bet your bottom dollar there'll be some few hundred of those exhibitors in the mix-up more for the purpose of grinding their own axes than to help fellow exhibitors. I don't like to say that—but you can see the possibilities, can't you?

It's a great idea, Brother Larmour, but I'm afraid we'll have to pass it up.

Michigan Exhibitor's Spirited Fight Against Blue Law Fails

FILM salesmen returning to Milwaukee from Ishpeming, Mich., have brought back word of an intense battle to rid that city of the Blue Law which failed, however, when it went to a vote of the people.

The fight for repeal of the Sunday closing law was begun by Ed Butler, theatre man, and shortly the town became a camp divided with the pulpit vigorously opposing modification of the regulations and the press supporting Butler and his defenders.

"Parents, where are your sons and daughters on Sunday night?" was the heading of one of the many posters Butler used in his campaign.

Continuing, the poster read in part:

"Where have your sons and daughters to go in Ishpeming on Sunday nights, if they do not go to church?

"There's nothing to keep them here, so they go to Negaunee or Marquette. What for? Amusement, excitement, recreations of some sort, good or bad. You don't know what danger they are in, but you are worrying.

"They have had enough of the 'dead old town' where they are not allowed the freedom that people enjoy in other towns.

"Help bring back good, wholesome recreation to Ishpeming on Sundays. It is the best investment you can make. It helps cement the ties of love and friendship. Ishpeming is your town. Sunday pictures will keep its citizens at home and bring many visitors. It will stimulate business.

"Don't be selfish. That isn't Christianity."

Other posters pointed out that those opposing the return of Sunday movies were the very ones who would yell the loudest if gasoline stations were closed on the Sabbath thus depriving them of the joys of motoring.

Watt L. Parker Returns

Will Head Warner Bros. Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation Work

Following its announced plan of expanded operation in advertising, publicity and exploitation, Warner Brothers have re-engaged Watt L. Parker, formerly advertising manager for that firm, to direct a unified department that will embrace all three of these important activities.

Mr. Parker has just returned to New York from the South after six weeks of illness, an illness that at first was regarded as serious. It was during that time that his resignation was announced. His recovery, however, was unexpectedly rapid and he has this week taken up his new and more important duties but little short of his normal good health.

Do Movies Lie?

Milwaukee Jury Verdict Would Indicate Affirmative Reply

Do the movies lie? This question was raised in Circuit Court of Milwaukee recently when Francis Powers brought suit against the Electric Company for $75,000, charging that he suffered a broken neck in a street car accident.

Powers, sitting through the week's trial without moving his head, testified that he had to keep his neck rigid as a result of the accident. The Electric Company introduced motion pictures, however, showing Powers in various action poses to prove their point that he was not incapacitated. The pictures, it was testified, were taken after the accident. Powers, according to witnesses for the Electric Company, posed for the pictures after being led to believe that he was starring for a motion picture producing company, whereas in reality they were taken by private detectives.

Ralph Wettstein, industrial movie man, widely known in Milwaukee theatrical circles, gave expert testimony on the case, contending that the pictures were not the result of trick photography as attorneys for Powers sought to show.

The jury, after viewing the film, awarded Powers $10,000, but the Electric Company has indicated it will take the case to a higher court.

Milwaukee Buzzes

Much Speculation Over Talk of $1,000,000 Show House

Milwaukee theatrical circles are buzzing with rumors of a new $1,000,000 showhouse and hotel building.

Who is behind the venture is a mystery, but the reports have it that the theatre will be constructed on Sixth St., between Wells St. and Grand Ave., the downtown boom district of the city.

It is understood that the house will be intended for high-class road shows which has given rise to speculation on the possibility of Sherman Brown, of the Davidson, being connected with it. The Davidson is one of the oldest houses in the city and has been the home of road shows for many years. It is said that Brown's lease there has another year to run.

Brown, however, has been out of the city and efforts to obtain a statement have therefore been futile.

Believes Chaplin Is Greatest Film Actor

Professor Chandler R. Post, fine arts professor at Harvard University, in an address to members of the Harvard Liberal Club characterized Charlie Chaplin as the greatest moving picture actor now living. Lon Chaney ranks second in artistic ability, according to Professor Post, who further stated that only a small percentage of the photoplays produced now really were artistic.

Walsh's Illness Forces Resignation; Hays May Head New York Exhibitors

By TOM WALLER

AN illness which has assumed a most serious aspect has caused Michael J. Walsh to resign his post as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State. Officials of the organization and the state board of directors are holding a special session in Albany on December 3, when Mr. Walsh's successor will be named. Walter Hays, veteran exhibitor and vice-president of the Mark Strand theatres in New York and recently made a member of the directorial board of Ritz Carlton Productions, will in all likelihood be the next president.

Walsh's Brilliant Career

Mr. Walsh was elected to the presidency of the organization at its annual meeting hold in Buffalo last July. At that time, it was said, he was recuperating from a nervous condition from which he had long suffered. He was fully confident he had regained his health upon entering the state office.

The New York theatre owners were jubilant over the fact that he had accepted the ruling post, recognizing in him a man of the highest calibre and experience. He has held many important political jobs. In his home town, Yonkers, he had filled practically every local office of any account before being elected mayor of that city in 1901. After that he entered state politics, in which he served under Governor Smith many years ago as president of the tax commission. At another time he was a deputy state controller.

Yonkers' former mayor came into prominence in the motion picture industry shortly after March 2, 1922, which marked his entrance into exhibitor ranks when he established the Strand Theatre in Yonkers. The following year he founded and was chairman of a corporation which was the outgrowth of a merger of all big picture theatres in Yonkers. This is known as the Terrace City Amusement Company. Much credit is due him for the establishment on such a successful and influential basis of the Westchester County Theatre Owners, which came into notable existence in 1923.

(C) Underwood & Underwood.

Michael J. Walsh, whose meteoric career as a successful exhibitor has been halted for an indefinite time by a serious illness. It was learned this week that his condition has caused Mr. Walsh, an executive of marked ability, to tender his resignation as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York

With the inauguration of Walsh as state president the New York organization underwent a radical change for the better. Up until July last it had functioned as a solid unit, with headquarters—in fact the only quarters—in New York City. Under the new regime the state unit was reorganized on a zone plan, similar to that now used by distributing companies. This change was due largely to the establishing of Film Boards of Trade in the three leading cities of the state. The zone areas were thus assigned to Albany, Buffalo and New York. Each zone had its own board of directors and could function in the main as a separate unit, except that it was responsible to the state and the same full power was vested in the state chief.

Organized Buffalo Zone

Walsh's first official work was to organize the Buffalo zone. He plunged into this work with such a zest that that city's exhibitor department is said by many to have achieved the best system in the state. He was just turning to the task of whipping Albany into similar shape when his old illness returned. A weak heart and a nervous breakdown threaten to keep Walsh an invalid for a long time, according to his close associates.

That Walsh had resigned a month ago was made known this week by Samuel Moross, secretary of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. The general impression had been that Walsh had left that post only temporarily. During the last few weeks Charles O'Reilly, chairman of the T. O. C. C. and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. N. Y., has been acting president of the latter organization. He will preside at the special Albany session at which boards of directors of the three zones, which comprise the state board, will be in attendance.

Subject Broached to Hays

The subject of his becoming chief executive of the state was broached to Walter Hays several weeks ago by O'Reilly and Charles Hayman, state treasurer, it was also stated by Moross. At that time it would seem Hays replied in the negative. The reply, however, will not be official until the December 3 meeting, and it is the belief that by that time Hays may be persuaded into accepting the position. Hays is now considered as one of the exhibitors and executives best qualified to succeed the former Yonkers mayor.

Traveling from New York to Albany to sit in the directorate will be Charles O'Reilly, Rudolph Sanders, John Manheimer, William Brandt. Samuel Moross will go as a substitute for Samuel Berman, who is now in Europe. Sam Suchno, head of the Albany, will be unable to attend since he is now in a New York hospital. It is expected, however, that his board will be in full attendance.

There are some reports that the headquarters of the state unit may be moved with the inauguration of a new chieftain. Moross, however, emphatically declares that the present headquarters in New York City will be maintained. On December 1, however, these offices, now on the seventh floor in the Times Building, will be moved to the headquarters of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce on the ninth floor. On the same date the Albany zone expects to open quarters in the Film Board of Trade Building in the capital.

Moving Picture World's Buffalo correspondent filed the following dispatch on preparations being made in that zone for the December 3 session:

A large delegation of Buffalo exhibitors, headed by Jules H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo Zone; Charlie Hayman of Niagara Falls, state treasurer, and members of the Buffalo board of directors, will journey to Albany on Wednesday, December 3, for the special meeting of the state exhibitors at which a new president will be elected to succeed Michael J. Walsh, who is forced to resign because of ill health and to perfect plans for the organization of the Albany Zone. Exhibitors have also been informed that "abuses in the film industry have crept in to an alarming degree which are detrimental to the exhibitor and these must be checked before they become more menacing and make it impossible to continue in business at a profit." The meeting will begin at 2 o'clock in the TenEyck Hotel. Mr. Michael urges every exhibitor in western New York to make an effort to go with the Buffalo delegation to the meeting.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York are looking forward to Walter Hays succeeding Michael J. Walsh as their chief. Mr. Hays is vice-president of the Mark Strand Theatres in the Empire State. He is a film veteran of established merit. Recently he was made a member of the directorate of Ritz-Carleton Pictures

State Rights Sales

An important contract has just been closed between the Lande Film Distributing Company of Pittsburgh and Independent Pictures Corporation whereby the distributing company will release the Independent special, "Dangerous Pleasure," in Ohio and Kentucky, in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. By the same contract they secure the distribution rights to the eight Desmond-Holmes pictures throughout the state of Ohio. The Columbia Film Company of St. Louis this week completed the terms of a contract with Independent Pictures Corporation whereby they secure the distribution rights in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois for the entire series of eight William Desmond-Helen Holmes society stunt dramas, eight Bill Cody westerns, the second series of eight Franklyn Farnum's and the society special, "Dangerous Pleasure," starring Dorothy Revier, Niles Welch, Neely Edwards, Sheldon Lewis and others of prominence.

W. Ray Johnston of Rayart Pictures, announced this week that Herman Rifkin of Boston has just purchased for New England territory the Eva Novak special, "Safeguarded," which Rayart is releasing; also that De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia last week contracted for the Reed Howes-Rayart series for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

Arrow announces the following: Progress Pictures Corporation, Cleveland, Ohio, "Jacqualine" and "California in '49" for state of Ohio; Merit Film Corporation, New York, "Riders of the Plains" for upper New York; Trio Productions, Washington, D. C., "Pinto Pete" series, Broadway Comedies 2nd series, Mirthquake Comedies 2nd series, for Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Progress Pictures Company, Chicago, Ill., Broadway Comedies and Mirthquake Comedies 3rd series for Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin; Federated Film Exchange, Inc., Boston, Mass., "Riders of the Plains" and 6 Yakima Canutt's for New England; Standard Films, Kansas City, Mo., 6 Yakima Canutt's, 8 Ben Wilson's and 6 Wild West Productions for Western Missouri and Kansas; Independent Film Company, Omaha, Neb., 6 Yakima Canutt's and 6 Dick Hatton's for Iowa and Nebraska.

Through an error in an item sent out last week by the information division of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, it was stated that the territorial rights for New York State on both the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill Jr. series of five-reel feature melodramas of Western life had been sold to Renown Pictures, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue. This statement was misleading, inasmuch as only the rights to upper New York State had been bought by Renown from Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, the territory up to Utica being handled by Renown's New York exchange, 729 Seventh avenue, with the balance covered by the Buffalo office, 565 Pearl street, Buffalo, N. Y. Greater New York and Northern New Jersey is controlled by Theatre Picture Exchanges, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, which has handled these popular series from the beginning.

Hold Sales Meets

First National held its original sales conferences in six different cities on Saturday, November 15, to pass on to branch managers the sales policies on the pictures to be released by that company between February 1 and August 31 which were explained to the district managers at the conference called by E. A. Eschmann at the home office two weeks ago.

The regional conferences were held in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, New Orleans, San Francisco and Toronto.

Europe May Use America as Producing Ground—Thomson

MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON, president and managing director of Film Booking Offices, returned this week from abroad, where he spent the last six months making a survey of film conditions in England, France and Germany.

"In France," the Major said, "American-made pictures take second place to the native made productions, because the Frenchman prefers his own countrymen in his film entertainment. It is therefore necessary to have first class French pictures made with French stories and actors to bolster up the American program. I am therefore making arrangements to secure some very high class French productions.

"Conditions in England," he continued, "are good for the exhibitor, but the American film companies are ruining the market there for the distributor by giving away their pictures at ridiculously low prices. The German distributor is aware of what is happening in Great Britain and it will not be at all surprising if the German interests profit by Great Britain's experience, and erect some sort of custom barrier against American films. Even with such an obstacle Central Europe will be a good market for the American product.

"There is no doubt that theatre development all over the continent is ten years behind that of the United States. Pictures are not presented in the elaborate fashion in which they are shown here. Their exploitation, advertising and publicity methods are less efficient than they are in this country. The people in Europe do not understand our advertising methods, and therefore cannot profit by them. There is no doubt that Europe will continue to develop along all lines, but it will take some time before results will be evident. The majority of the studios abroad are far below the efficiency mark set by American film plants.

"French, German and English producers are determined to continue making pictures, and I was approached by producers of all three countries with the idea of making pictures in America, with their money, for their markets, and I think the forthcoming year will see a stream of European producers crossing the Atlantic to work out such plans.

"Edna Williams, foreign sales manager of F. B. O. is now in Berlin arranging to open an office there to handle Central European business. This, with the present London and Paris branches, will complete the chain for Continental transactions.

"The managing director of Grahams, Ltd. (owners of F. B. O.) is Lord Inverforth, who was Minister of Supplies during the war. Lord Inverforth, whose position in England is analagous to that of Herbert Hoover here, intends interesting himself further in the industry. Outside of his present association with F. B. O. Lord Inverforth is not connected with any film companies."

Tax Charge Confusing

Inquiries as to why theatres should charge a ten per cent. war tax on any theatre ticket sold at the box office for more than fifty cents has caused managers in Western New York no little amount of explaining and much of the time of the man "out front" has been spent in an effort to make clear to the patron the nature of the tax. Regardless of all efforts to explain the tax proposition, many are still under the impression that the theatre managers are "putting something over" and adding the ten per cent. tax to the box office receipts. To offset this impression the Niagara Falls Gazette recently published a half column story fully explaining to Cataract City residents the tax plan.

CANADIAN F. P. L. DIVIDEND

A statement has been issued by N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., that a dividend of $2 per share will be paid December 1 for the quarter ending November 1 on the First Preference Stock of the corporation.

"Put It In Writing"

Albany Film Board of Trade Issues Warning on Contracts

Following a discussion of the uniform contract, the Albany Film Board of Trade has sent out the following letter to all exhibitors served by Albany exchanges:

"Verbal agreements have no bearing. If it can be promised, it can be written in the contract. Protect yourself against misunderstandings. If an exchange man can promise it, he can put it in writing.

"Rentals are due and payable in advance of date of shipment. This is a cash basis. The exhibitor gets his money before his patrons see his show. The exchange is entitled to the same privilege.

"The exchange can collect damages for film not returned promptly. Protect yourself and the exhibitor whose bookings follow yours by returning all shipments immediately after showing.

"If you receive a damaged print, protect yourself by wiring the exchange before your regular show and not after you have finished running the picture."

Revival of Obsolete Publicity Stunt in San Diego Incenses Film Industry

By TOM WALLER

THE entire industry is incensed over a blind-eyed publicity stunt, long ago rendered, it was believed, obsolete because of its menace to public safety, that was dusted off by leap-and-then-think exploitation amateurs in San Diego, Cal., this week. They contrived the "wonderful idea" and then hired for the sum of two dollars a gentleman of the street corners to execute the job. He picked out the local newspaper office in which to plant a fake infernal machine and six sticks of imitation dynamite. Someone saw a fuse smoking, and several hundred persons in the newspaper building scampered for the street, causing a near panic which may result in the death of an old lady.

As the outcome the culprits are behind the bars and there is every possibility of a San Diego theatre losing its license. "Dynamite Smith," the Pathe release which was to reap the benefit of the wide publicity fostered by the hair-brain stunt, has been ruled out of San Diego—at least from showing on the Plaza Theatre's screen. Pathe and its employes had nothing whatsoever to do with the scheme.

How Will Hays, head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, aided the prosecution, and declared the stunt an "outrage, deplorable and absolutely inexcusable" and one for which "no condemnation is too severe," was revealed at the meeting on November 26 of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., in New York.

The day prior to this session, advertising and publicity representatives of producers and distributors affiliated with the Hays unit met in the office of the Industry's Chief and there fully discussed action which should be taken in the way of publicizing their indignation at this outrageous violation of their code of ethics and principles. Subsequently the matter was referred to the A. M. P. A., who unanimously adopted a resolution vigorously denouncing the scheme. Copies of this resolution were ordered to be circularized throughout the entire nation.

John D. Spreckels, wealthy real estate operator, publisher of the San Diego Union and owner of the building in which the fake infernal machine was planted, immediately after the facts were gathered sent the following telegram to Hays:

"A near panic which will probably result in the death of an old lady was caused in the Union Building by moving picture men, connected with the Plaza Theatre, who placed a fake infernal machine in the local room of the San Diego Union, which occupies a floor of the Union Building Annex. There were several hundred persons in the building at the time who fled panic stricken to the street. The perpetrators of this outrage, including the manager of the theatre, are in jail and I as owner of the building and the newspaper that occupies it emphatically denounce this piece of folly and call upon you to take appropriate action. The film they were advertising is 'Dynamite Smith.'"

Will Hays immediately sent two wires. One was to F. Beetson, a Hays representative on the Coast, and the other was in reply to Spreckels. To Beetson he sent the following instructions, after quoting Spreckels' message:

"If these are the facts it is very bad and an outstanding example of that type of publicity and stunts that must be eliminated. Before I make move on matter want you to verify immediately the facts of telegram or otherwise and wire me. Give me all information straight telegram first minute."

Informing him as to what he had instructed Beetson, Hays, in his replying wire to Spreckels, also said:

"Replying to your telegram. This outrage is deplorable and absolutely inexcusable and no condemnation is too severe." Hays said that he had checked up on press sheet released in connection with "Dynamite Smith" and could find nothing in it suggestive of such a stunt as the one which caused the trouble. He said that he would cause the instant dismissal of the perpetrators, and would aid the publisher and San Diego authorities in every way possible to punish the offenders.

In the meantime First National had gotten in touch with Charles Pettijohn, counsel for the Hays organization, and informed him that Max Bernstein, manager of the Plaza Theatre; C. C. Platt, the house's press agent, and Will F. Fife, who, it is alleged, was paid two dollars to plant the infernal machine in the newspaper office, had been corralled and, it was understood, had made full confessions.

It was also brought out by President Botsford at the A. M. P. A. meeting that Hays had wired Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, who is now on the Coast, in an endeavor to find what circuit the Plaza Theatre was connected with. Lesser replied that the Plaza is one of the houses owned by the Pacific Southwest Theatre Company, Inc.

President Botsford made known that the San Diego publicity folly will be the center of discussion at the next meeting of the Wampas. The resolution adopted by the A. M. P. A. states:

"Whereas, The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., have, since their organization in 1915, endeavored to live up to certain standards of decency, dignity and truth, which they then established, and

"Whereas, The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., with whom this association is co-operating, have called to our attention the fact that certain individuals connected with a motion picture theatre in San Diego, Cal. (and not connected with this organization or with our allied organization in Los Angeles—The Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers), recently engaged in an outrageous trick in an effort to gain publicity for a motion picture offering—by placing in a newspaper office a bag ostensibly containing an infernal machine and some imitation sticks of dynamite, which caused a panic and resulted in an injury to a citizen, now therefore be it

"Resolved, That The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., unanimously agree in denouncing this specific act and all other acts of a false, sensational or dangerous nature which may be committed by those seeking to attract attention to motion pictures, and be it further

"Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of the employers who instantly dismissed from their service the perpetrators of this outrage and of the municipal authorities at San Diego who placed those perpetrators under arrest; and that we record ourselves again as pledged to decency, dignity and truth in our advertising, publicity and exploitation campaigns."

Waco In Fuss

Censors' Rejection of "Three Weeks" Incenses Texan Exhibitors

A row has been kicked up in Waco, Texas, over the showing—rather the non-showing—of "Three Weeks," distributed by Metro-Goldwyn. The picture was shown here to the censors at the Strand Theatre and they turned thumbs down.

Preston B. Reynolds, Dallas attorney, representing the film company, then was sent to Waco to iron matters out if he could. He showed newspaper clippings from other cities where the film has run and said its suppression was unjust and unwarrantable. Reynolds declared his company would appeal to the representative people of Waco "in protection of the rights of the producers and distributors as well as the theatregoers of this city."

On the heels of this battle came announcement from Waco that Dallas distributors of motion pictures would meet in Dallas and discuss the matter. They will determine if any further action should be taken to force the showing of the picture over the censors' orders.

His Ambition Ended in Murder and Jail

The ambitions of Arnold Powell of Montague County, Texas, and R. A. Jackson, traveling showman, to bring life's comedy and tragedy into the far places of West Texas, through medium of the celluloids, has ended in death for Jackson and life imprisonment for Powell. The Court of Criminal Appeals has affirmed the life sentence against Powell, returned by a jury in Comanche County. This ends a famous case. Jackson was the owner of a traveling motion picture show, hitting out-of-the-way towns that rarely if ever saw a film. He met young Powell on his travels. The latter was bitten with a desire to become a showman, so Jackson took him in as a partner. A few months later Jackson's lifeless body was found near a creek in Coryell County. His automobile was traced to Waco. Powell in the meantime joined the army, but was arrested and the crime fastened on him.

U. F. A. Representatives Dined by Samuel Goldwyn on Coast

FILMDOM paid tribute to the German branch of the motion picture industry at a luncheon given by Samuel Goldwyn last week in honor of Dr. Felix Kallmann, Eric Pommer, Fritz Land and Wynn Jones, president, general manager, stellar director and American representative respectively of U. F. A.

Representatives of every branch and practically every organization in the American motion picture world assembled at the Ambassador Hotel as Mr. Goldwn's guests to honor the visitors who have been studying American production methods in Hollywood.

Nathan Burkan, New York attorney, served as master of ceremonies and called upon the following leaders of the film industry for short talks: Robert Lieber, president of First National Pictures; Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Joseph Schneck, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers; Douglas Fairbanks, Ernst Lubitsch, the Continental director who directed in Europe for U. F. A.; Dr. Felix Kallman and Eric Pommer of the visitors, and the host, Samuel Goldwyn.

Robert Lieber, as the first speaker, said in part: "I have always believed in the individual picture. We have seen several noteworthy individual productions from the European studios and I am convinced that the individual picture, whether it is American or European in origin, will meet with the approval of the American public."

Marcus Loew, who followed, paid tribute to the visitors' quick grasp of American methods and technique. Although the European delegation has been in America but a few weeks, they have conclusively demonstrated a thorough acquaintance with American motion picture organization, he said.

Douglas Farbanks, who recently visited Berlin and the German studios, expressed his appreciation for the courtesy shown him and Miss Pickford on the occasion of their visit and of the sport generated by the leaders of the German industry.

Joseph Schenck said: "The American public is always ready to welcome a picture with real entertainment value and artistry. We believe that European producers can supply their quota of the world's demand and we are confident that the American public will extend a hearty welcome to any and all pictures which meet the high standard which has been raised. America is grateful to Germany for such contributions to our screen as has been supplied by Pola Negri and Ernst Lubitsch. Artistry is internation in its appeal."

Dr. Kallmann declared that Hollywood was known throughout Europe as the center of the film world. It was for that reason that he and his associates made Los Angeles their goal. He paid tribute to the supremacy of American producers and American pictures. His colleague, Eric Pommer, echoed Dr. Kallmann and added that film serves as a connecting link between all the world's people and will eventually serve to break down the distrust between the nations.

Samuel Goldwyn in conclusion said: "We are grateful to Germany for the cordial reception given our pictures there and I foresee the day when the American picture will be as popular abroad as it is in Americe. Under the leadership of such men as Dr. Kallmann and Eric Pommer, German pictures are certain to achieve the success in America which they have won deservedly at home."

Six New Jobs Created by N. Y. Film Commission

Following civil service examinations which will be held on December 13, six more reviewers will be appointed to the New York State Motion Picture Commission.

Those working outside New York city will receive $1,600 a year, while those employed in the metropolis will receive $1,800, together with traveling expenses. The minimum age has been placed at twenty-five years. According to an announcement made in connection with the coming examination, the reviewers are to work eight hours a day with occasional work at the main offices.

Candidates must be well qualified in English, sight, hearing and general health, and according to the announcement must also possess a general knowledge of motion pictures, tact, good judgment and experience in dealing with the public. The examination will call for a practical test in viewing and analyzing selected films and making a written report.

WILDMAN HEADS OMAHA BRANCH

Truly B. Wildman former branch manager for Enterprise in Kansas City has been appointed manager of the Omaha branch of Producers Distributing Corporation, succeeding Herman Stern who resigned on November 10th.

Fake Movie Ball in Detroit Is Quashed by Vigilant Film Board

THE Detroit Film Board of Trade succeeded last week in quashing a fake movie ball that was about to be perpetrated on an already much movie scandalized Detroit public.

One of the largest dance auditoriums in Detroit had been rented by the sponsors of the ball and weeks before it was scheduled to take place the newspapers were given large space ads listing the names of a score of more of prominent motion picture players who had "promised to attend." One or two papers also carried publicity stories stating that the stars had assured the dance management that they would be on hand.

The ticket sale had received a tremendous stimulus when David Palfreyman, manager of the Film Board of Trade, decided it was high time to intercede. He made a routine inquiry among his members to see if any of them, by any chance, had been advised of the coming of motion picture players and being advised to the contrary, proceeded to cooperate with the Better Business Bureau in promulgating charges of fraud and misrepresentation.

The dance went on but there was only a handful of people out. The adverse newspaper publicity had practically killed it off. However, about fifteen of the "victims" appeared at the prosecuting attorney's office the next day and asked for warrants against the promoters. The prosecutor is now investigating the charges and says if there is evidence of fraud and misrepresentation that there may be some interesting convictions.

"Detroit seems to be a hot bed for movie frauds of every description," said Palfreyman, "and hereafter we are going to keep an eagle eye out for promoters of various sorts who pick on the movies as a soft manner in which to inveigle the public into various schemes. The public isn't cautious enough but we in spite of the general gullibility are not going to sit by idle. We mean to start an immediate campaign in this vicinity designed to educate the public to the necessity of keeping on edge against these grafters."

Milwaukee Board Changes

Sam Shurman, in charge of the Milwaukee office of Metro-Goldwyn, has been elected vice-president of the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade. Shurman fills the unexpired term of Frank De Lorenzo, who automatically stepped out of the Film Board office when the Selznick exchange, of which he was the manager, closed down. Max Stahl, of Educational, fills the office of sergeant at arms, left vacant when Shurman was advanced from that post. Harry Hart, of F. B. O., is president of the organization.

Big House for Village

Kenmore Officials Expect to Run $300,000 Community Theatre

A new community theatre costing $300,000 will soon be built in Kenmore, N. Y., a village on the outskirts of Buffalo. It is planned to erect a theatre in Delaware Avenue, near the city line. An operator of a chain of houses, who is believed to be J. Meyer Schine, has offered to lease the theatre for $10,000 a year and there would be added revenue from offices and stores. Several applications for permits to erect motion picture theatres in Kenmore have been before the village board, but none have been given sanction.

Kenmore has always refused to O. K. Sunday movies and this has discouraged many interests from going into the town. Whether Sunday shows would be allowed in the house now proposed has not been announced.

Members of the Taxpayers' Association, before whom plans for the new house were laid this week, expressed belief that a properly operated theatre under strict supervision of the village authorities would be an asset. After hearing the plans the association went on record as favoring the project in principle. It is hoped to break ground in the spring.

Return C.O.D. Charges Caused 400 N. Y. Exhibitors to Lose $29,809 in Past Year

MOTION picture exhibitors numbering perhaps 400 and located in New York state in a territory extending as far north as the Canadian line, west to Syracuse, and south to Binghamton and Poughkeepsie, have spent the sum of $29,809 in the last twelve months in the payment of return C. O. D. charges in connection with film which they have received.

These figures have been arrived at by the Albany Film Board of Trade, following an exhaustive investigation and in which figures supplied by the various exchanges in Albany have played a most important part.

As a result of the investigation on the part of the Board of Trade and in an effort to help the exhibitor save money, exhibitors are receiving a letter which emphasizes:

"Why not avoid this foolish waste of money by getting your remittance to the exchange in advance of shipment?"

Some time ago the Albany Film Board of Trade started a movement which, it is hoped, will do away with certain charge accounts and which are of long standing in some instances. Just how successful the Film Board of Trade and the exchanges will be in their campaign calling for payment of pictures before they are received and doing away with the present system of C. O. D.'s is a question.

Chicago Building Boom Is at Height; Seven More Theatres

NEWS from Chicago this week reveals that in the course of the past seven days the theatre building craze in the Windy City has experienced anything but a lull. Since the publication of the story in the November 29, 1924, issue of Moving Picture World under the heading, "Chicago, Slated for 15,522 Seats, Succumbs to Detroit Building Boom," the Mid-West metropolis has been traveling at the top speed of a theatre a day. The following are the latest plans for theatre building gleaned by our Chicago correspondent:

Marks Brothers, who operate the Broadway Strand Theatre on Roosevelt Road at Paulina Street, announce they are getting ready to build a new movie house to go up at Sheridan Road and Devon avenue next year and it will represent an investment of $2,000,000. The new house will seat more than three thousand and will be up to date in every way.

S. T. Lawton, G. R. Wittelle and L. Fox have organized the Drake Theatre Building Corporation with offices at 7 South Dearborn street and a capital of $100,000 to build a moving picture theatre on the northwest side.

Plans are being drawn by E. P. Rupert and R. Levine & Co., architects, and Samuel Klein, engineer, for a $1,000,000 moving picture theater for the northwest corner of Montrose and Drake avenues.

The building will contain a theater with 2,200 seats, also seven stores and twenty apartments. The theater will be called the Drake and will have a mezzanine floor and large balcony. The stage will be equipped for all kinds of productions. A lease is now being negotiated with a large film theater circuit at a rental said to total $850,000 for a twenty-year term. The 159x131 site was purchased by R. Levine and Bennett C. Johnson.

C. C. Newman is building a moving picture theatre at Sturgis that will cost $100,000. He expects to open the house about February 1st., and will show pictures and legitimate attractions. He also owns the Strand Theatre and will make some improvements in that house as well.

James Cooney of the National Theatres Corporation on the south side has bought a lot 175 by 125 feet facing 79th Street at Stony Island avenue intersection and plans to build a moving picture theatre that will seat 2,500 people. John Eberson is drawing the plans for the new house and building construction will start as soon as they are ready.

Bushnell, Ill., is to have a new $35,000 theater building in the near future, plans for which are now being drawn.

Among the new theatres projected during the past week are two by Florenz Ziegfeld, who is having plans drawn for a house to be erected on Randolph street and another for Lake Shore Drive.

SUPPORT NEAR EAST DRIVE

As the opening of a drive for funds the Near East Relief announces it is establishing December 7 as International Golden Rule Sunday. Those who participate are requested to have for their menu that day a bill of fare patterned after that of the refugees'. Norma and Constance Talmadge and Jackie Coogan are among the film folk who have endorsed the movement. Kinograms and International Newsreel have promised to include a line referring to the event in the four issues immediately preceding the day.

N. G. SHAFER NEW MANAGER FOR PRODUCERS AT CINCINNATI

Paul C. Mooney, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, has promoted N. G. Shafer to the position of branch manager at Cincinnati in recognition of his services on the sales force. Shafer succeeds H. H. Hurn, who resigned on November 17.

BANDIT GETS $700 FROM SWITOW AMUSEMENTS

A holdup was staged in the office of the Switow Amusement Company, Louisville, Ky., over the Kentucky Theatre, on the night of November 19, when a lone bandit stepped into the office, pulled a gun and took a satchel containing $700 from Joe Braun, manager of the theatre. Mrs. Hattie Quinn, cashier of the theatre, was also in the office, having just turned over her money. Fred Switow, manager of the Cozy Theatre, another Switow theatre, had just brought in his receipts, and the money had been placed in a satchel and was to have been sent over to the Seelbach Hotel for safekeeping in its vaults until banked the following day.

O. K. in New Castle

It is reported from New Castle, Ky., that all of the persons injured in the stampede a few weeks ago from the New Castle, second floor theatre, when the operators room took fire, have recovered. One child was killed in the rush, and thirty persons injured.

News on Every Page

After being closed for some months the Strand Theatre, Toronto, Canada, has been reopened on a popular-price basis. The story appears on page 522.

Activities of the average canine as a rule are not considered "news." But on page 521 there is a yarn about Bob Wagner, Little Falls, N. Y., showman, and his fox terrier, which we are quite sure you will agree with us is worth classification under this head.

Three vacancies were filled on the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois at their latest meeting. Details appear on page 526.

Chicago, as every one knows, has several hundred theatres. Every one, however, does not know that many of these houses duplicate one another's names. What are they going to do? See page 519.

Coming and Going

B. Berger, general manager for Gerson Pictures Corporation, is back in New York after a brief absence.

Jesse Goldburg has returned to the West Coast where he is scheduled to remain for the next eight weeks supervising production of his company.

H. O. Duke, assistant secretary of Producers Distributing Corporation, and G. M. Davidson, comptroller of the company, have just returned to New York from a tour of general inspection of the company's branches in Washington, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Minneapolis and Chicago, at which points they inspected the new efficiency systems introduced in the organization during the past year.

W. Ray Johnston this week announced that he is scheduled for a six weeks' tour, visiting the leading exchange centers in the East and in the far West. Johnston's itinerary will take in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta, Cleveland, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco and possibly Seattle. Johnston plans to spend at least a week in Los Angeles.

The William DeMille company is expected to arrive in New York this week from the Coast to join the director, when production work will be commenced on "Men and Women" at Paramount's Long Island plant.

Wallace Beery and Frank Campeau reached New York this week from Hollywood to appear in Thomas Meighan's new vehicle for Paramount now under way in the eastern studios of that company.

Richard Dix is back in New York after a three weeks' vacation on the Coast.

Ricardo Cortez left this week for the West. He expects to be back in New York early in January.

Ralph Block, managing editor of Paramount's story department, has arrived at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. He will confer with studio executives on the details of Paramount's releases for next season as they affect his department.

Walter Keller of Paramount's eastern scenic staff left for Birmingham, Ala., yesterday to select location sites for Thomas Meighan's forthcoming picture, "Coming Through." Meighan and a production unit, headed by Edward Sutherland, director, will leave New York for Birmingham the day after Thanksgiving.

John B. Rock, Vitagraph's general manager, has returned to New York after a business trip through the South.

Fred B. Murphy, president of the Film Board of Trade of Boston and also head of the Crown Film exchange of that city, was in New York for several days this week.

H. F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., left New York this week for a swing around exchanges which will probably keep him out of town for the next two weeks.

Adolphe Menjou has gone to California to spend Thanksgiving. He was accompanied by Mrs. Menjou. They will return to New York early in December.

Marcus Loew leaves Los Angeles on Sunday, November 30, and after a stop in Chicago will arrive in New York about December 7.

Ray Moyer, Gordon Avil and J. L. Courcier have sailed to join the Rex Ingram unit in Paris.

Roy Chandler, president of Chipman Pictures Corporation, has returned from a tour of the West Indies and South America.

Texan Exhibitors Get Charter: Elaborate Convention Plans

Texas exhibitors, proud of their new charter, granted this week at Austin, are preparing with zest for their first annual convention, to be held in Dallas December 2-3. Although this is not the initial session of the organization, which for two years or more has been functioning under the leadership of Col. H. A. Cole of Marshall, it is called the first, through reason of granting of the charter.

Frank Wozencraft, ex-mayor of Dallas and general counsel for the M. P. T. O. of Texas, along with Business Manager H. G. McNeese, spent some time in Austin last week in connection with details of the charter. They then returned to Dallas, where they with others on the committee prepared a program replete with education and entertainment, opening here next Tuesday morning.

All of the State newspapers took cognizance of the exhibitors' organization, and not a few of them commented on the motion picture men's aims as set forth in the charter. Much desirable publicity was thus obtained.

In the preamble of the charter it is set forth that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas have "voluntarily associated themselves for the purpose of forming a private corporation." Its purpose is the maintenance and support of an educational association, with power to maintain and provide suitable offices, to secure suitable technical and professional services; to assemble, accumulate, preserve and disseminate valuable business and other information; to protect the interest of members as owners of motion picture theatres, and of the exhibitors of motion pictures generally through educational methods; to correct improper conditions and to promote just, honest and ethical methods of conducting business.

Secret and improper dealings should be discouraged, according to the document. The charter adds that there will be undertaken measures as are calculated to elevate the character, dignity and repute of exhibitors of motion pictures, and to facilitate their commercial transactions. The principal office of the corporation is in Dallas, Texas, the charter is for fifty years, and it is provided that the business and affairs of the corporation shall be managed and controlled by a board of not fewer than three nor more than twenty-one directors.

Directors serving the first year follow: Col. H. A. Cole, Marshall; J. A. Holton, Port Arthur; C. W. (Billy) Batsell, Sherman; E. L. Byar, Terrell; John Paxton, Paris; H. T. Hodge, Abilene; W. R. (Billy) Fairman, Bryan; Homer Mulkey, Clarendon; H. H. Hoke, Taylor; H. S. Ford, Wichita Falls; H. H. Starcke, Seguin; W. A. Stuckert, Brenham.

The incorporators are Messrs. Cole, Holton, Batsell, Byar, Paxton, Fairman, Hoke and Starcke.

Two of the main speakers secured for the convention are Col. Jayson Joy, executive secretary of the Committee on Public Relations, co-operating with the Hays' office and Charles Pettijohn. In connection with Col. Joy's visit to Texas, the following speaking dates were arranged for him by a committee composed of Don Douglas of the Dallas Film Board of Trade, E. J. Crabb of Southern Enterprises and S. G. Howell, editor of Motion Picture Journal: before the Kiwanis Club, Galveston, Nov. 25; before Rotarians at Beaumont on Nov. 26; Rotarians at Houston, Nov. 27; Rotarians at Fort Worth, Nov. 28; Rotarians at Waco, Dec. 1; before M. P. T. O. Texas meeting at Dallas, Dec. 2 and on that same evening before the Dallas Federated Women's Clubs.

The first day's program includes also talks by State Attorney-General Dan Moody; Secretary of State J. J. Strickland; Ex-Mayor Frank Wozencraft; reports of the president, other officers and committeemen and legislative prospects on the following subjects: taxation ten show bill, censorship, Sunday local option. An informal dinner and dance will be held at 7 p. m.

On Wednesday morning, Dec. 2, W. G. Underwood, head of the Specialty Film Company, the purchasing agent for Warner product in the Southwest, will open the program with a dissertation on "Buying Pictures," followed by Mr. Pettijohn. There will be general discussion on the music tax. "Merchandising the Theatre" is the subject of a talk to be made by S. G. Howell. C. D. Hill, theatre architect, will speak on "Theatre Architecture." The Hon. John G. Willacy, State Tax Commissioner, will talk on "Taxes." James P. Simpson of Dallas will talk on his hobby of a lifetime, "Theatre Advertising." The business session, to follow, includes appointment of a committee to draft a code of ethics for the M. P. T. O. Texas.

Lila Lee, her husband, James Kirkwood, and their baby son arrived in New York from the Coast this week.

I. E. Chadwick left New York this week on a four weeks' sojourn on the Coast.

"Big Bill" Steiner arrived in New York this week from a business trip to London.

Vivian Moses, publicity and advertising director for Fox, sails on December 1 to launch a special advertising campaign in England.

Fred McConnell, Universal short subject sales manager, has returned from Pittsburgh where he held a week-end sales meeting.

Jules Levy, eastern division sales manager of Universal, is out on a week's sales trip.

Earl Rossman has returned from a trip of a year and a half through the Polar regions, during which he studied the Eskimoes and took many thousand feet of film.

Carl Laemmle arrived this week from the West Coast.

Frederick Wynne-Jones, American representative of the Ufa; Dr. Felix Kallman, Ehrich Pommer and Fritz Lang, director of "Siegfried," arrived this week from the West Coast where they have been studying production and sailed for Europe on November 26.

Edward Auger, assistant general manager of Vitagraph, is on a tour of Canada.

William Klein, attorney, and Al Woods have returned from Europe.

Winter Vacations for 83 "U" Veterans

Upon his return from the western studios at Universal City, Carl Laemmle announced that all those who had been in the employ of the company ten years or more would be given a Winter vacation in addition to the regular Summer vacation. For some time the president of the Universal has contemplated such a move.

Next May the company in its present form will be thirteen years old.

Ten years ago the employes of the Universal numbered less than 1,000. It is interesting to note that of the 3,600 employes today on the payroll of the company, 83 will benefit by this recognition of their ten years' service to the company.

Woody Explains Associated's Position in Selznick Matter

DISTRIBUTION policies resulting from the acquisition of the Selznick product were announced this week by Associated Exhibitors. The official statement issued by J. S. Woody, general manager, reads in part as follows:

"The position of Associated Exhibitors with relation to the pictures heretofore distributed by the Selznick Company and which were taken over in the recent transfer is twofold. With respect to contracts which had been taken prior to Sunday, November 16, we are the agents of the receiver, being specifically so designated by an order of court. With respect to contracts of a subsequent date, we are the agents of the producers.

"In behalf of the receiver, it will be our duty to give service on existing contracts and to collect rentals therefor. In behalf of the producers, it will be our duty to continue the selling of the Selznick product, in addition to giving service and collecting rentals. This latter work, however, will be carried out under direct contracts between the producers and ourselves, and not by virtue of, or in connection with the receivership.

"The first work to be undertaken, of course, will be the salvaging of rentals. We are giving this the right of way because thus an immediate source of revenue will be provided both for the receiver and the producers. The contracts which had been written prior to November 16 are one of the principal assets of the defunct Selznick Company and the receiver is naturally insistent that his obligation to give service to exhibitors shall be most carefully observed and that the expectations of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York respecting the collection of rentals shall be fully realized.

"Our letter of instructions to managers has laid emphasis on the fact that we have been specially appointed by the court as the receiver's agent and that the creditors of Selznick, including many of its former employes, are practically dependent upon the returns from existing contracts for recouping what is owed them. Obtaining immediate funds is a matter of great urgency with some of the employes; and we, therefore, have asked our managers to go over the Selznick contracts carefully, obtain playing date for those pictures which do not happen to be set in, and to proceed otherwise for as prompt realization as possible on all of the contracted business.

"Of course, until after we have received detailed reports from our exchanges, there will be no means of estimating how quickly the work on behalf of the receiver can be consummated. He has instructed us to realize fully from all existing contracts, and as their value aggregates several hundred thousand dollars it is quite obvious that our task is a somewhat formidable one. It seems probable, however, that the bulk of the work can be done within the next four or five months.

"Our time thus far has been given almost exclusively to this phase of the task. Necessarily, though, the work of making collections for the receiver will overlap the further promotion of sales on behalf of producers. In this latter undertaking, which will start immediately, the product will be handled as our own; that is, it will then cease to be identified by the Selznick trade-mark.

"It is our purpose, regardless of previous selling, to handle the acquired productions as nearly as possible like new product. Careful tabulations are now being made to determine the extent of the sales work heretofore done; and we will proceed, in the case of each picture, in accordance with what this report shows. There will be no bargain-counter or group selling; and no sacrificing of values to which the producer is entitled. Our method of reasoning is that there is no justification for penalizing producers because of circumstances over which they had no control and that the pictures are entitled to as much consideration at our hands as they would have received had they been originally released through this organization. We do not believe, either, that there will be any loss of headway in selling; on the contrary, because of our greater facilities, more numerous exchanges and materially larger staff, we anticipate being able actually to stimulate sales, even in the cases of the older releases.

"The speed with which the transfer was handled has not, so far as I have been advised, occasioned delay in the case of the shipment of prints to any exhibitor. The order of court authorizing the transfer and appointing us as the receiver's agent was signed late one evening, and we were in many instances making shipments early the following morning, just as if the product always had been handled by us. I am certain that if there were any inconveniences suffered, exhibitors will appreciate the circumstances and give us credit for having done all that humanly was possible. In this connection, both exhibitors and Associated are materially indebted to the Pathe organization and to the former employes of Selznick. In almost every exchange center the Selznick managers and their exchange associates contributed enthusiastically to the result which was achieved."

"Joe" Engel, a Metro Founder, Joins Ranks of Producers

Joseph W. Engel, one of the founders and first vice-president of the former Metro company, will make a series of specials to be known as Joseph W. Engel Productions, for release through Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

This was announced in a statement from Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn, immediately prior to Mr. Engel's departure for the Coast on Sunday, November 23, where he will make his productions at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Culver City studios. Members of Mr. Engel's production staff accompanied him to Hollywood.

His departure was unexpected, and on Saturday evening before leaving Mr. Engel broadcast good-bye to his friends in New York and the east from radio station WHN in the Loew State Theatre Building.

Mr. Engel resigned from the Metro company to go into the producing business for himself. He came to New York to acquire a quantity of books and plays for production, and to organize his staff. With a number of popular novels and Broadway play successes purchased, Mr. Engel has several under immediate consideration for his first production. The producer expects to be able to announce the initial work shortly after his arrival on the coast, and other titles of Mr Engel's pictures for Metro-Goldwyn will be made public after the closing of contracts now pending.

Marcus Loew, in his announcement of the new affiliation, expressed confidence that the Joseph W. Engel Productions planned would be among the biggest box-office succeses Metro-Goldwyn would have to offer exhibitors.

It is recognized that Mr. Engel's broad experience in the production end of the industry, his record of successes when he was general manager of Metro's former Hollywood studio, and his knowledge of what the public and exhibitors want, will assure a series of productions of high quality and box-office values. For that reason, it is said, Metro-Goldwyn considers the Joseph W. Engel Productions a distinct asset to its distributng program.

On the evidence of Mr. Engel's record, Metro-Goldwyn's new series of Joseph W. Engel Productions look to be among the best winners that the business will produce this season.

Besides being a film man of long thorough experience, Mr. Engel is one of the most popular men in the industry, with a great circle of friends in every branch of the picture business.

Paramount Profits Drop

Last Financial Statement Indicates Decrease of $199,458 Since 1923

According to the consolidated financial statement of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and subsidiaries entirely owned, net operating profits for the third quarter ending September 27, 1924, totaled $1,571,040.62. Profits for the nine months ending the same date were $2,921,842.13. After deducting all charges, taxes and dividends on the preferred stock, this figure indicates per share earnings of $10.33 on the common stock, while the three months' figure shows earnings of $6.01 per share on the common stock.

A comparison with the nine months ending September 29, 1923, seems to show that there has been a decrease in net profits of $199,458. The 1923 total was $3,121,300.

DeFOREST PHONOFILM INCORPORATES IN CANADA

The headquarters of the new company are at Montreal, Que. Announcement is made that the DeForest Phonofilm of Canada, Ltd., has been organized with stock having no par value.

Skouras' $4,000,000 Palace for St. Louis Soon to Start

THE architectural firm of Rapp & Rapp, Chicago, is busy at work on the plans for Skouras Brothers' new $4,000,000 Ambassador Theatre to be erected at Seventh and Locust streets, St. Louis, and it is possible that the preliminary plans will be completed within the next few weeks.

Because of the high value of the land it has been decided to erect a large office building in conjunction with the new amusement palace. It is possible that this structure will go upwards to twenty stories or more, but that detail has not been definitely determined.

In the St. Louis financial circles the deal for the new theatre site is looked upon as one of the biggest ever pulled off in the Mound City. It is rumored, and there seems to be substantial basis for the report, that Skouras Brothers have had an opportunity to reap a cool profit of $500,000 on the deal by surrendering the location to a big Chicago financial concern that had been dickering for the corner. They planned to erect a 25-story office or hotel structure on the ground.

It is said that Skouras Brothers paid $1,200,000 for the ground and present improvements and that a few days later when the Chicago interests learned that the site had changed hands they offered the new owners $1,700,000, agreeing to pay the $500,000 profit in cash immediately. However, this offer was declined, Skouras Brothers feeling that if the location was worth that much to the Chicago interests it most certainly could not be worth a penny less to them. The site is in the heart of the down-town shopping district and it is certain that it will enhance in value as the years roll by.

Another Big Venture

Work on the new St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, is progressing very nicely and the present indications are that it will be ready for the grand opening scheduled for June 1, 1925. The theatre will cost $2,000,000. It is among the largest west of New York City and will have accommodations for 4,200 persons. It will be operated by the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation, headed by David Sommers and Sam Kopler.

Theatre Owners Warned

Health Commissioner Bundeson, of Chicago, has served notice on twelve motion picture theatre owners to install proper ventilation systems in their theatres, or close their doors. Ten inspectors visited three hundred theatres and found eighteen violations of health department rules.

Charlie Chaplin Weds Lita Grey in Mexico

Just to be funny, Charlie Chaplin and Lita Grey, his leading lady, dropped in on Mexico last week, and on Nov. 25th they were united in marriage by Judge Haro in the Civil Court at Empalme, State of Sonora, near Guaymas. Members of Miss Grey's family and a few friends attended, but the large Hollywood fraternity that usually turns out for such things, couldn't see the joke. They remained home. Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Chaplin registered at the Hotel Albin, Guaymas. Their future plans have not been revealed.

Mrs. Chaplin spent several days in the vicinity of Guaymas Bay, prior to Chaplin's arrival, filming scenes for a picture.

M. P. T. O. A. Will Aid Post Office During Yuletide Rush

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will continue this year, as last, to co-operate with the Post Office Department in Washington in the work of facilitating the collection and delivery of holiday mail, and in other ways aiding in advancing the Postal Service.

Publicity is given on the screens of the country to the necessity for early shopping and mailing of holiday presents. The slide system is employed generally, and the public thus asked to assist in speeding up the work as well as making the tasks of the carriers and clerks a little lighter. Where reels showing Post Office activities are available, these are used with excellent effect, supplementing the other lines of publicity.

As a result of the theatre owners' campaign in furtherance of the "Shop Early—Mail Early" campaign last year, more than 350,000 postal employees were enabled for the first time in the history of the post-office to eat Christmas dinner at home.

As an evidence of the efficiency of this co-operation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Post Office Department the following letter to Sydney S. Cohen from Col. James A. Buchanan of the Department is now made public:

Office of the Postmaster General,
Washington, D. C.
April 24, 1924.

Mr. Sydney S. Cohen, President Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, 25 West 43rd Street, New York, N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Cohen:

Permit me to express to you the appreciation of the Post Office Department for the splendid co-operation rendered by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in our Christmas campaign urging the people of the country to shop early and mail early.

The work rendered by your association cannot be estimated in dollars. It can only be measured in efficiency and expressions of good-will. It enabled us for the first time in the history of the department to move back the "peak" of Christmas mail; it aided millions in receiving their Christmas packages, cards and letters in time to enjoy them on the day that the whole world has the spirit of good-will. It permitted all of the postal employes for the first time to eat their Christmas dinners with their families.

I am sure that everyone will agree with me that the action of the members of the association is recognized in Washington as a splendid example of a group of business men endeavoring to earnestly and actively co-operate with their government.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Very truly yours.
(Signed) JAMES A. BUCHANAN.
Chief, Information Service,
Post Office Department.

This pleased the Department officials so much, and the service rendered was so pronounced that Col. Buchanan last week wrote to President M. J. O'Toole of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America asking that he extend the same advantage to the Department this year.

Legislation Affecting Films Not Expected in Congress

LEGISLATION dealing directly with the motion picture industry in any particular is not anticipated at the forthcoming short session of Congress which will convene on Monday. This was indicated by statements made to the Washington correspondent of Moving Picture World by prominent members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

There are a number of bills of interest to the industry pending in Congress, including censorship and Sunday closing for the District of Columbia. Any bill in Congress is troublesome until actually disposed of, for it is every once in a while that something is "slipped over" in either the Senate or House.

The plan of the leaders for this session, as outlined by Representative Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio, Republican floor leader of the House, contemplates the passage of the bills which appropriate money for running the various branches of the Government and adjournment on March 4. In other words, the House will sidestep all legislation of a controversial nature, leaving matters of revenue and tariff and other big features until the next Congress convenes.

It is being predicted that Congress will be called into extra session by President Coolidge some time in September or October for the consideration of the revenue laws and possibly such farm relief legislation as may be presented. This work could be cleaned up before the regular meeting date in December, and thereafter the House could devote itself to the revision of the tariff law. The Copyright Act also may then be remodeled in the interest of the producers.

Buffalo Candidates

If the coming vacancy on the state motion picture censorship commission is to be filled by the appointment of a Buffalo woman Democrat, it is said the local organization will probably recommend for the place either Mrs. Joseph Butler or Mrs. George W. Pfohl. The term of Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, of Buffalo, expires the end of this year.

"Pop" Balsdon Appointed

Becomes General Manager of Film Inspection Machine Company

George A. Balsdon has been appointed general manager of the Film Inspection Machine Company. Mr. Balsdon, known in the business as "Pop" Balsdon, recently severed his connection with the Vitagraph Company, with whom he has served for the last ten years as branch manager, special representative and assistant general manager. He opened exchanges throughout the country for Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay in 1915.

Mr. Balsdon's connection with the industry goes back to its very earliest days. He was one of the earliest exhibitors, and in 1914 was general manager of the Photoplay Theatres Company owning and operating the Regent Theatre, New York City. Later, he organized and was made manager of the poster department of the General Film Company. During the war Mr. Balsdon spent a year overseas in complete charge of the distribution of film and projection equipment for the A. E. F.

The Vidaver Film Inspection Machine is one of the most important of recent inventions in the industry. After tests in a number of New York exchanges, large orders have been placed by several national distributors for all their exchanges throughout the country. It is said to save inspection labor to a considerable degree and to add materially to the life of the film. The large theatre chains have put in test orders and it is stated the machine will find a large field of usefulness in theatre projection rooms.

Canada Cuts and Cuts

Quebec Censors Shear Gunplay Out of Zane Grey Picture

The Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors made a gunless and fightless version out of Zane Grey's "The Last of the Duanes," starring Tom Mix, before the feature had its first presentation in the Province of Quebec, this being at the Loew Theatre, Montreal, during the week of November 17.

Comment is made on the fact that there is considerable gun play in the book but when it comes to the screen (in Quebec), the picture was quite toothless.

The Montreal Star says: "There seems little doubt that the censor has insisted on cutting the gunplay and gunplay in a Western film is as necessary as alcohol in a cocktail. . . . . The hand of censors seems to have fallen heavily on the feature."

The censorship question in Quebec has been somewhat acute in the Province of Quebec for many months, both exchange managers and exhibitors offering varying comment on the subject.

Refund Is Promised

The customs duty collected by the Government on motion picture raw stock imported by the Claremont Laboratories, Inc., of New York, and the Vitagraph Company of America, Brooklyn, is hereafter to be refunded to these concerns when such film is exported to any foreign country after having been printed. Action permitting this drawback of duties has just been taken by the Treasury Department. The duty upon raw stock is four-tenths cent per foot.

Balaban & Katz Earnings, About $1,800,000 for 1924, Largest in Company's History

THE Journal of Commerce says that the Balaban & Katz Corporation this year will show the largest earnings in its history. The net earnings will run about nine times dividend requirements on the 264,206 shares of preferred stock outstanding, it is declared. This would indicate that the net earnings for 1924 will be around $1,800,000 or the equivalent after preferred dividend requirements to more than $6 a share earned on the 264,206 shares of common stock of $25 par value. After payments to stockholders there will be a surplus in excess of $800,000.

The current large surplus earnings are being used by the corporation for the expansion of its properties. A large part is being put into the new theater being built at Broadway, Lawrence and Magnolia avenues. So far all expenses in connection with the new building have been borne out of earnings, and officials believe that no financing of any sort will be necessary to carry out the project.

Financially, the company is in a strong position, it is declared. Outside of a purchase money obligation of about $1,300,000 on the Roosevelt Theater, the corporation has no indebtedness whatever.

Balaban & Katz have been successful in the sale of the stock to employes and have also sold a substantial part of its stock to patrons, thus building up a good will.

Finds 12 Guilty

Erie, Pa., Managers Appeal from Sunday Closing Penalty

Managers of twelve motion picture theatres in Erie, Pa., tried before Justice of the Peace Morrison in Wesleyville, Pa., were found guilty of violating the Sunday closing law. As specified in the Act of 1794, known as the Blue Laws, each was assessed $4 and costs. Appeals were taken on each case and a bond was posted by attorneys for the theatre managers.

In face of the decision against them, all houses were open again last Sunday. The Rev. H. C. Shaw, pastor of the Wayne Street M. E. Church and president of the Law Enforcement League, which is behind the Sunday closing movement, bitterly denounced the moving picture managers and their attorneys in a vitriolic excoriation as he closed his case for the Law Enforcement League. The Rev. Mr. Shaw, acting as his own attorney, questioned witnesses and argued before the court.

The theatre men whose cases were heard were:

J. V. Minton, Columbia; H. Sallan, Perry; N. C. Wagner, State; T. W. Fordham, Strand; F. A. Fairgraves, Regent; Frank Paros, Rialto; Claton Heppner, Keystone; Joseph Seyboldt, Gem; John Hauer, American; F. W. Rikeldefer, Avenue; Boyd Neyland, Folly; Meyer Slotkin, Olympic.

Look Out for Fire!

Theatres in Washington, D. C., intending to decorate for the holidays should see to it in advance that all inflammable materials used within the houses and in the lobbies are fireproofed before being put into place. A warning has been issued by Fire Chief Watson in the form of a reminder. A year ago inspectors required a number of business establishments to take down festoons, paper bells and other like inflammable materials. This year the inspectors have notified all persons in advance.

Lubitsch Entertains

German Film Heads Guests of the Warner Bros. at Studios

Dr. Kallman, president of Ufa Film, and Eric Pommer, a high official in this German concern which has under contrat Emil Jannings, the famous star of "Passion, "Deception," etc., are in this country on a visit, and were guests this week of Ernst Lubitsch, who was formerly associated with them, at the Warner Brothers Hollywood studio.

They were also entertained by H. M. and J. L. Warner, who were very anxious to get the European's opinion of "The Man Without a Conscience." This story from the novel of Max Kreitzer was formerly owned by the Ufa Company and was intended as a starring vehicle for Emil Jannings.

Films for Proletarians

What smacks of unusual interest in a political sense is the organization in Canada of the Canadian Proletarian Films, Ltd., with headquarters at Toronto, for the distribution and presentation in the Dominion of moving pictures which are said to have been produced in Russia, the players being the actors of the Moscow Art Theatre. The first production to be released in Canada was by Leo Tolstoy, a story of serfdom, the first Canadian run being at the Standard Theatre, Toronto, with an admission price of 50 cents. Announcement was made by the Canadian Proletarian Films, Ltd., that the aim of the company "is to show pictures that will be of educational value to the working class." The announcement goes on to say that "the labor movement fully realizes the need for independent working-class organizations, whether industrial, political or educational."

McCABE RESIGNS ALBANY POST OF METRO-GOLDWYN

Vincent McCabe, branch manager of the Metro-Goldwyn exchange at Albany, has resigned his position there. McCabe was one of the most popular film men in the upstate city, but due to the fact that he wished to locate in Buffalo or Toronto, the latter home, left Metro-Goldwyn.

Ince's Widow Takes Helm; Corporation Will Continue; Tributes to Decedent

THE sudden death of Thomas H. Ince at his Berkeley Hills, Cal., home last week is followed this week by a statement of assurance from the New York offices that the activities of this late producer will be continued by the Thomas H. Ince Corporation. In this respect comes the announcement that Mrs. Thomas H. Ince will take a grip on the helm of the corporation's destinies.

Impressive memorial services were held last week in Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre where hundreds of film capital folk paid tribute to the late producer. In the darkened theatre with a huge portrait of the departed leader, wreathed in roses on the stage, the entire assemblage stood with bowed heads singing "Rock of Ages," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and "Nearer My God to Thee." Edward Davis, former president of the National Vaudeville Artists and Green Room Club, and also an actor of note, delivered an eloquent address, in which he paid the highest tribute not only to Mr. Ince, but to the industry which he helped found. William J. Farrell, representing the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, also eulogized the departed.

The official statement issued this week by the Thomas H. Ince Corporation is as follows:

"The Thomas H. Ince Corporation will go forward with the activities of Thomas H. Ince.

"Under plans made before Mr. Ince's unexpected death and in accordance with contracts executed by him, the business will be continued.

"Mrs. Thomas H. Ince, widely recognized as a woman of unusual ability, has taken a desk at the Culver City Studios and will take an active part in the direction of affairs.

"Production activities had been planned for months in the future. Several important pictures were in the course of production at the time of Mr. Ince's death. Others had been planned. Contracts call for the delivery of others.

"As a matter of fact, Mr. Ince was planning to go abroad about the first of the year for an extended vacation and the plans of the Studio had been made with an expectation that he would be absent for some time.

"In the course of his years of active production activity, Mr. Ince had built up one of the finest organizations in the history of the industry and the Ince studios were recognized as a model of efficiency in high quality production.

"The business of Thomas H. Ince had been operated for several years as a corporation. This fact makes it possible for an uninterrupted continuance of activities. The corporate official personnel consisted of Mr. Ince as president; Mrs. Ince, first vice-president; Colvin W. Brown, second vice-president, and Ingle Carpenter, secretary. Mr. Carpenter has long been personal attorney for Mr. Ince and general counsel for the Ince Corporation.

"The fact that Mrs. Ince intends to take an active part in the business was received with much gratification throughout the industry. She had always been a close confidant and advisor of Mr. Ince. In his earliest experiences as a director and producer she was his active assistant. When Kay-Bee sent Thomas H. Ince West to found Inceville in the days before motion picture production was organized and before its technical equipment was developed, Mrs. Ince was almost constantly with him, and he frequently paid high tribute to the help that she gave him in the preparation of stories, the writing of continuity and the editing of his early pictures. In addition to her long association with Mr. Ince in both the production and business phases of his operations, Mrs. Ince is known as a woman of keen and sound judgment and high literary attainments.

"It was Mr. Ince's oft-repeated desire to arrange his business so that it would function without his immediate presence, and to that end he had contemplated a reduction in the number of personally supervised productions in the immediate future. The corporation, through subsidiaries, had contracts with several distributing companies. In contemplation of relieving himself of the entire responsibility for his tremendous business, Mr. Ince last January divided the executive duties of the organization by appointing John Griffith Wray, the well-known director, as general manager of production at the studios, and appointing Colvin W. Brown his Eastern representative vice-president and manager of distribution."

Among the personal tributes paid the late Thomas H. Ince were those by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation; J. D. Williams, president of Ritz-Carlton Pictures; Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and M. J. O'Toole, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Mr. Laemmle said: "Thomas H. Ince was a credit to this industry; he was a credit to himself; he was a cerdit to his country. His untimely death was a severe loss to the ndustry. The accomplisher of a record for consistently high achievements seemed about on the point of the greatest things in his career. Yet the things he had accomplised will remain a fitting monument to his memory. Mr. Williams said: "In the death of Thomas H. Ince the motion picture industry has lost a pioneer whose name will always be remembered. No other man has developed more stars and directors. In the entertainment he had given the world he has left behind him a monument more lasting than bronze."

The A. M. P. A. tribute: "The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at its regular weekly meeting in the Cafe Boulevard, New York, Thursday, Nov. 20, passed a resolution offering its sympathy to Mrs. Nellie K. Ince, widow of Thomas H. Ince, the producer, which was introduced by Vice-President Charles Barrell." Mr. O'Toole's message: "The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as an organization and through its officers and members keenly regret the death of Thomas H. Ince. We recognize his great service to our industry and the irreparable loss his removal occasions. We join with all others who knew him or who understood and appreciated his art, with the millions who enjoyed the advantage of witnessing his masterful screen productions in the theatres of the United States and elsewhere, in this expression of our sincere sorrow at his sudden passing out of this realm.

United Artists to Continue

UNITED ARTISTS will continue in business, Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors, announced this week upon his arrival from the West Coast. All deals for distribution of the product of United Artists stars have been rejected. This ends the rumor that Metro-Goldwyn might handle these pictures. A complete statement is expected before Mr. Schenck sails for Europe.

Mr. Schenck's statement said that "after fully considering various propositions offered, the United Artists have determined to continue with their own distribution. Hiram Abrams will remain in charge. We believe we can best express our thought and maintain our ideals by having our own independent distribution."

"I have never been fully familiar with the problems of distribution," Mr. Schenck went on to say, "but I intend to start at once to familiarize myself with these problems. And I should like to say this: That any mistakes of the past will be adjusted and sincere efforts will be made to overcome any difficulties which may have developed. We want exhibitors to make money with our product, and to make money on every picture they buy. No exhibitor need buy one more picture from United Artists than he expects to make money with."

Also on the train from the West Coast were Norma Talmadge, Marcus Loew and Mrs. Loew, Lola Bara, Theda Bara's sister; Sidney Franklin, Hans Kraely, Hiram Abrams and John Considine, general manager of the Joseph M. Schenck Productions; Harry Rapf, Mr. and Mrs. David Loew, Dennis F. O'Brien, Robert Fairbanks and Arthur W. Stebbins. Marcus Loew said that he found conditions very good throughout the West.

AT the PICCADILLY there was an interchange of educational film and short solos, which seemed to please the crowd. The educational number, aptly called Lyman H. Howe's Hodge Podge, covered a wide variety of subjects, none of which exceeded 200 feet in length.

As the subjects bore no relation to each other they were easily cut up into sections and the solos sandwiched in between them. One of the solos was a rendition of an old popular song on the cello. The other was a dance. The resultant variety quickened the pace of the entertainment and had a pleasing effect on the audience.

HOW not to overdo the prologue idea was cleverly shown in the CAPITOL in the presentation of "HE WHO GETS SLAPPED." The picture really carries its own prologue and any great additional effort to create atmosphere might have produced a poor effect. As a result the audience only saw a clown whirling a red and white striped ball for the fraction of a minute and then the picture was on its way.

AS a means of impressing a two weeks' advance program on the minds of patrons passing through the lobby to the theatre a huge book showing two open pages and resting on a stand is proving very successful for Joe Plunkett in the lobby of the STRAND.

The book is, of course, a specially constructed device and no book, in fact. The two open pages advertise like the fly leaves of a real book the two coming shows for two weeks.

The book is about 4x5. Despite the partial railing around it and despite the warning, "Don't Touch," the "book" is constantly surrounded by curious men and women, some of whom try to see what is on the other pages of the "volume."

A PROLOGUE to introduce the atmosphere of a feature is always appreciated by an audience. When the feature has an exotic or unusual atmosphere the benefit of a suitable prologue is doubly apparent. All this applies to the massive and striking prologue introduced at the RIVOLI by DOCTOR REISENFELD to create the right atmosphere for "THE FORBIDDEN PARADISE." The prologue consisted of a most colorful and lively picture of old Russia, presented by Russian singers and dancers in authentic Russian costumes. It was like a first class act of vaudeville and it effectually prepared the audience for the atmosphere of "THE FORBIDDEN PARADISE." The picture is most delightful in itself, but much of its singular charm would be lost if it were rushed on the audience "cold." A bit of characteristic music, say, TSCHAIKOWSKY'S SIEGE OF MOSCOW or a distinctively Russian dance, will undoubtedly be appreciated by the audience. The RIVOLI audience applauded the prologue with great fervor.

AT the RIALTO two simple and inexpensive novelties were introduced with last week's program. A terzetto for violins, rendered by regular members of the orchestra, one of the artists standing in the center, the other two at the right and left wing. The house was dark, spotlights on the musicians as they played. The audience received this number favorably. The other novelty was the accompaniment of the first half of the comedy by an orchestra of six saxophones. The fantastic blare will go well with almost any comedy. The idea was rewarded with a hearty laugh from the crowd.

Fire, said to have been caused by an overheated furnace and defective flue, broke out on November 20, in the Big Features Rights Corp. film exchange, at 221 So. Third Street, Louisville, causing loss of about $5,000 and endangering 100,000 feet of films on an upper floor and a large quantity of lithographic posters, advertising matter, etc., stored in the building. Associated First National Pictures and Educational Films are handled through this plant.

Fred Levy is president of the company and Lee Goldberg is secretary-treasurer. Mr. Goldberg reported that the fire was confined principally to paper in the shelving on the second floor front.

Von Sternberg! Who Is He?

sion the picture has made upon different people may be in order. Cecil De Mille has said, "The director has real genius." Others who have been deeply impressed are Nazimova, Elinor Glyn, William De Mille, Marion Davies, Frank Keenan, Jim Tully, Tom Geraghty, the late Thomas H. Ince and Al Kaufman. Curtis Melnitz, who is Fairbank's representative in New York, gave metropolitan critics a look at the picture at a Coffee House show. There were noted musicians, writers and dramatists present and the volume of praise was loud and sincere.

"The Salvation Hunters" is reported as being a daring treatment of one of life's undertones—the dramatization of a thought. There is no complicated plot, no weighty story, and yet it is vivid and gripping. A man, woman and child, sucked down into the mud and shadow of hopelessness, fight their way back into the sunlight through the incentive of their faith and dreams; that, in brief, is the story.

Von Sternberg was born in Vienna, May 29, 1894, and came to this country when only 7 years old. During his youth he was sort of a trans-Atlantic commuter. He was graduated from the University of Vienna with several degrees and spent the next ten years of his life in "getting down to earth." In 1914 the embryo author and director began ten years of apprenticeship in motion pictures, writing and editing. Some of his stories were produced, others not. He also wrote a novel, "Daughters of Vienna," which though written in English was published in the city of his birth. He was chief advisor to William A. Brady when the latter was director general of the old World Film Company. During the war he was motion picture expert to the Chief of Staff of the United States Army. Since then he has sought to direct.

MOTION PICTURE APPARATUS COMPANY MOVES QUARTERS

In order that the motion picture trade might get the service that they required, and that those whom they served with still cameras would be adequately cared for, the Motion Picture Apparatus Company has moved its quarters to 110 West 32nd street, where it will be associated with the Camera House of Willoughby's.

What's Wrong With Press Sheets?

covers every angle needed by the exhibitor, shows him how cut-outs actually look."

John A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio: "50-50. First National, because they contain prepared reviews, pre-views exploitation stunts, plenty of good readers, length of feature, and very good prepared ads.

N. Schechts, Cincinnati, Ohio: "Not the best. United Artists because of their special stories on cast."

T. H. F., Bishops-Cas Theatres, Denver: "Better than they use to be. United Artists, because the stories frequently have a high news content and are acceptable without too much cutting and re-writing. I like First National pretty well, too."

Ed. Turner, Imperial Theatre, Ashville, North Carolina: "Only one good one. Paramount. Everything is good, useful and inexpensive."

Five other exhibitors also filled out the questionaire but they neglected to include their name and address. One, speaking about press sheets in general said: "Some good, some bad." He voted for Paramount, Principal, Warner.

"They do not conform with newspaper requirements," said another of these unknowns who picked out Paramount as having the best press sheet, saying its material "is brief and newsie."

The third did not vote but characterized press sheets in general with: "Most fairly good but they do not contain enough new ideas for exploitation. We get lost for new ideas, week in and week out the same thing all the time."

The fourth answered the first question with: "About 60 per cent. Famous-Players, because they have good art work and fairly good informative matter."

"First National meets the needs of the the small town exhibitor," according to the fifth unknown who picked that corporation. As to press sheets in general he commented: "Just fair."

Worse Than Films!

The sessions of the Texas Baptist General Convention, representing 500,000 members of that denomination in the Lone Star State, closed in Dallas this week without a single word having been said against motion pictures. But what the Baptists said about dancing more than made up for the lack of picture talk.

New Copyright Agreement

A reciprocal copyright agreement between the United States and Switzerland has been put into effect, according to an announcement of the State Department. The arrangement is similar to that entered into between the Government of the United States and most of the other leading countries of the world.

Soriero With "U"

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, this week announced the appointment of Thomas D. Soriero, prominent Baltimore theatre manager, as general manager for Universal's theatres. The appointment becomes effective immediately.

Celebrates First Successful Year With Reins Handled by F. C. Munroe

"Promises Fulfilled and Enthusiasms Sustained," Slogan of Producers Distributing Corporation Near Close of First Year of Business—Strong Organization, Functioning Harmoniously, Has Splendid Product to Offer

COINCIDENT with the ending of the old year, Producers Distributing Corporation will celebrate the successful conclusion of its first year under the regime that became effective last January and the record of its accomplishments during the past twelve months justifies the company's adoption of the phrase "Promises Fulfilled and Enthusiams Sustained" as its initial birthday slogan.

Under the guidance of F. C. Munroe, Raymond Pawley, Paul C. Mooney and John C. Flinn the year's history of Producers Distributing Corporation is a continuous series of conspicuous achievements; the outstanding feature of which is the vast exhibitor clientele that has been attracted to the company's releases in the comparatively few months that the new officials and policies have been in operation.

The present exhibitor clientele of the Producers Distributing Corporation is not only wide, but distinctly representative of the finest and foremost in the exhibiting field, and it is to this significant fact that the executives point in proof that promises made last January have been fulfilled and the aims and ambitions of the company realized in the fullest measure of their expectations.

About twelve months ago F. C. Munroe gathered a complement of officials to reorganize the Hodkinson Corporation, and in securing Paul C. Mooney and John C. Flinn as vice-presidents he formed the basis of an organization that since January 1 has continuously commanded the attention of the entire exhibitor body.

The enthusiasm injected into the company by the reorganization and the advent of new officials, expanded and became sustained on the confidence born of success as the new policies rapidly shaped themselves in the concrete form of better pictures from the foremost independent directors; and as each succeeding release found an ever increasing field of first run theatres lined up for their presentation.

And today, with yet another month, of the first twelve to work in, Producers Distributing Corporation finds its releases presented in the finest theatres from coast to coast in the United States and Canada and on the programs of first run theatres in the entire foreign field served by the export organization of William Vogel.

Under the supervision of Paul C. Mooney the sales force has been expanded and strengthened to a point of maximum efficiency, with new branches established for greater convenience and redivisioned under the able divisional management of W. F. Seymour, Cecil Maberry, L. W. Weir and Robert Cotton for more intensive service to the exhibitors and the company's contributing producers.

F. C. MUNROE
President, Producers Distributing Corp.

In the general policy of expansion under Mr. Mooney's supervision new branches were established at New Haven to serve the Middle New England district; at Albany to serve the North Eastern section of New York State, and at Indiana to handle the great increase of business in that section. In the redivision of territory the Central and Western divisions were subdivided by a new Mid-Western division under the management of Robert Cotton and the extensive and representative list of exhibitors now being served under Mr. Mooney's supervision is silent, forceful testimony of his efficient management.

Starting with the basic principles that only pictures of first run quality should form the program of Producers Distributing Corporation and that the exhibitors were entitled to know, well in advance, the exact nature of each release, i. e., its star, director, producer, and story theme, John C. Flinn assumed the responsibility of securing the product and making up the program upon which the company was to establish its reputation and its claim for a place among the foremost releasing companies.

How well this work was done is evidenced by the names of the producers who have contributed their pictures to the 1924 list of releases, and by the fact that the program made up and published in advance, containing complete data on each subject has been carried out exactly in accordance with the prearranged schedule.

Every picture listed at the beginning of the year has been produced and delivered on schedule time. The quality of the productions have been maintained at the consistently high level promised in advance, and these facts stand as tributes to the untiring work and vigilance of John Flinn and the splendid co-operation given by the producers.

Productions released during the year came from such splendidly equipped studios as the Thomas H. Ince plant at Culver City, where the late Thomas H. Ince, Hunt Stromberg and Regal Pictures produced their features, and from the splendid new Peninsula studios at San Mateo, Calif., where Frank Woods and Elmer Harris produced their pictures, and from the Tilford studios at Miami, and from the Biograph studios in New York, and from several of the best independent studios on the coast, where Belasco Productions and Renaud Hoffman produced their successful pictures.

As the executive head of the company F. C. Munroe has fostered the ethics and ideals of commercial intercourse in the general management of his organization and in harmonious accord with his official staff has guided the Producers Distributing Corporation through a gloriously successful year.

THE VICE-PRESIDENTS OF PRODUCERS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

Paul C. Mooney, vice-president in charge of distribution; Raymond Pawley, first vice-president and treasurer; John C. Flinn, vice-president in charge of production and advertising.

Quality and Dependability Standards Used in Selecting Producers Program

WITH practically no set schedule of production under contract on the first day of last January, the Producers Distributing Corporation was faced with the task of immediately securing product; but the confidence of producers in the ability and the policies of the new group of executives made solicitation for pictures unnecessary. Immediately following the announcement that F. C. Munroe had secured Paul Mooney to supervise distribution and John Flinn to direct the advertising and exploitation and take charge of productions, the company was deluged with pictures of every conceivable kind and quality, and the matter of making up a program became a task of elimination.

Quality and dependability were the standards used in the selection of the productions and the producers and within four months the company arranged a complete program of pictures from the first rank of producers and the best equipped studios on both the west and east coasts.

Frank Woods and Elmer Harris, with a group of Western capitalists, opened the new studios at San Mateo, California, and became contributors to the program with a list of five splendid pictures produced under ideal conditions.

Hunt Stromberg increased his activities, and in addition to producing the Harry Carey pictures on a more elaborate production scale, organized the Priscilla Dean unit, and with the great facilities of the Thomas H. Ince studio at his command, contributed two elaborate productions in "The Siren of Seville" and "A Cafe in Cairo," starring the dynamic Priscilla.

Renaud Hoffman contributed two human interest classics in "Not One to Spare" and "The Legend of Hollywood."

Under the auspices of Regal Pictures, such stars as Florence Vidor, James Kirkwood, Lila Lee, Jacqueline Logan and Margaret Livingston were presented in a series of pictures that have been acclaimed successes, while Al. Christie contributed two big specials in "old Your Breath" and "Reckless Romance."

Betty Compson and Lois Wilson were presented by the Tilford Cinema Corporation in big productions made in Florida, while Eastern Productions, Inc., contributed two Helene Chadwcik pictures made at the Biograph Studios.

The late Thomas H. Ince released "Barbara Freitchie" and the Edward Belasco Productions contributed "Welcome Stranger" to a program that has established Producers Distributing Corporation in the prominent position it started out to fill at the beginning of the year.

Harry Lubliner, of Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; S. Charninsky, of the Capitol, Dallas; Lee A. Ochs, of the Piccadilly, New York; James B. Clark, of Rowland & Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh; Edward Fay, of Fay's Circuit, Philadelphia; Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago.

Producers Distributing Pictures Booked by the Finest of First-Run Theatres

Many Take Entire Group, While Others Give Product Place of Importance

FROM coast to coast, from lakes to the gulf, the releases of Producers Distributing Corporation are splendidly represented in the finest of first run theatres, many of which contracted for the entire group of 1924-25 subjects, and are on record as enthusiastic over the box office results of the presentations made to date.

In New York City, Lee A. Ochs opened the new Piccadilly Theatre with the Producers Distributing Corporation release, "Barbara Frietchie," and with the exception of a few weeks the releases of this company have held onto the Piccadilly screen.

Martin Printz, managing director of The Circle Theatre in Cleveland, in signing for the entire group of pictures expressed his confidence in the product by a wire to Paul C. Mooney in which he said: "Am very happy to sign for your first Fall group of pictures, being sure they will be the backbone of the coming season," and in confirmation of his own judgment Mr. Printz has since sent several wires reporting gratifying success of the subjects at his box office.

In Dallas, Texas, S. Charninsky, of Capitol Theatre, has not only lined up with Producers Distributing Corporation but has become an ardent booster for the company's releases. In an interview Mr. Charninsky said: "We feel that we have secured the greatest block of independent pictures on the market in our connection with Producers Distributing Corporation. There are no better producing companies in the motion picture industry, no more competent nor capable stars on the screen than those working under this banner."

In San Francisco the product of the company is presented at The California Theatre, while in Los Angeles the first showings are given at The Forum and The California.

In Boston the product is represented at The Modern and Bacon Theatres under Jake Lourie's management. In Philadelphia at The Fox Theatre; in Pittsburgh at The Rowland & Clark houses; while in Scranton and vicinity M. E. Comerford is playing them in the Comerford chain of theatres.

In Buffalo and Rhode Island territories Edward Fay is presenting the pictures in the Fay Theatres, while in Chicago the subjects are divided between Jones, Linick & Schaefer and the chain operated by Lubliner & Trinz.

In St. Louis William Goldman is presenting the program at The Kings Theatre, while in Detroit the product is seen at The Capitol, The Madison and The Broadway Strand theatres. And Asher Levy is booking the subjects into the Orpheum Theatre circuit.

And most of the other important circuits, including the Marcus Loew chain, have given the releases of the Producers Distributing Corporation an important place on their program.

Fifty-One Headliners in Thirty-One Releases

A SURVEY of the list of Producers Distributing Corporation releases during the year discloses a splendid array of headline names in the stars heading the casts of the various productions, and in many of the pictures the supporting casts contain names that in themselves are box office attractions and justly entitled to be ranked in the star class.

The offerings from the various producers contributing to the Producers Distributing Corporation program during the year have been adorned with such stars and supporting players as Betty Compson, Lois Wilson, Priscilla Dean, Florence Vidor, Helene Chadwick, Percy Marmont, Edmund Lowe, Harry Carey, James Kirkwood, Lila Lee, Patsy Ruth Miller, Matt Moore, Zasu Pitts, Jacqueline Logan, Margaret Livingston, Stuart Holmes, Allen Forrest, Lloyd Hughes, Wallace Beery, John Davidson, Chester Conklin, Zena Keefe, Marguerite Snow, Wallace MacDonald, Edith Roberts, Tyrone Power, Gaston Glass, Ernest Hilliard, Riley Hatch, Malcolm MacGregor, Vernon Steele, Richard Travers, T. Roy Barnes, Harry Meyers, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Jack Duffy, Wanda Hawley, Mitchell Lewis, Lincoln Plumer, Morgan Wallace, Niles Welch, Alan Roscoe, Lillian Rich, Henry Hull, Jane Thomas, Bryant Washburn, Billie Dove, Lloyd Hamilton, Dorothy Mackaill and Dorothy Devore, making fifty-one headliners in a total of thirty-one features distributed during 1924.

PRODUCERS' DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION has real reason to be proud of the Record of Achievement detailed on the pages that precede this. It is more than a gesture, the achievement is fact. And as the achievement of the past is fact, so also is it a bright omen for the future.

Men of the calibre of F. C. Munroe, Raymond Pawley, John Flinn, and Paul Mooney deserve the success that has marked Producers Distributing since they took the reins into their hands.

It has been no mean task to take "just another distributing organization" and lift it to a position where it is a definite, important factor, to be given full consideration by the exhibitor scanning the field for sources of supply, and by the worthy independent producer seeking free, open, and efficient channels to the market.

The task has been done. It could only have been done by men commanding the full confidence of the exhibitor, the loyal support of real selling forces, and the unquestioned faith of independent creators.

ROBERT E. WELSH.

Promises fulfilled

JUST a few months have elapsed since the Producers Distributing Corporation, imbued with a spirit of square dealing and service, made a promise. That promise was to give to the exhibitors of this country a program of releases second to none in artistic quality and box-office power.

How well that promise has been fulfilled is evidenced by thousands of exhibitors throughout the country who are relying on the Producers Distributing Corporation group of releases to supply their entire need for money-making box-office attractions.

"Just booked your magnificent production, 'BARBARA FRIETCHIE,' as the opening attraction at my new theatre 'The Piccadilly,' New York's most up-to-date house. After looking over the field I was convinced that your picture ideally combined necessary artistic and box-office qualities. Added attractions will be Vincent Lopez and his new Piccadilly orchestra and John Hammond, the country's leading organist. I cordially invite you to attend the opening Friday, September 26th. Best regards."

"The contract for the product of the Producers Distributing Corporation which we have just signed with your organization is to us one of the most satisfactory we have ever entered into, during the years we have been in the show business. We believe that we have obtained for the patrons of the Capitol Theatre the very best pictures available. That the pictures of the Producers Distributing Corporation will form the backbone of our programs goes without saying. There are no more splendid stars appearing on the screen today, than those who appear in your productions, no more competent directors and surely no better authors who have supplied the wonderful story material."

Weinberg Quits as Manager of Olympic Theatre, Buffalo

Eddie Weinberg, one of the best known exhibitors in Western New York, has resigned as manager of the Olympic Theatre, operated by Universal Pictures Corporation and located on Lafayette Square, Buffalo. Eddie formerly managed the old Mark Strand and Elmwood Theatres in Buffalo. His resignation came as a surprise to his many friends in the city. He has not as yet announced his plans for the future. While at the Olympic he put over some fine exploitation and publicity stunts.

Bath, N. Y., now boasts a fine new picture theatre. It is the Babcock, which was opened to the public on November 24. The house, which seats 700, was built by W. W. Babcock and is being leased by the Schine Theatre Corporation. E. J. Dodds, representing the Schine interests, arranged for the opening, assisted by Harold Lee, former manager of the Gem, who has been appointed resident manager. The Gem has been closed.

Angola, N. Y., also was the scene of an opening the past week, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wiatrowski presenting to this lively little Lake Erie town a beautiful new picture house seating 550, with a beautiful and cozy looking interior and an attractive exterior. house has a fine orchestral organ. "Barbara Frietchie" received its Western New York premiere at the house, which has been named the Angola Theatre. A delegation of Buffalo exchange men attended the opening.

Members of Buffalo Zone, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., are making elaborate plans for a big Movie Ball to be held in Elmwood Music Hall, Thursday evening, January 29. Jim Wallingford has been named chairman of the arrangements committee and Jim is going to spring more surprises than were ever staged in this city.

Judge John W. Schatt, whose Opera House in Gowanda, N. Y., was burned to the ground a few weeks ago, has taken over the Gowanda Gardens in that town and converted the place into a picture theatre. There are reports that a new house is to be built in Gowanda in which Judge Schatt will be financially interested, plans for which are now being drawn by a Buffalo architect. The names of those interested in the new house are expected to be announced shortly.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria, Buffalo, has tied up with merchants in the vicinity of Grand and Ferry streets, where the house is located, as well as the community newspaper, in a contest in which residents are enabled to win many beautiful things. Those who win them are notified by letter from the Merchants' Association to apply to Manager Skinner for the prize.

Duplication

Chicago, with several hundred theatres, has a duplication of names and some plan should be worked out that would do away with three State theatres, two Victoria, two 20th Century, three Parkway, two Liberty, two Harding, two Grand, two Ashland, two Irving and two Bell theatres.

It should be an easy matter to change the names, as there is much confusion, especially along Film Row.

The Auditorium in Auburn, which was taken over recently by the Fitzer Brothers of Syracuse, has been renamed the Strand. The new management has installed a ten-piece orchestra and is showing high-class pictures at an admission scale of 10 and 15 cents.

Residents of Mount Morris, N. Y., can't kick on the class of entertainment being given them by Manager Charlie Martina of the Family Theatre. During Thanksgiving week the program included "The Sainted Devil," "The Last of the Duanes" and "The Female."

Maine

As a result of trouble between the Maine-New Hampshire Theatres, Inc., and the musicians' union of Augusta there are no orchestras in the Opera House and Colonial in Augusta, the Acme at Hallowell and the Coliseum and Johnson theatres in Gardiner. The union demands a year-around contract for ten men, whereas the houses in the past have had orchestras only in the spring and winter.

J. M. Edgar Hart has become the manager of the Colonial Theatre and Opera House in Augusta. Mr. Hart came to Augusta from San Diego, Cal.

Abraham Goodside has installed an orchestra in his Empire Theatre in Portland, which he recently reopened after spending several thousand dollars upon alterations. The leader is Paul Pollock. Leo Lesieur continues as organist.

The Rumford Operating Company of Lewiston has been granted a charter of incorporation. The concern will operate theatres and amusement halls. The capital is given as $20,000. Maude A. Thurston of Lewiston is president.

The Maine and New Hampshire Theatre Company has plans for two theatres to be erected in Rumford Falls. One is to be named the State and the other the Majestic. The company is the operating enterprise for Famous Players' New England theatres.

News from Massachusetts

George A. Giles, operator of a string of picture houses in this state, has been confined to his home in Belmont for more than a week with a high fever. Physicians attending Mr. Giles announce that the symptoms in his case are well defined, but they are not yet prepared to say from what ailment the theatrical manager is suffering. Mr. Giles, in addition to his activities as a film exhibitor, is the managing drector of the St. James Theatre in Boston, a high-class dramatic stock house.

Manager Joseph H. Brennan is the lucky holder of the job as managing director of Marcus Loew's State Theatre in Boston. At Mr. Loew's Orpheum Theatre the manager is Victor J. Wilson. And how this team does advertise! A week ago a street car was run all over Boston and it was plastered with advertisements for the current shows at the two Loew houses. The car was decorated in a most artistic manner and it was an exploitation howl that could not but help be heard all over the town.

Philip Markell, head of the Atlas Amusement Company, the headquarters of which are in Boston, is a busy man these days, keeping his houses supplied with the cream of the film world because all of them are satisfying the "innards" of the box office.

"Janice Meredith" opened at the Shubert-Majestic in Boston on November 24 with the orchestra scaled at $1 top price for the night shows.

First-run feature films in Boston cinema houses the week of November 24 were: Gordon's Olympia, Washington street, "Madonna of the Streets"; Fenway, "The Garden of Weeds"; Boston Theatre, "K, the Unknown"; Modern and Beacon theatres, "The Narrow Street" and "The Warrens of Virginia"; Loew's State, "Forbidden Paradise"; Majestic, "Janice Meredith."

Frank Shea, owner of the Worcester Theatre in Worcester, has begun to play Sunday night concerts of vaudeville.

The Capitol Theatre building in Malden was damaged to the extent of approximately $3,000 when fire broke out in a beauty parlor occupying space in the structure. No one was in the theatre at the time. The auditorium was damaged by the dense smoke.

The Rialto Theatre Company, Inc., of Worcester has been granted article of incorporation. The concern will engage in the theatre and show business, the papers state. The incorporators are James A. Greeko, Marcellina E. Greeko, Frederick Fedell and Silvia Fedell, all of Worcester.

Alpha W. Haynes, former owner of the Castro circuit of theatres in New England, died recently at his home in Lynn. He bought the Castro circuit in 1897. He was the first to present moving pictures in Fall River. Mr. Haynes was recognized as the founder of the Universal Amusement League, which later was reorganized as the White Rats. In 1917 Mr. Haynes was the manager of the Central Square Theatre, now the E. M. Loew Capitol, in Lynn. Mr. Haynes is survived by his wife, Julia E. Redmond Haynes.

The Chelsea Theatre in Chelsea has been having some difficulty with its union projectionists, stage mechanics and musicians. It is said that the theatre management had refused to meet the scale of wages agreed to by these unions and the Allied Theatre Managers' Association.

David I. Perkins now is actively in charge of the Merrimack Square Theatre in Lowell. It is a Famous Players theatre.

Reginald V. Tribe, manager of the Empire Theatre in New Bedford, is in season so far as business and work is concerned. He is working at top speed to keep on drawing New Bedford film fans to his theatre and they're responding with a will.

Manager O'Donnell of the Fields Corner Theatre in Dorchester, a Gordon circuit house, is competing with the Dorchester Theatre, two blocks away, with an Opportunity Night contest every Tuesday.

The Shawmut Theatre in Roxbury is conducting jazz band contests every Saturday night, with a cash prize for the orchestra that wins the most applause from the audience. The stunt is packing the Shawmut.

John Freeman is the live-wire manager of the Strand Theater in Malden and he keeps this amusement emporium on the map with his up-to-date showmanship methods.

Approximately $5,000 was the net receipts of the benefit show presented in the Colonial Theatre, Boston, by the Theatre Treasurers' Club of New England. The officers of the club are as follows: President, Ernest A. Grenier; vice-president, Frank D. Orvitt; treasurer, Henry J. Hunt; secretary, Archie Birtwell; counsel, J. Albert Brackett. The board of directors: Ernest A. Grenier, Henry J. Hunt, George R. McCarthy, Frank D. Orvitt, William C. Nixon and Arthur G. Manley.

Manager Herman Lorence, assisted by Joseph Maddern, put on a local movie stunt last week as part of a fine exploitation campaign in behalf of the world premiere of "Is Love Everything?" at the Bellevue Theatre in Niagara Falls. Scenes in which local young people took part were made on the stage of the theatre each evening.

Ben Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Buffalo, is one lucky guy. He won a radio set worth about 150 iron men.

James Marcius, after redecorating and putting up a new front, has changed the name of the Happy Hour Theatre in Springville, N. Y., to the Pantheon.

To the two girls receiving the most votes in a local popularity contest being run under the auspices of the Strand, Niagara Falls, Charlie Hayman, proprietor, is offering a free trip to Hollywood. The stunt is being run in co-operation with the Niagara Falls Gazette.

"The Ten Commandments" opens in Buffalo at the Majestic Theatre on November 30 at prices ranging up to $1.50. A symphony orchestra of twenty playing the Riesenfeld accompaniment is being advertised.

Little Falls, N. Y., Showman Boasts Clever Fox Terrier

Bob Wagner, who at one time headed an animal show that traveled throughout the country, is manager of the Gateway Theatre in Little Falls, N. Y., and numbers as one of his most valuable and trusted assistants an Irish terrier that responds to the name of "Patsy." Few, if any, of Mr. Wagner's many friends of the present day can picture him in a costume of the riding master, cracking the whip as the animals went through their stunts. Mr. Wagner dropped into town the other day, booking pictures for the months to come and incidentally recounting many a tale of his days with animal shows.

As for "Patsy," the little Irish terrier is the pride of his owner's heart. The dog is almost human and is frequently sent from Mr. Wagner's home to the theatre office, where he jumps into a chair and keeps an eye on things during his owner's absence. In fact, the dog is such a good guard that no one around the theatre can do so much as touch a single article in Mr. Wagner's absence. When the animal wants a drink he simply goes to the faucet, noses it around until the water starts, drinks his fill, and then is forced to look wistfully for someone to turn the water off, for as yet Mr. Wagner has been unable to teach him the stunt of turning the faucet the other way.

Claude Fish of the American Theatre in Schenectady, a thoroughgoing exhibitor, is somewhat different from many of the exhibitors from the Electric City these days in that he is not complaining about business conditions. Mr. Fish admits that he is obliged to give the public the very best pictures obtainable in order to command capacity crowds. Out of 38 nights, there have been just six, at the present time, when Mr. Fish has not been "standing 'em up." His house seats 500 on the lower floor and 160 in the balcony. He charges a 17-cent admission. The house has been running for twelve years and enjoys the distinction of never having been closed through sickness or death on the part of any owner.

Donald Bane, who runs theatres in Athens and Ravena, is reported to have leased the newly built Masonic Hall in Germantown, which replaces the one that was burned some time ago.

The Majestic in Utica, which has been playing pictures and which is included in the Robbins group of houses, is slated to go over to stock the latter part of the month or the fore part of December.

When Jimmy Rose, new owner of the Bijou Theatre in Troy, signs his name to contracts these days he uses the pen and pencil which was presented him by members of the Film Salesmen's Club of Albany a few days ago. Mr. Rose has also been made an honorary life member of the organization. H. C. Bissell has been elected to succeed Mr. Rose as president, with John Thurlow as vice-president.

There were thrills aplenty one night last week for J. M. Moran, who runs Dolan's Opera House at Coxsackie and is showing pictures four days a week. Mr. Moran was not obliged to rely upon pictures to furnish the thrills. It all happened when he leased his house for a colored dance. During the evening some argument started and the razors began to fly. One man was badly cut across the back. Mr. Moran admitted that he lost no time in leaving the theatre.

H. E. Flack will start at once in the redecoration of his theatre in Potsdam. The seats will also be rearranged to some extent and additional ones installed. It is planned to add a new ventilation system to the house and as a result the Star will probably rank as one of the finest in the North Country.

J. M. Schine of Gloversville, in town the other day, admitted that he was not competing for a place in the "Fifty-seven Varieties" class, although now operating fifty-one houses in various parts of the state. Mr. Schine's house in Bath opened this week, and the Newark house is scheduled to open next week.

Herman Vineburg, resident manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, is complaining these days of what might be termed "the influence of his picture complex." When "Feet of Clay" was shown Mr. Vineburg experienced considerable trouble with the arches of his feet, and last week when "Hot Water" was being shown Mr. Vineburg, suffering from a bad cold, was obliged to resort to a hot water bottle at his home.

The first meeting of the Albany zone committee named at the Buffalo gathering some months ago will be held at the Hotel Ten Eyck in Albany on December 3. The committee consists of Samuel Suckno of the Albany and Regent theatres, W. W. Farley, head of Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady; Meyer Schine of Gloversville, Vic Warren of Massena and Louis Buettner of Cohoes. Two additional directors will be named at the meeting.

Because John Mattice of the Novelty Theatre in Middleburg remembered a promise of several weeks ago, C. R. Halligan of the local Universal exchange is munching apples these days. In addition to running his theatre, Mr. Mattice picks up quite a little change on the side each fall with hot dog privileges at various fairs. Last fall he told Mr. Halligan to mark the calendar and in case of clear weather on the big day at the Binghamton Fair he would present Mr. Halligan with a brand new hat. Mr. Halligan, however, had a couple of hats, and after so informing Mr. Mattice the apples were substituted. The only trouble arose from inquisitiveness on the part of Mr. Halligan's neighbors, when the apples were delivered in an ordinary bottled beer case.

Jack Mathews, a well known exhibitor of Plattsburg, is sick in bed with the grippe, following his recent trip to Film Row in Albany.

The call of the wild was too strong for Nate Robbins and Rae Candee of Utica on the last day of the deer season, and even though film men were in town the two exhibitors hied to the mountains in the hope of bagging a deer. There was some excuse, however, for the deer hunting season in New York State was limited to but a few days on account of the forest fires.

LILLIAN RICH

Featured player in Cecil B. De Mille's Paramount picture "The Golden Bed."

The new seats for the Leland Theatre in Albany finally arrived last week, and by working at odd hours Manager Oscar Perrin and his force of men have installed the seats without any interruption of the regular program. The new seats are wider than the ones that have served in the past and add much to the comfort of patrons.

"Doc" Fraser, who runs the Temple Theatre in Richmondville, spent a busy day in Albany during the past week, visiting every colored hangout endeavoring to locate an orchestra for Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Fraser's search is said to have been so thorough that he is now qualified to speak with authority on Albany's colored section.

Harold Farrell, who with his mother runs the Lincoln Theatre in Schenectady, is making the theatre a paying proposition.

Over 2,300 boys and girls in Troy fairly stormed the Troy Theatre last Saturday morning at the first Junior Movie ever given in that city. It is now a foregone conclusion that these movies will be held in Troy from time to time, with a 10-cent admission and a program that will include a feature appealing to the children, a news reel and a comedy.

Bill Shirley, manager of the State, Strand and Albany theatres in Schenectady, subscribes to and saves every one of the trade papers, which may be found in neatly arranged piles in his office at the State The-

Toronto's Strand Reopens on a Popular Price Basis

After being closed for some months, the Strand Theatre, Toronto, has been reopened on a popular-price basis, the reopening feature being "If Winter Comes." Although this is one of the large downtown houses, the admission scale is down to 10 and 15 cents and programs are changed twice weekly. In the many years of its existence the Strand has experienced many vicissitudes. For many years it was operated by Jerry Shea, then under the management of Clarence Robson, now supervisor of theatres for Famous Players at Toronto. It was under the control of Famous Players Canadian Corporation for some time, and then it was secured by the Allens and renamed the Piccadilly Theatre.

The death occurred at Cranbrook, B. C., in an automobile accident of George Hyt, well known as an exhibitor at Lethbridge, Alberta, in his 33rd year. It was only twelve years ago that Mr. Hyt arrived in Western Canada as an immigrant from Greece, but in a very short time he attained a state of affluence because of keen business judgment.

Manager J. M. Franklin of the B. F. Keith Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, made a distinct hit with local theatregoers on November 17 when he jumped into the breach following the collapse of arrangements for concerts by the band of the Princess Patrica's Canadian Light Infantry, following the band's return to the Dominion from England where it had played at the British Empire Exhibition. The concerts were to have been held in another Ottawa theatre, but when the band arrived in the Canadian capital it was discovered that nothing had been done at the theatre, not even a house crew being available. Joe Franklin promptly invited the band to play at the Keith theatre, the current film and vaudeville program being prolonged for the evening. Mr. Franklin also recognized all tickets which had been sold for the engagement at the other house, the purchasers being directed to Keith's.

M. A. Pollakoff of Toronto is responsible for the erection and opening of one of the most attractive of small suburban theatres in the new Kingswood Theatre, located at 922 Kingston road. The pretty house serves a new and rapidly growing section of Eastern Toronto.

The Savoy Theatre at Moose Jaw, Sask., now looks like a brand new theatre, extensive alterations and decorations having been carried out recently at a cost of $8,000. The improvements include a mezzanine floor, ladies' rest room, foyer and air-cushion seats on the orchestra floor. The reopening feature was "Hook and Ladder."

The Ontario Division of the M. P. T. O. has been showing considerable activity during the fall months, no less than two general meetings having been held at Toronto in November alone. A recent social function was a stag party which was held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, with exhibitors and exchange officials present in large numbers. Officers of the Ontario M. P. T. O. have also been busy with end-of-the-year duties, the annual election being due.

Milwaukee

Henry Taylor, formerly with the Garden and Butterfly theatres, has returned to Milwaukee from California, where he has been for almost a year, and has been appointed manager of the Butterfly, a downtown house, by John Freuler, the owner. Freuler has been conducting the management of the house himself for the last few months. With Taylor's return, Mr. Freuler has announced that the house is likely to undergo a change in policy. At present it shows first and second run pictures at an admission price of 25 cents, with two changes a week. Either three changes a week of second run pictures will be shown at 15 cents, or the house will go to 50 cents with first runs entirely, Mr. Freuler said. This is due to the fact that stiff competition from small time vaudeville at 22 cents makes a middle course impractical.

Leo A. Landau, who several months ago adopted the policy of bringing elaborate stage numbers to his Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee to augment the regular picture programs, has put over a big beat by signing Gilda Gray, shimmy queen late of Ziegfeld Follies, for an appearance at his theatre during the first visit she has paid to her home in this city since she rose to fame. Gilda, with a company of six, will be at the Alhambra during the week beginning November 29, just a week ahead of the Follies, which play the Davidson.

Kuschlein and Martin have opened a combination dance hall and picture theatre in Plain, Wis., an inland town about fifty miles from Madison.

When "The Mine With the Iron Door" opened at Saxe's Strand in Milwaukee, Stan Brown, manager of the house, obtained the services of a commercial aviator who painted the name of the picture on the bottom of his plane and flew over the Marquette University athletic field as thousands watched the school team battling on the gridiron.

Connecticut

Vaudeville has been added to the programs at the Circle Theatre in Manchester and the Bristol Theatre in Bristol.

During October the state police inspected 80 theatres.

Vaudeville has been dropped at the Jacques Theatre in Waterbury. Now pictures only are being shown.

John Scanlon, manager of the Alhambra Theatre in Torrington, is showing the natives what real film exploitation actually is. And he has a very competent assistant in Jack Delaney.

Albany

atre. In fact, Bill goes a bit further and declares that he could not get along without them.

George Roberts, chief factotum of the Berinstein circuit and a busy man these days, was up from Elmira during the week and reports business as being far ahead of a year ago at all houses.

Ben Apple, weighty owner of the American and King theatres in Troy, lost a couple of pounds one day last week. It all came about when Mr. Apple arrived in Albany at 10 a. m. and was still making the rounds of the exchanges at 6 p. m., rearranging his dates. Mr. Apple remarked that it was the busiest day he had spent in many a month.

William Shirley of Schenectady is back home from a swing that took him to New York, Pittsburgh and Buffalo. There is a little story to the effect that Mr. Shirley was successful in cleaning up in the recent market rise. He is already planning a big blow-out for the employes of his three theatres, which will be in the nature of a Christmas party, probably held at the State Theatre. Both the Strand and the State theatres are showing exceptionally good pictures these days, and with better business conditions already prevailing at the Locomotive Works and the General Electric plant, the theatres will probably fare better than in the past. "The Man Who Came Back" has been booked to open on December 5.

Even though Claude Fish of the American Theatre in Schenectady does not more than break even on some of the bigger pictures he shows at his 17-cent house, he figures that these give his house prestige and that he is the winner in the long run. "The Covered Wagon," "Three Weeks" and "The Great White Way" have been the best bets with Mr. Fish so far this year. The house boasts of one of the finest violinists in this part of the country, a man who was formerly with the Hotel Ritz in London and whose selections are frequently broadcast from WGY.

It now looks as though Elmer Crowninshield has forsaken the exhibitor ranks for good and for all. Having sold the Bijou Theatre, Mr. Crowninshield is devoting his entire attention to his store handling motion picture supplies.

Albany's First Graphic exchange announced last week that J. Berkowitz of the Buffalo branch, in Albany during the week, had sold to the Schine brothers the "B 9" series for their circuit.

Shirley Mason's Life Story

The first installment of the life story of Shirley Mason appeared in the Nov. 29th issue of "Fox Newspaper Service," weekly press sheet of the Fox Film Corporation, published for the benefit of the newspapers of the country.

Gottlob Company Takes Over the Tivoli in San Francisco

The Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, for ten years conducted as a picture house by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit but which has been dark much of the past year, has been taken over by J. J. Gottlob and associates, redecorated and refurnished, and will be reopened on December 22 as the Columbia Theatre, offering stage attractions, with feature pictures at intervals. The present Columbia on Geary street has been showing moving pictures for several months, "The Ten Commandments" having completed a run of eight weeks, following "The Thief of Bagdad," which also had a long run.

J. P. Ryan of the Vallejo Theatre, Vallejo, Cal., and Frank Parker of the Lyric Theatre, Modesto, Cal., are winning fame for themselves, and for the industry they represent, in the field of sports. The former has become a confirmed angler and recently landed a striped bass which weighed more than thirty-five pounds, while the latter has won the title of champion of the Stanislaus Country Club through his prowess at golf.

"Captain Blood," originally booked for the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, was shown instead at the California Theatre, owing to the desire of the Vitagraph management to have it shown as soon as possible. Manager Nat Holt and Director of Publicity Charles E. Kurtzman effected some neat tie-up coups with the marines.

Frank Burhans, formerly with Associated First National, San Francisco, but more recently in charge of a picture house at Modesto, Cal., has been placed in charge of the U. C. Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., succeeding Maurice F. Lowery.

Contracts have been awarded by the Pacific State Theatres, Inc., for the remodeling of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal. An entire new front will be installed, the house remodeled and redecorated and changes made in the heating system. It will be reopened in the spring.

Herman Wobber, Pacific Coast manager of Famous Players-Lasky and formerly interested in several San Francisco theatres, has returned from a two months' tour of Europe made in company with Mrs. Wobber.

Picture houses at Crockett and surrounding towns have been closed owing to an epidemic of infantile paralysis.

Charles Douglass, for many years owner of the Merced Theatre, Merced, Cal., but of late in business at Los Angeles, has disposed of interests there and returned to San Francisco.

J. H. ("Lani") Magoon, for many years connected with the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., but who disposed of his interests in this concern some time ago, is in San Francisco for an extended visit and spends considerable of his time on Film Row.

H. W. Poole, a leading exhibitor of Klamath Falls, Ore., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, purchasing supplies and arranging bookings.

The T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, San Francisco, has completed arrangements for the erection of a 700-seat picture house at North Sacramento, Cal., the theatre to be ready for occupancy in the spring.

Lawrence Borg, manager and part owner of the Varsity Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., is back in the College City following a mysterious absence, which has been explained by the published notice of his marriage at San Jose to Miss Emma Soule.

Cincinnati

Incorporation papers have been taken out for the new Keith Theatre at Columbus, Ohio, by Ben Heidingsfeld and I. Libson of Cincinnati, Libson at present controlling all the first-run downtown houses in Cincinnati, as also houses in Columbus and Dayton, Ohio; Louisville, Ky., and other points. The organization will be known as the B. F. Keith Columbus Company. The capital stock is $1,750,000, of which $1,000,000 is to be preferred and the balance common. The new house will be located on Broad street near the Deshler Hotel, and will be operated on the continuous vaudeville and picture policy, discontinuing the all-vaudeville, two-a-day policy now in vogue.

The Pastime Theatre, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, has been closed by Manager Louis Eich, who says that he will not reopen the house until at least the first of the year. Poor business is given as the cause of the temporary shutdown.

George Shenker, an exhibitor of Elyria, Ohio, has purchased the Elyria, Strand and Park theatres in that city from the Frederick estate.

Buel B. Reisinger, musician, who was conductor of the Capitol Theatre orchestra in Cincinnati when that house was a part of the Ascher chain, died suddenly in Atlanta, Ga. Reisinger also conducted orchestras in Dayton and Columbus movie houses.

The Ceramic Theatre at East Liverpool, Ohio, was visited by yeggs who broke open the safe and escaped with about $100.

A new 350-seat house has been opened at New Boston, Ohio, by J. S. Davis, to be known as the Westland Theatre.

The East Ohio Theatre Company has been incorporated at Cambridge, Ohio, by John F. Smith, J. O'Hara, George R. Gaumer and others.

Washington State News

Almost the first official act of President John Hamrick of the M. P. T. O. was the sending of cordial letters of appreciation to everyone whose co-operation had made possible the wonderful success of the big "Pot Pourri." Mr. Hamrick is starting off with the right idea, as the boys certainly spared nothing to help put it over, and a word of thanks and appreciation goes a long ways.

Could not find anyone who looked enough like us to play "twin" so we had to pay our way into the Palace Hip this week. The management and the Seattle Star held such a successful "Twin Party" on Monday night and had so many twins call in person all during the week that the special event was stretched to last as long as the twins reported during the week. All twins were admitted free, and those under 15 years also were supplied with tickets for their parents.

H. J. ("Harry") Carey has sold his Good Luck Theatre at 25th and Jackson streets, Seattle, to Joe Bratt, formerly of Portland. Carey says he will buy another house—"some time"—but is in no hurry unless just the right location should bob up to tempt him.

William J. Peters is planning the erection of a new house on the corner of 23rd and Main streets, Vancouver, Wash. It will be called the Society.

O. M. Jacobsen, formerly operator of D. Constanti's Liberty Theatre, Tacoma, opened his new theatre in Gig Harbor, Wash., on November 23 with "Barbara Frietchie."

Henry Turner has reopened the Empress Theatre, Missoula. It had been dark for almost a year.

C. L. Abbott has opened his new house in Malone, Wash., formerly owned by W. P. Armour of the Armour Circuit. The latter includes houses in Montesano, Elma and a new house in McCleary.

W. J. Pilz, of Pilz & Swanson, owners of the Star, Orpheum, Apollo and Everett theatres, has returned from an extended trip to New York.

M. H. Newman's resignation from the general management of Columbia theatres in Seattle and Portland has given rise to much speculation concerning his future plans. Mr. Newman has no announcement at present; but we know him to be a high-powered man, and we also know he has something under his hat. Therefore we await his statement with interest.

R. K. Dunham, formerly owner of a house in Mount Vernon, now owner of the Manhattan, Charleston, Wash., was on Film Row this week arranging some of his bookings. Dad Abbott of Sedro Woolley was also in.

D. G. Inverarity of the New Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., tied up with a leading department store for a weekly fashion revue covering a period of six weeks.

H. L. Akins, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Seattle, is convalescing from a severe illness and back on the job, feeling and looking quite fit.

Los Angeles

The new Garfield Egyptian Theatre at Alhambra was formally opened this week with elaborate ceremonies. The playhouse is located at Valley boulevard and Garfield avenue. It was erected by Warren G. Kellow and Theodore Nagel at a cost of approximately $300,000. The theatre is designed after the Egyptian style and luxuriously furnished. It is under the management of Lou Bard, with J. B. England of Alhambra the local manager. The policy of the house will include a special vaudeville performance on Saturday and Sunday. One of the features of the theatre will be a nursery on the mezzanine floor where mothers may watch the performance with their children. The music will include a pipe organ and a seven-piece orchestra.

Sid Grauman has announced that the Fox production of "The Iron Horse" will succeed "The Thief of Bagdad" when the latter production closes its long run at the Hollywood Egyptian in two weeks.

When Morris Levison transferred his eastern theatrical enterprises to Los Angeles, his first move was to take a lease on the Mission Theatre, for which he has secured the first-run Warner Brothers Classics of the Screen. This Broadway picture house under its new policy will open with Rin-Tin-Tin in "Find Your Man." Mr. Levison has brought with him from his eastern organization Arnold Stoltz, to manage the theatre.

Pittsburgh

The new Capitol Theatre at Charleston, W. Va., has reopened its doors on the site of the old theatre, destroyed by fire last December. The house was entirely rebuilt. William F. Brooker, theatrical and picture man of fourteen years' experience, is manager of the house. The house seats 1,190 persons, 671 in the orchestra, 261 in the first balcony and 258 in the rear balcony. The New Capitol is a straight picture house.

Paul Dattola reopened his Grand Theatre, Springdale, November 24, and the house is now known as the New Grand. The theatre had been closed for ten weeks prior to its reopening, the seating capacity having been increased from 200 to 400.

Boyd Wright has bought part of the building now occupied by Earle D. Clayton's furniture store at Pullman, W. Va., and will install a picture theatre there.

Lewis Hepinger has reopened the Orpheum at Clarion. He recently purchased the house from Mr. O'Brien.

O. J. Sybert, who is looking after his brother's three theatres in Moundsville, W. Va., was a Pittsburgh visitor recently.

Guy Ida, owner of the Star Theatre, Tarentum, denies the insistent rumors that he is planning to discontinue the operation of the house, and furthermore states that his lease at that location has several years to run.

Sam Lurie and Nat Cherkosly on November 19 took over A. H. Geisler's Grandview Theatre in Duquesne Heights, Pittsburgh. The former owner recently redecorated and enlarged the house, and states that he is undecided as to his future plans.

F. C. Norris has sold the Auditorium at Burgettstown to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Monjella of Slovan. George Clair, well-known theatre man of Burgettstown, visited the Arco Theatre and was so well pleased with the new building and future prospects of this new plant that he purchased the entire outfit, building and equipment.

Owner Long, of Long's Opera House at Johnsonburg, brought down a big deer on the first day of his hunting trip.

"Bill" O'Brien, who for twelve years conducted the Orpheum at Clarion, which he recently sold to Louis Hepinger, states that he will build a new theatre in that town next spring.

Reports are coming in from many sources that Mike Marks is doing a land office business at the Venango Theatre, Oil City, and the wiseacres who said he paid too high a price for it are silent.

Walter Silverberg of Greenville, accompanied by his usual pep and wit, was conspicuous on Film Row the past week.

Detroit

Lou Cohen, of the firm of Ben and Lou Cohen, Inc., operators of the Colonial and a string of neighborhood theatres, took one day off from viewing pictures last week. The occasion was the arrival of a handsome 7-pound boy.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan have decided that exhibitor members should eat free at least four times a year. Therefore they have decided that four times during the year, on days on which the regular monthly meeting of directors are being held, members shall be invited to a luncheon jollification. Speakers will also be a free attraction on these days.

The Lyric Theatre, in the heart of Mt. Clemens, a Detroit suburb, has been leased by Leon Krim, proprietor of the Riverside Hotel. Leon has had charge of several Detroit theatres in the past and will be active in the management of the Lyric.

Washington, D. C.

Feeling that the word "Cosmopolitan" is too long as a title for a theatre, Julian Brylawski, head of the organization which is constructing a large picture theatre and office building at Thirteenth and E streets northwest, has announced that it will be known as the Earle Theatre, being named after a theatre in Philadelphia which is providing the same sort of entertainment that it is planned to offer at the new house. The theatre now under construction is the successor to the Cosmos Theatre, on Pennsylvania avenue near Ninth street, operated by Mr. Brylawski as a picture house for a number of years and now used for burlesque.

The Tivoli, at Fourteenth street and Park road northwest, has been added to the number of theatres throughout the country whose programs are broadcast. Under arrangements just completed with station WRC, operated by the Radio Corporation of America, whose plant is just across the street, special organ recitals from the Tivoli will be "put on the air" once a week, the music being furnished by Otto F. Beck, concert organist of the Ambassador Theatre.

Iowa

E. W. Eistenrager has changed the name of his theatre at Alvord, Ia., from the Strand to the Opera House.

The Palace Theatre at Rockford, Ia., has been taken over by the Iowa Theatres Company of Mason City, Ia. This company owns the Star at Mason City, Ia., and the Regent and Empress at Cedar Falls, Ia.

Sam F. Negley and Henry Muessel of Ansley, Neb., are opening a new theatre at that place.

A. G. Miller, formerly at Atkinson, Neb., has taken over the Lyric Theatre at Clay Center, Neb.

F. M. Honey, formerly proprietor of the Isis Theatre at Cedar Rapids, Ia., and before that proprietor of the Moon at Tecumseh, Neb., was visiting exchanges in Omaha last week, acting very much as though he had a new location in mind somewhere.

The Casino Theatre at Glidden, Ia., has closed temporarily.

"Love's Wilderness," a First National release.

Texas

W. J. Lylte of San Antonio, said to be the largest individual theatre owner in the Southwest, has bought the 16-months lease on the Cozy Theatre at Houston, Texas, from Gabe Laskin, at a reported price of $10,000. The theatre is owned by Jesse H. Jones, capitalist. It had been under lease to Laskin for the past seven years, including the boom "war" period. The Laskins are well known in Texas also, Myer Laskin, father of the Houston manager, having opened the first show in Fort Worth. Aaron Laskin now manages the Lyceum Theatre in Memphis, Tenn.

Joe Baldridge, Jr., has bought an interest with Joe Houdek in the Lyric Theatre at Ennis, Texas, and they have awarded a contract for a fine new theatre in that bustling North Texas metropolis, just west of the present Lyric Theatre. H. O. Blanding drew plans for the theatre, which will seat 600 and have a $7,500 pipe organ.

The municipal theatre at Temple, Texas, owned by the City of Temple, has been leased to W. F. Sonnemann of Waco and Temple, exhibitor. The municipal theatre has been more or less of a "white elephant" for years, but compared with this fact is another and perhaps stronger one that Mr. Sonnemann has never tackled a losing proposition that he couldn't eventually turn into a success.

News from Chicago Territory

At the monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners three vacancies were declared and the following exhibitors were elected to the board: W. E. Weeks of Sterling, Andrew L. Hamline of Macomb and Charles Carpenter of East Moline, Ill. Other routine matters were disposed of and the work of the organization committee was favorably commented on.

Managing Director Joseph Hopp of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners reports the following new members enrolled: G. J. Burkitt, Lyric Theatre, Morrison; M. A. Law, Orpheum Theatre, Savanna; Edward Fredericks, Web Theatre, Savanna; Wm. H. Schrader, Vaudette Theatre, Sterling; Irving J. Bassette, Yorkville Theatre, Yorkville; Ingersoll & Boget, American Theatre, Sandwich; Jay Gould, Alamo Theatre, Plainfield; Ed Hammerle, Electric Theatre, Walnut, and J. H. Neis, Star Theatre, Ohio.

The many friends of Walter M. Koll, veteran manager here, will be sorry to hear of his sudden death while at the Harris Theatre last week. He was stricken with heart disease. He is survived by his daughter, Mrs. Isabelle Koll Bunnell, with whom he made his home.

The Ascher and Lubliner & Trinz circuits both showed "The Covered Wagon" during the past week in their neighborhood houses, each circuit using five houses for three-day runs.

O. A. Byers, William Lubs, H. R. Whitelock, J. A. Higgins and I. C. Higgins have organized the Lincoln Amusement Company at Petersburg with a capital of $25,000, to operate and conduct picture theatres.

W. E. Schmidt, manager of the Majestic at Kankakee, Ill., is making extensive improvements in the house.

J. G. Knapp, recent purchaser of the Colton Theatre, plans to spend $100,000 in remodeling, redecorating and refurnishing.

The Sunshine Theatre at Hillsboro, owned by E. I. Wilt, has been sold to Byford Lemon of Crawfordsville.

Boget & Dyes, exhibitors located at Sandwich, Ill., have purchased from George Michels the theatre at Plano, Ill.

S. E. Pertle of Jerseyville has given up the American Theatre at Charlestown and the house is again under the management of O. W. McCutcheon, who will continue the picture policy.

Jimmy Coston, well-known exhibitor who has been under the weather for the past few weeks, is back on the job booking for his string of houses on the South and West Side.

Terry Brothers will reopen the picture theatre at Leland, Ill., as the Leland Theatre has been dark for two years.

Steve Bennis of the Lincoln Theatre at Lincoln, Ill., recently appointed representative of the Illinois association on the Joint Arbitration Board, took his seat at the last meeting of the board.

The Family Theatre at Monmouth, Ill., has been sold by the Osborne management to Kaletis and Kondat of Rock Island, Ill.

The Cascade Theatre at Rockford has been leased by the Iowa Theatre Company and will be fixed up and renamed the Rockford Theatre.

Stern and Myers expect to open the new Highway Theatre at Western and 63rd streets on November 26.

The Polka Brothers Circuit have taken over the Melrose Theatre at Melrose Park.

The New Lincoln Theatre at Sterling, Ill., will be under the personal management of Vic H. Geisler, succeeding G. E. Johnston. Fred Gumble is chief projectionist and Leo R. Eckert musical director.

Evanstonians turned out en masse to celebrate the opening of the New Park Theatre on Chicago avenue on November 22. This is the Miller & Spencer house seating 700 which has been remodeled and will be under the personal direction of W. G. Sturdivant, formerly of the Hoyburn Theatre. Ralph Emerson, the celebrated radio artist of WLS, played the new Barton organ on the opening night. Miller & Spencer have opened offices in Evanston in the new bank building at Main and Chicago avenue.

Repairs are rapidly being made to the Grand Theatre at Alton, Ill., which recently suffered considerable damage by fire and water. The house will be closed for another month.

Aaron J. Jones cables from France that the motion picture is in great demand in that country and that the smaller towns are building movie theatres. Heretofore the cinema has been confined only to the large cities.

An Anniversary Dinner was held at midnight on November 20 by the Jones, Linick & Schaefer firm and executives in the Hotel Sherman. All of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theatres put on special anniversary programs during the week of November 17 to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the organization.

Louisville

Fred J. Dolle, Louisville, of the Alamo, Walnut, Strand and Broadway amusement interests, is one of the promotors of a new public parking garage, which was chartered for $200,000, and plans a big garage at Seventh and Jefferson streets.

Representatives of the Selba Amusement Company of Central City, Ky., forfeited a $500 option binder at Owensboro, Ky., on November 11 on an option for purchase at $30,000 of property at Fifth and Frederica streets, on which they had planned to build a $150,000 picture theatre.

Sidney Hamilton of Campbellsville, Ky., merchant and exhibitor, was wounded above the heart by the accidental discharge of a pistol which he had purchased shortly before the accident. The wound was not considered serious by physicians.

Unusually mild weather over the past few weeks in Louisville has resulted in abnormally good business with the theatres, most of which have been constantly busy. While there have been a few super-productions, or productions featuring very popular stars, which have been held over for second week runs, there haven't been many pictures held in the first-run houses for more than one week, and two weeks is about the limit for anything here.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

Associated Exhibitors

STORMY SEAS. (4,893 feet). Star cast. A very good story of seas and should please any type of patronage. Print good. Tone very good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

F. B. O.

AFTER THE BALL. (6,500 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures shown at this theatre this season. Title draws like mustard plaster among the older people. Large audience a big surprise as I expected a small house. Used large circus heralds and the crowds came in droves for two nights. Broke all Friday night records. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

ALIMONY. (7 reels). Star cast. Picture not well received by majority who saw it. Good audience appeal. Middle class, city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre (400 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. A great western picture. Here's hoping they keep Thomson in westerns. Tone, audience appeal good. Draw middle class, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. For western fans this is the usual Fred Thomson knockout. Thomson and Silver King, his horse, are great favorites here. However, there are plenty of kicks registered against Thomson's leading lady, Hazel Keener—here she is without question a poor bet. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeal for type a hundred per cent. Draw rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Here is a star that, once you show him, will bring them back if you say "It's a Thomson." These people give you a chance to make some money; don't want the earth. Tone fine. Sunday, any day. Good attendance. Small town and country class, town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

FASHIONABLE FAKERS. (5,000 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Just an every-day, common picture; better than lots of them but not much kick to it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. No audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

HALDANE OF THE SECRET SERVICE. (5,908 feet). Star, Houdini. This is a piece of cheese. Lay off of it. Why will they take song birds and vaudeville stars and think even the tank towns will bite? Don't buy it. Tone okay. Attendance rotten. Small town and country class, town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7,002 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. This is an excellent comedy drama, with Patsy Ruth Miller and Matt Moore in the title roles. Advise any exhibitor to play it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

ON TIME. (6,030 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. The poorest Talmadge picture ever shown in this theatre. Poorly directed, illogical and impossible. The usual Talmadge stunts are the only redeeming qualities. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

PHANTOM JUSTICE. (6,328 feet). Star cast. A different offering that pleased a fair sized crowd. The story has a very unusual twist that is a pleasant surprise to the jaded fan who tires of the sameness so much in evidence in most pictures. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeal a hundred per cent. Draw rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

STEPPING LIVELY. Star, Richard Talmadge. If your audience likes a world of stunts served up in every shape imaginable this one will please. If they like logic, get something else. We give it to Talmadge. As a stunt man he is certainly there and over. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

THUNDERING HOOFS. Star, Fred Thomson. Just another first class western, and Thomson don't make anything else but good westerns. Tone good. Audience appeal good. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

UNTAMED YOUTH. (5 reels). Star cast. A very good picture with no box office appeal. The name means nothing to the passerby. A good picture is one that registers at the box office. A picture that doesn't get them in cannot be classed as a good attraction. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, none. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. Will A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WOMEN MEN MARRY. (5,600 feet). Star cast. Just an average program offering;

nothing big. yet good enough for a fair entertainment for any audience. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

YANKEE MADNESS. (5,680 feet). Star, Billy Dove. Rather racy. The censors evidently overlooked this one as some of the dancing scenes were almost "too much" for comfort. A fairly good offering of its kind. Tone, questionable. Sunday, questionable. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,000 feet). Star cast. No doubt of it. This is the biggest, best and most wonderful picture ever produced by anyone. Every American, man, woman and child, worthy of the name should see this one. Not only is it an educational picture, but it is intensely interesting, thrilling, and fine from beginning to end. Tone extra good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, all classes. Mixed classes, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is by far the best Coogan picture that we have ever run. Jackie shows real histrionic talent in this one and you won't go wrong in buying it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Andience appeal, one hundred per cent. High and school class, town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

FLIRTING WITH LOVE. (6,326 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Can't give this very much. Not as good as Miss Moore's older productions. Miscast in the wrong type of story. Direction fair. Miss Moore's acting good. About sixty per cent audience appeal. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War, in town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Bayard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

GALLOPING FISH. (6 reels). Star, Louise Fazenda. A thrilling comedy. Sure was a whale. Good light entertainment. Pleased them all. Tone good. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This is a corking little comedy-drama that pleased one hundred per cent for us. Did poorly at box office, due partly to presence in city of Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus. It will charm audiences of the better type. Tone good. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SCARLET LILY. (6 reels). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Not a bad picture, but Miss McDonald is not liked here. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, not much. Resort class, town of 2,400. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star cast. Gave satisfaction. Is good program picture. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Medium audience appeal. Rural class, town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre, San Andreas, California.

SILENT PARTNER. Star cast. Very good picture. Seemed to please all. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, not much. Resort class, town of 2,400. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Crammed with the stuff that hits the heart, here's a drama that makes you fairly live it. A vital, throbbing story of love, politics and sacrificial loyalty that enthrall you. A very interesting picture indeed. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A little ancient but a great picture with a little of everything in it to keep the audience going. Mostly northern snow scenes in picture give it a fine setting. Business good. Tone good. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

SONNY. (6,900 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is a good program picture. Very good story and people will like this picture as it runs on and it grows more interesting. Tone good. Audience appeal good. Cotton mill class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South Carolina.

SON OF THE SAHARA. (8 reels). Star cast. Fine picture. Give us more of them. Pleased one hundred per cent. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Resort class, town of 2,400. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. A good production. The acting of Miss Sweet and Miss Love great; the best they have done to date. This picture not only will keep your audience interested but carries a good moral. One hundred per cent audience appeal and will please the most critical. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War, in town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Bayard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. This is a very good mystery story, not a "jazz picture" the title would indicate. It is a story of bootlegging activities and should please anywhere. Book it; you won't go wrong. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A fine picture that will hold them to the finish. Paper only fair and title has no drawing power but the picture is a whale of a picture and a whale of a big thing. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, everyone. Mixed classes, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

TWENTY-ONE. (6,620 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. This star always puts it over. We all say mighty good. Everybody pleased and are still talking about it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,785 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A good picture but our patrons are sick of this desert stuff. Paid too much money for it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

WHITE MOTH. (6,550 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. A very good production. Direction, acting, dramatic value one hundred per cent. Really one of the best stories that Barbara LaMarr has played in. This picture may not please in some localities because of its dramatic tensity, but where one is dealing with intelligent people it should please exceedingly well. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal very good. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star, Lewis Stone. One of the best pictures I ever had in my house and a wonderful drawing card. Will please any audience and if you get behind this you can make some money on this one as they don't ask your house for the rental of it. I personally guarantee it. It's one hundred per cent there. Town of 5,000. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star, John Bowers. This is a picture that pleases all classes. The popularity of the book makes it a production that is easy to advertise. Second night was practically as good an attendance as the first. Splendid tone. Sunday, yes. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-20-30. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star, John Bowers. Very good action picture. Harold Bell Wright's name, as author, will mean

A get-together place where we can talk things over

From the U. S. S. Oklahoma comes an envelope carrying reports.

I think you're with me in saying they can be admitted as legitimate exhibitor tips. Conditions on our grim but beautiful battleship are not quite those of the town or city theatre, but the audience—God bless the boys!—is just as human, just as responsive. So, unless you holler "Nix" they'll run next week.

Friend Martin's Trailer question is being answered. Two of our best friends are in this week with Trailer tips.

Let's not stop with that! Come in, all of you, and say your say. It's just as important to give your experience on Trailers as on other subjects. Help if you can.

Don't forget to give me your ideas on the suggestions of that good scout, Davis, concerning changes in our report blank.

And don't forget to send more of those picture tips which have made this the dependable tip department that exhibitors stand by and swear by. VAN.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star, John Bowers. This Harold Bell Wright story is very good. Excellent scenery and fine acting are features of this western drama. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Fox

AGAINST ALL ODDS. Star, "Buck" Jones. Best Jones in a long time. This is the kind of pictures he should be in. Fine audience appeal. Middle class, city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre (400 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

AGAINST ALL ODDS. (4,850 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Well received as an average western feature of the program variety. Nothing to rave over but will get by nicely with the average lovers of western stuff. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeal to western fans only. Draw rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

BUCK JONES FEATURES. "Buck" Jones is with us again and "Charles" Jones will soon be forgotten. "Buck's" picture proved to be a money-maker here. It has action, comedy, mystery, wild riding and is just the sort of picture we expect "Buck!" Jones to make. Good audience appeal. Draw all classes in small town, 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

CIRCUS COWBOY. (6,400 feet). Star, "Buck" Jones. A good program picture. A little different from most Jones. Should please where this star is popular. Jones always a good out-of-doors bet for me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star, Reed Howes. Remember "The Eleventh Hour" some thrills weren't there? If you played the "Eleventh Hour" to a success you will surely get results from this one, action, thrills, everything that goes to good entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

DESERT OUTLAW. Star, "Buck" Jones. Failed to arrive. Sunday, questionable. Audience disappointed. All classes city of 4,000. Admission 10-20. M. Pois, Gem Theatre (440 seats), Wichita Falls, Texas.

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet) Star, Buck Jones. Another knock-out Lincoln J. Carter melodrama that holds 'em spellbound. Draw middle class, city 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. The scenery in this picture is fine. My patrons were well satisfied but some thought there were parts left out of the ending, but on asking the salesman he said it was all there. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

ST. ELMO. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. The best buy we ever made from Fox. The wide popularity of the book caused an exceptional response at the box office. The picture, while nothing to rave about, satisfies those who have read the book. It is a good buy at a reasonable price. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SHEPHERD KING. (8,500 feet). Type, spectacle. This is a very fine picture to use with church tie-ups and no good at all without them. It will appeal strongly to some of your Bible students and please most people, but does not mean anything at the box office without you can get the church element behind it. Sunday, yes. Chas. Leehyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

From the Editor

"Dear Van: I think you will appreciate even more than your loyal 'Straight From the Shoulder' friends with what hesitation I even approach that department. I try to lean backwards in maintaining our policy of allowing the department to be of and by the exhibitor.

"But there is a matter of policy that I think most of your readers will agree with me on. It is this: I think it would be well to adopt a rule that no exhibitor should report on a picture unless he himself has actually PLAYED IT.

"This is something that has often come to my mind but it was most recently recalled when I returned from a recent trip to the Mid West. One of the first things that struck my eye was a report on 'Captain Blood' from Exhibitor Hartwig.

"Mr. Hartwig stated frankly that he pre-viewed the picture, and while admitting that it had big city possibilities, doubted the small city draw.

"It happens that I was particularly struck on this trip in my talks, with dozens of exhibitors, large and small, with the unanimity of praise for 'Captain Blood.' But the merit of the picture is entirely aside from the question. The point is that a pre-view opinion can be an opinion, and nothing else. When the exhibitor receives an opinion in a review he accepts it as such, but in the columns of 'Straight From the Shoulder' it is apt to take on an added weight and importance through the confusion with the other reports which all tell of RESULTS after actual playing.

"Let me know what you think of it, Van. I feel pretty certain that even Mr. Hartwig, who has been such a good friend of the department, will agree with me on a policy of only reporting actual PLAYING RESULTS.

ROBERT E. WELSH.

"P. S.—As far as opinions go, Van, I editorially expressed my opinion that 'Captain Blood' would give 100 per cent. value anywhere—any time. So far I haven't met an exhibitor to disagree with me."

Here's a note from the editor to the members of "Our Gang" which I am passing right along to you folks.

If you folks know Bob Welsh as the members of his staff know him, you'll recogniz ethis opinion as the result of careful consideration and clear vision into the future—based on a sincere desire to serve exhibitors to the best advantage; I, personally, think he's dead right, taking everything into consideration.

VAN.

SILENT COMMAND. Star, Edmund Lowe. Good picture of the sea and good acting on the part of the star. I took great interest in the pictures of the navy which were good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Very good comedy drama, with a little of everything from cowboy stunts to road scenes in it. My people all liked it very well and it went over splendidly. Print we got was bad. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Cotton mill class town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South Carolina.

TEMPLE OF VENUS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. A beautiful little fairy story. A good picture to lock in a vault and keep there. Not even pleasing to the children. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, everyone slumbers. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This one was spoken of as one of the best Mix ever turned out. Some of the Mix fans fairly raved over it and there were no kicks from anybody. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

WHEN ODDS ARE EVEN. (4,284 feet). Star, William Russell. Good program picture that was well handled by director, and in which Bill Russell does excellent work. Good comments from patrons on this. Fair tone, Sunday no. Appeal over eighty per cent. Draw general class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Metro-Goldwyn

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Our audience liked it immensely. Anything in the western line goes but this was a little different so it was well liked. You'll like it too. Tone, good. Audience appeal, yes. Rural class town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10,000 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Title against it, but seemed to please all but those looking for something racy. A good, clean show, although rather long. Tone O. K. Sunday possibly. Audience appeal good here. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

HEART BANDIT. (4,900 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Limited appeal. Did not please the majority. Just a simple little picture that is of programme variety and none too good at that. Dana no longer draws for us. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Poor audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-

The most striking and original story in motion picture history

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star, Alleen Pringle. More exciting than "Three Weeks" and Elinor Glyn has never made a better picture. See it and be convinced youself. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. As good as any we have ever shown. The historical Fulton's boat thrilled everyone and we made money on it. No mistake to show it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, yes. Rural class town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. One of the very best productions of the year. Gave almost universal satisfaction and elicited any number of compliments. Held up well the second night. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 2,245. Admission 10-30-30. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

LONG LIVE THE KING. (9,364 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This picture sure went over big. I got the school children behind it and I sure packed them in. Before the feature had been on twenty minutes I had to hunt up the old S. R. O. sign and hang it out. If you haven't run this one yet, do so by all means. Fine tone, fine, fine appeal, yes for Sunday. Draw student and family class, city 80,000. Admission 10-20. Mirror Lake Theatres (800-1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

NAME THE MAN. (8 reels). Star, Mae Busch. Good program but too long. Also priced too high. Some like it and some didn't. Don't be bid up on this subject. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

NELLIE THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. A good program picture with a good advertising angle, but not worth the price we paid for it. This thing of over paying for pictures naturally puts the exchange in bad repute with the exhibitor. Some exchanges want the whole show and the exhibitor must live. Wouldn't over pay on this subject. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

OUR HOSPITALITY. (6,220 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This is a scream. Bought it right and did a nice business. Everybody pleased. That's what helps. Tone, okay. Sunday, sure. Good attendance. Small town and country class town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

OUR HOSPITALITY. (6,220 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Many compliments and no complaints. Drew well at the box office. Was liked better than "Three Ages" but not as good as "Sherlock Jr." Keaton's popularity is steadily growing. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Small town and rural class town of 2,245. Admission 10-20-30. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

OUR HOSPITALITY. (6,220 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This feature length comedy was better than "Three Ages," but drew less people, due to the fact that "Three Ages," was not liked very well. As a light entertainment, it is not so bad, but I find my patrons as a rule consider an evening wasted on a picture of this type. The kids ate it up, but alas! it takes more than their dimes to stall off the sheriff. Good print. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

PLEASURE MAD. (7,547 feet). Star, Mary Alden. A very entertaining, highclass production, that pleased all who came, but for some reason or other it did not attract a very great patronage. Tone, good. Small town and rural class town of 2,245. Admission 10-20-30. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

ROUGED LIPS. (5,150 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very good as usual. Tone, good. Fair attendance. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

UNINVITED GUEST. (6,145 feet). Star cast. This may have been a good picture but was cut by the censors. Business fair. Weak audience appeal. Middle class city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre (400 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

Trailers—Discussed by H. Warren Rible

"Dear Gang: I read friend Martin's request for opinions on trailers.

"The following is my opinion:

"I think that one trailer, or perhaps two, per week, is sufficient to meet all needs. For example: Martin has five changes per week; about two of the five pictures are likely to be worth extra attention. The people have noticed that whenever he has something of exceptional value he gives them a glimpse of main scenes.

"Now, supposing he runs a trailer on every picture he plays. The first week the people notice this and come every night or matinee, thinking there is something special on. Say, three out of the five pictures do not come up to the expectations of the people. Next week, when he runs all his trailers, the people think it is merely an exploitation stunt to fool them, and they are not to be fooled again.

"Sunday and Monday, say, Martin has 'The Sea Hawk' on; he has run his trailer, exploited the picture to the sky; now he plays this picture to only half a house instead of turning them away. He wonders what the trouble is; curses them for selling him such a picture. The answer is that during the week he has run three program pictures, trailers on each, and when he had something big, the people wouldn't believe him." H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre, Mayfield, California.

IS THIS THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE TRAILER? WHAT DO YOU SAY?

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,167 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Fine picture from every angle and one of Meighan's best. This picture will sure pull them in. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Oil field and business class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Chalk up another success for Paramount, as this picture is certainly one delightful comedy-drama and pleased the majority of my patrons as it will yours. Tom Moore, in support of the star, is great. Good tone, yes for Sunday. Appeal great. Draw oil and farm class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

DON'T CALL IT LOVE. (6,457 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Box office receipts very disappointing. Sunday, yes. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 10-20. M. Pois, Gem Theatre (440 seats), Wichita Falls, Texas.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Beautiful outdoor scenery; fine acting; interesting story. Good tone, Sunday yes. Good audience appeal. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A picture that pleased very well. Better than the book. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. F. E. Wheeler, Strand Theatre, Scotland, South Dakota.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. At last Miss Compson comes back; the best since the "Miracle Man." This picture ought to please any audience. Will hold the interest of anyone throughout its entire length. The direction is great. It has a one hundred per cent audience appeal. Buy it right and advertise to the sky and you will knock 'em dead. Fair attendance. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War. Town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Boyard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. 8,300 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good picture, about two reels longer than the story will stand, and though well acted it does not make enthusiastic boosters of those who see it owing to the rather unsatisfactory ending. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Not so good as was expected. This is quite a set back for Pola and not up to her standard by any means. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, no good. Oil field and business class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. The best Pola Negri has been in for some time. It held the interest of my audience from the start. Good direction and the acting of Miss Negri great. Tone, fair. Sunday, depends on what kind of a town you have. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War in town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Bayard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good modern society drama, with lots of wine, women and song. Gloria is her best in this one. Good attendance. Tone, not so good. Sunday, no. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, William Farnum. This is a good picture. Farnum is good. But I and my people were fooled and disappointed. The paper, the title and the press sheet led us to believe it to be an action picture. Instead it proved to be a slightly depressing drama. Farnum spends the biggest part of the picture in a wheel chair. Fair audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (425 seats), Graham, Texas.

MARRIAGE MAKER. (6,295 feet). Star cast. Such pictures should not be shoved on the exhibitor. Absolutely worthless. Tone, good. Sunday, no good. Audience appeal, not good. Resort class town of 2,400. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Cozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

MEN. (6,564 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Exhibitors, if you have this picture bought shelve it right now. Very low type story, really indecent. Will boost censorship anywhere. Cannot understand status of producer who will release such pictures. Tone very bad. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, none. All classes, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. C. T. Meisburg, Opera House (600 seats), Harrodsburg, Kentucky.

MEN. (6,564 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Did very good. Pleased majority. She is getting better with us. Sunday, no. All classes town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Saw Hunter in the play and must say the picture to me was not near so good. Maybe the lack of Glenn's spoken lines spoiled it for me. However, business was fair and had some nice reports and no kicks. Yes for Sunday. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. This is a wonderful picture. The sets, costumes, lighting, story, acting and cast are all extra good. But to me it seems to be a big city picture. The majority of my people thought it too long, drawn out, and draggy. Seven reels of it would have been fine. Ten were tiresome. However, fairness compels me to state that costume pictures are very unpopular here. Valentino pulled a little better than average crowd the first night. Then it flopped and flopped hard. Due to high rental and low box office receipts the engagement was unsatisfactory. Tone fair. Bad audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (425 seats), Graham, Texas.

LOUISE CARTER

Well known stage ingenue playing important role in Whitman Bennett production, "The Lost Chord"

NEXT CORNER. (7,081 feet). Star cast. Good picture, a little above program standard. Not a big feature but a pleasing picture. Good tone, Sunday yes. Fair audience appeal. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,671 feet). Stars, Dana, Menjou. Mighty fine little comedy-drama that certainly pleased the majority of my patrons, and me. The work of Jetta Goudal, a newcomer to the screen, is wonderful and she certainly made a hit. We predict a great future in the movies for this delightful little star. Suitable for Sunday. Great appeal, here. Draw oil and farm class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,883 feet). Star cast. One of the poorest pictures I ever ran. Nothing to it. No story, poor acting. Stay away from it if possible. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. F. E. Wheeler, Strand Theatre, Scotland, South Dakota.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,881 feet). Star, Viola Dana. One trade paper not the Moving Picture World said that this picture is different and also great, but my people thought very little of it, and one said that she had thought that although she had seen all the rotten pictures that this was the worst. I thought it would pass. Audience appeal, poor to fair. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,671 feet). Star, Viola Dana. For me, an atrocity in the shape of a would-be French farce. Our patrons walked out on it. Business terrible. Tone not good, Sunday no. Not much appeal. Draw better class, city 55,000. Admission varies, 30 to $1.50. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (930 seats), Stockton, California.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,671 feet). Star, Viola Dana, Adolphe Menjou. Was just thinking the Famous Forty was going pretty well—when along comes this misfit. Never had so many kicks—and mean ones too—in a long, long time. Play it some night when you figure a cyclone might hit town, and you'll get by. Sunday no. Appeal nil. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is one of the best drawing pictures we have played this year although some think it not his very best. It went over big. Meighan has a big following here. Tone, good. Audience appeal, fine, extra. Cotton mill class town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South Carolina.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Played two days. A fair Meighan picture. We had poor attendance which was largely due to Halloween. This town does not seem to be able to stand two night shows. Tone, good. Fair audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS

10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PARAMOUNT FAMOUS FORTY. I have played over one half of this product and in spite of the high rental and limited profit on them I consider this lineup of pictures to be the most consistent line of successes I have ever had the pleasure of booking. With the exception of one or two they have all pleased. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not as good as most Meighan's, but I did good business and had no serious kicks. This star means a good house any time, so I only had to spread around the advertising and they (meaning the great American Picture Fans) came in bunches. The kids were very cute, but as a kiddie picture, I do not think it can be compared with "Bachelor Daddy." Fair print. Used extra advertising to draw better than average business. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. A Paramount picture that has action, while not a knock down drag out western, but one that appeals even to the highbrows, it's good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, very good Farm and oil class town of 508. Admission 10-25. J. A. Herring, Playhouse Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A first class comedy drama with Ernest Torrence stealing the honors. Picture drew well with regular advertising and pleased ninety percent. Good print. Only fault with the picture is excess footage. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SHADOWS OF PARIS. (6,549 feet). Star, Pola Negri. To me, terrible stuff for small town house and the make-up Pola uses would kill any picture. Only one more of hers left, for me, thank Heaven. Poor tone. Sunday no. Audience appeal bad here. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (7,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrance. My people didn't expect to see Torrence in a picture like this, so they were disappointed. The acting of Torrence is wonderful, but it missed fire here. It is another of those foreign pictures (in locale): that alone killed it here. Also the paper led people to believe this was a comedy; this was a disappointment, as it is a drama. Audience appeal bad here. Draw all classes, small town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour. National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (7,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. A good picture but somehow they don't like Torrence as a star. Very few like him. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (7,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. Just a fair picture. Failed to draw or please the majority. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, no good. Oil field and business class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SINGER JIM McKEE. (7 reels). Star, Bill Hart. Thanks that this is Hart's last picture. Patrons said if Bill Hart is an actor then they were going to get into the movies. All classes town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,881 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Bebe Daniels draws well here. Fine acting and good scenery. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. F. E. Wheeler, Strand Theatre, Scotland, South Dakota

SIREN CALL. Star, Dorothy Dalton. Another Paramount one hundred percent picture, which pleased all. Although I played it to a small house I feel greatly pleased to show such a picture. Book it. Excellent audience appeal. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (5,912 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Words just simply can't describe this one. This mighty modern melodrama, this thrilling, sweeping thing that defies description. It has everything, except a name. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

STRANGER. (6,660 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Another one of Paramount's underworld pictures not made for small town shows, but they will persist in farming them on you. Personally I liked the picture, but I had some walk out and others told my wife at the window that they would not come again unless I stopped running that class of shows so there you are. It is necessary to get an audience or I can't keep going so, how come. Tone, bad. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, no. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats)), Galt, California.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Fair program offering. Will please forty per cent. okay. Tone, okay. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

TIGER LOVE. (5,325 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Good program picture. Did not play to very good business but pleased all who saw it. Sunday, no. All classes town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good western but majority did not like colors. Said that it hurt their eyes and made the character look unreal. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Will appeal to majority. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Personally I do not think that advertising the natural colors helps the box office at all. as I had only a fair crowd same as "Heritage of the Desert." Good picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very fine picture. All in natural colors. It will please all classes of people only thing it is sold too high for the showman to make any money but that is so of all the Paramount product, at least in my case. Mixed class city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WOMAN PROOF. (7,657 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A good picture; better crowd

Trailers—Friend Barnett Expresses His Opinion

"Dear 'Gang': Just a few remarks in regard to brother Martin's inquiry on trailers.

"I think that trailers are one of our very best advertising assets; but I think that they should not be used too often, as they then lose their effectiveness.

"I use on an average of one a week and find that this system proves very successful. I generally start using them about five or six days in advance. I find that running them earlier than this proves a bit detrimental, inasmuch as patrons get tired of seeing the same trailer, night after night.

"First National surely uses me fine on trailers; absolutely free of charge, and they are all fine.

"So, if any of you exhibitors are not using trailers, you had better wake up, because I think that they are great business getters.

"I don't believe in using a monthly trailer service. My opinion is that this takes away from the benefits of using trailers, as the novelty of seeing them wears off after your audience becomes accustomed to seeing so many of them.

"I would like to get other exhibitors' opinions in regard to the use of monthly trailer service." T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, Jewett City, Connecticut.

second night than first. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Admission 10-30. Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Fair picture. Fair tone, Sunday no. Fair appeal Draw all classes, town 2,000. Admission 10-30. Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good picture but not the kind for small town a few of these and I won't have any business (but Famous Players won't see these things—it was sent as substitute for another show so I had to run it). Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Pathe

FRONTIER WOMAN. (Chronicles), (3 reels). This one was nothing to rave about. It had more action in it than has some of the others of the series but that is not saying much. If you are going to run these, I'd say, don't contract for the whole series without seeing some of them first. Good tone, yes for Sunday. Appeal not much here. Draw student and family class, city 80,000. Admission 10-20. Mirror Lake Theatre (800-1,000), St. Petersburg, Florida.

GIRL SHY. (7,547 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. I do not see where some exhibitors say one of the very greatest it is only a good comedy drama, in my estimation and very highly over-rated in price. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. An excellent feature. Plenty of good laughs: full of pep; many surprises; very interesting. Think this picture would go anywhere, any time. Good tone, good audience appeal. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). A novelty that proved entertaining to the patrons, and made money at the box office. Used slide, ones, threes, mailing list and window cards, and was rewarded with an attendance that far exceeded expectations. I should say it is a sure drawing card for any theatre. Print good. Paper is very good. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WHY WORRY. (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. Picture better by far than any other Lloyd picture. House kept in an uproar throughout. Buy it. Tone, okay. Sunday okay. Audience appeal, good. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Preferred

BREATH OF SCANDAL. (6,940 feet). Stars, Lou Tellegen, Betty Blythe, Patsy Ruth Miller, Jack Mulhall, Forrest Stanley, Myrtle Stedman. Good society feature (ran Oct. 19-25.) Held nicely, but not big box office appeal. Tone, average. No for Sunday . Appeal, adults. Draw family class, city 300,000. Admission 25-35-50. Jack H. Rath, Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri.

BROKEN WING. (6,216 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. Good entertainment. Personally was not as good as expected. Good comments. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Business and farming class. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON. Star cast. Big picture to big business. Pleased about two per cent. Very few stayed to see the end. W. D. Patrick, Strand Theatre, Dotham, Alabama.

CRITICAL AGE. (4,500 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. Good action picture some said the acting was crude and others liked it so there you are. Personally I called it good for small town showing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

DRIVIN' FOOL. (5,800 feet). Star, Wally Van. Immense. Great speed and action picture. Plenty of thrills. A good love theme through whole story. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Fine audience appeal. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HIS DARKER SELF. (5 reels). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Good comedy all the way through. Everybody pleased and can be bought right. Halfway Theatre, Halfway, Michigan.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. Star Cast. Very good. Pleased small business two days. Print better than usual from New Orleans. W. D. Patrick, Strand Theatre, Florala, Alabama.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER. (5,536 feet). Star cast. This is fine, bought it right and did nice business. Pleased everyone. Tone, fine. Sunday, anytime. Good attendance. Small town and country class town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

MIAMI (6,317 feet). Star, Betty Compson. If Paramount would use Compson to as good advantage as the other companies—as in this production—they would have some star. This has fair audience appeal. Draw middle class, city 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

OLD FOOL. (6,147 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. A real picture, but a rotten title. Story of a neglected grandfather, veteran of the Civil War. Rotten attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ROARING RAILS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Here is one great picture from start to finish. Book it and play it. Boost it before the other fellow beats you to it. Did great business on it. Leo J. Dowling, Lyric Theatre, Syracuse, New York.

Selznick

CRICKET ON THE HEARTH. Star cast. A picture that will please the majority. Good emotional appeal. Semi costume. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star cast. Three days to good business. Good audience appeal. Middle class city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre (400 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. A good show, but we did not do enough business to pay expenses. The other house had a cheap western at ten cents admission and it out-drew our show. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN TO WOMAN. (6,994 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A program show with Betty Compson helping us to draw enough business to pay expenses. She is fairly well liked in this town. Tone fair, Sunday, no. Fair appeal. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BAVU. (6,968 feet). Star cast. This is one I cannot see. Print bad. Stay away from these jewels unless you can get good prints. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Pleased far more than the average Gibson picture put out this season. Gibson almost down and out here after so many fizzles of the "Forty Horse Hawkins" calibre. You can boost "Broadway or Bust". Tone okay. Yes for Sunday. Appeal ninety per cent. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

DARK STAIRWAY. (5,030 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Very good little program picture. Very light comedy in it although very good plot. Pleased very well. Tone, good. Audience appeal, fair. Cotton mill class town of 2,000. Admission 10,20. J. B. Stanley, Everybody's Theatre (200 seats), McColl, South, Carolina.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Just a program picture and not suitable for my trade but wanted to try one. The scenery is good, but story is 5-10 cent class. Tone, none. Sunday no. Audience appeal none, here. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

FOOL'S HIGHWAY. (6,800 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. There was nobody home when I signed the dotted line for this one, but as far as my show was concerned, they all stayed home when it was shown at the theatre. The paper on this is absolutely no good. An enormous profile view of Mary's face, although charming, doesn't call any business and that was all I got in the way of paper. On the whole, the poor attendance may be fortunate, as there were less people to razz the same misguided man who signed the contract for this lemon. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star cast. One repeat engagement played to excellent business at regular prices. Fine audience appeal. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. One wonderful production which did a fine business here. I want to state that it is a good small town picture. Some exhibitors say that is too gruesome. I disagree with them absolutely. Boost it brothers and clean up. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, large. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S .(7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. Failed to draw for us in spite of a rather extensive campaign. Just a fair picture, though not a bad one. We did not pay too much for it, so really have no kick on it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal pretty good. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. A real picture with plenty of action and with a real cast. People all liked it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH. (7,156 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Pleased about eighty per cent. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Country class, town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

PIONEER TRAILS. (6,920 feet). Star cast. Played two weeks before "Covered Wagon." Personally believe it about as good as "Covered Wagon"; many others thought so. Cost less than one-tenth as much as "Covered Wagon." Would advise anyone to play it who wants a picture of this type. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Country class, town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

Warner Bros.

BABBITT. (8 reels). Star, Carmel Myers. Very good production from all angles, as most Warner Brothers' Classics are. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Oil field and business class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. G. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

Comedies

COBBLER. (Pathe). "Our Gang." All these Gang comedies are good or better. Besides they draw a gang of money in the box office. I wish I could play one a week. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

DON'T FORGET. (Pathe). Star, Charles Chase. A good comic about an absent-minded bridegroom to be. Lots of fun. Print good. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FIRST ONE HUNDRED YEARS. (Pathe). Star, Harry Langdon. A mighty good one. Some good stunts. Lots of excitement. Nuf sed. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

GOLF. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Another Larry which gets them agoing as usual and keeps them in roars most of the time. Will spice up most any kind of audience. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

HORSE SHOES. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. They're still laughing and gasping at the thrills and funny places in this comedy which I think beats anything I have seen Larry in for some time. A corker. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

LOVES DETOUR. (Pathe). Star, Charlie Chase. A good comic, laughs all the way through. Print good. All clases town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

JACK DEMPSEY SERIES. (Universal). They are very good comedies and compare favorably with other comedies, but the price is over twice what others are. If Dempsey is worth the difference to you, buy them. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Farmers and townpeople town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

TELEPHONE GIRL NO. 12. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. The final chapter of this series very good, in fact the entire series pleased everyone. Book 'em. You can't lose on them. They are made to order for any house. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Miscellaneous

FAST AND FEARLESS. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. (4,500 feet). Here is a boy that has got it on all of them when it comes to fast westerns with plenty of action. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

FIGHTING FOR JUSTICE. (State Rights). Star, Art Acord. Pleased a Saturday capacity attendance. Lots of action. I consider this an ideal attraction for any house who plays westerns. Will pull kids. Tone, okay. Sunday, No. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LEFT HAND BRAND. (Steiner). Star, Neal Hart. Can't see Neal Hart but the people all like him Not buying pictures to suit me. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

LEFT HAND BRAND. (William Steiner). Star, Neal Hart. Neal Hart got fairly good money in this, but he would make better pictures if he had a director. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, sixty-five per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal and Capitol Theatres (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

LET'S GO. (Truart). Star, Richard Talmadge. The first time I ever showed this star. The attendance was not up to expectations, but I think his next appearance will mean more at the box office, as "Let's Go" was well liked. His stunts are good. Some appear to be faked, but he says not, so I guess I won't call him a liar. Paper good, and print good. Guy C. Sawyers, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

LISTEN LESTER. (Principal Pictures). Star, Louise Fazenda. Not much picture. Supposed to be a comedy and while I considered it amusing in spots my patrons failed to get anything out of it. Tone, okay. No audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

LUCK. (C. C .Burr.) Star, Johnny Hines. Here's a little picture that surprised me hugely, drew well and made a big hit with patrons. Print, from Enterprise, St. Louis, in fine shape, and didn't cost a fortune. Yes for Sunday. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Vic Shapiro Directs Special Campaign To Offset K. K. K. in Indianapolis Run

BECAUSE of a strong undercurrent of Klanishness in Indianapolis the initial Potash and Perlmutter did not play to the business Ace Berry, of the Circle Theatre, thought it should have done. Because of this fact he was rather hesitant about playing the second of the series, In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter, until Victor Shapiro, Samuel Goldwyn's exploitation specialist, promised to go down and put it over.

Vic argued that the average man wants to laugh, and is willing to be coaxed into a chuckle despite his latent prejudice, so all he had to do was to sell the laugh idea.

To that end he planned a campaign to emphasize the laugh angle. There was not even a remote reference to the Klan, no hint of race prejudice or other side issue. It was a straight campaign on a comedy that put it over with a rush. They just piled through the doors.

The Fresh Approach

Vic did not go down because he felt that the local publicity forces would be unable to put it over. He knows that the Circle has efficient service in that direction and he did not go down to show up the local staff. He went because he knew that if he did it himself he would bring a fresh appeal to the work. No matter how well the local staff might handle the advertising, it would be along the familiar lines. He merely injected a new personality into the campaign. He knew that any new man could offer a different twist, and being interested in the idea, he elected himself to the job.

Most of the stuff was circused, for Vic felt that this was no time for a dignified appeal. He was selling a comedy and to clown it a little would be to match the mood of those he was trying to reach. He plastered Ha's and Ho's all over the spaces, and dressed them with comic cuts.

He started on Tuesday (it was back in October, but Vic just got around to telling about it) using a two fives in three papers, the big line being, "Laugh Week" with "In Hollywood," considerably larger than "with Potash and Perlmutter." The display is shown at the left of the strip at the bottom of this page. The same display was used in all three papers.

The following day he went to two sevens, different copy in each paper, as shown on the same strip. One played up the hero, one the villain and the third the Vampire, but these, and most of the other displays, gave prominence to "their three Vampire beauties, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Betty Blythe."

Played the Vamps

The third day he ran similar copy in all three sheets, telling "Why you wil llike our vampire picture," and on Friday he broke into the "money back" guarantee. This was a two sevens, the same as the second and third days' spaces.

The same offer was played up on a lobby card and given unusual prominence, but there was no demand for a return of the admissions.

And through the week he ran off a vampire contest, the details of which he does not give, but presumably it was run on the lines of the more familiar flapper contests, with prizes for the most alluring amateur vamps.

Followed It Up

The week of the run he followed up the laugh idea with special spaces, but he had put the idea over the first week and this follow-up was merely to beat the stragglers in, for after Sunday the verbal advertising was his best asset.

The result was the town forgot its preju-

FOUR OF THE SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENTS TO SELL POTASH AND PERLMUTTER IN INDIANAPOLIS

The first was the opening gun in all three papers. The other three were second day specials, one in each of the three. These were followed by a three-paper ad on vampires and then broke into the Sunday regular with a guarantee of money back if the patron failed to laugh. The result was packed houses at the Circle Theatre that recouped the losses on the first picture.

dice and came in such numbers that Vic was able to add in the receipts from the first Potash picture, divided by two and make a good showing for both.

The third Potash and Perlmutter is largely going to sell itself.

And ninety per cent of the campaign was merely the striking of a fresh note, which explains why the exploiteers can come into a town on almost any picture and beat the usual receipts.

Meanwhile, if you have In Hollywood and a Klan undercurrent, play up the laughs. That is what will sell it.

Told Love Stories to Gain a Letter

Ringing the changes on the Great Moment idea, Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, offered a personal letter from Gloria Swanson to the girl or woman who told the most interesting personal love story in 250 words or less. The winner also received $10 with some twenty-two other prizes, but the big noise was the personal letter.

This was the bait which caused something like 85 women to bare their stories on the promise that only the names of the winners would be divulged. The stories were supposed to be personal confessions, but whether they were or not, they made good reading, and ran the interest up.

Could Use More

Only the winning letter was printed, which is where the newspaper lost out on the idea.

Before the letter was included in the prizes, Mr. McGee made certain that he could deliver the goods through correspondence with Miss Swanson's secretary. It was a very simple matter, for that is what private secretaries are for.

The lobby display was a curtain back of purple and gold, with a cutout of the star and her leading man, as well as a large head of the star and two shields lettered with start and title, one on either side of the display.

This was used along the wall instead of across the space.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

BROADCASTING through Station WNYC direct from the stage and newly equipped studio started Tuesday night during the engagement of "Madonna of the Streets." The first portion of the radio program started with the overture by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra, took in a baritone solo, incidental music for mask character dances, popular songs of the day, music for the Topical Review, a soprano solo and music for atmospheric prologue. After that the concert was continued from the studio, making a complete program of over two hours.

The musical numbers of the show required thirty-four minutes for presentation, and the feature picture took one hour and twenty-five minutes. The Topical Review ran for eight minutes, thus making up a program of two hours and seven minutes.

The overture, Thomas' "Raymond," was eight minutes. The silver draw curtains were closed over the production stage and were lighted as follows: Blue borders, one amber and one lemon Mestrum flood on orchestra from the dome; entrance spots color blend on ceiling and sides; transparent windows at either side steel blue; arch spots, two light blue and two medium amber, on the silver draws.

Virginia Bell, in a mask fantasie showing Golden Girl, Fear, Bookworm and Doll mask dances, required five minutes. The setting was a three-way screen of silver through which dancer came on and behind which she made changes. It was backed by plush cyclorama. Two Mark Strand ballet dancers attended. Music used as follows: "Cortege du Serdare" from Caucasian Sketches; March from Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite"; "The Tempest" (Lake), and Chopin's "Minute Waltz." Dancer followed by white flood.

Carl Ferretti, baritone, sang a selection from "Chimes of Normandy," appearing on the apron of the large stage under an orange spot from the dome. Other lights were as follows: Two medium blue floods on the orchestra from the booth; green transparent window at right and magenta at left; magenta left entrance spot on ceiling and sides, and medium green from the right; two medium green and magenta floods covering pleats of gold draw curtains. Four minutes.

Popular songs of the day started off with "June Night," "Nightingale" and "Charley My Boy" (choruses) sung by male quartet in dinner suits center stage, with eight dancers in blue silk party dresses grouped across the stage under two huge revolving mirror mosaic globes. A large mirror mosaic vase at either side of the stage completed the setting, all backed up by a deep blue plush cyclorama. "My Best Girl" was an ensemble dance by the girls, and then followed "Because They All Love You," by soprano and the quartet. Steel blue spots from overhead lighted the set, and in addition light green and amber spots were focused on the revolving globes. Eight minutes.

Eldora Stanford, soprano, appeared on the apron of the large stage, singing "I Hear You Calling Me" (Marshall). The orchestra and drapes were flooded by four color blend floods from the booth and dome. Four minutes.

Atmospheric prologue to "Madonna of the Streets" was street setting in London's Limehouse. Besides having the back drop, a transparency, lighted from behind, and steel blue open box lamps for night effect, Fuller's Earth gave the London haze. Sixteen Limehouse characters were grouped about a preacher on a box, made up as Milton Sills in the film. All was pantomime until the "Madonna" (Nazimova) entered, when the male quartet sang "Holy Night" and the picture was thrown on the screen. Five minutes for the prologue.

HERE IS A NEW IDEA FOR BREAD—A DEMONSTRATION

H. B. Stiff, city manager, and J. L. Cartwright, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, turned from the sample loaves to the actual making of bread in the lobby. Remember how appetizing freshly baked bread smells? That's the idea.

Has New Idea to Tell About Bread

H. B. Stiff felt that there should be some other way than a sample loaf to get interest in Bread. He talked it over with J. L. Cartwright, house manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Chatanooga, and they found the way.

They located a dealer who wanted to advertise his flour. They borrowed a gas stove from the Tennessee Power Company; the flour man sent over a couple of women, and they went to work right in the lobby.

Smells Good

If you have ever smelled the freshly-baked bread you can realize the pull of this idea, and the bakers timed their batches to come through when they would do the most good. It made a real selling stunt, and did all co-operators. They also rang in a kitchen cabinet, which made it a foursome, the house, the flour dealer, the power company and the cabinet handlers.

There was also a nicely painted loaf of bread on an easel, but it did not draw like the newly baked material.

This is no more trouble than the bread distribution and a lot more interesting.

Signal Tower for Three Toy Trains

Most of the animated displays on The Signal Tower have been electric trains, but Bert Jordan harked back to the days of the auto race stories and had three toy trains on endless belts when he played the Universal at the Majestic Theatre, Memphis.

First, he built a platform with a tunnel at one end and a signal tower at the other. Three endless belts, geared on different wheels to a single shaft driven by a ¼ H.P. motor, were provided with two-car trains, the cars and engines being bought at the ten-cent store. A flasher lamp lighted up the tower to signal these trains as they emerged from the tunnel to disappear behind the tower. Back of the tower the belts ran beneath the platform to reappear presently through the tunnel.

Gearing the belts for different speeds presented an ever-changing combination of trains. Sometimes they would be running three abreast and again strung out in procession, and people stopped and stood to see just how it worked out.

This was backed by six large semaphores, cutouts and two paintings of railroad scenes.

The campaign cost about $60 above the average and bettered business by at least $300.

Bannered a Girder for Feet of Clay

Just to show what can be done if you keep looking around, J. B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, pulled a nifty recently.

The Tampa Tribune is building a twelve-story building—the largest in the town. For weeks the paper had been talking about the course of the construction and presently announced that on a certain day the last piece of steel would be hoisted into place with 24 men riding the beam.

Mr. Carroll obtained permission to banner the girder, and prepared a modest little affair 24 feet square, reading: "If these men had Feet of Clay they could not erect a building for the Lukins Steel and Iron Co. Feet of Clay opens at the Victory Theatre Sunday."

The street was packed with people at the announced hour and as the beam started on its trip the banner slowly unfolded, giving everyone a chance to read it.

Better still, the newspaper photographed the event and in a three column cut the title stood out the chief point of interest in the picture. It was the sort of advertising you cannot buy. It must be given to you. It helped put the picture comfortably close to the four-day record.

Beating Milt

Milt Crandall, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, still holds the mark for a Sea Hawk display on this side of the water, but he has to take a back seat to S. A. G. Swenson, of the First National office in Stockholm.

The picture was to open at the Palladium and Swenson persuaded the Marine Museum to loan a number of models of old-time ships for a lobby display. Some of these were four and five feet long and each was insured for 25,000 kronen.

It helped the house to open to the largest business in its history.

HELPFUL HINTS FROM JAPAN ON SELLING THE WAGON

This is the front of the Chiyoda Kan Theatre, Tokio, the third day of the run of The Covered Wagon. The crowd is waiting for a chance to get in. Tickets were sold for about five minutes of each hour in compliance with police regulations.

Earle Hall Payne Drove on the Hawk

Earle Hall Payne, of the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky., could not have done more for Barnum and Bailey than he did for the run of The Sea Hawk. It is not merely that he did it. He did it well, and made every ounce of push register at the box office.

One of his stunts was a corsair that measured 22 feet in length and a couple of inches in breadth. This was mounted on a Ford car and it toured the outlying district, distributing heralds and other advertising. It made six feeder towns, parking in the business district of each. It was done in bright colors and drew a lot of extra money at a comparatively small expense.

Another good stunt, which we have not seen reported before, was a pirate parade It's the same old impersonation idea, but you can imagine what the kids did for a pirate make up. Several of them stripped to the waist and the costuming ran from a bath towel turban to a fairly complete get-up. There were prizes, of course, and free admission, and more noise than an artillery battle. The picture is too vague to reproduce, but if you have not yet played the Hawk and are going to, have a parade if you have to cut down on your other stunts.

Mr. Payne started shooting ten days ahead with two teasers. The week ahead he got down to cashing in on the interest he had created. In addition to the display he used a special set, each with a thumbnail cut of the corsair. Some of these will be reproduced later. The pram attended a football game at which there were some 5,000 spectators and for another big game an aviator flew over the stadium, dropping heralds. In all 14,500 pieces were distributed, not to mention 5,000 house programs of the previous week, were largely about the Hawk.

The "Your turn is coming" envelopes were used, and a special card announcing "I have started for Lexington. I will capture the city—every man, woman and child over six years old in it." It was signed The Sea Hawk. These were sent to a selected list of 200 business men.

A CONVINCING LOBBY ON THE WHITE SISTER

Planned for the Central Theatre, Jersey City, and the Roosevelt, West Hoboken. Devised by David Schaefer, of the Haring & Blumenthal Circuit. The combination of natural flowers with the cutouts made a very effective display.

He also used a door knob which told that: "This house is under my protection." It was headed "Warning to doers of evil."

In the lobby he showed about $4,000 worth of rugs, used as drapes, with palms and paintings, and the lighting was done in amber. This was in the inner lobby, the outside showing signal flags and special pennants with the star and crescent.

The exterior was dressed with flags, with three cutouts on the marquise, and two flag poles carried the skull and crossbones of the pirate. These were ten feet high.

The ushers were dressed as corsairs and the cashier was also in oriental dress.

The prologue was a painting of a ship, head on, beside which a man sang, accompanying himself on the guitar. When the title started it hit the sails of the ship a moment before the painting was taken up.

It was a thorough campaign, mounting as the run drew near, and it got a nice return because every stunt was a puller and not a repellent.

Putting over Long Live the King at the Auditorium Theatre, Melbourne, recently, the balloon stunt was decided upon and several hundred were released from the theatre roof, most of them carrying passes and the rest ten shilling notes. Several hundred tickets were distributed in this manner to a crowd of several thousand.

To add to the interest it was announced that the tickets and money were gifts from Jackie Coogan, who had hit upon this idea to thank his Australian admirers.

TWO OF THE STUNTS USED TO PUT OVER THE SEA HAWK IN LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY

One of the best stunts does not show; the Pirate parade which is even more qicturesque than the Coogan stunt. The kids literally ate it up. The pirate ship is 22 feet long and was sent into the adj oining towns to herald the coming of the production. Earle Hall Payne put out 14,500 pieces of distributed matter, some of it by airplane, and his newspaper stuff was good.

A TASTEFUL DISPLAY ON DOROTHY VERNON FROM H. E. SILLS

Mr. Sills is manager of the Lyric Theatre, Kitchener, Ont. He put the picture over with a drive on the plugger song, getting an unusually generous display of pictorial matter in connection with the display.

Smart Combines Two Good Ideas

Two of the ideas for Her Love Story suggested by Lem L. Stewart to the Southern Enterprises managers were the rhymed toast and the bobbed hair voting contest—for or against.

Roy L. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., liked them both, so he combined them into one big splash, varying the toast idea slightly. Instead of a toast you could write any four-line jingle so that you mentioned either Gloria or Her Love Story and the bob.

To get the cooperation of a newspaper Mr. Smart bought a six-months' subscription to be given as first prize. The second prize was a month's pass to the Noble and there were thirteen singles for the next best. The subscription won the paper to unusual publicity, and it gave all the space Smart could decently ask for. He even made the front page for the announcement of the contest, and the front page is generally held sacred to real news.

The prizes were awarded by a local teacher, and the first prize ran:

There was a young actress named Gloria
Whose hair hung almost to the floor-ia.
She had her hair cut, but oh, what a nut!
'Cause her hair was what made us ador-ia.

Well, she got six months for it, didn't she? The second was:

When you had the shingle, your money did jingle,
But you remained single, my dear.
Now with lovely long tresses, our spontaneous guess is
A wedding ring soon you will wear.

A man won the fourth prize with:

To bob or not is hard to tell
When some look lovely and some like hell.
But, fellows, why should we worry so
Whether they cut it or let it grow?

Mr. Smart sends in the bulk of the replies to show the general style of the entries. To us the notable point is that this contest appealed to the grown-ups rather than the children, and to the people of the better class, as evidenced by the stationery and penmanship.

Lem batters a little better than usual and Smart made a very able "assist."

Made Lincoln Cars Help Lincoln Film

Hooking the Rockett production of Lincoln to the Ford cars of the same name is all right if the appeal is dignified and in keeping with the importance of the film. We show two of the cards used by the Lincoln agency in Terre Haute, Ind., to advertise the presentation at the Liberty. No objection can be offered to cards along this style, and they helped the run.

Robert K. Kyle, a First National exploitation man, helped put the picture over, and he made rather extensive use of busts about 16 inches high. These were really well done, and he found it an easy matter to get into almost any window, with a small card merely announcing: "Abraham Lincoln, now at the Liberty." The lettering was in black on a grey card.

To get the verbal advertising which has proved by far the best advertising for this picture, a special performance was given to 900 invited guests including the G. A. R. post.

TYING LINCOLN TO ONE OF HENRY'S CARS IN TERRE HAUTE

The Lincoln agent was glad to help out the Liberty Theatre in putting over the Rockett production, and worked with dignified cards. Most Lincoln dealers will be glad to co-operate, but the display should be dignified in its appeal.

Opened New House with Mayor's Aid

Frank L. Browne, of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Calif., was sent up to Sacramento to open the Senator Theatre for the West Coast Theatres. That he did a very complete job is evidenced by the fact that he even induced the Mayor to issue a proclamation declaring the evening of the opening a gala event, to be observed with due enthusiasm by all good citizens.

This was printed and widely pasted, as well as being run in the newspapers, and no one in town could plead ignorance in defense of absence.

At bottom it really meant nothing more than that the Mayor was a good-natured soul, but no one stopped to analyze it but accepted it at face value and the house opened with the cachet of municipal approval. The Mayor even put in that a number of picture stars would come up to help the opening along.

It was only one of Browne's stunts, but the outstanding one.

Caught the Kiddies

Figuring that Little Robinson Crusoe would appeal chiefly to the children, H. Van Denmark, of the Capitol Theatre, Houston, Texas, gave 200 tickets to a local department store, and the store took large spaces in its own displays to advertise that while they lasted these would be given children under ten visiting the store playroom.

Some 300 children were drawn to the store, and of course their mothers came, and many of them made purchases on the way out. That is where the store got off.

The house figured that it got about $50 worth of business from the adults who accompanied the children. Probably there was more than that. It also profited from the paid admission of other children and their parents through the sales made by the fortunate ones.

This was the first time the store had ever fallen for the co-operative stuff, but now it wants more.

Used Same Front for Two Houses

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, wanted a log front for The Alaskan. There was a handle factory willing to loan slabs, cut from the wood they used in making tool handles, and he got some nicely weather beaten boards. Cotton is plentiful around his town, so he had no difficulty in getting enough to chink his hut without having to put in an expense bill, and a friend loaned him the skins and trophies he dressed the hut with. It made a fine display and there was only a slight labor cost.

That would have satisfied most managers, but Harrison went ahead and beat the idea. He had The Shooting of Dan McGrew at the Victory Theatre. This house seldom has fronts because it cannot afford to build, but it could pay the cartage on the sections, and with the snow removed and a pair of swinging doors added it looked like something entirely different.

Those spots down in the corners, which suggest eggs, were a pair of his window cards. He borrowed an entire load of beer kegs, tacked on window cards and put them all over town.

Taken by and large it is some little job of borrowing, but it's foolish to buy when you can borrow. This is one of Mr. Harrison's best stunts up to date, and he has a lot of good ones to his credit.

IT COMES PRETTY EASY WHEN YOU CAN EVEN BORROW SLABS

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, borrowed the slabs, the trophies and the cotton for this display on The Alaskan. Then he borrowed some beer barrels and used the same display for the Victory. See the other cut.

Pick Your Hour

His Hour did not exactly break any records in its three days at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., but it nudged into third place in the matter of receipts, and most of this was due to George Brown's clock.

George made a six-foot dial, half white and half black. Hands were painted on pointing to the odd hours right around the face, which was why the one-to-six half was white, to represent the afternoon, while the other half represented the hours of darkness.

The copy read, "Choose your hour now to see Elinor Glyn's greatest love romance, His Hour. Here starting Thursday at 11 A. M."

It got over the title and the showing times in one count and two motions, and it raked in the business. George knew it would, which was why he did it.

Country Stores Special Nights

We do not like the country store idea, but it seems to be a help in some sections, and if you have to pull them in that way you'll be interested in H. A. Chenoweth's new ones.

One is a Bean Country Store and the other a Pie Making Store. In the first the awards are canned beans, unbaked beans, pork and ketchup, while for the pie making store he gives the materials for two or three pies, each lot different, the flour, shortening, filling and all the rest. It makes it a little different, and Mr. Chenoweth anticipates good business.

He also sends in a circular on a potato matinee, calling our attention to the fact that he reported this stunt from Quincy, Mass., in 1909 and at Milford, Mass., in 1916. The first date is rather ahead of this department, which was not started until 1911, so Mr. Chenoweth may have been the first in this as he has been in so many other novelty ideas.

The new mat calls for one cent and one potato or onion, both the coin and the vegetables to be given to the Salvation Army representatives in the lobby of the Music Hall Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I. E. M. Loew contributes the house and the show and the entire proceeds go to the army.

He also sends along an envelope filled with sand, macaroni, a gilded pebble and apparently a button, to judge from the printing, though we got no button. This text reads: "Laugh and the world laughs with you. Why the button? It will replace the one you will lose looking at our comedies." The sand is a tie to Shifting Sands and the macaroni to The Darling of New York, in which Baby Peggy plays a little Italian girl.

It is evident that Mr. Chenoweth is still very much on the hustle.

have done this and it does not matter so much, but this is the first display in several weeks that is not partly spoiled by the undue use of long lines in comparatively small all capitals. Whether the press agent has seen the light or the printer reformed of his own accord is a problem, but the point is that even the Circle ads can be set properly. It is just as easy to achieve this result as to pass faulty work, and probably a little agitation would result in the discovery that the small stuff could be set in a more legible upper and lower with at least the suggestion of a fancy display letter. So long as there is no complaint, a lazy printer is going to work along the easiest lines and have all possible type set on the machines and in the type faces already in place rather than go to the cases for job fonts that will be more attractive and better sellers. He is not trying to sell tickets. His job is merely to put into type the copy given him, and he is not going to extra trouble if no one else cares. It is up to the house agent to see that he gets what will sell the greater number of tickets, and he can get it only through constant watching, with a verbal tilt each time he is not given what he asks for.

Managers Hook to the Famous Forty

It looks as though in their "Famous Forty" Paramount had found a real tie in. In previous years they have used some sort of designation, but none of them got the almost universal play that has been given this catch-phrase. Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, isolates "One of Paramount's Famous Forty" in this 85x3 for Merton of the Movies. You will find it outside the panel just above the "Mer" of the title. It looks small in the single column reproduction, but the original shows it in a six point italic and the isolation gives it an eight point value. Some of the small town houses run it up to a 36 point letter, but this use is more significant than the 36 because it is done by a Loew house in a city. You expect Paramount to require its use by the Paramount owned houses, but the slogan is as widely used by theatres not in affiliation, simply because it has been found that with the fine start given the product the "Famous Forty" is a trade asset to any house. It just goes to show the value of a snappy phrase. There is something about the sound of the words that lingers. It stands for an idea, and so it is doing Paramount a lot of good in addition to benefiting the managers who use it. This display for Merton of the Movies is hurt a little by a poor cut of Merton, but that line drawing of the director and his cameramen will be enough attractor, for it is typical of the title and will catch the eye.

One More Line to Perfect This Ad

This copy from Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, is a little unfinished to get the best effect. At the left there is a list of secrets with "Norma Talmadge in Secrets" for the conclusion. It really is not a conclusion. Double the interest could have been gained with "Norma Talmadge in Secrets had one she never told her husband." That would have linked the interest in the various sorts of secrets directly to the play and would have aroused curiosity as to what that secret was. Probably it did not matter much. The general public has been pretty well sold on the play through its big city runs and the attention given it in the fan magazines and the play departments of the daily papers. It is not going to spoil the sale of tickets, but probably it will not add to the sale chances those who might be sold through curiosity. Arouse curiosity and you have made the strongest possible appeal to the otherwise uninterested. This display seems any, who failed to connect the title of the sermon with Gloria Swanson in Manhandled. There was a large space in the amusement section, not to mention the usual lithographs and special exploitation stunts, and the value of this cooperation is direct. The space is taken on a page devoted to church news, to cover the advertisements of a number of the leading churches, and this obtained for the house a display on a page denied the usual theatrical attraction. Manhandled lends itself unusually well to sermonizing, but there are many plays you can hook a minister to if you can arrange an advance showing. And if you cannot borrow the film, you can at least get him to some nearby town where it is being shown. It is worth trying for, and usually there is at least one live minister in every town.

Worked Well

Among the many other things Fred Osterstock did for The Sea Hawk at the Orpheum Theatre, Easton, Pa., was the rain-check stunt worked out for Feet of Clay.

But Osterstock worked it from a different angle. He put an offer on the spare tires of all yellow taxis to carry reserved seat holders to the theatre free of charge, should it rain the opening night, the only stipulation being that the seats be purchased in advance.

This will work better in a small town than the money back offer which was the basis of the Reichenback idea.

As it did not rain, the offer cost nothing, and he had a wholesale rate in case it did rain.

Circus Style for Ten Commandments

Roadshowing The Ten Commandments, the circus style is adopted, particularly in those towns where the residents have to be stirred up to get them over to the op'ry house instead of their favorite picture theatre, and for that reason the engagement at the Auditorium, Toledo, is sold in advance on the "See" style, which always is good where you have enough to be seen. This is not dignified, but it will sell double the number of tickets that the artistic appeal would dispose of, and the chief purpose of a display is to sell seats. This will, and about to the

Dripping Water Is Wonderful Seller

Roy L. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., had the town talking for four days about a stunt he worked in a store window for Harold Lloyd.

He put a ten-gallon keg into the window of the store, dressed it with crepe paper and announced that on Friday morning the water would start to drip from the faucet. Prizes ranging from a six weeks' pass to eight singles to those who could offer the closet estimate as to the time the last drop would issue from the faucet.

All you had to do was to fill in a blank estimate and drop it into a box. Eight hundred and thirty-four persons entered their estimates, and hundreds of others stopped to figure it out and gave it up.

Unexpected aid was had from a local physician who broke into the paper wtih a remark to the effect that there were 480 drops to the ounce of water or 7,680 to the pint, two pints to the quart, four quarts to the gallon and ten gallons of water in the keg. All you had to do was to figure how fast the water was dropping and then figure how long it would take 614,440 drops to register.

And the window was plastered with statement that there were as many laughs in Hot Water as there were drops in the keg!

Mr. Smart made a clean-up with the picture at a very small cost, and he not only sold Hot Water through cold water, but he sold the Noble idea, as well, for a stunt like this will be talked about for weeks after, and the talk always brings at least the thought if not mention of the Noble.

This even beats the milk bottle matinee he used on Girl Shy and which we reported at the time.

"Feet of Mud"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Mack Sennett features Harry Langdon in "Feet of Mud." It was directed by Harry Edwards and the supporting cast includes Florence D. Lee, Natalie Kingston, Yorke Sherwood, Vernon Dent and Malcolm Waite. Langdon starts off as a substitute on a college football team who gets a chance to play and through no fault of his own makes a touchdown and wins the game. As the result he captures the heart of the daughter of a grouchy business magnate. The latter insists that he show his mettle in another way and thus Langdon becomes a "snow bird." His experiences as a street cleaner are particularly funny and should get the average audience into a high state of humor. He manages to get down into New York's Chinatown and there, again through no fault of his own, succeeds in rescuing the boss' daughter from a Chinese den which she was traveling through at an inopportune time with a party of tourists. After that her "old man" has nothing more to say. There are a number of laughs in the picture and Langdon, as usual, does highly amusing work.—T. W.

"Meet the Missus"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey in this Hal Roach comedy, "Meet the Missus," afford a lot of side-splitting mirth. As a young married couple, with little funds and lots of spats, they are seen, in a rest period between bouts, by the husband's boss and his expert accountant. So impressed is the boss that he raises hubby's salary and is subsequently invited to dine at the happy home and meet the wife. The couple have endeavored to make of the event a gala occasion and have "rented" a negro maid for the evening. She consumes a bottle of gin and substitutes in the container some pure kerosene. When hubby mixes the cocktails and the party consumes them there is much running around and expostulations. The evening is terminated by the boss, who first had his face scratched by the house cat, discovering that his machine has been stolen. The experience changes his opinion of the "happy home."—T. W.

"Low Tide"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

In addition to its comedy appeal, this Jack White production has the advantage of a picturesque setting. To escape a gangster, the hero finds refuge with his wife and daughter on a houseboat. Mother-in-law and the neighbors arrive as guests, and jealousy over chic girls in bathing costumes develops. In the end the gangster shows up and the hero only escapes a rain of bullets by fast traveling. The subject is replete with good acting and effective gags, among which are a combination motor car and boat that travels without hesitancy from land to water. The players are Ned Sparks, Peg O'Neil, Louise Carver, Eddie Baker and Jim Kelly. Arvid E. Gillstrom was the director.—S. S.

"Little People of the Garden"

(Educational—Instructive—One Reel)

Audiences who like educational pictures of flowers and insects will find this subject well constructed and immensely entertaining. Photographed by Louis H. Tolhurst and extremely well titled by Ransome Sutton, it can be rated as one of the very best of the "Secrets of Life" series. The opening scenes are of a garden and succeeding views have to do with its denizens; to quote a subtitle, "swimmers in the pools, crawlers and creepers on the ground, fliers in the air." Dainty Daphnias, in whose company males have no place, are seen in the water. Other insects shown are the sow-bug and the ear-wig. Then there are bees and fleas, and their sources of food, including man. While distinctly of an educational nature—there are many microscopic views—the film develops bits of humor that enhance its appeal. One example is a "one-flea-power motor."—S. S.

"A Miss in the Dark"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this sixth episode of "The Go-Getters" we find clever Alberta Vaughn as the champion cuticle cutter in Albert Cooke's tonsorial parlor, with George O'Hara and the villain vieing for her favor. Kid Guard has a bit as a much-pursued (according to him) Romeo. Most of the fun centers around the mistreatment of patrons in the barber shop, which specializes in manicuring and bobbing. Then a suggestion of a plot slips in, with jewels stolen at a dance and Alberta kidnapped along with them. O'Hara goes to the rescue and after a thrilling chase he speeds his motorcycle across a chasm and saves her and the jewels.

'Bucking the Bucket Shop'

(Pathe—Drama—Two Reels)

"Bucking the Bucket Shop" is the fourth and last of the series of two-reelers known as "True Detective Stories," written for Pathe by Major Ross D. Whytock, journalist. The story was adapted by George Arthur Gray, directed by William Burt and includes in the cast Ed. Roseman, Jack Hopkins, Elsie Davenport, Leslie Austin and Nellie Burt. The story has to do with a married couple, both swindlers with police records, who open a fake market. They read in the newspaper of the arrival of a wealthy young lumberman. The wife pretends an acquaintanceship and inveigles him into coming to the shop. There they are apparently just about to persuade him into making a heavy wager when the police break into a secret room where the stock machines are manipulated at the will of the crooked couple. The stranger turns out to be a star detective from headquarters. The story is very interesting and contains quite a bit of good suspense.—T. W.

"She's In Again"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

It's Paul Terry's penmanship, and that should be enough for us to say in regard to the audience appeal for this cartoon. The farmer and the favorite animal of his farm indulge in a little game of checkers. The cat gets wet feet and catches a cold—sneezes, and the game is over. The thing is given lots of ridiculous twists which provoke laughs.—T. W.

"Pathe Review No. 49"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"Pathe Review No. 49" is headed by another instalment of "Who Are the White Indians?" This is a very interesting part of the film series of the Marsh expedition into Panama. The remainder of the program is decidedly pleasing. It includes: "Old Hickory," showing how that wood is made into golf clubs; "Visiting Our America," a view of Birmingham in Pathecolor.—T. W.

"The Masked Marvel"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Paul Parrott and Kala Pasha have the principal roles in this two-reel Fox comedy. The action follows familiar slapstick lines and presents Kala as a masked wrestler who is in reality the head of the army in a mythical kingdom. He steals the gate receipts and returns to his home, Paul follows and by masquerading as an Oriental dancer gets the money back. There are a number of gags which have been used before such as the girl in the auto putting on walking shoes and starting home when the owner starts to get fresh, the slashing of the seat of the villain's trousers and comedy business with a flivver. This should prove average entertainment for slapstick fans.—C. S. S.

"Her Night of Romance"

Constance Talmadge's Delightful Farce Comedy for First National Is One of Her Best Pictures

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A thoroughly enjoyable comedy, packed with laughs, is "Her Night of Romance," Constance Talmadge's newest feature for First National. Bright, clever, amusing, it should prove excellent entertainment for the great majority of fans.

Right at the start, Constance will get them going by her awful make-up in which she attempts to make herself decidedly unattractive to scare away fortune hunters, and succeeds admirably. Fortune favors one chap who sees her as she is. Posing as a doctor, he treats her for nervousness, and a lot of good comedy follows.

"Her Night of Romance" is an out-and-out farce comedy. Things happen that are not altogether plausible, but they afford fine opportunities for laughs, and that is what counts in a picture of this type. Quite a lot of the action is in a bedroom where the hero, slightly under the weather, wanders in after the heroine has retired. This brings about a situation in which, to save her from scandal, the hero introduces her as his wife. The news spreads and there is a general mix-up. The action is bright and peppy and some of the situations are a bit risque, but it is all good-natured fun and there is nothing whatever offensive about it.

When the heroine learns that the hero is backed by a money lender and has promised him a commission, there is trouble, but this leads to a scene that is a gem, where, in order to get her back, her father fakes a rain storm with a hose, but the hero finds out it is not raining on the other side of the house. She gets him back all right and tells her father to stop the shower. And there are a lot of other scenes in this picture that will keep you smiling and laughing.

Constance Talmadge is excellent in the picture and she scores again and again. Her work is a delight; the clever way in which she handles the comedy scenes confirms the fact that she is an unusually fine comedienne. Ronald Coleman is also fine in the opposite role. Albert Gran gives a splendid portrayal of her indulgent father, and Jean Hersholt makes a minor role stand out.

"Her Night of Romance" is one of Constance Talmadge's best pictures and it should prove a big box office winner.

Story

Samuel Adams, American millionaire and his daughter Dorothy go to England for her health. To avoid fortune hunters, Dorothy makes herself look very unattractive and has her picture taken for the papers. She accidentally meets Paul Melford, who in returning a trinket she lost, sees her as she really is and falls in love with her. His uncle Dr. Scott is called in for Dorothy and Paul poses in his place. In the meantime his agent has sold the Menford country estate to Dorothy's father. Paul and Dorothy fall in love with each other, but Paul's conscience hurts him and he tells Dorothy he is an imposor. Dorothy goes to the estate and a cabby brings Paul there somewhat under the influence of liquor. He wanders into Dorothy's bedroom but leaves and falls asleep in the hall. Next morning, a friend arrives Paul introduces Dorothy as his wife. The news spreads and finally father learns it, so they decide to really get married. Dorothy discovers Paul has arranged with his agent to pay a commission if he marries Dorothy and she breaks with him, but repents and wants him back. Father finally through a ruse gets him to the house and Dorothy proves equal to the situation.

"The Dangerous Flirt"

Evelyn Brent Scores in F. B. O. Story of a Girl Ignorant of Life

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

F. B. O.'s "The Dangerous Flirt" undertakes to point out the evil of bringing up a daughter without imparting to her any real knowledge of life. The first half of the picture succeeds in establishing its argument by the portrayal of an unreasonably strict aunt who displays a marked complex by advising her charge that kissing is wrong and playing with dolls a disturbing pastime. Thus it happens that the girl recoils from the man she marries, and he misunderstands her attitude and leaves her.

This drama is very well acted, with Evelyn Brent as the girl scoring repeatedly. In fact, her scenes where the husband, played by Edward Earle, misunderstands her timidity are marvels of realism and dramatic force, and the point the story set out to make is unmistakably accomplished.

But the action does not end here. The story goes on to develop into a romantic melodrama, with the girl following her husband to South America and by a new-found cleverness rescuing the two of them from a lascivious Don. This is good melodrama but almost a separate story.

In this latter half of the picture Miss Brent supplies a satisfactory portrayal of the suddenly awakened woman, though not equalling her work in the early scenes. But it is a quick transformation the plot calls upon her to make, one with little justification, so that, with a melodramatic background, realism is necessarily lost.

Edward Earle proves satisfactory as the husband, though there is little force to his work, and Clarissa Selwyne is brutal enough as the aunt. Sheldon Lewis as the Spanish Don is excellent.

Story

Sheila Fairfax, reared by a puritanical aunt, is stupidly old-fashioned. Ramon Jose inveigles her into becoming engaged to him but she breaks it. Dick Morris, a mining engineer, gallantly whisks her away and they are married. Sheila's training makes her an easy prey to fears on her wedding night. Dick misunderstands her timidity for disgust and leaves her. She follows him to South America and they become the guests of Don Castilar, uncle of Ramon Jose. The Don and Jose vie for her regard and in a fight Jose is killed by his uncle. Dick faces a firing squad under the Don's orders but Sheila saves him by a ruse and they escape, happily reunited.

"The Dark Swan"

Marie Prevost, Monte Blue, Helene Chadwick in Attractive Warner Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Dark Swan," a Warner Brothers picture directed by Millard Webb, impresses as an extremely well done audience attraction. This picturization of Ernest Pascal's novel ought to please a great majority of motion picture followers because of its human story, restrained and natural acting and very attractive backgrounds. Some will charge it with too much sentiment, but we don't remember one theatrically heaving bosom in it and there were several tugs at our heartstrings.

Thanks to Webb's direction, the vehicle moves along very easily and naturally. Emotional scenes are many—perhaps four or five might be deleted—but all in all they are real because of an avoidance of the theatric. When Marie Prevost, as Eve Quinn, loses her temper, she does it with all the abandon and venom of a real-life vampire, yet without emulating an electric fan; Helene Chadwick, save for an over-use of glycerine, is simple, natural and effective—rather, she is except for a couple of banal close-ups which ought to be eliminated. Monte Blue fits easily into his role of the youth who passed up real love for clinging arms and pouting lips. The others do uniformly high-grade work. There is a lot of fine comedy relief.

The story is good box office stuff, having to do with the eternal conflict between girls of quality and girls of superficiality for the love of a worth-while man. The characterizations are clever, the plot action ever advancing and the denouement convincing. Best of all, it is what the characters do, not how they are described in subtitles, that makes them so real. That is the essence of good characterization, and Pascal and Webb both know it. It gives actors a chance to do their best work.

Because she is a clever vamp, Eve Quinn has generally had her way with men, while her sister Cornelia, a quiet, deep-thinking girl, cannot bring herself to deliberately pursue them. So Eve wins Lewis Dike, who Cornelia loves. Immediately after her marriage Eve begins a series of dangerous adventures with Wilfred Meadows. Lewis learns of them and endeavors to reason with his wife, but she will not listen to him. As Cornelia is sailing for Europe, Lewis meets her at the dock, tells her that he has made a mistake in marrying Eve, that they are to be divorced and that he loves Cornelia. They part with mutual assurances of a future meeting.

"Gerald Cranston's Lady"

Forceful and Thoroughly Interesting Domestic Drama Is Fox Adaptation of Popular Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

How love finally came to a couple who entered into matrimony without any thought of romance and solely for the worldly advantages each would bring to the other, furnishes the basis for "Gerald Cranston's Lady," a thoroughly enjoyable picture produced by William Fox.

He was an ambitious self-made man who married for social prestige and she was a titled widow who desired financial independence for herself and her little boy. Under Emmett Flynn's direction, the story has been skillfully built so that you become absorbed as you watch the conflict between love and ambition and convention and see respect and admiration, aided by a touch of jealousy, ripen into a half-confessed love on the part of the wife, which is almost destroyed through disgust and then comes into full flower when she learns the real truth about her husband and how he withstood terrific temptation to remain true to her.

One of the most striking things about this production is the fact that while it is adapted from a popular novel in which the sex theme was paramount, as shown on the screen this has all been eliminated, while the plot remains practically intact the situations have been moulded so that love and not passion is the dominating motive, and except for the suspicion of infidelity in connection with one character, which is afterwards proved to be groundless, there is no distinctly sex note.

There is effective drama throughout with a number of moments of emotional stress and while you can easily guess the outcome, the development of the story holds the interest tensely. This picture has a good moral tone, for it is a biting indictment of loveless marriage with the wife being continually reminded of the fact that she was really purchased, not won by love.

A number of the sequences contain good suspense, and the direction of the picture is exceptionally smooth. It is purely domestic drama, with entirely plausible situations, strong in human interest and logically developed. Starting out with little or no sympathy for either party, you become interested in their problems and are thoroughly in accord with the way things develop and sympathize with them more and more as you feel that what is their real selves become more evident.

On Alma Rubens falls most of the story and she gives an excellent performance. With less to do, James Kirkwood shows to good advantage as the husband; both are excellent types. In an unfamiliar kind of role for her, Marguerite De La Motte gives a good performance as a woman who plots to win the hero's love while Walter McGrail capably portrays a cad.

"Gerald Cranston's Lady" is excellent drama and we believe that the majority of patrons will enjoy it, and that it will prove a good box-office attraction.

Gerald Cranston makes a bargain with Lady Hermione to marry her. Love is not to enter into the affair as he is marrying for social prestige and she to secure financial independence for herself and young son. Ibbotsleigh, who loves Hermione goes on a venture to Africa which unknown to him Gerald finances. Before going, Ibbotsleigh taunts Hermione with being a purchased woman and endeavors to make love to her. Hermione respects Gerald and is jealous of the way her little son loves him. So she goes to the country. Angela, her cousin who loves Gerald makes love to him and uses all her powers to win him, even following him to Paris in an aeroplane. Hermione returns, realizing she has begun to love Gerald, but it is turned to disgust when she learns of the trip to Paris. She taunts him with it. Just then a discontented mob from Gerald's factories attacks him and he is badly beaten. Angela comes to Hermione and tells her that Gerald is true to her. When he is brought in the house helpless, Hermione who has repulsed all of Gerald's previous advances, tells him she loves him and offers the entire fortune he has settled on her and the child in order to save him from threatened financial ruin.

"The White Sheep"

Hal Roach's New Pathepicture Is Unusual Combination of Burlesque Comedy and Action Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Hal Roach, the noted comedy producer, has certainly succeeded in turning out an unusual type of production in his newest Pathepicture, "The White Sheep," which features Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey. This picture is neither straight comedy nor straight melodrama, but rather a combination of the two, with the comedy predominating in the earlier reels and the latter portion, except for a few touches, being given over to action-thrill melodrama.

In form, this production is a border-town melodrama having as its main characters a rough-neck father who rules the town with the power of his fists, and two sons who are equally rough and uncouth and like nothing better than a fight. There is a third son, the White Sheep, a mild-mannered youth who is a source of disgust to the others. How he rises to the crisis and by his head rather than his muscle saves his father when he is about to be hanged for a murder he did not commit furnishes the story.

The earlier reels are largely a burlesque on the familiar type of vigorous melodrama, and there is a lot of good, amusing material, comedy of the out of the ordinary sort. At times, however, the burlesque angle is not clearly brought out and the action is therefore somewhat confusing as you are apt to be in doubt as to whether it is straight or burlesque. From the straight angle it would seem to be overplayed in places, while from a comedy standpoint it does not always register.

There is, nevertheless, some excellently handled situations, notably where the hero makes his brothers, the two bullies, do his bidding for fear that they will lose their cherished treasures. There is also a scene which is a good mixture of comedy and melodrama where the hero hauls the court house over the state line to save his father, and the frightened horses pull it back. The melodramatic climax, which includes a wild ride in a wagon and bringing back the supposed "murdered" man, is well handled and there is good burlesque comedy in getting rid of the villain by having him chased over a cliff by a wagon wheel.

The cast is entirely satisfactory, with Glenn Tryon in the leading role, Jack Garvin as his father and Leo Willis and Bob Kortman as his brothers. Blanche Mehaffey is exceedingly attractive as the girl.

So different is "The White Sheep" from the general run of pictures that we fear there will be a lot of patrons who will not quite get into the spirit of the thing and will be somewhat at sea as to just how to take it, but they will enjoy the comedy.

Story

"Fighting" Nelse Tyler, with his two roughneck sons Milt and Mose rule the town of Tyler with an iron hand and are always ready to fight each other or outsiders. There is another son, Tobias, whom his father considers a "white sheep" who was a sentimental chap and not a fighter, much to the disgust of the others. Patience Matthews and her father, a judge, come to the town and all the Tylers try to court her, but Tobias is the favorite. Calvert, a loan sharp, seeks to down Nelse Tyler and failing cooks up a story that he has murdered Newt Randall. Nelse is tried and to save him Tobias drags the court house across the state line, but the ruse fails as the frightened horses drag it back. Nelse is convicted and about to be hung when Tobias learns Newt is still alive. He goes after him, subdues him and brings him back in time to save his father who declares he is a real fighting Tyler and leaves him with Patience while he prepares to lick Calvert and Newt.

"The Midnight Express"

C. B. C. Railroad Melodrama Starring Elaine Hammerstein Furnishes Exciting Entertainment

Reviewed by Tom Waller

"The Midnight Express" on the screen meets up in every respect to "The Midnight Express" in the C. B. C. press sheets. It is one of the fastest moving of melodrama thrillers and it satisfies, from the time the giant express train pulls out of the station until the hero just averts its doom by derailing a "wildcat" freight speeding down a mountainous incline.

As a box office attraction, we can conservatively say it is a whizz, and we mean every bit of it. It held our attention from the very start to the last inch and that is more than we can say for many other pictures we have seen.

Situations familiar in melodramas abound in this picture but they are put over with such tremendous punch and pep that you haven't time to consider that they have been used before. George W. Hill does the banner directing of his career, but he could hardly accomplish anything else with such ingredients as contained in the plot of "The Midnight Express," at his disposal.

A jazz party opens the picture, after you have been given a flash of the big locomotive upon which the story is based. The railroad magnate's son undergoes a state of rehabilitation and, working in his father's roundhouse, meets the chief engineer's daughter. A realistic fight between the son and an escaped convict in a lonely switching station on the mountainside is one of the heavy punches which opens a period of harrowing suspense in expectancy of the giant express crashing into the runaway freight train.

There is nothing tawdry or cheap about the sets and scenic effects. Most of the action takes place in a real railroad yard where employes are imperiled by hundreds of panting locomotives crossing a maze of switches.

The story seems to have been written for the leading characters in the cast, so convincing is their portrayal. Elaine Hammerstein is featured as the engineer's daughter, William Haines as the son, George Nichols as the railroad owner and Pat Harmon as the escaped convict do some of the best work of their careers.

Cast

James Travers.....Edwin Booth Tilton
Silent Bill Brachley.....Pat Harmon

Adapted and directed by George W. Hill.
Length, 5,967 feet.

Story

Jack Oakes turns over a new leaf after a jazz party when he quits his palatial home and goes to work in his father's railroad yard as a laborer. Chasing an escaped convict, Silent Bill, who had stolen his auto, leads Jack to the home of the engineer of the midnight express. There he meets and falls in love with the engineer's daughter, Mary. The convict swears to get Jack and goes back to jail. He escapes again and corners Jack in a lonely dispatch station on a mountainside. A terrific fight ensues and Jack wins just in time to derail several freight cars which have broken from the train and are speeding down a mountainous grade, headon toward the midnight express which is ascending the incline. As the result Jack gets back in his father's good graces and wins the girl.

"Sandra"

Barbara LaMarr and Bert Lytell Are Starred in Sawyer-Lubin Production for First National

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Sandra," a First National production, there is pictured the story of a woman with two personalities, and the major portion of the film is taken up with the side which shows her as an exotic creature who has given way to her craving for romance and adoration and subordinated the home-loving, domestic side.

First there is the bargain with a rich man in return for contracts to help her husband; then a sojourn on the Riviera with a Frenchman who turns out to be a crooked gambler; next, what she believes to be the ideal love, with a banker who is arrested for embezzlement. Then the return home completely disillusioned and her preparations for suicide, which are frustrated when her husband takes her back.

"Sandra" has been elaborately staged and there is a big spectacular scene, a masked ball, with the heroine as the queen. The role gives Barbara LaMarr opportunities to wear a number of gorgeous gowns and there is a glamor to the whole production. The story, however, is unconvincing and seems both artificial and superficial, never getting below the surface. You view it more as a pageant as the scenes on Long Island, the Riviera and Paris unfold. The dramatic effect is weakened by the continuation of instances which only serve to illustrate the heroine's error in choosing the wrong path and her disillusionment after this has already been established.

The latter portion of the film follows the line of old-fashioned, heart-interest melodrama, with the heroine, after she decides to commit suicide, falling exhausted on the steps of the church her husband built and then wandering inside where her husband finds her after he has searched in vain and come to his friend, the minister, for consolation. Heart interest which would ordinarily be established fails to grip you as the heroine's actions have not been such as to warrant your sympathy.

The direction of this picture lacks smoothness and is not up to the best standards. Situations are started and characters brought in and dismissed without clear explanation. There is an absence of naturalness in the work of the players and a strong tendency to face the camera; during the entire European sequences there is no reference to the husband who has apparently dropped out of the story. Barbara LaMarr, while attractive, does not bring out the dramatic possibilities of the role, and Bert Lytell is not up to his usual standard.

In our opinion, while "Sandra" is not a picture that will appeal to discriminating patrons, its glamor and tinsel, the gorgeous gowns of the star, the rather daring theme, combined with the moral that a wife's place is in the home, the melodramatic and picturesque angles may satisfy a considerable clientele.

Story

Sandra Waring is a woman with two personalities. Her easy-going complacent husband David cannot understand her, for at times she is an affectionate home-loving wife and at other times she is exotic, craving for adventure and romance. When David faces ruin because of the collapse of a building he has designed, Sandra saves him by making a bargain with Winslow, a connoisseur of women and at the same time finds the opportunity to follow her exotic side. She does not remain long with Winslow but visits Europe. Although she tastes romance and adventure and is acclaimed for her beauty and cleverness she is never satisfied. An affair with a Frenchman brings disillusionment when she discovered he is a crooked gambler and uses her for bait. Finally she believes she has found happiness with a bank president until it develops he has misused funds and also has a wife. Returning home she believes that David has found happiness with her chum Mait, and decided to take her own life after confessing her failure to David. She wanders into the church of which David's chum is minister and there David finally finds her and takes her in his arms.

"Thundering Hoofs"

Stunts, Action, Comedy and Romance Make Thomson's Newest for F. B. O. a Crackerjack Western

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Not only Fred Thomson fans but all patrons who like regular fast-moving, red-blooded, he-man westerns will thoroughly enjoy "Thundering Hoofs," this star's newest production for F. B. O. release, as it is abundantly supplied with all of these elements.

Fred has built up an enviable clientele who feel that they can always count on him for pictures bristling with stunts and action, and this is no exception; in fact, there is enough material in this production to supply several features, and it is just about the best audience picture that Fred has appeared in.

First, Fred has a good fight with the villain and ends by winning from him Silver King, the beautiful white horse that has appeared in so many of his productions; and aside from the fine performance of this intelligent animal there is a strong note that will appeal to lovers of animals in this sequence as well as the climax where Fred rescues the horse as he is about to be gored by a bull.

This climax is a hummer. Fred has been thrown into prison but manages to escape, and, knowing his horse is to be led into the bull ring, he dashes through the streets, eluding the Mexican soldiers by climbing over housetops, leaping from one to another, finally landing in the ring just as the horse is down. Seizing the maddened bull by the horns, he gives the excited populace the thrill of their lives by using his cowboy experience in bull-dogging the animal.

This is not the only good stunt in the picture; it is filled with such sequences, as the rescue of the heroine from a coach attacked by bandits by lassoing all of them and suspending them from a tree. Then the horses run away and there is a terrific punch in the scene where Fred, in attempting to stop them, falls almost under the thundering hoofs, grasps the wagon pole from beneath, pulls himself up to the seat and stops the runaway. And there are more stunts in the Mexican scenes where he slips into his sweetheart's home and manages to elude her father and the villain through his acrobatic ability in climbing, jumping, etc.

The Western backgrounds are good and the Mexican scenes contribute colorful atmosphere. In supplying punch and action, consistency and probability has at times been sacrificed, but the story moves so fast that this does not weaken it for the average fan, who won't find time to analyze it.

There are good comedy touches, plenty of human interest, a colorful romance, and with the other good things enumerated, what more does the average spectator want for an hour's entertainment?

Enough to say of Fred Thomson that he is at his best. His support is entirely satisfactory. Ann May is attractive as a senorita and Bill Lowery is about as hateful a villain as you would want to see.

Story

Dave Marshall fights Luke Severn when he finds him beating his beautiful horse Silver King on the understanding the horse is to be allowed to choose his master and he chooses Dave. Severn arranges with bandits to waylay a coach in which Don Estrada is bringing money. Dave saves the situation but Severn tells Estrada Dave is a bandit. Dave nevertheless continues to visit the Don't daughter, Carmelita, on the sly and meets with narrow escapes and much adventure. The Don and Carmelita return to Mexico and she writes Dave she is to be forced to marry Severn. Dave follows and, seeking to prevent the wedding, is thrown in jail by the infuriated Don. Severn secures Silver King and beats the horse and finally sends it into the bull ring. Dave manages to escape, rushes into the ring and saves Silver King by "bull-dogging" the bull after it has knocked the horse down. The audience goes wild with enthusiasm and the Don gives his consent to Dave's marriage to Carmelita as a sheriff from the U. S. has appeared with a warrant charging Severn with being the leader of a gang of bandits.

"The Courageous Coward"

Jack Meehan and Mary McLaren Starred in Russell Production

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Courageous Coward," a William D. Russell-Sable Production distributed by the Usla Company, is interesting entertainment, possessing a dramatic story, vivid characterizations, even tempo, and backgrounds that furnish an excellent setting for the movement of the plot. The picture does not develop any strikingly original turns and twists and no surprises, but it does hold the interest at every moment, principally because of the portrayal of the hero, who comes to show a courage he did not dream he had. The audience's sympathy will be with him.

In fact, the acting is very good for the simple reason that the author provided each character with a definite and different personality and the players had something to work on. Jack Meehan is an appealing hero, doing equally well as the pepless city youth and as the man who found himself when thrown in with a construction gang. Mary McLaren is charming as the heroine and a very efficient actress, while Jackie Saunders, Bruce Gordon, Earl Metcalf and James Gordon provide strong support.

The best scenes in the picture are those of the construction camp and the huge dam in the process of erection, which are really picturesque. Also, all of the interiors are well done. Director Paul Hurst evidently was given a smooth script and he has turned out a smoothly-moving picture.

Length, 4,652 feet.

Story

Jimmy Reed had everything but courage, so his father shipped him off to work under Roger Dawson, engineer, on a big dam the elder Reed was building. There Jimmy is the under dog in several affairs of the fists but stays on the job because of his interest in Jerry Luther, daughter of "Dad" Luther, a foreman. It develops that Dawson is double-crossing the elder Reed and Jimmy suddenly finds himself and prevents the wrecking of the dam. Then Jerry accepts his suit and Jimmy's father rejoices in an upstanding, fearless son.

"A Two-Fisted Sheriff"

Arrow Offers Another Exciting Western Starring Yakima Canutt the Rodeo Champion

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Arrow Film Corporation is offering on the independent market "A Two-Fisted Sheriff" another of the series of Ben Wilson productions starring Yakima Canutt the rodeo champion.

This picture does not get away from the familiar line of action of the usual Western, but due to good direction and the excellent stunts of the star, including a lot of good riding and hard fighting and melodramatic twists, the production is one that should prove entirely satisfactory in theatres where Westerns are popular.

The story concerns the theft of platinum which has been left in the care of the hero who is the sheriff. Through the assistance of the telephone operator who is his sweetheart it is established that the superintendent of the mine is the leader of the bandits and the platinum is recovered. The action involves the kidnapping of the girl and her rescue by the hero, and there is also a clever dog that proves of assistance in aiding the heroine by carrying messages to the hero at the crucial moment.

While Yakima Canutt is not a heart-breaker, he is pleasing, natural and sincere and the real article when it comes to daring horsemanship and western stunts with the saddle and gat. An especially thrilling sequence shows him leaping from his horse to that of the villain as both are moving rapidly down hill. There is sure a kick in this scene, and there is a lot of other punch scenes and some good comedy touches which more than make up in the minds of the western fan for any inconsistencies in the development.

The supporting cast is entirely satisfactory with Ruth Stonehouse giving an appealing performance as the heroine and Joe Rickson capably portraying the villain.

Story

Jerry, the two-fisted sheriff of Cactus, rescues Midge Blair the new telephone operator when the driver falls off and the stage runs away, and a friendship develops. Rivers, head of a platinum mine comes in town and leaves a shipment in care of Jerry. That night, strangers in his employ steal the platinum by staging a fight and luring Jerry away. Midge remembers the strangers calling the number of an abandoned mine and tells Jerry who starts on the trail. Rivers secretly phones them to go to another place, and Midge overhears him and rides off to warn Jerry. They lock him in the cabin and he shoots off the lock. Midge loses her way, Jerry finds her and takes her to the new place. She sends a note by her dog who finds Jerry. He comes to her rescue and fights Rivers who gets away with the platinum in a wagon. Jerry goes after him. The wagon falls over a cliff and Rivers is buried under it, but Jerry jumps in time. Jerry wins the reward and marries Midge.

"Wages of Virtue"

Gloria Swanson at Her Best in Colorful and Fascinating Story of French Foreign Legion

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Against the colorful backgrounds of a small traveling show in Italy and a garrison town in Algiers, the action of "Wages of Virtue" Gloria Swanson's newest feature for Paramount takes place.

As a poor Italian girl whose gratitude bound her to a powerful but uncouth man with whom she wandered for years finally settling down as the head of a cafe in a garrison town in Algiers, but who never knew what love was until an American member of the famous French Foreign Legion came along, Miss Swanson has not only one of the most appealing stories, but one of [illegible] st roles [illegible]

Allan Dwan has excellently directed this picture and this reviewer does not recall having witnessed a more colorful production or one which better reproduced the atmosphere of the story. He has finely brought out all the glamour and fascination of France's most celebrated military body, showing how it attracts all sorts of men from all parts of the world, some seeking oblivion, others adventure. In this respect it resembles Ouida's well known novel "Under Two Flags."

With the role of the young American in the capable hands of Ben Lyon who arouses the jealousy of big powerful Ivan Linow as the strong man, there is a lot of good dramatic situations and unusually effective comedy is supplied by Miss Swanson as a girl just bubbling over with the joy of living.

With an intensely romantic theme, good suspense, unusually fascinating and colorful atmosphere, bright comedy, pathos and human interest and above all Gloria Swanson at her best in a role where she scores because of her excellent work and does not have a chance to wear a single striking gown, we thoroughly enjoyed "Wages of Virtue" and believe that it is a picture that will not only appeal to Gloria Swanson fans but gain her many new admirers and prove a thoroughly satisfactory attraction for the majority of patrons. It is one of this stars very best pictures and has all of the elements of box-office success.

Luigi, a strong man, head of a small show, saves the life of a girl, Carmelita, and persuades her to join his company. His assistant, Guiseppe, arouses his jealousy and he kills him. To escape the police, Luigi leaves, taking Carmelita with him, and they finally land in a garrison town in Algiers. Luigi joins the French Foreign Legion and installs Carmelita as proprietress of a cafe which attracts the soldiers. Among them is an American, Marvin, who falls in love with her, but she is held to Luigi by gratitude until she learns that he is planning to marry La Cantiniere, a widow who runs another cafe. Luigi, jealous of Marvin, frames him and he is punished by the military authorities. Later they have a fight and Marvin is being overpowered when Carmelita stabs him. The soldiers, who love her, spread the report that he was killed in a fight with an Arab, and Carmelita and Marvin find happiness together.

"A Sainted Devil"

Argentine Again Furnishes Locale for Valentino Film That Should Prove a Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

To the Argentine which furnished the locale for a large portion of his first triumph "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" Rudolph Valentino returns in the Paramount picture "A Sainted Devil."

There is a striking similarity of atmosphere and the star also has a similar type of role and the plot concerns his wedding to the daughter of a proud Spanish nobleman who is kidnapped on their wedding night. Believing her unfaithful he becomes embittered toward women, but finally finds his bride and learns she has been true to him.

The character portrayed by Valentino suits him to perfection. He has to wear a number of striking Spanish costumes and particularly in the latter portion he has probably the best acting opportunities of his career as some of the scenes require considerable emotional display, and he will surprise many by the capable way in which he handles them. In addition, there is a scene in which he makes use of his talents as a dancer to striking advantage by dancing the tango with his leading lady.

The supporting cast is entirely satisfactory, Helene D'Algy as his bride is attractive and a good dancer. Nita Naldi capably portrays a vamp, and George Seigman is well cast as a bandit leader, although it hardly seems probable that he would have succumbed so easily when the hero corners him. There is also a scene which while effective, in which Valentino turns the tables on a vamp, portrayed by Dagmar Godowsky, does not have any real bearing on the plot.

This picture has been superbly produced and the Spanish atmosphere is excellent. The romantic scenes are effective and there is an unexpected punch and dash in the sequences where the bandits destroy the estate, with a note of tragedy in the killing of the hero's father. As a whole, however the story is not one of especial strength and there is a marked deliberateness in the tempo, with a tendency to hold the scenes too long, an excess of close-ups which produces the impression of excess footage and weakens the interest, and we think additional cutting would improve it.

After all, however, with Rudolph Valentino as the star, and a story which gives him chances for the kind of work in which he appears to best advantage and on which he gained his reputation, "A Sainted Devil" should be a big box-office attraction and prove especially attractive to his feminine admirers for Rex Beach's story could not have suited him better had it been written for him.

Harry Rapf to "Scout About" for Material in New York

HARRY RAPF, associate executive at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Culver City studios, left the coast Sunday, November 23, for New York, in company with Marcus Loew and his party which is returning East after several weeks in California. In New York Mr. Rapf will "scout around" for photoplay material in books and plays, and review current Broadway successes with a view to securing possible purchases.

Mr. Rapf will probably remain in New York until the return from abroad of Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and the production head of the company.

One of the best known and most successful film producers before his association with Louis B. Mayer and Irving G. Thalberg in the supervision of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, it has, however, been since the merger of these organizations that Mr. Rapf's theories, radically different from the prevailing ideas of many producers, have seen their greatest results.

Among other new productions under Mr. Rapf's immediate supervision are Hobart Henley's two, "So This Is Marriage" and "The Square Peg"; Chester Franklin's "The Silent Accuser"; Monta Bell's "The Snob"; Frank Borzage's "A Man's World"; Robert Vignola's "The Summons" and Marshall Neilan's "The Sporting Venus."

Mr. Rapf outlined his theory in regard to film production in the following statement:

"What the picture business needs more than anything else, what it has got to have in the future, are men—men of brains—who have been brought up in it.

"In practically every other business, and particularly in trades and professions, men are brought up to regard their especial 'line' as their life-work. Whether it is building houses or pulling teeth or speculating in the stock market, men ordinarily are trained for their particular work. Their whole preparation, whether in actual experience or in the school room, is directed toward one end.

"In the picture business, because it is newer than any other business and is still 'finding itself,' comparatively few of its workers today prepared themselves for it as their whole life-work. We hear it said of some of the pioneers of pictures that they 'grew up in pictures.' What they did was to get into the picture business when it was young, when it was new, but they were drawn to it from the stage, from literary work, or from other fields of activity.

"Today the industry is still doing that, drawing its brains from other fields of activity. But in the future, if pictures are going to progress as an art and as an entertainment, we have got to have minds trained for motion pictures. Outsiders have no chance in the legal profession, or the medical profession, because qualification for those professions requires long specialized training.

"Motion pictures in the future will require just as specialized training from the men who must be counted on to develop screen art. And they have got to be trained from within the studio, not from without.

"I know that there are thousands, sometimes it seems as if there were hundreds of thousands, of people throughout the country who clamor that they can't break into the picture game. Nine times out of ten those people have no business in pictures. Certainly the field is crowded, but it is not crowded with genius, or even with talent that can be counted on to produce pictures that will please the public, the so-called 'highbrow' element, and the exhibitors on their box-office check-up. It takes training to do that, knowledge of the most complicated business in the world, and men have got to be trained to that knowledge."

This is the policy which is being carried out by Mr. Rapf at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. "New brains, not new faces," has been the Rapf motto, and it has brought to prominence Monta Bell, rated the director "find" of the year; it has brought many additions to the scenario staff of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; it resulted in the appointment of Bela Sakely as critical advisor at the studios; and it has instituted a new method of making pictures.

Miss D'Algy in "A Man's World"

Helen D'Algy, one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's recently signed contract players, rated by the producers as a rare "find," will make her first appearance for the company in Frank Borzage's production of "A Man's World." Ford Sterling also is in the cast. Alice Joyce and Percy Marmont have the leads.

Filming Exteriors for Wright's "Re-Creation of Brian Kent"

DIRECTOR SAM WOOD has taken his company working on Harold Bell Wright's "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," a Sol Lesser presentation and a Principal Pictures Master Attraction, to Northern California where the exteriors will be made.

This is the third of Harold Bell Wright's novels to be filmed by Principal Pictures Corporation, the first two, "When A Man's A Man," and "The Mine With the Iron Door," having proved highly successful. In the play is an unusually fine cast, headed by Kenneth Harlan, Helene Chadwick, Mary Carr, Rosemary Theby, ZaSu Pitts, Roy Barnes, DeWitt Jennings, Clare De Lorez and Florence Lee.

Before the company went to Northern California John Jasper, production manager for Principal, and Sam Wood spent two weeks of preliminary survey work to find suitable exteriors. The site is in the big timber country. One of the important scenes in the play is in a bank. Jaspar, who is known as one of the wealthiest production managers in the industry, went to the bank in Los Angeles handling his account and easily arranged to have the interiors made there.

According to Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures, "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" has everything in it to attract motion picture audiences. The action goes from the Ozark mountains to "the pace that kills" in a great city. Beneath the picture play, there is a powerful moral, such as Wright always weaves into his novels, listed by experts as the world's best sellers.

Century Has Christmas Specials

Abe Stern, vice-president of Century Comedies, announces that his company will release through Universal exchanges two special two-reel comedies for Christmas week. These will be "My Baby Doll," starring Edna Marian and "Jack and the Beanstalk," featuring Baby Peggy.

"My Baby Doll" is reported to be a surprise in two reel comedies. Edna Marian, who was recently elevated to stardom by Julius Stern, president of the Century organization, plays the part of a doll in a toy store. So well, it is said, does she enact this role, that she appears to be a dummy rather than a real live actress.

"Jack and the Beanstalk," featuring Baby Peggy, is one of the special series of two-reelers made by the dimunitive star for Century, through which she portrays various characters of well known fairy tales.

Big Circuits Contract for Fox Films on First Runs

THE approaching twenty-first anniversary of the organization of Fox Film Corporation finds the special productions, program pictures and short subjects produced by William Fox playing in more theatres than ever in the previous history of the company. Many of the biggest contracts signed this season were for the one hundred per cent. output of Mr. Fox and in many theatres which had not given preference to Fox pictures in former years.

Three of the most important contracts entered upon the books of Fox Film Corporation were those with Finkelstein and Rubin, Jensen and Von Herberg and the A. H. Blank Enterprises.

First-run contracts were signed with Finkelstein and Rubin for their theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. Fox will be one hundred per cent. in these cities, and other accounts for the balance of this year's program are with Pantages and Ascher Levy for Minneapolis; Ascher Levy's Orpheum, in St. Paul, and the Diamond and Alhambra Theatres, owned by the Blackmore Brothers, in Duluth.

In Seattle, a portion of the Fox product was sold to Jensen and Von Herberg, and the balance to the Heilig Theatre, owned by C. Heilig. Fox pictures will play in Portland at the Peoples Theatre, a Jensen and Von Herberg house and also Loew's Hippodrome. In Des Moines, the Capitol, Strand and Palace Theatres, all A. H. Blank houses, have booked Fox pictures one hundred per cent, while in Omaha the Rialto and Strand, also Blank theatres, and the Moon and Empress, owned by Harry Goldberg, will present the Fox stars this season.

In the new New England territory, Fox Film Corporation reports having sold the entire William Gray Circuit for a number of their towns. In Boston, Jake Lourie will play Fox pictures in his Modern and Beacon theatres. Lowe's Hippodrome, in Buffalo, and the Lafayette Theatre, owned by Mr. Slotkin, will play Fox this season.

In Utica the product has been sold one hundred per cent. to Nate Robbins for his Avon Theatre, and to Harry Lux for the Alhambra. The Eastman Theatre and Jack Farren's Victoria theatre in Rochester have signed recent contracts with Fox Film Corporation for this year.

New Artclass Picture Ready

"Gold and Grit," Seventh of Popular Buddy Roosevelt Series Completed

"Gold and Grit," seventh of the rapidly moving Buddy Roosevelt series of eight high class action features, distributed by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, has just been completed on the Coast, according to telegraphic advices received early this week from Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of this popular series, and prints are now on the way East.

The wire also advised Weiss Brothers' that Mr. Scott expects to arrive in New York about December 15, with the completed print of the eighth and last feature of the Buddy Roosevelt series, at which time plans will be taken up and discussed for producing a new and elaborate series of romantic Western features with this popular star as head-liner during 1925.

Mr. Scott will discuss and formulate plans for the coming year on both series with the Weiss Brothers, it is said, on his arrival in New York early next month.

Made General Sales Head

Duke Worne with Gerson Pictures; Schwerin to Handle Sales Drive

B. Berger, general manager for Gerson Pictures Corporation, who arrived in New York last week with the negatives and prints of the first two of the series of Richard Holt productions, which are being directed by Duke Worne, has appointed a general manager of sales for this product.

Charles Schwerin, well known as one of the ablest sales managers in the independent field, will be in charge of the sales campaign to be inaugurated on this series of Richard Holt-Gerson productions.

The first two pictures already completed are "Ten Days" by Arthur Hoerl and "Too Much Youth." The entire advertising campaign has been completed with accessories and exhibitors ready to go into the exchanges.

The next two pictures will be "It Can Be Done" and "The Canvass Kisser" and work on the third of the series is about to start at the San Francisco studios of Gerson Pictures. Mr. Berger anticipates returning to the coast by the end of the month as soon as he has laid the plan of the sales campaign with Mr. Schwerin, who will make his headquarters at the New York office at 723 Seventh Ave.

"Reckless Romance" Opens Theatre

"Reckless Romance," the Christie feature comedy released by Producers Distributing Corporation, will open the new Link Theatre at Belvedere Gardens, California, December 18. The Link Theatre is a big new picture palace just outside of Hollywood, and "Reckless Romance" was selected as the opening bill after a preview of many big feature productions as offering the maximum of sure-fire entertainment.

This Christie comedy feature also had the distinction of opening the beautiful Colonial Theatre, South Pasadena, Calif., November 22nd. The Colonial is the latest theatre to be opened in a chain of houses operated by Pacific-Southwest Theatres, Inc.

Pathe to Reach 8,000,000 Readers of Sixteen Publications

Following on the success of its advertising campaign for "Into the Net," Pathe plans a similar national newspaper campaign for its latest serial, "Galloping Hoofs," a George B. Seitz production featuring Allene Ray.

Sixteen widely circulated farm papers will be used in the campaign. This list includes a big circulation in every state in the country. The Southern Agriculturist covers the states of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama and Mississippi. In this paper three large sized display ads will be run.

The other publications, which will run one, two and three column ads each, are: Southern Ruralist, Progressive Farmer, Oklahoma Stockman Farmer, Kansas City Star, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Indiana Farmer's Guide, Iowa Homestead, Prairie Farmer, Oregon Farmer, Washington Farmer, Idaho Farmer, Denver Post, Portland Oregonian and the American Weekly Magazine. The American Weekly Magazine has a circulation of over four-and-one-half millions.

The combined circulation of all the publications to be covered in the "Galloping Hoofs" campaign represents eight million readers.

New Picture for Dog Star

Due to the success of "Thunder" the marvel dog in "Black Lightning," the second of the series of six Gotham Productions being released on the Independent market by Lumas Film Corporation, Samuel Sax, president and general manager, announces that he has arranged to produce another dog picture with the dog as its star. Actual production will start at the Hollywood Studios within the next two weeks.

Schulberg Adds Seven to His List of Nine for 1925

J. G. BACHMANN, vice-president and general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., announced a greatly increased schedule for his company upon his return last week from a month's trip to the studio and exchanges of Preferred Pictures.

Schulberg Productions' program, originally calling for nine Preferred Pictures during 1924-25, was recently augmented by a tenth picture, "Capital Punishment." A further substantial increase has now been made whereby B. P. Schulberg will deliver a total of sixteen Preferred Pictures this season. The distributing office is moving into larger quarters at 1650 Broadway, and on the coast additional studio facilities have been secured.

Three units will be kept busy continuously. Louis Gasnier will head one and James P. Hogan will be in charge of another. Mr. Schulberg is anticipating signing the third director this week.

Pictures to be produced in the immediate future include "The Parasite," "When A Woman Reaches Forty," "The Boomerang," "The Mansion of Aching Hearts" and "My Lady's Lips." Already finished are "The Breath of Scandal," "White Man" and "The Triflers" with "Capital Punishment" nearing completion.

Negotiations will be consummated in the course of a few days for the purchase of six additional stories and plays to round out the Preferred program.

"Good pictures are good whether they come from the biggest or the smallest organization," Mr. Bachmann said. "The exhibitor is impartial. In hundreds of cases theatre-owners have pronounced the quality of Preferred Pictures to be as high as those from the largest distributors in the business. They have asked us for more and we are in a position to meet their request.

"Sixteen productions will be the maximum since Mr. Schulberg feels that this is as many as he can devote his personal attention to. Our distribution is set throughout the entire country. We are ahead of our release schedule and will keep up a steady pace at the studio with three companies at work.

"There is no fear for the independent producer who can deliver the goods. He won't be frozen out. Exhibitors will make time for his pictures."

Adds to Cast of "Sally"

Important additions to the cast of "Sally," First National's forthcoming special in which Colleen Moore will be starred, have been announced. They include Eva Novak, John T. Murray, Dan Mason and Louise Dresser, in addition to Lloyd Hughes, who will play opposite the star, and Leon Errol, who is to act on the screen the same role in which he appeared in "Sally" on the stage. Alfred E. Green is to direct.

Mahlon Hamilton a Serial Hero

Work has been begun in Hollywood on the new Pathe serial, "The Girl Vigilante," under C. W. Patton's direction, in which Mahlon Hamilton is featured, with Vivian Rich in the supporting role. This serial, to be retitled later, is a Western, based on the story by Theodore Burrell. The adaptation was made by Frank Leon Smith.

Lasky Signs William Powell

William Powell has been signed by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, for a leading role in support of Richard Dix in his next picture, "The Maker of Gestures." Paul Sloane, who directed Dix's last picture, will start production next week at the Paramount Long Island studio.

A Neat Press Book

Arrow Film Corporation has gotten out a snappy press book on "California in '49," a drama of how the west was won, which was directed by Jacques Jaccard. It contains reproductions of unusually attractive posters and photographs, with plenty of reader material for newspapers. Typograhically the press book is very neat. A musical setting arranged by Joseph Zivelli is included.

"Feet of Mud," Burlesque, in Pathe List for Next Week

PATHE program for the week of December 7th includes "Feet of Mud," a burlesque, together with two other comedies listed, in addition to the fourth subject of the "True Detective Stories"; the Pathe serial. "Ten Scars Make a Man," and five one-reel subjects.

Hal Roach presents Glenn Tryon in a two-reeler, "Meet the Missus." This production was made originally under the title of "Meet the Wife," with Blanche Mehaffey in the lead of the supporting cast. The picture was directed by Fred L. Guiol and Roy Clements. In the supporting cast are Al Hallett, William Gillespie, Joseph Morrison and Helen Gilmore.

"Feet of Mud" is a Mack Sennett comedy featuring Harry Langdon. It is a burlesque on a popular release. Directed by Harry Edwards, "Feet of Mud" was one of the last productions supervised by F. Richard Jones before his leaving the Mack Sennett organization. The cast supporting Langdon consists of Florence D. Lee, Natalie Kingston, Yorke Sherwood, Vernon Dent and Malcolm Waite.

The third comedy is a Hal Roach one-reeler that features Charley Chase, "The Poor Fish," directed by Leo McCarey.

The fourth and last of the series of "True Detective Stories" is scheduled for release for this date. The title of this two-reeler is "Bucking the Bucket Shop," adapted to the screen by George Arthur Gray from the personal experiences of Major Ross D. Whytock, journalist, war correspondent and police reporter. Major Whytock was formerly on the staff of the New York Evening World, and is an ex-member of the Bureau of Intelligence, U. S. Army. Directed by William P. Burt, "Bucking the Bucket Shop" carries a cast consisting of Ed Roseman, Jack Hopkins, Elsie Davenport, Leslie Austin and Nellie Burt.

The ninth chapter of "Ten Scars Make a Man," directed by William Parke, carries Allene Ray in the leading role. This Pathe serial finishes its final chapter next week, when it will be succeeded by "Galloping Hoofs." The principals in the cast of "Ten Scars Make a Man" are Rose Burdick, Jack Mower, Larry Steers, Leon de la Mothe and Harry Woods.

Pathe Review No. 49 marks the close of "Who Are the White Indians?" series. The installments of this group form a complete story of the Marsh expedition into Panama. The second subject of the Review is "Old Hickory" and how it is made into golf clubs. The third is a Pathecolor, "Visiting Our America." The city selected is Birmingham, the steel city.

Aesop's Film Fables, "She's In Again," "Topics of the Day," No. 49, and Pathe News, Nos. 100 and 101, complete the program.

Eschmann's Assistants Home

Scouting Party Reports Theatre Owners Booking Right into Summer

William J. Morgan, Stanley M. Hatch and A. W. Smith, Jr., assistants in First National distributon department to E. A. Eschmann, returned to the home office last week from trips among the branch offices where they assisted district and branch managers in presenting the company's sales plans for the next half-year's product to the field force.

Mr. Morgan visited the Philadelphia, Pittsburgh. Washington and Cleveland branches; Mr. Hatch the New Haven, Albany and Boston branches, and Mr. Smith the Buffalo and Toronto branches. They report that theatre owners are most enthusiastic about First National releases and entertain great expectations of the Leader Group and the Specials to be distributed during the first half of 1925. The field force is showing no let-up in pushing the First National product.

"As a proof of the exhibitor enthusiasm over the quality of our releases," said Mr. Morgan, on his return to the home office, "nothing could be more convincing than that many theatre owners are giving First National solid playing time clear into the summer. They have found that they can get far better results with First National pictures than from any other product. That is why they are giving the company's product such a preponderance of time."

May Allison in Cast

Added to Powerful Group in "The Interpreter's House"

May Allison has been added to the cast of "The Interpreter's House," now being made at the First National studios in New York, by the Earl Hudson unit which recently moved East from Hollywood.

In "The Interpreter's House," Miss Allison will enact the role of Milton Sills' sister, a young married woman, flirtatiously inclined. Sills and Doris Kenyon have the co-featuring roles in this picture.

Kate Bruce will have the role of thei n--valid mother of the man, Sills, who returns to America after an eight-year siege of blindness to find his home and his country gone made in pursuit of pleasure.

Other important roles will be carried by Paul Nicholson, whost last role was with Sills in First National's "As Man Desires," Charles Lane, who was in the cast supporting Lilian Gish in "The White Sister" and "Romola," George W. Howard, Frazier Coulter and Mrs. Theresa Maxwell Conover.

James Van Trees, who has photographed a number of First National's outstanding productions, is at the camera.

Pathe's Siberian Expedition Views

Pathe announces the release shortly of its motion picture record, in three installments, of the Roy Chapman Andrews expedition into Siberia, photographed by J. B. Shackleford, the Pathe Review cameraman, who accompanied the expedition. Prof. Andrews brought back many valuable specimens for the American Museum of Natural History, in New York City, among them twenty-five Dinosaur eggs, the first to be brought to the United States. More than two hundred camels were lost in the Siberian wastes, and a number of Mongols lost their lives on the expedition, which was attended by the severest hardships for the American scientists.

F. R. Jones Arrives in Hollywood

Pathe announces the arrival in Hollywood, from New York, of F. Richard Jones, the new supervisor of productions at the Hal Roach studios, and the starting of two short comedies at the Roach studios. Leo McCarey is directing Charlie Chase in a one-reel comedy, with Katherine Grant in the lead, and Jay A. Howe is handling the megaphone on a new "Spat" family laugh-maker, with Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook and Laura Roessing sharing the honors.

Alan Hale, Director

Famous "Heavy" Will Direct Shirley Mason in Fox Picture

Alan Hale will forsake the grease paint and become a member of the directorial staff of Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Hale's first work will be Shirley Mason's next picture, "The Scarlet Honeymoon."

The new director has just finished his characterization of "Tom King" in the forthcoming Tom Mix special production, "Dick Turpin," directed by J. G. Blystone.

A native of Washington, and a graduate of the university of the same name, Hale started out to be an osteopath and accordingly graduated from the Philadelphia School of Osteopathy. He has been a screen actor for fifteen years.

New Century Comedies on Way

"Too Young To Marry" and "The Doll Baby," two two-reel comedies are on the way from the Century studios.

Charles Lamont directed "Too Young To Marry," with Buddy Messinger and Beth Darlington. "The Doll Baby" was directed by Edward I. Luddy and stars Edna Marian, Century's newest star. This will be a Christmas special and will be released during Christmas week with a special Baby Peggy two-reeler, "Jack and the Beanstalk."

"Too Young To Marry" is scheduled for release early in the year.

"Gold Heels" Release Date

"Gold Heels," Fox Film Corporation special production, announced for release December 7th, will be held until December 21. The production is an adaptation from the stage play, "Checkers," by Henry M. Blossom, Jr., and deals with horse-racing and its followers. Bobby Agnew and Peggy Shaw have the leading roles.

George Fawcett Signed

Marshall Neilan has added George Fawcett to his cast of "The Sporting Venus," in which the leads are played by Blanche Sweet. Ronald Colman and Lew Cody. The picture is being made on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot at Culver City.

F. B. O. Will Award $3,000 in Cash for New Title for Picture

GOEBEL & ERB, the producers of "On the Stroke of Three" (formerly called "Sold for Cash"), in conjunction with Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., the distributors of the film, are offering cash prizes in the amount of $3,000 for a new title for the production.

The contest is open to everyone in the United States and Canada, with the exception of employes of F. B. O. and employes of the motion picture trade journals.

In order to conform to the United States postal laws, it is not necessary for participants in the contest to see the picture "On the Stroke of Three," in order to enter the contest. Synopsis of the story will be mailed to every exhibitor throughout the United States and Canada, and a synopsis secured at the box office of his favorite theatre makes the contestant eligible.

There are 151 prizes in all. The first prize, to be awarded to the man, woman or child who sends in the most acceptable title will be $1,000 in cash. The second best title will be awarded a prize of $250. The winner of the third prize, for the third best title will receive $100 in cash. The fourth, $75; the next seven, $50 each; then will come five of $20 each; and seventy prizes of $10 each. The sixty next best will receive $5 each in cash. One hundred and fifty-one opportunities to win a cash prize, whether the picture is seen or not.

The contest starts December 15, 1924, and closes on August 31, 1925. In the event of a tie, each tying contestant will receive the full amount of the prize tied for.

Three thousand dollars has been deposited in the Greenwich Bank (Broadway Branch), New York, to remain there till the contest is closed.

The judges of the contest will be Wm. A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News; Robert E. Welch, editor of the Moving Picture World; Martin J. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald; Goebel and Erb, the producers of "On the Stroke of Three," and the executives of Film Booking Offices, the distributors of the film.

"On the Stroke of Three" was formerly called "Sold for Cash." It ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post as "The Man From Ashuluna," and comes from the pen of Henry Payson Dowst, with the continuity by Philip Lonergan. Goebel & Erb and F. B. O. changed the title to "On the Stroke of Three" but feel that the story has possibilities for a better title.

Prominent in the cast are Madge Bellamy and Kenneth Harlan, who are co-starred, with Mary Carr, Eddie Phillips, Robert Dudley, John Miljan, Edwards Davis and Dorothy Dahm, giving admirable support. F. Harmon Weight directed.

Ince to Direct "Girl of Gold"

Regal Pictures, Inc., announces the engagement of John Ince to direct Florence Vidor in her forthcoming production "The Girl of Gold."

It is also announced that Charles Meredith has been assigned to appear opposite Miss Vidor in this feature which will be produced at the Thomas H. Ince Studio for an early release on the 1925 program of Producers Distributing Corporation.

Louise Fazenda Added to Cast

Louise Fazenda has been added to the cast of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Cheaper to Marry," which Robert Z. Leonard is directing.

Dorothy Devore in Many Pictures

Since joining the Warner Brothers field Dorothy Devore has played the title role in "The Prairie Wife" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the tomboy in the Mission Film Company's production "The Tomboy," and the title role in Warner Brothers' "Broadway Butterfly."

In "Broadway Butterfly" she is said to have splendid opportunities for displaying a wide range in emotional acting.

Henley in New York

Hobart Henley, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, is in New York from the Coast, enjoying a few days in the Metropolis before resuming work at the Culver City Studios.

"Charley's Aunt" Released by Producers Dist. Corp.

THE rivalry for the distribution of "Charley's Aunt" was terminated on Saturday, November 22, when F. C. Munroe, Paul Mooney, and John C. Flinn of Producers Distributing Corporation consummated a contract with Charlie Christie at a conference in Chicago, whereby the Producers Distributing Corporation will handle the American release of the internationally famous farce starring Syd. Chaplin and an all star cast.

As a stage play, "Charley's Aunt" has already grossed over three million dollars. It has been produced in every civilized country in the world, which, in addition to giving it an international reputation has established it as a play with the basic qualities of farce comedy that can be appreciated and understood in any language.

This farce has been produced continuously for over thirty years and even after this long period big royalties are demanded and paid for its presentation by stock companies. In 1921, Scott Sidney, who is now directing the pictorial version for Al. Christie, produced the play at the Grand Opera House in Pittsburgh and after paying a royalty of $2,000 for a four weeks' run made a splendid profit for himself. And today the royalty to be paid for its presentation in a city of the size of Los Angeles is $750.

With a revenue of this magnitude constantly coming in, the owners of the play steadfastly declined every offer made for the film rights until through the combined efforts of the Ideal Films of London and Al. Christie, who made a special trip to England for the purpose, the deal was closed for the picturization at the Christie Studio.

When word of the closing of the deal reached Los Angeles, Charlie Chaplin cabled to London the suggestion that Syd. Chaplin, who had made a big hit in the stage production, be selected to play the title role and this suggestion met with the hearty approval of both the Ideal Films and Al. Christie, who signed Syd. for the part immediately upon his return to Los Angeles, and James E. Page, who has played the role of Spettigue in the stage version over four thousand times, was brought from England by Al. Christie to portray the part on the screen.

"Charley's Aunt" was first produced at Bury St. Edmunds in Suffolk in 1892 with W. S. Henley starring, and was then brought to London, playing first at the Royalty Theatre and then at the Globe where it ran continuously for four years, a total of 1,466 performances. The fame of "Charley's Aunt" spread far and wide and seven touring companies started out through the provinces. Several companies are still touring with it in England, and each year it is put on in London, where it is one of the "draws" of the holiday season.

Al. Christie is giving this picture an especially elaborate production and it will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation as a big special attraction in the 1925 season.

"The Siren of Seville" Is Acclaimed by N. Y. Critics

PRISCILLA DEAN in "The Siren of Seville," the Hunt Stromberg special released through Producers Distributing Corporation, inaugurated her conquest of Broadway at the premiere at the Piccadilly, the newest Broadway picture palace, November 15.

The Telegram & Mail said: "All the color and excitement that are Spain's seem to have been captured for 'The Siren of Seville,' the picture this week at the Piccadilly Theatre. The piece is spectacular and thrilling. H. H. Van Loan missed no opportunity to work in all elements of love and hate as those emotions flourish in the land of the toreadors."

The Evening Graphic: "'The Siren of Seville' * * is a tale of searing hate and burning passion and bull fights and matadors and sweethearts. Wine, women, song, guitars, Spanish shawls; in act, everything to lend atmosphere to the occasion is right there on the screen. * * * The scenes of the picture staged in the arena are worthy of special mention. They are truly the most thrilling we have ever seen. Real, honest-to-goodness matadors must have been imported to flirt so outrageously with death. The bull fight sequences alone are worth the price of admission."

Daily Mirror: "The big thrill of this film, bulls and duels to the contrary, is the carriage race wherein Priscilla does a lady-Ben Hur. Dashing and swaying madly along bumpy roads with treacherous turns, our heroine succeeds in keeping the chariot upright until she reaches the arena, where she, horses, chariot and all, take a gasping spill. * * * Priscilla Dean is an alluring cave-woman. For those who enjoy flashing black eyes, a whirlwind of fistic encounters, and a hair-raising last second rescue, 'The Siren of Seville' should delight beyond measure."

The N. Y. Sun: "Priscilla Dean, the star; H. H. Van Loan, the author; and Jerome Storm and Hunt Stromberg, the directors, have handled the theme with imagination and skill. The timing, for instance, is perfect, with the climaxes hitting at just the right emphasis. If ever a film marched, this one does. * * * Each phase is handled so unusually well that one anticipates with pleasure the next."

New British Record

A new British record for the number of publications reviewing a picture, and a new record also in the fact that, without a single exception, the reviewers expressed enthusiastic approval—these were achieved by the David Smith production of "Captain Blood" when Vitagraph showed it for the first time in London.

The trade showing preceded the official British premiere and attracted reviewers and critics from every corner of England. "Rounds of applause from a hard-boiled trade audience are almost unprecedented, but they certainly rose at this picture," says a report to the Vitagraph offices in New York.

Harold Lloyd Re-Issues

Associated Exhibitors Will Put Out Six in Series Next Year

The Associated Exhibitors, through its General Manager, J. S. Woody, announces that beginning January 4th, a "Popular Demand Edition Series" of Harold Lloyd comedies will be made available.

According to Mr. Woody there has been a steady demand on Associated Exhibitors by theatre-owners throughout the country to see more of the Lloyd productions, and because of this the present steps were taken. The pictures will be put into the hands of experts for retitling and re-editing and will be released at the rate of one every three months.

"The Popular Demand Series" will number six pictures. The first to be released on January 4th will be "Now Or Never." The one to follow will be "Never Weaken," released on March 30th.

New press books, with an entire new line of advertising paper and accessories, will be issued for the series.

Weekly Fox Releases

Program for Dec. 7 Has Tom Mix in a Virginia Hudson Brightman Story

A Tom Mix special, an educational, an Imperial and a Van Bibber comedy, and a William Farnum re-issue are included among the releases of Fox Film Corporation for the week of Dec. 7.

The Mix picture, "The Deadwood Coach," is the most ambitious production the Fox star has made to date. It is an adaptation from Virginia Hudson Brightman's novel, "The Orphan," and shows Tom as an outlaw in the Bad Lands of Utah.

The Educational one-reeler is titled "Uncommon Clay" and has to do with the making of pottery.

"The Burglar" is the title of the Van Bibber comedy and is the fifth of that series of Richard Harding Davis stories to be released by Fox.

The Farnum re-issue is "The Man Hunter."

Currier Back from Rome

Frank Currier, veteran stage and screen actor, has returned from Rome, where he played Arrius in "Ben Hur," under Director Fred Niblo, for Metro-Goldwyn. Having signed a long contract with Metro-Goldwyn, Mr. Currier left almost immediately for Los Angeles.

English Actress's Debut Here in "Redeeming Sin"

WHEN the J. Stuart Blackton production, "The Redeeeming Sin," is released by Vitagraph, an English actress, Violet Virginia, will make her American debut. Miss Virginia, who played in all the productions made by Mr. Blackton during his three years' sojourn in England, came to this country especially to take a part in the special cast headed by Nazimove and Lou Tellegen.

Rose Tapley, who returned recently from the South Sea Islands, where she went in support of Anita Stewart, also will be seen in "The Redeeming Sin," portraying a French aristocrat, the mother of the character played by Carl Miller. Miss Tapley has played in a host of Vitagraph productions, having been with the company, except for rare and brief intervals, many years. She says the role she is playing now is her 514th for Vitagraph, but many of the early pictures were, of course, one and two-reelers.

Otis Harlan is working overtime at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, for besides impersonating a typical Frenchman in "The Redeeming Sin," he has a role in "Pampered Youth," David Smith's picturization of Booth Tarkington's "The Magnificent Ambersons," which also is in process of production. Both Mr. Smith and Mr. Blackton have rearranged their schedules repeatedly, so that Mr. Harlan might portray the two characters concurrently. Meanwhile, the actor finds the repeated transformation of his complexion from Anglo-Saxon to African, and back again, somewhat irksome.

Gasnier Completes "The Triflers"

Gasnier has completed his directorial work on Preferred's "The Triflers," and will turn to "The Parasite," his next picture shortly. B. P. Schulberg is now supervising the editing of "The Triflers."

Changes Title of Century Picture

Word comes from the Century studios in Hollywood that the title of Wanda Wiley's latest completed picture, "What's the Use" has been changed to "Nobody's Girl." At the same time comes word that William Watson, who directed the last named picture, has started work on another in which Wanda Wiley will also be starred. This is to be known as "Don't Worry," and will have several prominent comedians in the supporting cast.

Earl Hudson Says "Flapper" Cycle of Films Has Passed

EARL HUDSON, who concocts and selects dramatic feasts for First National picture audiences, is turning to heavy, gripping drama for the stimulation of the jaded palates of an amusement-hungry world.

The flapper cycle of pictures, with its endless orgies of pleasure-mad adolescence, has passed as the central theme of film drama, says Hudson. The public wants solid substance in its plots; wants to see the problems and tragedies of life expounded and solved. And to give his views the vigor of concrete support he directs attention to the First National pictures made under his supervision the past several months.

"The Interpreter's House," with which First National is beginning its production operations in its own studio in New York, is of weighty dramatic texture. Adapted from the Struthers Burt current novel, "The Interpreter's House" deals with a young man returning after eight years in blindness following battle wounds in France, to find the United States and the girl he is to marry in the frenzy of the pleasure delirium. Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon, sterling exponents of tense drama, are co-featured, with Lambert Hillyer, who directed the last "Spoilers" and Wm. S. Hart dramas, holding direction.

"One Way Street," in which Ben Lyon and Anna Q. Nilsson are to be co-featured under John Francis Dillon's direction, is in the same spirit.

Completed and soon to be released for public consumption are three dramas detailing every-day life problems. First in order of these is the mother-love epic, "So Big," in which Colleen Moore is the star. Popular favor has made Enda Ferber's original book version of "So Big" one of the year's best-sellers.

Others bearing the mark of Hudson's supervision are "If I Marry Again," whose intensely dramatic roles are interpreted by Doris Kenyon, Lloyd Hughes, Anna Q. Nilsson, Hobart Bosworth and Frank Mayo; and "As Man Desires," directed by Irving Cummings, with Milton Sills and Viola Dana in the featured roles.

Further mention might well be made of "Sundown," of which Hudson was author as well as supervisor. This is more than merely dramatic in dimensions. Dramatic critics have agreed with the producer that it is a "great spectacle of the last drive of cattle across the West,"—a remembrance of the faded glory of the early West.

Stahl Renews Contract

Adds Two More to His Five Years with Louis B. Mayer

By a contract just signed, John M. Stahl and Louis B. Mayer have renewed their business association of five years' standing for an additional two years.

Stahl's last two efforts, "The Dangerous Age" and "Why Men Leave Home," have been hailed by critics as included among the most brilliant directorial work of the screen. Those who have seen "Husbands and Lovers," his recently completed picture, say it will add new prestige to his directorial reputation.

The Stahl productions have been released as specials by First National and under the existing agreement, the director still has two more pictures to make for release by that organization.

Australia Again Wild in Applause for "Commandments"

THE outstanding event of the theatrical season in Australia occurred on Saturday night, November 22nd, with the premiere of Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount special, "The Ten Commandments," at the new Prince Edward Theatre in Sydney.

Thousands were turned away from the opening performance and the audience, which packed the theatre to the walls, gave the picture a tremendously stirring reception, according to cable reports received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The long-awaited presentation of the Ten Commandments" took place under the patronage of Sir Dudley de Chair, Governor general of New South Wales, and included in the brilliant audience was a long list of notables from the Governmental, business and social life of the city.

Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr., of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., cabled that "The Ten Commandments" had received the greatest reception ever accorded a motion picture in Australia, and that the Sydney engagement would break every known record for length of run and volume of business.

The new Prince Edward is one of the largest and most beautiful theatres in the world and marks a tremendous step forward for the motion picture industry in Australia. The Prince Edward is the third new theatre to be completed in Australia within recent weeks, and in each case "The Ten Commandments" was selected as the opening attraction. The Paramount special is now playing to capacity business at the new Capitol Theatre in Melbourne and the new De Luxe in Wellington.

An extensive exploitation and advertising campaign was conducted by the Paramount organization in all three cities and succeeded in making the premiers the most-talked of events of the year. In Sydney, two of the chariots used by Mr. DeMille in filming the pursuit of the Israelites by the Egyptians were used in a sensational chariot race conducted as one of the principal events of the great Australian rodeo. Another important feature of the exploitation campaign was the first exhibition of sky-writing in Australia, huge smoke letters carrying the message, "Heed the Ten Commandments," over the city for several days.

"The Making of O'Malley"

Earl Hudson Acquires the Gerald Beaumont Story for Milton Sills

Gerald Beaumont closed with Earl Hudson yesterday for the screen rights to his story, "The Making of O'Malley," which First National will picturize.

"The Making of O'Malley" was chosen by Hudson as especially fitted for the stalwart dramatic vigor of Milton Sills, to follow "The Interpreter's House," in which Sills and Doris Kenyon are now being co-featured at First National's New York studios.

In "The Making of O'Malley," Beaumont has created a vivid, heart-gripping drama from the life of a New York policeman—a harness bull. The story will be filmed in New York, with Gotham's great police department and the teeming, crowded New York life as background. Sills will have the role of "O'Malley," supported by an all-star cast.

Independent Pictures Corp. Announces December Films

INDEPENDENT PICTURES CORP. announces four new releases for December 1st. These include the fourth Bill Cody western, "The Fighting Sheriff"; the third Franklyn Farnum, "The Bandit Tamer," the third Desmond-Holmes, "Barriers of the Law," and the super-special, "Dangerous Pleasure."

"The Fighting Sheriff" is the story of a young sheriff conspired against by a band of thieves respected and looked up to in the community as decent men. When trying to save a shipment of ore from the platinum mine from falling into their hands, he is injured and loses his memory, during which period his position is filled by the leader of the band. In a fight in the sheriff's office, Cody recovers his memory and after some daring adventures succeeds in winning back his badge and having the guilty men sent to prison.

"The Bandit Tamer" is a comedy Western in which Franklyn Farnum is pictured as a ranch owner, suddenly besieged by Eastern relatives who take possession of the ranch and cause the owner no end of trouble. He finally succeeds in scaring them off his property, not, however, until he has won the fiancee of his cousin away from the city bred chap and has installed her as mistress of the ranch.

"Barriers of the Law" is the story of a bootleg ring, routed through the efforts of an ambitious and conscientious young revenue agent who also succeeds in securing the unwilling accomplice of the leader of the gang as his wife, after she has escaped from her unhappy associations. This is the most absorbing of the Desmond-Holmes pictures thus far and provides a wealth of variety in locale and shipwreck and train wreck effects.

"Dangerous Pleasure" is a society story, in which the villain turns out to be not a villain but a good Samaritan, operating under the guise of a bad man, while the woman who would appear to have been leading a very questionable life is shown, in the end, as the sister of the supposed villain. Many novel touches classify it as a picture decidedly entertaining and "different."

"Dynamite Smith" Wins Praise of Los Angeles Reviewers

THE opening of "Dynamite Smith," Charles Ray's new stellar vehicle produced by the late Thomas Ince for release by Pathe, at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, was made the occasion for a grand reunion of old Inceville celebrities led by Mr. Ince, Mr. Ray, C. Gardner Sullivan and Wallace Beery.

The spirit of joy at Ray's return to his old-time role, which permeated the gathering, was sustained by the local press representatives who were present at the premiere showing. Grace Kingsley of the Los Angeles Times, paid special tribute to Ray's resumption of the type of role which first ushered him into national prominence.

"Charlie Ray has made a smashing comeback," writes Miss Kingsley. "Nay, more, he is away ahead of his old self, to my way of thinking. Crowds stormed the California yesterday to see him in 'Dynamite Smith,' his first picture since 'Miles Standsh,' and we sensed a breathless sort of sympathy and suspense in the audience as to just what their old favorite would do. But as he proceeded one felt the thrill of enjoyment that swept the crowd. No wonder Lubitsch declared he is the greatest actor on the screen."

Florence Lawrence, of the Los Angeles Examiner and Guy Price, in the Los Angeles Herald, also praised the star and the production.

Still in High Esteem

Proof Submitted of Barthelmess's Popularity With Public

THE popularity of Richard Barthelmess with picture patrons remains as great as ever. A convincing proof of this statement may be found in First National's report that his new Inspiration production, "Classmates," based upon William C. DeMille's stage success of the same title, was played in 125 representative theatres throughout the United States on its release date, November 23rd.

"Classmates" is a type of picture which, while suitable for any time of the year, has a special holiday appeal, dealing with youth and its problems, especially as they exist among the younger classmen at the Military Academy in West Point. There is an added patriotic appeal in the picture's truthful delineation of the training which our army officers must undergo to fit them for command.

"Classmates" is another of First National's outstanding pictures in its Pace Maker group for the current year. It was directed by John S. Robertson and in the star's support are Madge Evans, Charlotte Walker, Reginald Sheffield, Beach Cooke, James Bradbury, Jr., Claude Brooks and Antrim Short.

First National's Pace Maker group has had a number of strong additions, recently, besides "Classmates," notably Sam Rork's production of "Inez from Hollywood" and John Stahl's "Husbands and Lovers," which many exhibitors are pronouncing as among the finest they have viewed during the season.

11 Million Read "Idle Tongues"

A following of eleven million has already been created for the First National release "Idle Tongues," Thomas H Ince's screen version of Joseph C. Lincoln's popular novel, "Dr. Nye," according to figures compiled by the "Publishers' Weekly," from reports received from booksellers all over the country. It is claimed by the publishers, D. Appleton and Company, that more than a million have read the story since publication in book form, and that ten million followed it in serial form in "Pictorial Review."

"K—The Unknown" Premiere at Cameo in New York City

"K—THE UNKNOWN," Universal current super-feature release, starring Virginia Valli supported by Percy Marmont, had its Broadway premiere last week in the Cameo Theatre, where it played to standing room and established an enviable reputation for Universal among New York picture fans.

The picture is an adaptation from the Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, "K," one of the best sellers of a year or so ago. It is a Harry Pollard Production, directed by the man who made the first "Leather Pushers," "Sporting Youth," "The Reckless Age" and other Universal successes.

"K-the Unknown" is the ninth of Universal fall Jewel releases. It was put into screen form by Raymond L. Schrock, Hope Loring and William Leighton. A strong cast supports Miss Valli. As leading man, Percy Marmont was chosen. Marguerita Fischer plays an emotional role. Others are Francis Feeney, John Roche, Maurice Ryan, Myrtle Vane, and William A. Carroll.

The picture was booked into the Cameo Theatre on such short notice that little or no advance exploitation campaign could be arranged. No 24-sheet stands or advance publicity marked its coming. Its success in the face of these conditions is especially noteworthy. The picture played to a good audience the first night and built rapidly to S. R. O. business for the latter part of the week.

The only campaign work done in connection with the showing was a teaser card mailed out to 10,000 doctors and nurses by Harry Mandel of the B. S. Moss office and Joe Weil, Universal's New York exploiteer.

Record Accessories' Sales

A side issue of unusual importance of First National's Eschmann Month sales contest, which was closed last week with the country at large having an average standing of 111.73 per cent. of the assigned quota, was the jump in the sales of accessories during the drive. The demand for these stook a spurt at the opening of the drive and kept steadily climbing When the contest was over, the sales of accessories was the greatest in the history of First National, having surpassed the record set by the great sales drive of last winter by 21.67 per cent.

Finishes "Tomorrow's Love"

Paul Bern has finished the Paramount production of "Tomorrow's Love," adapted by Howard Higgen from the Saturday Evening Post story, "Interlocutory," written by Charles Brackett. Pat O'Malley plays the male lead and is featured, together with Raymond Hatton in support of Miss Ayres. Other important players are Ruby Lafayette, Jane Winton, Dale Fuller and "Spec" O'Donnell.

I. E. Chadwick Signs George Walsh To Long Term Contract; Will Do Serial

JUST before leaving the Coast, I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, announced that he had signed George Walsh to a long-term contract to appear in a series of feature pictures and in at least one chapter play dealing with an important episode in America's development.

No news beyond the signing of Mr. Walsh could be obtained at the time this announcement was made, but it was asserted by officials of his organization that Walsh was only one step in the huge program Mr. Chadwick was planning for his new season. Several other announcements will soon be forthcoming, it was said, that will give some idea of the big program the Chadwick organization is planning—the acquisition of several very famous books and plays, and players of national prominence.

Booking Prizes Awarded

William I. Cowan, of Boston, Wins National and Eastern Awards

The Producers Distributing Corporation sales organization has just completed the first period of an intensive Bookers' Drive for play dates on contracts closed for their new product.

As a result of this campaign the sales executives of Producers report that their product is definitely set for play dates in practically every first-run house throughout the country.

The prizes in this bookers' contest were Champion Booker banners, a National Championship Banner to the leading booker in the United States, and four division banners for the leaders in each division of the sales organization. There was also a prize of $25.00 awarded to the winning booker in each division.

William I. Cowan, Boston booker, was the winner of the National Championship Banner and also the Eastern Division Championship Banner. William Skerrett, of Detroit, won the Central Division Banner; L. A. LaPlante, St. Louis, the Mid-West Division championship, and Mr. Hossfeld, Los Angeles booker, the Western Division Banner.

The contest will continue indefinitely, the periods being divided into four weeks each.

Unique California Wedding

Richard Tucker, the actor, at present playing in Warner Bros. "The Bridge of Sighs," was married last week in the chapel of the Mission Inn, Riverside, Cal., to Miss Ruth Mitchell. The wedding party included Helene Chadwick, Rosemary Theby, Mr. and Mrs. Walter McGrail, Harry Myers, Alan Hale and Mr. and Mrs. William Hepner. Every member of the party was working until the last minute either at Warner Bros. or some other Hollywood studio, and all speed laws were broken on the way from Los Angeles to Riverside. Miss Marjorie Rambeau was a guest at a wedding supper which followed on Sunday night, as no time could be taken off for the important function sooner.

Brown to Direct

Clarence Brown, whose "The Signal Tower," "Butterfly" and "Smouldering Fires," are among the season's successes, has been given one of the year's best sellers to direct, Universal announces. It is "The Plastic Age," by Percy Marks, a novel recently purchased among the different important books announced with the arrival of Carl Laemmle from Europe. The story will be produced with an all star cast.

Rin-Tin-Tin at Premiere

Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, Crowds Applaud Star of "Find Your Man"

A big night at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, marked the opening night of "Find Your Man," with Rin-Tin-Tin. The management and Warner Bros. staged on the evening of Nov. 24 one of the biggest first performances that the Mission ever has had. A big crowd enjoyed it.

Sun arc lights parked in front of the theatre spotted the film celebrities as they arrived, and a cheering crowd greeted them. Rin-Tin-Tin and all of the Warner Brothers' stars were there, and were introduced to the audience.

Lee Duncan, owner of Rin-Tin-Tin, brought the dog on the stage to receive a wonderful reception, and the animal indicated it possesses intelligence without the aid of a director.

Among these present who were introduced and received a warm greeting were Irene Rich, Dorothy Devore, Monte Blue, Beverly Bayne, Marie Prevost, Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, John Roche and June Marlowe.

Put in Serial Form

Paramount Releases "The Golden Bed" Novel in Newspapers

Over 300 newspapers in the United States are using the serialization of Wallace Irwin's novel, "The Golden Bed," prepared by the Paramount publicity department as an advance broadcasting of the production which Cecil B. De Mille is making. The novel has been arranged into fifty episodes of 2,000 words each, and according to the requirements of the newspaper is furnished in mat or galley form.

Charles E. McCarthy, head of the Paramount publicity department, states that exhibitors can obtain this service for their leading local paper by applying to the exploitation representative in the nearest Paramount exchange.

"The Price of a Party"

"The Price of a Party," the Howard Estabrook production released under the Associated Exhibitors' banner, had its premier Broadway showing at the B. S. Moss Cameo Theatre last week. The story was written by William McHarg and appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. The plot revolves around the jazz of Broadway night life and presents Mary Astor, Hope Hampton, Harrison Ford, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Dagmar Godowsky, Fred Hadley, Florence Richardson, Edna Richmond, Donald Lashey, Daniel Pennell, Edward Lawrence, Claire Luce, Ward Fox and Esther Muir.

Three Important Releases Announced by Warner Bros.

THREE releases are announced by Warner Brothers for this month, and these three include a diversity of entertainment running from melodrama to a smashing problem picture.

"The Lighthouse by the Sea," "A Lost Lady" and the "Bridge of Sighs" are on the program to reach the exhibitors before the first of the new year.

"The Lighthouse by the Sea" introduces Rin-Tin-Tin, the "wonder dog," in what is claimed to be his best picture. It is from the old Owen Davis melodrama, directed by Mal St. Clair, and has an exceptionally strong cast, including Louise Fazenda and "Buster" Collier. Warner Bros. are putting a special exploitation campaign behind this picture.

"A Lost Lady" is a story of a woman who existed solely for the effect she created upon men. It is one of Warner Bros. Screen Classics starring Irene Rich, from the novel of Willa Cather and directed by Harry Beaumont. The all-star cast includes Matt Moore, June Marlowe, John Roche, Victor Potel and George Fawcett.

"The Bridge of Sighs" is a melodrama of New York life taken from the song of that name by Charles K. Harris and written about the famous "Bridge of Sighs" across Franklin street, New York City, over which prisoners travel from the Tombs Prison to the Criminal Courts Building, and which has been the scene of thousands of human stories. Phil Rosen directed, and the cast includes Dorothy Mackaill, Creighton Hale, Alec B. Francis, Richard Tucker, Ralph Lewis, Clifford Saum, Fanny Midgely and Aileen Manning.

According to the Warner Bros. office these three releases are of such a high class calibre that it will probably be a long time before three pictures of such audience value are again released in one month.

"Roughneck" Premiere

Because of a desire to bring the latest Fox Film Corporation productions to Broadway it has been decided to withdraw "Dante's Inferno" from the Central Theatre where it has been running for the past ten weeks and substitute "The Roughneck," starring George O'Brien, new Fox star.

"Inferno" will end its sensational run Sunday night, November 30, and "The Roughneck" will have its premiere Monday, December 1.

Addition to Paramount Staff

James Ashmore Creelman has been added to the scenario staff of the Gloria Swanson unit in Paris, it is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. Mr. Creelman is writing the scenario for "Coast of Folly," Miss Swanson's next picture, from an adaption by John Russell of Coningsby Dawson's novel. Exterior scenes will be made in France for the picture by Director Allen Dwan, who recently arrived in Paris.

Premiere of Metro-Goldwyn Specials Brings Marcus Loew Back From Coast

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer officials are elated over the successful New York premieres of two of its outstanding offerings of the 1924-25 season, "Romola," starring Lillian Gish, at the George M. Cohan Theatre on December 1, and "Greed," the Eric von Stroheim all-star production, at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, on December 4.

A representative audience attended the opening last Monday night of the Henry King-Inspiration feature, in which Dorothy Gish is featured in the production in which Lillian is starred. Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn, curtailed his stay on the Coast to attend the premieres.

Equally imposing was the opening on Thursday night of "Greed," with its exceptional cast and splendid story.

Colleen Moore in "So Big" A "Best Bet" on 1925 Card

FIRST NATIONAL'S picturization of Edna Ferber's "So Big," in which Colleen Moore is starred, has developed, in the course of production, into such a remarkable picture that it will easily take rank among the features of the year. It is scheduled for release December 28. It is a leader in First National's pace maker group for the current season.

Director Charles Brabin has made of "So Big" a production that is epic in character and scope, worthy to be ranked, in the opinion of First National executives, along with the finest of the screen visualizations of the great periods of American history. It differs from other productions coming under this classification ("Abraham Lincoln," "Sundown," "Secrets," "The Birth of a Nation," "Little Old New York" and "The Covered Wagon") in that its historical background serves merely to emphasize the animating force of Miss Ferber's novel, that of mother love.

"So Big" is a story of the period in American history when the horse was beginning to give way to the automobile, the dawn of the gas age in American locomotion. The action takes place in Chicago and on a truck farm in the environs of that city. In its depiction of the costumes, manners, vehicles and modes of that day "So Big" has been kept perfectly accurate by Director Brabin, so that the result is historical in accuracy to past manners and customs without any historical character or event in it.

The role of Selina Peake DeJong, shown from young girlhood to old age, gives Colleen Moore her greatest role, and one to which she has adapted herself amazingly. Word has already gone out from Hollywood that a new Colleen Moore will be revealed when this production is screened.

Betty Compson Begins

Betty Compson has begun work in "New Lives for Old" under the direction of Clarence Badger, who makes this his first production for Paramount. Wallace MacDonald is Miss Compson's leading man. The cast also includes Theodore Kosloff, John Joyce, Margaret Seddon, Joseph Dowling, Gail Henry and Helen Dunbar.

Rudolph Valentino and Nita Naldi in a scene from "The Sainted Devil," a Paramount picture.

Fox Plans Big Celebration for Its 25th Anniversary

FOX FILM CORPORATION will celebrate its twenty-first anniversary during the week beginning January 25, 1925 and ending on January 31.

The anniversary finds this corporation in the midst of releasing the most important product in its entire history and strongly intrenched in the theatres of the world.

An idea of the magnitude of the Fox product and its growth can be gleaned from a summary of the current season's productions which includes five giant specials, 26 specials, 21 star series, 17 Imperial comedies and 20 Sunshine comedies, 7 monkey comedies, 8 Van Bibber comedies, 26 one-reel Educationals and 104 issues of Fox News reel.

Keeping pace with the production has been the demand and "the coming of age" of the corporation finds 28 branches in the United States, 6 in Canada, and 60 others scattered all over the universe distributing this product to theatres of every race.

As the first step in the celebration it has been announced that Fox Film Corporation will give free paper and accessories to all exhibitors playing 100 per cent. Fox pictures during the anniversary period.

By this is meant that any exhibitor who plays some Fox picture, a feature, program, comedy or short subject, on each day of the week celebrating the eventful period in the life of the corporation, will be given free of charge, all the accessories he would ordinarily buy to exploit the particular film in question.

This offer also holds good for houses playing only three days a week, but who on each day during the anniversary celebration, plays one Fox picture or another.

In addition to this a special spinner card has been designed by the firm for use by the 100 per cent. Foxites. Other plans for the proper celebration of the "coming of age" are being discussed by the officials of the company. They will be announced from time to time through the trade press and the dailies.

T. H. Hunter Directing

Under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter, Captain Charles Nungesser, the famous French "Ace," started work at the Roosevelt Flying Field on Long Island on his production for the Associated Exhibitors last Tuesday. The title of the picture is "The Great Air Mail Robbery." The story was written by Jack Lait.

Universal-Desmond Serial, "The Riddle Rider," Released

UNIVERSAL announces the release of a new serial this week. It is "The Riddle Rider," starring William Desmond, popular Western and serial star, and made by William Craft. Eileen Sedgwick, one of the best known feminine stars in the serial field, is featured in it.

Fred J. McConnell, short subject manager for the Universal Pictures Corporation, personally supervised the making of this serial. In addition to his contribution to the writing of the story, he was on the set and on location with the Craft-Desmond company.

The cast supporting Desmond and Miss Sedgwick includes Helen Holmes, long noted as a serial heroine; Claude Payton, William N. Gould, Ben Corbett and Hughie Mack. The story concerns a mysterious figure in a Western oil locality who avenged the wrongs inflicted upon the weaker members of the community by oil sharks and land grabbers. The figure is known as the Riddle Rider. In reality it is the editor of the local paper, trying to drive the crooks out of the country. The dual role is taken by Desmond. Miss Sedgwick plays that of a young heiress from whom the crooks are seeking to wrest valuable oil land.

"In 'The Riddle Rider,' Universal has a 100 per cent. serial," says McConnell, who is now engaged in conferences with the various Universal exchange forces regarding this winter's output of Universal serials. "I watched this serial in the making, and I know a good serial when I see one. I have been alternately making and selling serials for a number of years. It is all right to talk about serials from a theoretical standpoint, but when you make them and then have to go out and sell them, you learn many things.

"I took great pains in supplying 'The Riddle Rider' with all possible elements of suspense and interest. The thrills are stuffed in chapter after chapter and the high story value of the plot, together with the strong romance woven through its sequences, make this new Universal serial a certainty as far as the box-office is concerned.

"Unusual attention has been given to the publicity work, advertising and exploitation of this serial. Universal has prepared an eight-page, two-color press sheet filled with smashing ads, good stories and a large variety of excellent campaign material. In the matter of 24-sheets, 6-sheets, 3-sheets and one-sheets as well as lobby cards, cut-outs, banners, slides, and heralds, the Universal accessories department has 'stepped out' on this serial."

Warner Brothers Schedule to Be Completed by Feb. 1

THE released pictures in their 1924-25 program have been so well received by exhibitors and the public, that Warner Bros. have determined to make a special effort to keep their promise made early in the season that all of the twenty Screen Classics in the current program would be finished by February 1, and ready for release early in the spring.

In order to accomplish this, a complete rearrangement of the production schedule has been necessary, and after a conference at the Hollywood studio between H. M. and J. L. Warner, the New York office announces that the entire output of the company will be completed on the date first announced.

Increased activity at the western studio marks the first step in the "speed up" program, and high pressure will be in order from now on. The first signs of the new schedule arrangement is an announcement that "Eve's Lover," which Dorothy Farnum is adapting from the novel by W. K. Clifford, to be directed by William Beaudine, with "My Wife and I," adapted from the novel of Paul Bern by Julian Josephson, to be directed by Willard Webb, and Robert Keable's "Recompense," adapted by Dorothy Farnum, and directed by Harry Beaumont, will be the next three big scripts to be put into production.

"Recompense" is the Keable novel announced as a sequel to "Simon Called Peter," and has created almost as much of a furore as the latter book of the English writer.

"The Lighthouse by the Sea," with Rin-Tin-Tin. "The Dark Swan," from Ernest Pascal's sensational novel, and "A Lost Lady," adapted from the best-seller of Willa Cather, have just been completed, and there is in production at the present time nearing completion, "The Bridge of Sighs" and "A Broadway Butterfly" with "Thin Ice" and "The Man Without a Conscience" just starting.

Ernst Lubitsch is also getting ready to start this second contract picture of the current season about which much is not known at present except by Mr. Lubitsch, but concerning which considerable will be forthcoming very soon. Suffice to say that the European director will have a worthy successor to "Three Women" and "The Marriage Circle."

Julian Josephson, who has adapted several of the successful Warner Bros. Screen Classics, was signed last week for another year, and altogether there seems to be very little doubt, the Warners say, but what they will deliver as per promise on Feburary 1.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Solid Ivory

Hal Hodes, Branch Manager N. Y. Exchange for Educational Films, Inc., sent my good friend Van Powell, Editor "Straight From the Shoulder" Dept., the following, but we have concluded it will be unwise to get things too much mixed up, so Van handed the letter to this department, where such matters properly belong, since they have to do with projection. Manager Hodes says:

Attached find a strip of film taken from one of our Hamilton comedies. I invite your particular attention to the type of punch marks used by a man who probably calls himself an experienced projectionist. They are typical of those used for A LENGTH OF FIVE FEET in the film.

It is evident that this "expert projectionist," being either near-sighted and too vain to wear glasses to enable him to see the screen from the projection room, decided to make punch marks large enough to be observable at any distance by anyone not totally blind.

Effective immediately, it is my intention to hold responsible the exhibitor who employs film BUTCHERS of this type, since only in this way can a certain type of "operator" be made to realize that exhibitors and projectionists who must show films after he has finished with them (And pretty well finished them, too.—Ed.) are entitled to receive them in decent condition.

The marks consist of a diamond-shape cut, which is reproduced herewith, full size, every eighteen inches, with two 1/8-inch punch holes side by side about every six inches between.

For the information of friend Hodes, this department has been conducting an unremitting warfare on the punch artist for more than five years. I am with you in making the theatre PAY for such outrages. When Mr. Exhibitor gets soaked for film a few times, his projectionist will, in all human probability, hear something drop, and the sound thereof won't be low and gentle, either.

I've raved about punch marks until I'm tired. When exchanges themselves get ready to take some really effective steps to abate the CRIME of film punching (INCLUDING THE PUNCHING OF THE FILMS BY THE EXCHANGES THEMSELVES—ABOUT A HUNDRED HOLES AT A CLATTER) I'll do everything possible to back them up, but TALK won't bring home the bacon. Mr. Solid Ivory Top must be hit with a brick, and the brick must be made of pay-for-the-damage-you've-done.

Question No. 166—Is it possible to form a sure judgment of screen surfaces by substituting one surface for another while a picture is being projected? Explain your answer.

Question No. 167—How may a really reliable comparative test of screen surfaces be made?

Question No. 168—Suppose a salesman is trying to sell your manager a screen. He orates expansively upon its superiority as against your own screen—and all other screens, of course. The manager asks your advice. What would you suggest to him as the advisable thing to have the screen salesman do?

Question No. 169—Tell us what various kinds of reflection is important, insofar as has to do with screen surfaces, and what the practical effect of each one is.

Question No. 170—In your opinion has a visible roughness of a screen surface any value? Give us your views with relation to this matter.

Worm-Eaten Film

A projectionist in the State of Washington, who requests that his name be withheld, has evolved a new name for film which has passed through the merciless hands of the punch fiend. He sends samples of the punched film, together with cop yof a letter he has sent to the one releasing the production, in which he very aptly describes the film as "worm-eaten." The production was "The Sea Hawk." The letter reads as follows:

Gentlemen: I ask you how in the name of common sense you can expect a man to project worm-eaten film such as the samples inclosed, each cut from alternate reel ends of "The Sea Hawk"? The producer has expended tens of thousands of dollars in the effort to give us a masterpiece. He has given us just that, only to have men who truly are "operators," and nothing more, or an exchange which has small respect for the thing it perveys, use a shot gun on it, loaded with something like a quart of bird shot.

I say "shot gun," for the reason that I do not believe any man shiftless enough to use such methods would exert the energy necessary to punch so many holes, unless he had a punch rigged to run by motor.

Scalp Bounty Suggested

It would be a real blessing, did the law permit, for the motion picture industry to place a good, stiff bounty on the scalps of the OUTLAWS who commit such outrages, with an open season of 364 days a year, during which time they might be shot, kicked to death by a jackass—that is, if one jackass could be induced to kick another.

Say, that bird certainly slings a wicked pen, but before you criticize his harsh proposals, think over the "worm-eaten" film which has reached YOU—punched so full of holes that it looks like a collander. My own idea of punishment would be to give the punch artist some old film and a punch, and keep him without food or water until he had punched, say, twenty-five holes in each foot of, say, ten thousand feet of the film, by which time I think hole punching would cease to have further attraction for him and he would be permanently cured.

Excellent Work

Recently, through the courtesy of Cosmopolitan Productions, Friend Daughter and I attended a showing of "Janice Meredith," at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York City.

I am well pleased to be able to compliment the projection force which had charge of the screening of the photoplay on their excellent and artistic rendition of the production.

The picture was at all times clear, sharp and brilliant; also I had no fault to find with the tempo of projection. The action was true to life, and the work in general deserving of commendation. My compliments to Projectionists Robert Sanders, Sol Abrams and Harry Tillman. I shall hope to soon again have the privilege of witnessing the rendition of a production by your capable hands.

Just a few days later, daughter and I, through the courtesy of the William Fox Corporation, enjoyed the screening of "Dante's Inferno" and a most excellent comedy at the Central Theatre. The show was inherently a corking good one, and was made doubly so by the faultless work of the projectionists. Just who was on duty at the time I do not know, but the projection force consists of Theodore Ridder, Joseph Frank, George Langer, Louis Weinberger and Samuel Friedman.

Regrets

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. D., in a letter just received, says:

I regret to learn from the November 8 World that we are to lose the wonderful articles by our friend John Maurer, Massillon, Ohio. I am hoping that he will find time to let us have a few words from his pen between examinations. Best of luck, John!

Which sentiments I am sure we all endorse.

Question No. 138—Under what conditions would you recommend rear projection?

Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ontario; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.; Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Mass.; W. R. Gwynn, Longmont, Colo.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. D.; Karl H. Sommermeyer, Marietta, Minn.; Charles Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa, and R. L. Benson, Seattle, Wash.; all made acceptable answers to this question, though there was a wide variance of opinion on some points. I have approved all answers which showed the writer to have either real knowledge of the subject, or to have used his reasoning powers thereon, even though I might not consider the results arrived at as altogether correct.

Armentrout says it is never best, but may be resorted to temporarily under some conditions. Says there are few buildings so constructed that in order to get good results rear projection would be necessary, and if there is such a building one had better look elsewhere for a show-shop location.

Sommermeyer says rear projection on a good translucent screen is highly satisfactory, where projection distance is available allowing not less than a four inch E. F. projection lens to be used. It removes all noise, heat, fire danger, etc., from the auditorium and usually will allow level projection.

Bennewitz says under conditions where it is possible to get the required size picture, and use not less than a 4 n. E. F. projection lens, screen to be ground glass, with not less than 20 feet screen to front row of seats, rear projection is all right. But he is not at all enthusiastic about it.

Gwynn says rear projection should be resorted to in temporary installations only and not then if it can be avoided. It presents several optical handicaps and involves the use of a screen having heavy diffusive powers under all conditions; also it usually will involve the use of a relatively short focal length projection lens.

Fell says:

Where it is possible to obtain a projection distance permitting the use of a projection lens not less than 4 in. E. F. I would suggest rear projection. Certainly it would be better than having the projection room up on the roof, or stuck in some corner of the second or third balcony, and screen results would be just about 100 per cent. better, to say nothing of removing the fire hazard, noise and heat from the auditorium.

Dobson says:

Rear projection is practically a thing of the past. It once was used in airdomes, but seems to have died out. If it were possible to have a projection distance enabling the use of a projection lens of not less than four inches E. F., with a screen of ground glass or tracing linen, with no chance of any one walking in front of the lens, rear projection would be advisable.

Brother Gray, I think, gave us the best constructive argument on the subject. He said:

I can hardly think of a condition existing under modern theatre practise in which rear projection could be considered advantageous as a permanent proposition. It is not that rear projection in itself is objectionable, or even undesirable, but rather because the limited distance from the screen to the rear wall of the stage, under all ordinary conditions, would compel the use of a relatively short focal length projection lens, if a picture of ordinary theatre size be projected.

Lenses of shorter focal length than say 3.5 inches E. F., invariably have an objectionable amount of spherical aberration, which results in the projection of a poorly defined picture which looks to be more or less out-of-focus. This fault is inherent in very short focal length projection lenses. Furthermore, unless a special type of translucent screen, of which the ground glass, tracing linen and "Lux" daylight screens are examples, be used, the lens must be placed outside the line of vision of everyone viewing the picture "out front," else a glare spot will appear within the area of the picture, its exact location being dependent upon upon the angle at which the picture is viewed.

With rear projection, and the proper kind of screen, a picture may be projected which will appear bright and clear in a well-lighted auditorium, and as a novelty or for an advertising stunt this may be worth while. I have been told that a rear projection stunt has been successfully tried out with relay mirrors, which had the effect of lengthening the projection distance, thus permitting of the use of projection lenses of longer focal length than the actual distance lens the screen would allow. This, however, would also seem to savor of a "stunt" and it would seem as though the definition would suffer somewhat through its use.

Out-of-doors rear projection may be accomplished with surprisingly successful results by the use of the Lux screen, provided (a) that no direct sunlight strike the screen. (b) That a shallow shadow box be built around the screen, and (c) that the rear of the screen be protected from external light.

One other element enters, viz: It would seem that the reversal of the film in the projector, made necessary by rear projection. (Emulsion side toward the screen.—Ed.) would to some extent cause additional damage to the emulsion. Most projectors are so designed that the "stock" side of the film receives the greater "punishment" under normal threading conditions.

There, gentlemen, while some of this is not perhaps strictly in line with the actual question, still it is all germain, and I call this a well argued answer to the question.

My own view is that while rear projection has the advantage of removing the projection room entirely outside the auditorium, and usually permitting either level projection or nearly so, still, conditions are such that it can very seldom, if ever, be successfully applied in practice; also it has the disadvantage of making impossible the highly reflective screen surface, where its use will be a large advantage. For these reasons rear projection is, I think, pretty nearly a dead letter.

Question No. 139—Is rear projection with screen at proscenium line and projectors at rear of stage practical?

Most of the men merely said that this question is covered by and answered under question No. 138. This is very nearly correct, and since we have used lots of space answering 138 we will pass 139 up.

Question No. 140—Explain, in detail, just why a leader and tail piece are necessary on each reel of film, and whether a leader and tail piece should be opaque or transparent, and why.

Dobson, Fell, Gwynn, Bennewitz, Sommermeyer, Armentrout, Hanover and W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y., all made good on this one. Most of them gave the reasons for leader as of importance in receiving the brunt of abuse which the main title would receive, and for the purpose of threading in frame, and the trailer to partly cover a possible error in time of change-over.

Again I think Gray has the best of it. He says:

There should be a numbered and titled leader at the beginning of every 1,000 foot unit of film for identification purposes, though modern projection practise does not permit of projecting these to the screen. Since it is just as important that these identifying markers appear on each reel when the said reel finally reaches our fellow projectionists out in "the sticks" as when used first run, they should be, in turn, protected by a subsidiary leader about four feet long. A projecting section—this may be one, two or even three thousand feet in length, or any intermediate footage which local conditions may require—should have its opening action, or title, as the case may be, protected by a leader for threading purposes.

The end of each reel of film should by all means be followed by about five feet of thoroughly opaque trailer, so that in case of a mental lapse on the part of the projectionist, the worst that can happen would be a dark sheet for a second. This is bad enough, but is far preferable to a sudden glare of light, or the interjection of the irrating "End Part Three" in a nine-reel subject. The audience is interested, let us hope, in the story being told on the screen, NOT in how many reels you have run.

NOTE: An opaque white trailer will, if run through the projector several times with the light on, and in the same frame each time, show up the frame lines in a lighter tint than the rest of the film, hence will thereafter make excellent leaders to "thread up on."

Dobson put a part of his answer very well indeed, thus:

All reels, whether single or multiple, should have at least four feet of leader, preferably of developed, printed stock. This should be spliced in frame with the original title of the picture (See Gray's remarks about identifying leader. He is right. Leader may be spliced in frame with that, I think. I am not certain about that, though, but anyhow, even if out of frame, the framing may be readily done on the first title frame.—Ed.) Here is the reason why: When threading, the leader is passed through the mechanism and down into the lower magazine, where it is attached to the lower, or take-up reel hub. Then the film is run through until the main title, or the subject matter, if there be no title (as in the case of an occasional multiple reel production) and you are all set, with the entire title or action available for projection.

Question No. 141—Name the reasons why the white light should never be allowed to show on the screen at the end of a reel, or a subject.

Bennewitz, Dobson, Armentrout, Fell, Budge, Gray, Sommermeyer and Hanover all have good replies to question No. 141.

Dobson says:

It's sloppy and looks like the work of a rank amateur. When the white light shows it spoils all the illusion the picture has created, and reminds the audience that after all it is just a picture; also it requires considerable time for them to get settled back into the theme of the story.

Bennewitz says: "It shows that the projectionist is not on the job, and breaks up the interest of the audience which is following every move of the characters on the silver sheet."

Armentrout says: "It mars the excellence of projection, and makes it appear that there is not a real projectionist on the job."

Fell says (And I want to congratulate Fell on the excellence of his replies to this entire series. While I did not select any of them for publication, still they were all plenty good enough to publish): "Such crude work disgusts an audience, and patrons treated to this sort of a display of crudeness are not apt to drop their dimes in the box office nearly so often as they would were the projectionists more careful in his work."

Budge says: "It ruins the continuity of the film story."

Hanover says: "If for no other reason than that the projectionist should have too much pride in his work to permit so crude a thing. But there are plenty of other reasons, one of which is that it is a terrific shock to the eyes of many in the audience, and not at all pleasant to any one of them."

Sommermeyer says: "The glare of the white light is very unpleasant to the audience and tends to cheapen the work of the projectionist."

Gray says:

A white sheet at the end of a reel is about the most thoroughly disillusioning effect which can occur during the projection of a motion picture. The critical observer may see that the effect of the reaction from such an occurrence will remain with the theatre patron for a considerable while—perhaps for the remainder of the performance. In our theatre we consider any interruption or "screen fault"' during the projection of a picture as in the nature of a crime, but a white sheet is nothing less than a CAPITAL OFFENSE.

Should this occur, not only does the illusion set up by the picture vanish into thin air, but also there is a severe shock to the optic nerves of every one watching the picture. The iris of the eye is a marvelous automatic diaphragming instrument which is in constant action, and especially so when the eye is watching a motion picture, since this involves constantly changing light values. It contracts and expands just enough to admit the proper amount of light to the retina, as the brilliancy changes from time to time, though at an aggregate low mean value, as the picture runs. Naturally the muscles of the eye are a bit weary from this constant work. Suddenly comes the white sheet, with a consequent glare of light so entirely out of all proportion to that which has immediately preceded it that the iris is unable to contract quickly enough, and a shock to the optic nerves is the result.

IT SHOULD BE ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT FUNCTIONS OF THE PROJECTIONIST TO PREVENT, OR TO LIMIT TO AN ABSOLUTE MINIMUM, ALL FORM OF EYESTRAIN TO THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE PATRON. (That is true.—Ed.) Hence every conceivable care should be exercised to prevent the occurrence of a white sheet during a performance.

Question No. 142—Explain how YOU would determine the time to get ready for the change-over, and the exact time for the change-over.

Gwynn hands us a new one. He says:

I get ready by watching the upper reel. I determine exact time for change-over as follows: I clip just one frame from a point near end of reel, and place it behind a small, illuminated glass (presumably ground glass. —Ed.) When the screen scene is the same as the scene I have before me, it is time to change. Can't say as I regard the clipping as absolutely ethical, but anyhow it does away with the punch, stickers, etcetera.

Not good practice, Brother Gwynn, because clipping, unless absolutely at the end, means the loss of two frames anyhow, and if every one did that, well you can see what the result would soon be. It is better than the punch, and its twin brothers the sticker, scratch marks, etc., but that is all. Make a cue sheet, and thus do the job right.—Ed.

Fell says:

Change-over time is determined by a cue sheet on which the action of the last scenes has been described; also the number of scenes between sub title and end of reel, and at just what point of action in last scene to make change-over.

Budge agrees almost exactly with Fell, except he remarks that with the mirror lamp it is not necessary to strike the light so soon, as the carbons heat up very quickly.

Armentrout agrees with Fell and Budge very closely.

Bennewitz says: I use a reel end alarm and cue the end of each reel.

Dobson says: On each magazine is a change over device, set to ring about four minutes before the end of the reel. Also there is a 10-watt lamp on the left side of each upper magazine, which is lighted while the projector is in operation. This enables me to see just how much film remains on the reel. At the matinee of each new show I make a list of the last scene or title on each reel, and that description is placed on the time schedule on the wall of the projection room.

Gray winds into each reel of film a metal tab made from 28 gauge metal, carefully smoothed and slightly bent to conform to the arc of the roll at that point. This marker is placed three feet from end of the action. When released it drops, making a "click" loud enough to be audible to the projectionist. The tab is 1.5 in. long, by 5/8 in. wide. He remarks that no trouble of any sort has even been experienced through using the tabs. He says: I hesitate to include it here because it probably is so common as to be uninteresting, or is considered such poor projection practise that it is not spoken of in the "best circles."

That stunt has been described several times in this department—rather a long while ago. It is not especially objectionable, but does not tell you when to strike the second arc; also I think the cue sheet should be used, even though the tab be put in as a sort of insurance against error.

Organization

Recently I dropped in at the international office of the I. A. to say howdy to the "boys" and have a chat with International President "Bill" Canavan.

As per usual, we had not talked to exceed three minutes until we were at it, hammer and tongs, in an emphatic, but always friendly argument.

I have many friends, some of them pretty high up in affairs too, but none whose friendship I value more highly than that of President Canavan, even though we do disagree on some points, concerning which I know Canavan is entirely in error—though if Canavan were telling it that last would be exactly reversed, mind you.

However, while we do not agree on all things, still I very well know that Canavan and the other men in the I. A. General offices seek nothing but the best good of and for the membership of the organization. I think, also, they believe that, no matter how mistaken they may think some of my views and methods may be, they credit Richardson with being a firm friend of and believer in the I. A.—so that's that.

The Chief Difference

The chief difference in view as between myself and the I. A. officers and some of its members is that they regard the organization as the WHOLE thing, whereas I regard a labor union as the best thing at present available, but as a decidedly imperfect thing after all. The average union man and his union and international officers usually resent anything in the way of criticism, whereas I am a firm believer in the fact that your really best friend is not your "yes man," but the one who, at the risk of incurring your displeasure, points out your faults.

I really believe that my arguments with Canavan are largely caused by a lack of understanding. I believe he thinks pretty much the same as I do with regard to the matters we discuss. My belief is that a union of high grade men—men well versed in the technique of motion picture projection—is a far stronger union than one composed wholly or in part of men of less ability.

In the course of the discussion I speak of something was mentioned about the relative strength of unions of expert projectionists and unions composed of men of less ability, whereupon International Secretary Green remarked: "What about .....," naming a city where a union composed wholly of high grade projectionists had gone on strike, only to go down in defeat before exhibitors who apparently did not value knowledge and skill suffciently to meet the demands made upon them by the men.

Canavan then remarked: "There you are! The ..... union was composed wholly of high grade projectionists, but they depended upon the fairness of the exhibitor, expecting them to accede to their demands because they really were worth it, meanwhile neglecting their organization."

The Point

And that brings us to the point I started out to discuss. If it be true that the men in question really neglected their organization, then I am indeed surprised. Being high grade men they certainly should have realized the necessity for a well-equipped, compact organization, to use for fighting purposes if necessary.

MERE KNOWLEDGE, NO MATTER OF HOW HIGH A GRADE, CANNOT POSSIBLY TAKE THE PLACE OF ORGANIZATION, OR RENDER ORGANIZATION UNNECESSARY. That is a sad fact, but nevertheless IS fact. The average man seems so constituted that he will grab at the dime in sight, regardless of the fact that its acquisition may and probably will cost him dollars in the future. The application of this is in the fact that the employer, in theatrical as well as other lines, will grab the dime of saving in wages, regardless of what the cost of the grab may be in the future. He can SEE the dime. The dollars are out of immediate sight, hence to him more or less a gamble. The dime in sight wins.

Others Organize

My argument has never been to lessen the effectiveness or organization. The exhibitor has one, and believes in it, even though he has one ..... of a time with it occasionally. The exchanges have one, and they believe in it. The doctor has one, so has the architect and the banker. Try to tell any of these gentlemen that they don't need organization and they will tell you to cease talking foolishment.

My argument has never been to in any degree weaken the organization, but rather to vastly STRENGTHEN ITS POSITION BY RAISING THE STANDARD OF TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AMONG THE MEMBERSHIP. My position is that the finished product of the motion picture industry is absolutely at the mercy of the membership of the I. A. wherever the union controls. If the union admits to membership men of mediocre ability, as circumstances very frequently force it to do, and then allows these men to remain as men of mediocre ability without adequate effort to remedy the condition, then a rank injustice has been done, not only to the organization itself, but also to the exhibitor employers, the producers whose work will not be placed before audiences at its full possible entertainment value, to the actors and actresses whose work will be injured by poor reproduction, and last, but not least, to the public which has had the value of the thing it pays a set price for depreciated. All this is true, because the man of mediocre ability will be maintained in a position by the union, projecting motion pictures without the ability to do it efficiently and up to the limit of the possibilities of his equipment in entertaining value.

with cracked or strained sprocket holes offers mute but incontrovertible evidence that inefficient methods are "in our midst." My position is that it is just fair dealing and GOOD BUSINESS METHODS for a union to use every possible effort to lead its members upward along the path of technical knowledge of motion picture projection, but if a member refuses to be led, then it is well to apply persuasion in the way of such force as the organization may be able to bring into play.

My Position

My position is that the men should have a real, compact, effective organization, but that a union composed of expert projectionists—men who know the practice AND the theory of motion picture projection, in all its many ramifications, is a very, very much stronger and more powerful organization than one composed in whole or in part of men of less ability. I believe President Canavan is of the same mind about this. I think General Secretary Greene believes it is true also, to say nothing of Assistant President Spencer and the other international officers.

I will go a step further and say that a union which admits men of less than high grade ability as motion picture projectionists, and makes no real effort to have such members improve their knowledge OUGHT to be publicly exposed, because it is acting unfairly by and to every one concerned, including the possible competent non-member who wants to join and work at his profession, but cannot do so until Mr. Dub has a good job—or dies.

Think it over, gentlemen, and see wherein you can find any fault with the arguments I have advanced. If you can you are welcome to space to refute them.

Spot Heat

An official having charge of theatre inspection and the licensing of projectionists in a certain State, who prefers to be incognito, writes as follows:

Among the film fire reports received from projectionists I was very much interested in one, because it sets up the claim that the fire was due to the fact that the new reflecting type arc heated the projector aperture plate to a high temperature. The rheostat was set for fifteen amperes.

Can you give me any information as to why such a condition exists? This letter is not for publication unless it brings out some new point.

Whether or not any new point is brought out, I believe the matter is of general interest to officials and projectionists in general, and that there can be no possible harm in publication, especially if the name and location of the writer be withheld, so here goes:

"The reason the spot of the new reflecting arc is so hot is because there is no glass condenser to absorb and radiate a large portion of the heat. The spot of the new arc IS hot. There is no use denying that, BUT it is nevertheless a fact that the reflector arc is now used scatteringly all over this country and Canada, and very extensively indeed in Europe, without setting up any apparent cause for alarm.

As a matter of fact there is now a reflecting arc which has a condenser. I have not as yet examined this particular equipment, but on the face of it I am not impressed with the desirability of adding a condenser, and thus setting up the loss which the reflecting mirror avoids.

No Alarm

I do not feel the slightest bit of alarm concerning the hot spot of the reflecting arc, because (A) its extensive use has already, it seems to me, pretty thoroughly demonstrated that there is no need for alarm, and (B) it must be remembered that up to the point where the metal of the projector becomes dangerously heated (if this had occurred surely we would have known of it long before this, considering the increasingly large number of the lamps in use in this and other countries) it is, in any event, merely a difference of fractions of a second, or may be possible, in extreme cases, of as much as one or two seconds, in the time required to fire a film with any type of arc light source now in use, using the amperage now employed for motion picture theatre projection.

Shifting Blame?

As to the case which attracted the attention of the official in question, it is not altogether impossible that the projectionist merely sought to cover his own tracks by shifting the blame to the lamp. This may have been deliberate, or it may have been to some extent honest enough, due to the fact that he had heard tales, more or less wild, of the "tremendous" heat of the reflecting arc spot, and himself have found it possibly of greater temperature than what he had been using. Under this condition, with a man not given to careful investigation and analysis, it would be but a step to the conclusion that a fire, caused possibly by a bit of broken film sticking in the aperture, was due to dangerous heating of the aperture plate.

Possible Special Plate

Should it be suspected that there is considerable additional heating of the metal of the projector surrounding the aperture, then a special cooling plate might be required where the reflecting arc is used. I do NOT think anything of the sort is necessary, or even desirable, however, because the reflecting arc has now had a THOROUGH trial, and no actual danger from excess heat has developed, so far as I know.

Incidentally I have, within the past few days, had a letter from a Norway projectionist who mildly roasts we of the U. S. for allowing them over there to get the jump on us. He says the reflecting arc has practically put everything else, including the High Intensity, out of business in Norway, and thinks we are overlooking an important bet.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporators

Larger capitalization is beginning to make itself manifest in motion picture companies incorporating in New York state. In place of capitalization ranging as low as from $1,000 to $5,000, many companies these days show a strong backing with capitalization running into the hundreds of thousands. Certified Prints Satisfy Public Demand for Uniform High Quality

"IT is what you deliver not what you promise to deliver that builds a successful business," asserts Ben Goetz, go-getter sales manager of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc.

"There is no trick about selling Certified Prints," says Mr. Goetz or "Big Ben" as his friends call him; and every one in the trade is a friend of his, whether they do business together or not. "The trade had been waiting for someone to come along and put a dependable guarantee on film printing and service and that is just what the Consolidated has done and is doing."

"The consuming public today demands the article with an established trade-mark. From experience it has learned to view with suspicion the random product—the unnamed offspring of the manufacturer who has neither the courage nor the ability to stand behind his goods. Whether it be chewing gum or cigarettes, ham or hairpins, immediately there flashes into our minds some well known brand that we know we can rely on. The trademark that has made good is the best guarantee that the manufacturer can offer to the consumer," concluded Mr. Goetz.

Not until recent years has the technique of motion picture developing and printing been sufficiently perfected to insure the production of positive prints of a high and uniform standard of quality—a standard that can be maintained in every instance. The

BEN GOETZ

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., have at considerable cost developed automatic equipment and patented processes that enable them to certify the high and uniform quality of every reel of film it turns out.

Producers, distributors, and exhibitors all share in the benefits of this high grade standardization and the box office tells the story of the actual value of Certified Prints to the motion picture industry.

Audiences of the silent drama are educated today to appreciate the various grades of motion picture photography. They are more and more insisting that only the best photos and reproductions that can be made be presented to them. Certified Prints can satisfy this steadily growing demand on the part of picture theatre patrons.

750-Seat Theatre for Seattle Suburb

L. R. Stradley, a resident of Queen Anne Hill, Seattle, Wash., for twenty-one years, is backing his faith in his community, with the erection of a 750-seat Community theatre, to be completed shortly after January first. It will cover a lot 60 by 120 feet at 1527-29 Queen Anne Avenue, and will be one of the finest suburban houses on the Coast.

Nothing in the way of modern appointments and comforts will be left out. The front will be of brick and stucco, a modern heating plant will be installed, and a large pipe organ.

The Theatre Equipment Co., of Seattle, has complete contracts for projection equipment as follows: two Power projectors, with Governor speed controls and roller pin intermittent movement, 75-ampere series type Westinghouse motor generator, also full leather cushioned Stafford opera chairs which will be set with such excellent spacing that but 750 are to used over a floor space that could nicely accommodate 900.

The house will be on a ground floor seating plan, leaving ample mezzanine floor space for booth, and comfortably appointed rest rooms, baby crying room, smoking room, etc.

Dixie Cup Service Also Pays a Profit

If DIXIE Cups and vendors really were an expense the laws prohibiting the common drinking glasses might be a matter of some concern to motion picture theatres.

But since they actually pay a profit there is an added incentive for making available to your audiences this service which they use so constantly and appreciate so much.

The DIXIE penny vendor operates silently — another advantage appreciated by the theatre owner.

"The White Sheep"

A Novelty Feature

All he had was a bleat!

His father had licked every man in the place, was cock of the walk, and ran things with an iron hand. (He was a blacksmith, so it came natural.)

His brothers begrudged the time spent in slumber, for then they couldn't fight. They were called "the fighting Tylers," but not to their faces. Oh, no! It wasn't safe.

But he was like a pigeon in a hawk's nest, a lamb in a lion's cage, a gold fish in an acquarium with a bass. He couldn't fight but he could talk,—some and then more.

What happened to make those tough eggs, his father and brothers, proud of him? Well, it will thrill you just as it did them!

BACK in August the triumphant march of Paramount's Famous Forty started. Hits like "Manhandled," "Wanderer of the Wasteland," "The Covered Wagon," "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Enemy Sex," "Sinners in Heaven," "The Alaskan" and "Feet of Clay" composed the front ranks. On they came, one after the other, breaking records, making more money for exhibitors than they'd ever hoped to make before.

Then came the middle ranks—"Empty Hands," "Merton," "The Border Legion"—just as consistently strong.

And now the December and January forces are appearing. Sixteen of them, chosen at random, are shown on these pages. Marvel of marvels, they're stronger than even the front ranks of Famous Forty hits!

Not for a second has the march faltered. Not for a second has Paramount ceased to keep the faith as undisputed leader of this industry!

LIONEL BARRYMORE

in

"I AM THE MAN"

America's premier stage and screen star in his most successful picture!

The critics said:

"A picture that holds interest at all times and is filled with the conflict of emotions that makes for strong drama —Mr. Barrymore's portrayal is an excellent one, and his acting fascinates—'I am The Man' is a picture that should appeal to all who like tense drama, well acted."

"Big screen names, excellent acting, and a gripping story, make 'I am The Man' a sure winner with every type of audience.—The 'Barrymore Tradition' alone would be sufficient to crowd your theatre, and the other popular names in the cast should sell out the standing room—There will be no difficulty in getting them in and they will leave the show well satisfied.—Lionel Barrymore dominates the picture with his characterization—Suspense is sustained throughout.—Lionel Barrymore is among the leaders of American theatrical aristocracies.—The title is good for unique stunts."

"Plenty of tense drama—I heard exclamations on all sides of me—'Wonderful actor' and 'Oh, isn't he grand,' about Lionel Barrymore—Barrymore certainly can act—He carries one away with a series of gripping scenes."

"Kid Speed" has . . . much comedy and will pack the house.

Larry Semon is improving in his comedy characterizations — having for one thing forsworn the derby hat and wide breeches in favor of nifty tailored apparel, and seems every inch the gentleman.

He is clever as a comedian and his eyebrows and laugh-provoking smile will "get" any audience, no matter how cold or highbrow.

Larry Semon is well advertised and serves as a good drawing-card for exhibitors who show his comedies . . .

Speaking of Douglas MacLean:

"The best comedy of the year, by far. Remember, the picture was at the Majestic at the same time that Harold Lloyd was appearing at the Colonial. It was an excellent chance to compare the two comedians and, to our mind, Douglas walked away with the contest."

—Playgoer, "Picking the Ten Best" in Columbus (O.) State-Journal

"It's a 100% laugh producer that abounds in thrills. MacLean, on the strength of 'Never Say Die,' takes his place side by side with Lloyd."

—Variety, Sept. 24

The fellow who plays a picture has reason to know its audience value —Exhibitors everywhere agree with the unanimous opinion of the critics.

"Never Say Die"

"Excellent comedy. We held it over a second week and it certainly did draw the crowds."

(Middle West) —from M. P. News.

"This is the first picture we have held over since April."

—Charles H. Wuerz, Mng. Dir., Metro-Goldwyn's California, Los Angeles.

"Yankee Consul"

"A splendid picture that will delight any audience. Drew good business."

—C. B. Hartwig, Antler's Theatre, Helena, Mont.

"Packed theatre all day. Congratulations on another MacLean comedy knockout."

STAN LAUREL TWO REEL COMEDIES

These STAN LAUREL two-reel side-splitting comedies have been the mainstay of the programs of the thousands of exhibitors the country over. Stan Laurel ALWAYS puts gales of laughter into his work. They never fail to hit. They are produced to make people roar and scream, and they accomplish their purpose. You can pay a lot more for two-reel comedies, but you can't get any more for your money. These comedies are house packers. They bring people in when the feature fails to get 'em in. Millions constantly watch for these STAN LAUREL laffingfests. BOOK 'em and don't fail to see STAN LAUREL in his latest and greatest two reeler—

"MONSIEUR DON'T CARE"

A Side-Splitting Burlesque on Valentino's Gorgeous Production, "Mons. Beaucaire"

This comedy is unquestionably one of the most lavishly dressed and gorgeously produced two-reel comedies ever filmed. It looks like a million dollars on the screen.

JIMMY AUBREY TWO-REEL COMEDIES

Jimmy Aubrey, with his trick mustache and his funny walk, is a riot in thousands of houses. Not much to choose between the box office value of Stan Laurels and Jimmy Aubreys. Both are riots of laughter. See them both, or better still, book them both and tell your folks you'll show them regularly. Give each of these subjects a special night and tell your fans they can see them regularly on that night. Then watch your business grow on those nights. See Aubrey's latest—

An idea that made

The Detailed Story of the Exploitation that packed the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J., during the run of "Husbands and Lovers"

HOW about making the radio fans—and your town is full of them—exploit your picture for you? How about cashing in on the radio's tremendous popularity? It can be done. It was done in Paterson, N. J., at the Garden Theatre.

The proposition is a three-way tie-up between newspaper, theatre and hardware dealer. In larger cities it may be possible to get the local broadcasting station in on the stunt.

The theatre gives the newspaper six one-tube radio sets, one to be given away each day during the run of the engagement. The sets, without accessories, cost the theatre $6.25 f. o. b. New York, and the newspaper uses the idea as a circulation proposition. Result: front page stories with publicity on the theatre and the picture.

A local merchant or store supply company furnishes you with a show case. This is placed in the lobby and in it is locked the radio set. With each ticket purchased a key is given away—and the key that fits the lock on the show case gets the set.

In Paterson, at the Garden Theatre, keys were supplied by a hardware dealer, in return for which the dealer was given publicity in the lobby. One key each day opens the case, and every day brings a new newspaper story about the winner.

"Husbands and Lovers," at the Garden, opened to tremendous business at the first matinee and continued without a let up.

Inquiries and orders for radio sets should be addressed to Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., 1540 Broadway, New York City.

The Editor's Views

THE man who sits at a trade paper desk receives his reports from a hundred different sources. One day it is a New England exhibitor talking to him; the next a man from the Buckeye State. As a result, there are times in the life of an editor when he feels that he should have a sign printed and neatly framed, so that he could often look up from his desk and read: "There are no poor pictures."

Then he would prepare a companion slogan: "There are no automatic successes."

Just after we have heard from one exhibitor that such-and-such a picture proved an absolute "flop," another theatre man will step in to gloat over the amount of money he made with the very same picture.

Those are the moments when the twin signs would come in handy.

WE had one intimately personal experience along this line that we recall at this moment.

"Name the Man" struck us as a picture among pictures. We said so, with emphasis, large type, and unusual display. But it wasn't very long before a report drifted in to our "Straight From the Shoulder" department:

"Tell Friend Welsh that he may be all O. K. as an editor, but as a judge of pictures he doesn't belong. He certainly steered me wrong on this one."

Of course we felt blue. Who wouldn't?

A week later we met Phil Gleichman. He had just paid ten thousand dollars for the first run in Detroit on "Name the Man." He had spent an additional six thousand dollars advertising it. And the conclusion of the two weeks' engagement found a nice, fat, round figure on the profit side of the ledger.

We felt better. But we again felt the urge to get our sign printed, and to send to our "Straight From the Shoulder" friend his personal copy of: "There are no automatic successes."

A CERTAIN star whose popularity has been on the wane for the better part of two seasons, recently made a picture that many term the best of her career.

We heard the initial glowing reports on the picture. They were followed with stories of the remarkable business the picture was doing in many cities.

We smugly said to ourselves: "She has 'come back.'"

Then a few weeks ago we expressed the same opinion to an exhibitor in a certain city. He snorted: "'Come back,' nothing. That picture was a terrible 'flop' out here."

And so it was. We found that out by investigation. We also found the reason for the "flop" that is probably as good as any other:

Exhibitors in this particular territory are so convinced that the star's day has passed that they have stopped "putting her over."

The picture had nothing to do with it. The same picture was establishing new records in numerous other territories. When we stated that fact to theatre men in this particular city they were not surprised. Oh, no, they just didn't believe us.

So once more we decided to get our signs printed. "There are no poor pictures." "There are no automatic successes."

WE tell ourselves that no industry puts the money and time into dealer help that this industry does. And with all the white paper and expensive printing, we still seem to fall far short on the job of "selling our seats."

Which is one of the most cheerful—and discouraging—facts connected with this industry.

Cheerful, because at any time you feel particularly blue, just think of that great unsold public, and the tremendous revenue awaiting there as we slowly learn how to bring it into our theatres.

Discouraging, because, if we face the facts, we will have to confess to a state of smug self-satisfaction on our seat selling work. The truth is we are not putting anywhere near the thought or money into the task of selling the public that we should.

The Hamilton National Bank

130 West 42nd Street

To the motion picture theatre owner there is real value in dealing with a banking institution that is in touch with the operations of the industry as a whole.

There is a sympathetic understanding of his problems difficult to secure from the institution that knows nothing of the industry's ramifications.

In addition to these advantages our two new offices offer the further advantage of CONVENIENT LOCATION to a great number of motion picture exhibitors.

There is the 170th Street Office—at 96-98 East 170th Street; and the Queens Village office, at 215-33 Jamaica Avenue.

Step in, say "Hello" and get acquainted with the type of service that has made Hamilton National so favorably known to the important motion picture factors.

"On Fifth Avenue at Fifty-seventh Street." That's the way the Universal letter-head reads now. We made a sight-seeing trip last week and visited the new offices. Words don't do them justice. We prophesy a lot of "new offices" in the business. Just as soon as his fellow-executives get a look at Carl Laemmle's new layout. And the sumptuous quarters of R. H. Cochrane. And P. D.'s. It's a far cry from Fourteenth Street, to 1600 Broadway, and then to "Fifth Avenue at Fifty-seventh Street." There is the outline of a real human interest story. Yessir!

The Universal gang are as happy over the move as a group of kids around a Christmas tree. And it's the sort of joy that ought to find expression in better work.

Who said newspapers haven't room for lengthy motion picture features? Five different dailies have wired us within the week asking for permission to reprint the Von Sternberg story which appeared in last week's World. Out of a clear sky.

If you missed that Von Sternberg story better dig up your World now. And if you are missing the current Press Sheet series you are missing some wonderful idea-prompting material.

Speaking About Being First—

Walter Hays, of Buffalo, is the new president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York. He succeeds Michael J. Walsh, of Yonkers, who was forced to resign due to ill health. That Walsh had positively relinquished his job as State exhibitor ruler and that Hays was his most likely successor was told exclusively in Moving Picture World last week. The World scooped every paper in the field, daily and weekly, on this news story, one of the most important which has broken in New York's film world in months. In last week's issue Moving Picture World also published exclusively photographs of Walsh and Hays.

To further refute a competitor's comical assertion that it scoops the field on news, the World calls attention to last week's first and exclusive story of Josef von Sternberg and his $5,000 masterpiece, "The Salvation Hunters."

That's a ten-strike for the M. P. T. O. of New York—the choice of Walter Hays as president. Seemed hard to believe at first. Seems difficult to associate the outstanding type of exhibitor like Walter Hays with exhibitor politics. And it means there will be more business and less politics than ever in the New York organization. Mr. Hays succeeds an outstanding figure too, in J. M. Walsh. It was a tough break for the organization that ill health should have deprived it of the benefit of Mike Walsh's cool head and shrewd judgment.

Got some more reports to make on Cincinnati. Cheerful reports, too. The territory has been hard hit by the depression in the coal field, but managers whom we met on our recent trip were reporting mines getting to work and theatres opening again.

Landed in the F. B. O. office as Manager E. M. Booth was tearing his hair as an aid to the task of taking over his share of the Selznick product.

You can imagine the atmosphere. And the same scene going on in the Associated Exhibitors' office. "Mad house" is a mild term. And we want to put it in the records that if any Cincinnati exhibitor had a mis-out on his Selznick booking it wasn't the fault of the F. B. O. or Associated staffs. They sure did their best.

Then we went down the hall and landed in the Metro-Goldwyn quarters just as Manager Walter Brandt and the boys were exulting over "He Who Gets Slapped," which had just been screened. It's great to visit an exchange after the staff has just had a glimpse at some real product.

Maurice Schwartz, secretary of the Cincinnati Film Board of Trade, is one of the veterans of the business. Measures up to the point where we once more have to express our admiration for Charlie Pettijohn's ability at picking the right men.

This Joseph Schenck person is still a young man. Wonder where he is going to stop? Wonder if he has any limit? Just as we settle to the moves that have brought him into so strong a position as a distributor, there comes from the Coast the news of "twenty key city Egyptian Theatres, in association with Sid Grauman." Unconfirmed as yet in New York. But very possible. And very likely. Also very important. We'll bet it has already started some tall thinking in more than twenty key cities. Unless the boys exhausted all their heavy thought on the Warner Brothers first announcement of theatre plans. Mebbe they don't take these things so seriously now.

Grauman and Schenck Plan Twenty Key City Theatres

Los Angeles, Dec. 3.

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

Sid Grauman in association with Joseph M. Schenck will build twenty theatres patterned after the Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, according to an announcement by Grauman, who will manage and supervise the entire chain.

These will be built in big key cities, with construction work starting soon after January.

The investment will run into millions.

The theatres will feature two shows daily at advance prices, with elaborate prologues.

Had lunch with Major Thompson, of F. B. O., the other day. And again confirmed our idea that here is one of the most likable figures of the industry. And, also, one of the real capable ones.

He ought to be. Gosh, what a background of experience. As trouble man for Graham and Company, international bankers, the Major has been around the world in business lines and at the helm in a dozen varied enterprises.

Edited a newspaper once, managed a tannery, and—hist!—once even found himself assigned to direct a—s'sh!—a brewery.

There's a story in the tannery episode. It was in India. And on Thursday of a certain week, Major Thompson received instructions to catch a Saturday train and head for 727 Seventh Avenue. Just like that. All in the day's work.

He's making a good film man, too. And his clean-cut personality must be of tremendous value to F. B. O. when talking to skittish independent producers looking for a place to release.—

Extra Days

Mean

Extra Money!

By C. L. Grant

CAN I afford to chance another week with the picture I am showing? Will the crowds continue to come? What is there left to draw from? What about opposition? How am I to go about it? Others are holding over pictures these days, why can't I? What's the secret, anyway?

Ever ask yourself these questions? Sure you have, dozens of times, if you're a live-wire exhibitor and your house is a representative one.

But suppose you had a couple of theatres, one of which was built just an even one hundred years ago next May, and the other had been converted out of an old church and in a none too good location from a business standpoint, with stairs so steep that you puff before you reach the ticket window, on the wrong side of the street as traffic goes, sandwiched in between a big elaborate first-run house, one of a chain, with millions behind it, and a vaudeville house that had been packing them in for Lord knows how long. Under such conditions, would you have the nerve to extend your week runs for another six days?

Rather a tough question to decide and yet Oscar Perrin, of Albany, N. Y., did it, is still doing it, and what's more to the point, intends to keep right on doing it whenever he has a picture that shows decisively its drawing power during the first three days. Certainly it took nerve the first time, maybe the second, and yet come to think of it, doesn't about everything worth while and successful require a little stiffening of the spine?

When Mr. Perrin took over the Leland Theatre a few years ago, he brought showmanship to the century-old house, showmanship that had been acquired from taking Cohan shows across the country, and years as manager of a local burlesque house. Of pictures he knew absolutely nothing. He was as green as they make them.

Back in those days, the old Leland, which was old before many of us were born, was commonly referred to as a "lemon." It had a rather run-down-at-the-heels appearance. Today you hear the wise, but spineless ones, with their "I-told-you-so's." About the only thing to the Leland's credit was its downtown location and the 1,500 seats on the three floors. It proved a pretty tough proposition getting the people to come to the theatre. Some complained that the ventilation wasn't all that it should be, others that the seats were too narrow or too close together. Pretty near true, too.

"All right," remarked Mr. Perrin, as he took over the house, "fresh air costs us nothing; open the doors whenever possible, the seats will take care of themselves for the time being.

"First of all, I am going to give the people the pictures, and I am going to have the best projection possible. I'll take a chance on the narrow chairs, but never with a picture that flickers."

With the Leland proving fairly successful, Mr. Perrin then took over the Clinton Square Theatre, also located in the business center of the city, but unattractive and with uncushioned pews still in the balcony.

In January, 1923, Mr. Perrin first decided to make the plunge and do the unheard of for Albany, to hold over a picture for the second week.

"He'll learn his little book," remarked one exhibitor, with a doleful shake of his head. "Must have gone plumb crazy, that's all. There aren't enough people as it is to go around. Didn't I play to three-quarters of a house last night?"

Three days after "When Knighthood Was in Flower" opened for a week's run on January 15, 1923, Mr. Perrin had definitely decided to chance another week. He reached his decision after spending much of two evenings in the lobby of the theatre picking up the comment of patrons as they were leaving, seeing with his own eyes just how many were being turned away, unable to secure admission. That decision has brought to Mr. Perrin thousands of dollars in the months that have passed.

"Weren't you a bit scared?" was asked.

"Yes," replied Mr. Perrin, "but the fright was on account of the crowds that we were turning away and losing simply because the theatre wouldn't accommodate them. And then I got to figuring. I figured out that if I could get just one-half of those back, who were being turned away, that I'd fill the house for another week. I knew the picture was good and that the crowds weren't being attracted by any flash in the pan and that there was no reason why they wouldn't come again, even if I couldn't accommodate them the first time. I figured out that if hundreds were willing to stand in line to see the picture, that there were just as many hundreds who would come back next week if the picture was held over.

Under Handicap, Perrin of Albany Shows the Way

"But, mind you, I didn't say a single thing until Saturday about holding the picture for another week. But once the so-called secret was out, I plugged it for all it was worth in the newspapers and on the screen. I didn't want the people to begin holding off on Thursday and Friday with the excuse that they would be able to see the picture next week without any crowding.

"And now, naturally, you would like to know how the second week panned out.

"Far better than many another picture I have run for a straight week. I was enjoying the benefit of a certain class of advertising that never cost me a cent. You know the kind. 'You ought to see the picture at the Leland, etc.'

"And the best part of it all was in the fact that the second week wasn't costing me a dime more for the picture than if I had run it simply for the six days, my contracts for bigger pictures always reading 'for six or twelve days.'"

"Did you spend any time finding out what the opposition had booked for the week?"

"Neither then, nor now, do I give the other houses a thought. If you haven't confidence in your own judgment, you're half licked before you really start. Supposing, for instance, that I find that some other theatre has booked 'The Sea Hawk.' Don't think for a minute that I'd run to some exchange and book 'Captain Blood' or some similar picture for the same week, with the result that neither of us would make any money.

"You don't see one merchant making a big drive on stockings simply because another one down the street is doing the same. Other lines of clothing have their appeal. Not all of us like the same kind of a picture. The owner of a motion picture theatre today is, or at least should be, a business man, selling his wares to the public. Motion picture theatres are no different from business houses, neither runs itself. Don't think that the people will flock to your house simply because it's a theatre, and all that is necessary for you to do is to sit back and bank the money. That day is past and gone."

A bit more confident, no doubt, by reason of his first success in the way of extending a run, Mr. Perrin opened with "Six Days," which came almost unheralded, insofar as Albany was concerned, to the Clinton Square Theatre, with its 750 seats and old church pews. When the picture opened on September 17, the weather was unusually warm for that time of the year, but the crowds came like a house afire. One of the most interesting features connected with this extended run lies in the fact that on the twelfth day the picture closed to more money than on any other day of the two weeks. Attempts by Mr. Perrin to arrange for a further extension were unsuccessful with the local exchange.

OSCAR J. PERRIN

Then came "Little Old New York" which opened at the Leland on November 5, a year ago. Its success was almost instantaneous. Receipts for the first week ran better than $800 over "Knighthood's" first week. By Tuesday night, it was a foregone conclusion that "Little Old New York" would be held over. Its second week was but a duplication of the first.

"Three Weeks" followed some months later at the Leland Theatre, opening on April 28, last spring, and having its original six days extended so that it closed on May 10. There was a period of hot, sticky weather about this time, but so long as the people kept coming, Mr. Perrin lost no time in worrying about the weather, "Three Weeks" running to within a few dollars of "Knighthood's" receipts.

Mind you, all of these pictures were extended from the original six days without any ballyhooing, extensive advertising campaign, or the expenditure of large sums. When "America" opened at the Leland on September 1, last fall, it looked like a winner. However, Mr. Perrin took advantage of the picture and through one of the school commissioners, had teachers throughout the city advise their pupils to see the picture. More than one boy, possibly refused the price of an admission ticket, informed his parents that he simply "had to go," because his teacher told him to.

THE LELAND THEATRE

Veritably "the daddy of them all." It was first opened 99 years ago and will observe its 100th anniversary next May

Anyhow, by Tuesday night, Mr. Perrin decided to run "America" into the second week, the picture playing to unusually heavy business day after day and right up until the last night.

Five successes, one after another, brought a week's extension of "Sea Hawk" at the Leland, running from October 6 to 18, to capacity business.

"Don't forget," remarked Mr. Perrin, "that the old quarter admission has a lot to do with it."

Mr. Perrin is running his two houses on the policy that it is better to have them packed at twenty-five cents than half filled at forty cents.

"Use your own judgment when it comes to figuring out the advisability of extending the original run of a picture," said Mr. Perrin. "But strike while the iron is hot. I am against return engagements instead of holding pictures over. Show a picture a week to capacity business, then take it off and bring it back a few weeks later, and what is the result? Nine times out of ten it doesn't go over. But hold that picture for another week when the whole city is talking about it, and even if you get only one-half the people during the second week, that you have turned away during the first, you score.

"Keep in touch with your people. Hear what they have to say. If a picture pleases nine out of every ten, it's a big winner. If people are willing to stand in line, and Thursday and Friday are going big, take a chance. Simply because someone, somewhere, made week runs a sort of unwritten rule, it doesn't follow that there should be no exceptions."

THE CLINTON SQUARE THEATRE

Not much to look at, perhaps, yet the home of extended runs. It was made over from one of the oldest churches in the Capital City

Ideas!

Gathered Along Broadway By W. Stephen Bush

[Editor's Note—It is the purpose of this new department to make a brief record of new ideas in presentation on Broadway. Every new angle in presentation, which seems to meet the approval of the audience will be set down and described. No doubt other showmen in other cities are helping their box offices with original ideas. Every theatre owner is invited to send reports of interesting and successful new ideas to the Moving Picture World, when full credit will, of course, be given.]

IN the presentation of "ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL" at the RIVOLI, the compiler of the musical score has matched every original and exquisite thought in the picture with an equally original and exquisite musical setting. Considerations of space preclude the publication of the entire musical score, though the temptation to do this is great. I think that he has rendered a distinct and necessary service to the picture, which deserves at least some little mention in detail. It is necessary to point out at the beginning that "ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL" is emphatically a picture of moods and characterizations, and not at all what exhibitors call a picture of action. Indeed, one might say it is a succession of very fine scenes, resembling and strongly suggesting animated paintings. In arranging the musical score the compiler no doubt viewed the picture in that light, and selected his music accordingly. The reaction of the audience to the musical accompaniment was obviously favorable. The crowds in the RIVOLI, it seemed to me, caught every single point and responded heartily. The appeal the picture makes to the sympathy of the audience is well sustained by the music. MENDELSSOHN'S "LORELEI" ran like a "lietmotif" through all the pathetic scenes. It proved particularly pleasing in two places, where the lovers are alone in the silence of the night and where the grandmother presents the girl to her lover in her own old bridal gown made over for the occasion. The sharp contrasts in which the film abounds have received an adequate musical medium in every instance in which they occur. The rapid changes from pathos to violence, and back again from violence to pathos, were aided by well-selected, dreamy and sentimental strains, quickly changing to strong and alarming agitatos. The humorous scenes, without which the entertainment value of the picture might have suffered sadly, are particularly well taken care of by the musical score. Well known and simple GERMAN airs, lively waltzes and snatches of dances, quite filled the bill, and were evidently much enjoyed by the audience. A whimsical theme has been invented by the compiler for the diverting figure of the professor. It never fails to arouse the audience to an extra burst of merriment. One thing more should be mentioned. MR. GRIFFITH is constantly trying to emphasize the beauty of his scenic backgrounds even to the moods of sky and forest and river. The great opportunities for getting the right kind of an echo in the orchestra were utilized to the fullest by the musical settings. The prologue, consisting of music, singing and dancing, evoked much applause. A woman sings the first bars of "THE LORELEI." No words are used but the effect is splendid. A chorus in English, taken from a popular song, and a pretty dance by three girls, ended the prologue.

THE CAPITOL THEATRE put on a feature, "JANICE MEREDITH," which had been running for months in another theatre but a few blocks away. The house was crowded at the first matinee, nevertheless—a great tribute to the showmanship for which THE CAPITOL is famous. The musical setting was a model of its kind. Its rendition, too, left nothing to be desired. The clever way the music worked up a climax in the presentation of the cast was sure to win the audience at the start. One would like to dwell on a number of other clever hits, but one particularly fine touch must suffice. Into the midst of all the patriotic music the composer, or compiler, introduces a brief but strong SPANISH tune in the scene where the heroine reads a thrilling passage in her romance about cavaliers who win women with their eyes at the first attempt. It is only an exotic flash, for we are at once plunged back into other characteristic music. The audience understood and enjoyed the little by-play of the star, which, but for the music, might have been missed entirely. The prologue showed a living picture of "WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE," a rather obvious and bromidic suggestion, which needed and received strong and serious handling. There was a burst of sustained applause.

THERE was one little innovation at the CAPITOL THEATRE which was much appreciated by the patrons, though you will find no mention of it on the program itself. I refer to the long "leader" of the feature informing the eager and curious public about the famous and distinguished individuals who admit responsibility for the technical equipment and the art titles and the electrical effects, etc., etc., etc. ROXY did not take out this budget of thrilling news altogether but he removed it to the tail end of the last reel. The audience bore up wonderfully well under this change. When an audience is set for entertainment it brooks even the ordinary announcement about "who presents" with ill favor, but to inflict upon these honest payers of admissions all the intimate details of the different staff in the different studios is in the language of the cultured few just a bit "de trop." Much less of it is plenty.

AN idea that brought solid prestige to the theatre, and equally solid profit to the box office, was conceived and successfully carried out by LEE OCHS, of THE PICCADILLY. It is an idea that is good for any city large or important enough to have a consulate of SPAIN, or of any SOUTH AMERICAN and SPANISH-speaking country. Mr. Ochs arranged a Spanish night in connection with "THE SIREN OF SEVILLE," inviting the whole SPANISH and SPANISH AMERICAN diplomatic corps of New York City to attend as guests of honor. The response was most gratifying. What the consular attachés enjoyed most were the magnificent bull fighting scenes, taken from one of the great royal corridas (fights) that are the red letter days in the sporting calendar of SPAIN. These scenes, cleverly woven into the action of the feature, brought down the house repeatedly.

THIS department is anxious to serve all classes of exhibitors, by no means forgetting the so-called "small theatre" owner. I have known of many such, visiting the big houses on BROADWAY, and always being deeply impressed with the music. Nothing keeps the entertainment more fresh and bright, and nothing more surely destroys the deadly germ of routine. Many a small house owes its popularity to a clever pianist with a talent for improvisation. Working up original themes may not always be possible to the leader of a small orchestra, or a piano player, but even the most modest musical library is bound to contain the material for such themes. In the RIVOLI and RIALTO the audiences have come to look for themes as a welcome part of the musical accompaniment. Wherever outstanding characters in a feature or comedy, or even short subject, lend themselves to an illustration by themes, every audience will appreciate them.

What Exhibitors Say About Press Sheets!

By Tom Waller

Moving Picture World this week publishes exclusively the second of a series of articles on press sheets, material for which was obtained from a lengthy questionnaire on the subject submitted to 315 of the leading motion picture theatre managers and advertising men in the United States by Principal Pictures Corporation. A careful survey of the answers to seven of the questions and answers, forming the theme for this week's article, furnishes some statistics which will surprise more than one veteran press sheet editor, and should prove to be not only interesting but also vitally important, especially to the producing and selling end of the business.

"Would you emphasize star, production, or both?

"Which do you consider of greatest news value in your territory, the star or stars or production?

"Do you favor long articles in the press sheet?

"Will your Sunday newspaper or your Saturday afternoon publications use articles of this type? If so, how many?

"Do you favor short articles? If so of what length?

"Have your motion picture editors commented to you on press sheets? If so, and you care to summarize comments, will you please do so?

"What style of material do you desire in supplying articles of value for the motion picture columns of your newspapers? Of what length should these articles be?"

ABOVE are seven of the many pertinent interrogations included in the questionaire submitted to 315 of the livest managers and theatre advertising men in the United States by Principal Corporation in its endeavor to determine the present day status of the press sheet. The first of this series of articles based upon this quiz sheet, which fifty-four showmen have answered, was published in last week's issue of Moving Picture World and related to the two leading queries. In the previous article theatre owners told in a line what they thought of press sheets and their majority rolled up a vote which accorded First National and Paramount orchestra seats for consistently publishing the best press sheets.

A careful survey of the answers to the questions listed above, which comprise the theme for this article, results in some statistics which should prove to be not only interesting but also vitally important, especially to the producing and selling end of the motion picture business.

Twenty-nine of these showmen, or the bulk of the replies in the questionaire, are for equal treatment of the star and the production in the sense of press sheet write-ups. Of the remainder, eight advocate a stronger emphasis in publicizing the production while seven believe that the major portion of press sheet type should be devoted to the star. There are several who are hesitant in proclaiming either and yet could not be considered favoring the playing up of both. These cases are particularly interesting, since they urge stress being laid upon the author and the book, if the picture is an adaptation, at the sacrifice of the star and production.

As the best news medium the star wins over the production by a vote of thirteen to nine. Of the remaining replies on this question, so analagous to the first query as enumerated above, the majority of these showmen take a fifty-fifty stand. A divergence of opinion is rendered and this may be expected in view of the nature of the question. It proves, however, that many towns have a tendency to feature the star. The argument most commonly advanced in such cases is that the star furnishes the best all year round news source while the worth of the production as a news medium in some territories is more or less transient.

Those who favor the productions claim that they are the real selling matter and that by comparison the star is of little or no importance. Quite illustrative of this viewpoint is the one advanced by a Wichita Falls showman. He claims that no matter how established the star may be in the movie constellation he must be surrounded by a good story in order to be a money maker. He summarizes his remarks by saying that only a few stars really draw and that his box office is dependent in the average instance upon the calibre of the production.

The production should receive first consideration in the press sheet unless the star is "a real star"; not "near stars" or "aspiring stars" or "stars that directors would make great." This is the concensus of opinion of the majority of the showmen, especially those representing the bigger cities.

The phrase "all-star-cast" has lost its selling value, in the opinion of a great many. Several, giving an interpretation of it which they say is their public's, maintain that it is a substitute for no "star at all." In such cases little should be mentioned about the cast and the press sheet material should dwell upon the production.

In all, twenty-one showmen consider a "real" star and the production as the best news in their respective territories which cover the greater United States, as the publication of individual comments in this article reveals.

On the questions pertaining to the length of press sheet stories only five showmen, of the entire number who filled out the questionaire, are unrestricted in their advocation of longitude. The others come out emphatically for "shorts."

Differentiation of opinions as to press sheet "mileage" may, in itself, prove even an education to some of the industry's pioneers.

After carefully reading over the replies to these questions the writer could not help but divide the definition of press sheet story lengths into two classes—those gauged by the small town showman, and then the calculation of the city exhibitor.

The showman in a first class city figures a "short" is, at its maximum, a stick, which rarely exceeds twenty lines of type in the average newspaper. In some third class cities, exhibitors, according to their replies in the Principal Pictures' questionaire, estimate a "short" at from 40 to 60 words.

The small town showmen are inclined to diverge in this definition. Their idea of the length of a "short" ranges from 50 to 300 and 500 words, according to their replies to the question on length.

Among exceptions to these classifications are the Blue Mouse Theatres which operate largely in western cities and which consider a "short" as including from 200 to 300 words. The other is by the Commerford Amusements, Pittsburgh, Pa. which is the only organization answering the questionaire to go on record as disliking "shorts."

A rough estimate shows that about 28 of the 54 showmen who filed their replies can utilize feature stories for weekly papers and Saturday or Sunday editions of their daily newspapers. Their opinion of the length of such features is based principally upon the worth of the feature or the angle which it hits. A few exhibitors can place three features a week in their newspapers. Others in cities, where there are more than one publication, want a different feature for each paper.

Demand More Short Stuff in Press Sheets

On the class of material for the film columns in newspapers these showmen are unanimous in their clamor for the elimination of "the bunk." Twenty-seven of them reply that they have shown some of the press sheets to the city editors in their territories. The opinion of the newspaper world, in general, of the average press sheet is that its creator and writer is "one of those necessary evils," if we are correct in our quotation of the typical reply one exhibitor reports he received. Many of those who have not approached the city desk say they will keep the press sheet away from the editor's "lamps" as long as they are physically capable.

A resume of the answers to the questions listed this week carries the message that the writer of a press sheet should possess not only a news sense but a showman's adaptability as well.

In the first place he should put himself in the chair of the newspaper city editor. In writing his "stuff" he should always bear in mind the news angle and "understandable English." An item worth a stick should be confined to a stick and not splurged out to fill a "hole," of a column or so.

Then he should assume the exhibitor's position. In some towns a jazzy style is essential. In others a conservative and dignified medium of expression is all-necessary.

Cities, as shown by these reports, have to rely upon space in news crammed dailies, and unless their theatre advertising is heavy they are fortunate to get so much as a stick "by" the linotyper's machine. That stick should tell the story and develop some "catchy" or plausibly novel incident about the featured part, if such is essayed by a "real star."

If you have an article, which your newspaper experience tells you is real news, run it as a special story but while writing it imagine you are on the staff of a big daily. Use that same judgment in deciding what is really worth while.

If the star is not of the first water, even though you may be desirous of promoting "him or her" to such position, realize that the showmen of the country are "wise" to such situations, as these answers prove. If you have such a "star," then reserve for that subject not over a column in your press sheet space.

As to the bulk of your remaining white space, turn your attention to the production. First of all consider the origin of your production. If it is the adaptation of a popular book by an author of established brilliance and color it is the book and the writer which should be featured. If the production is based upon an original story the production should occupy the center of the press sheet stage.

Directors and scenario writers and "regulars" of the cast and lot as a whole should not be given much thought, since, with the exception of a meagre handful, they mean nothing to the theatregoer, if you are to believe the facts presented to you in this article.

The reports show that in the small towns, particularly, there is room for feature length stories in some weekly papers and in the Saturday afternoon and Sunday editions of other papers in many of the smaller cities.

Although the cry is for "shorts" there are many interpretations of the lengths of such stories. To be on the safe side, however, it would be an accurate estimate to carry at least two feature stories in each press sheet, neither to exceed a newspaper column in length.

As to the "tastes" of various territories, have one review pepped up and the other in your best Old English. The same should apply to advance readers and features.

As to the "shorts," reach the happy medium with your exhibitor customers by having at least one column devoted to "stick" items and range the rest from two to five paragraphs.

What is a "short" story in a press sheet? This interrogation appears in the Principal questionnaire, and it is defined in many of the comments by exhibitors. Some classify it as a newspaper "stick"; others calculate it to include anywheres from 30 to 500 words. It all depends upon the territory. Read over these comments and you will see that general approval will meet plenty of paragraph items and an abundance of stories not exceeding four reasonable paragraphs. That, in a few lines, seems to be the most suitable definition of "shorts" from the American theatre owners as a whole.

Moving Picture World publishes exclusively some of the best replies to the seven questions forming the basis of this week's story in the succeeding columns. The name and address of each showman is given and then his replies to the questions in their respective order follow.

In order to make the answers and their position as clear as possible the questions, as published in the lead, are republished as follows:

"Would you emphasize star, production, or both?

"Which do you consider of greatest news value in your territory, the star or stars or production?

"Do you favor long articles in the press sheet?

"Will your Sunday newspaper or your Saturday afternoon publications use articles of this type? If so, how many?

"Do you favor short articles? If so, of what length?

"Have your motion picture editors commented to you on press sheets? If so, and you care to summarize comments, will you please do so?

"What style of material do you desire in supplying articles of value for the motion picture columns of your newspapers? Of what length should these articles be?"

Russell Brown, Eugene Greater Theatres Company, Eugene, Ore.: "Both—The star is a drawing star, the production is by a drawing author. Naturally the star or stars have more year-round news value, depending on popularity of past performance—Personally have not found them readily placed—Only by holding out something else can make the grade—One! We change twice a week, so use 'edited' stories—Yes, to the point usually beats the long route—Around six inches, single column—Have requested shorter stories—The length of stories regulates number placed. With limited space, changing twice a week, we try to place stories on both features and one or two advance notices for next week—Advance and review stories—Six to eight inches."

H. Barnes, Rialto Theatre, Burlington: "Depends on star and production—Depends on star and production—No! No! No! Worthless—No—Yes—4 or 5 inches—Yes—Their newspaper copy is too evident as to what it is. Public cares nothing about company who makes pictures, minor players, and director, outside of a half a dozen in the business—Very little—The truth and nothing but the truth—From 2 to 8 inches."

Vic Gauntlett, Blue Mouse Theatres, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland: "About fifty-fifty—It all depends on the picture. If the picture is big enough, production. If not, stars—No—Not very often—One—Absolutely—200 to 300 words—Plenty—Merely stating that the average stories are not of the newspaper style—Commenting on premiere and newspaper criticism—300 words."

John Hart, Jr., National Theatre, Richmond, Va.: "Production (unless an outstanding achievement by the artist)—The production by all means. 'All star casts' have lost their novelty—Not over one or two (readers are of far more value to us)—Yes, advance notices once a week of each production, with photos of stars or 'stills'—Readers every day; long advance article once each week—By all means—6 inches, news set, rarely more—No—Stories with angles which may be applied locally; well written, conservative articles, well retouched 'stills'—Rarely over half a column."

A. F. Dagon, Gaiety, Princess, Vaudette, Springfield, Ill.: "Both—Both are necessary—No. No article over 6 inches in length—Yes—No set number—Yes—blank—blank—blank—blank—Not too long. Half a column."

Morris Rosenthal, Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn.: "Both—Depends on how big the star is at the box office; sometimes production when taken from well known book—Very few—Seldom—blank—Yes—3 to 4 paragraphs—No—blank—Human interest and original (No bunk) or dog stories—Short."

Harry Spiegel, press representative, Comerford Amusement Company, Scranton, Pa.: "Both—Stars—Yes—Yes—Two of them—No—No—Yes—They all say it's the same thing

Want Even Break for Star and Production

day in, day out, nothing spectacular—Live stuff—About 50 lines."

Milton D. Crandall, director of advertising and publicity for Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa.: "Both—'I don't remember'—Cozy Dolan—No—No — blank — Yes — One-quarter column—Yes, unfavorably—Not suitable for large city newspapers—Stories of news value—Short and snappy."

G. E. Brown, manager of Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.: "Star where big, story where big; both if necessary—Stars, generally speaking, where big; otherwise production—No—What type? Long? No—Yes—4 to 8 inches, 7 pt., not leaded—No—I was a motion picture and dramatic editor for five years. Now six years in the picture business. Most press stories pure bunk, fakes. Give us straight outline of story and star's part for advance. Good, conservative reviews about 5 or 6 inches long and a few short feature stories with ample one-column cuts and a few D. C. Cuts larger generally not used except in tank towns. Make screen of mats 55 so cuts won't smear and don't try to put whole mob scene in one or two column cuts. Cut out so many mats and furnish those shown—Interesting features, best in connection with the picture—For small towns half a column, for cities 5 to 10 inches."

George E. Guise, Miles Circuit of Detroit Theatres, Detroit, Mich.: "Both—Choice depends on star's name and whether item has any real news value—One or two, should not repeat story of picture in these—Yes—Only one in each paper—Yes—From one to four or five paragraphs—No—blank—Good, well-written, newsy items—Some one-half column, plenty of shorts."

E. Beatty, Butterfield Circuit, Detroit, Mich.: "If the production merited emphasis, yes. If not, and the star gives an unusual performance, would feature the star; or both, as may be warranted—Both have their values. The producers' judgment will generally serve as we all know good star value and good production value—No: Short, cleverly written articles—In most cases—One or two—Yes—Ten or fifteen column, single, lines (10 or 15)—Yes, several times—Practically the same as this questionaire. As far as the press sheets go, I do not think many kicks can be registered. My only fault with the ad service from exchanges is that it is almost impossible to get the display advertising mats that are shown in the press sheets. I really believe most trouble found is due to this. We operate about thirty houses and close contact with the managers would indicate this to be our only trouble—Articles such as indicate in No. 14 or intelligent stories. Not a lot of gush about milk baths, etc.—Not over half column and written so can be used in sections."

Harry Castle, Palace Theatre, Tulsa, Okla.: "Both—Stars—No—Sundays—Blank — Blank —Blank—Blank—Blank—Any—Blank."

A. S. Wieder, Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Ore.: "Both—Both—No—No—Blank—Absolutely—Three to five inches—Yes—The consensus of opinion is that there is too much junk, and, to be frank, some producing companies can save a lot of money by not wasting so much time, paper, etc.—Blank—Five inches (maximum)."

Sayre, Greater Theatres, Seattle, Wash.: "Star, if a good one; that means money—Stars: A good star in a poor picture will outdraw a good picture with an unknown cast—No—Short stuff, yes—Blank—Yes—Two or three sticks—No—Blank—Human interest stories—Short, two or three paragraphs."

Earle F. Dorsey, Loew's Palace and Columbia Theatres, Washington, D. C.: "Depends entirely on the show—Circumstances govern entirely; 'The Sea Hawk' features Sabatini, 'A Sainted Devil' is Valentino, 'Chu-Chin-Chow' is all story—Yes, up to six hundred words; no longer except exceptional cases—Yes; from two hundred fifty to six hundred, habitually—One for each theatre—Yes—Forty to one hundred words, even one hundred fifty—Yes; they demand it to be turned 'into English'—Blank—Stuff of wide literary or technical interest, using the show you have as a case in point; should be somewhat abstract—Two hundred fifty to six hundrede words."

If you have a "real star" play up that subject. "Near stars" and "would-be stars" and "stars that directors would make great" should be given little space. The average director, members of the cast and those on the lot are of such minor interest that their biographies should become a matter of ancient history. Except where the star is of exceptional drawing power, the "real star" and production should get an even break in your press sheet bold-face. That is the consensus of exhibitor opinion, according to the returns on Principal's questionnaire.

F. M. Hamburger, Circle Theatre, Portland, Ore.: "Star and title: We seldom use producer's name—Principally stars—No—Yes—One a week—Yes—Two to four-inch single column—No—Blank—Articles relating to the story of the picture—Not over four-inch one column."

George C. Greenlund, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Wash.: "Entirely dependent on importance of each and which you can sell—Such a question is hard to answer because each instance is different; it depends on which is the best merchandise—No, my newspapers will not use them—One-quarter column is the limit—Three is the limit—Yes—From three to five inches in length—No, they never see them—I find that the best results are obtained by taking what material I can use from press sheet and typing same into a short article. Why not put your press material out in this way? It would be received with open arms by many publicity men—Story of the production and location news—Not over one-fourth column."

Eller Metzger, Strand and Willard Theatres, Creston, Ia.: "If star is a star, emphasize him; otherwise, don't. Also play up production from points that appeal to entertainment seeker—That depends entirely on the case in question. Meighan or Norma have news value, Susie Smith has not. A Saturday Evening Post story by a known author has news value, an unknown has no news value—No—Yes—I get some every day but I can't steal the whole page—Yes, short and pithy—Four-inch single, six-inch single, eight-inch single—No—Blank—Material that sells the picture. Patrons don't care what a star ate for breakfast or what size shoes she wears—One column by 6 inches, 8 pt., or one column by 10 inches, 8 pt."

W. H. Youngblood, Majestic and Edisonia Theatres, Johnson City, Tenn.: "Production first—Fifty-fifty — No — No — Blank — Yes—Three hundred sixty to four hundred words—Yes—Blank—Constructive articles showing good side of lives of actors—About one column six or seven inches long."

R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.: "Both, if stars are well enough known—Depends; certain stars are pullers. If not, production should be boosted—No—Have none—Blank—Yes—One-third to one-half column—No—Blank—Type of story, author, big scenes, cast—One-half column."

H. J. Campbell, Majestic Theatre, Hartford, Conn.: "Both—Star must be in production that has advertising value—No—Yes, to a certain extent—Usually run a column or two of short, snappy notes—Yes—It is hard to place stories that will not take up over an inch or two in this column—No—Blank—Notes of coming productions and incidents relating to cast, etc.—One to two inches in depth."

Reeves Espy, Skouras Brothers, St. Louis, Mo.: "Cut down the bunk and give the exhibitor a greater variety of displays, advertisements, cuts, illustrations for his programs, etc.—Blank—No—No—Blank—Blank—Blank — Never interested — Blank — Novel stills of women stars—No articles."

Nat L. Royster, Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.: "Both—Production mostly—No—No—Blank—Yes—From three to six inches, one column—No—Blank—Interesting stories of author and story—Three to six inches, one column."

Charles M. Pincus, Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.: "On long run pictures, the production; program pictures, the star—This is long-run house, mostly productions, except possibly Valentino—No—No—Blank—Yes—One stick—Yes—The comment has been on the stereotype manner; they are all printed and made up. Never any ideas. Same stuff year in and out. Too many studio press agents write copy for the press sheets about some friend of theirs in the technical department, and write nonsensical stuff about the star's hobbies. Need more special stories and less editorial stuff. Suggest press sheets be made up for use in the key towns instead of the hick towns as now printed—Technical stories about production and star's life—Half column."

L. W. Brophy, Yale Theatre, Muskogee, Okla.: "I would say both; depends on production and star—I would ordinarily say the star—Never—They are usually glad to get it—There are three daily papers here and I would say two or three articles each on film page—I would say, single column, eight inches, reading each article—Occasionally—It usually depends on how much space they wanted to fill and their comments usually consisted of getting scene cuts and stories to make their movie page attractive—Catchy articles in regard to picture or stars in it—Not too long; not over eight or ten inches, single column."

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Okla.: —"If the star is a real star, you need nothing, but 'all star casts' would feature production—Outside of a few stars, production means more—No—Yes—One only—Blank—Blank—No—Blank—A story embracing everything about the cast and story in one article—About one column, seven inches."

W. A. Clark, Palace Theatre Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio: "Both—Both can be used to advantage. If there is anything 'newsy' about the star, carry it, but it should not be a lot of hokum that looks good to the stars and tickles their vanity but won't get past the editor's desk. Not here, anyway—Of fairly good size, but not too long—We have been using them for a long time in all papers—Time and conditions govern this, as well as the type of stories—Blank—Blank—I have always been careful to see that they get darn few of them. No, they have never commented on them—Blank."

David F. Perkins: "Real stars, but the production is most important for general purposes—Stars whose personalities are individual and who stand out command attention above production in 'news' stories—Short—Yes—Depends on my selling talk—Yes—About four sticks—Yes; don't like them; same old stuff—High rates of advertising space require more attention paid to the good small sized advertising, white space, eye-catching design, petty selling talk in the one, two and three column cuts and adaptability to use in expansion of advertising, slugs of one column width, 10-line depth, 'midget' advertisements are invaluable to both large and small space users."

D. F. Shea, Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass.: "Whatever the release merits—Stories having plausibility are necessary—Two hundred to three hundred words—According to extent of advertising—Blank—Blank—Blank—Yes—Terrible, rotten, poor."

William H. Bauch, General Press Representative of Lytle Theatres: "Both—Some stars have news value; very few productions have—No—Blank—Yes—Five hundred words—No, they never see them—Every newspaper will use at least one advance story and one review or a good feature now and then; that's what a press book should have; all this sales hokum is all wet."

J. Victor Wilson, Robbins Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., Watertown, N. Y.: "Not near stars or artists producers want to make stars—Production, unless that happens to be weak, in which case the star should be played up. The 'All Star' phrase is also worked to death and usually means 'No Star'—No—No—Blank—Yes—From two to four sticks, unless it is a 'Special Story' with actual news value—We never show press sheets to newspaper men; they would unquestionably consider the average motion picture press agent a pretty poor example of editorial publicity man and one (providing he receives a salary for his stuff) obtains money under false pretense—Blank."

Ben T. Hall, Elmira, N. Y.: "Both, but no long pedigrees of star—Star—By no means—Sunday paper accepts brief ones—Blank—Yes—Blank—Yes, on their inefficiency—Blank."

Raymond B. Jones, Publicity Director for Southern Enterprises, Dallas, Texas: "The trouble with press agents now is that they take up too much space with stories that interest on one. Picture and star are the things—Greatest news value in star oftener than on production. On production when it is a big picture and on star when it is a big star. Circumstances alter the cases—No. When using a long story you run the chance of having it all thrown away—No. They demand articles about three or four hundred words—None—Yes—Three to four hundred words—Motion picture editor of Dallas News is always crabbing about bad press books—Says that there is nothing in them that he wants to use."

M. L. Overman, Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill.: "Emphasize both star and production. Stars count a great deal, especially in the smaller towns—The production, as far as the individual picture is concerned—No. The editors don't like them and we must satisfy the editor if we expect him to use the stuff we give him—Our newspapers will use good material any time—They use on the average of one item a day. Sennett stuff gets in oftenest because their cuts and news stories have the greatest general appeal and are the best written—Yes, short articles are easier to get in—About one-fourth column with a mat to illustrate—Yes, Sennett, Universal, Famous and First National are the only press sheets they like. They generally rewrite material issued by other companies—The average press review or advance contains too many superlatives and too much about the producer and others who had a hand in the making of the picture. Outside of the cast no one cares who made the picture. Directors' names mean nothing unless he is known as a man who has made nothing but big productions. Cuts are generally crowded with credit lines which not only spoil the appearance of the cut but fill the ad with stuff no one cares to read. The same space should be filled with lines about the production. There are too many mediocre artists in the publicity departments. We have our own artist draw our ads for us whenever we run across poor art work in the regular material. But many exhibitors have no artist of their own who is capable of turning out good material."

A standard layout for press sheets, size and type of scene and advertising cuts, the merit of "catch lines" and the material appearance in general of the medium most necessary to put over the picture, will be told in the article in this series appearing in next week's issue of Moving Picture World. The happy medium in this respect is gleaned from answers to questions on this subject in the Principal questionnaire.

Ludy Brown, Palace and Amuse-U Theatres, Muscatine, Ia.: "Both—Stars that are real favorites okay, but few; production best. Would suggest the theatre showing dates be placed at bottom of reader instead of the very beginning—Short and to the point—No—Blank—Yes—1x3 and 1x5—No—Blank."

E. W. Berg, D. F. R. Enterprises, Wichita Falls, Texas: "If no star, emphasize picture; if star, both, but picture first—The stars are popular but must have stories; where good star and good story, picture usually knock-out. However, few stars are good drawing power—Not over one or two; most should be short and meaty—Our papers will use occasionally stories of not over one column—One each Sunday for each house—Yes—From forty to sixty lines—They do not comment, they look upon the publicity men as a necessary evil—Blank."

Barry Burke, Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas: "Chiefly star; sometimes director and producer—Star—No, medium, but 'meaty'—Yes—One Sunday and two midweek—Yes, if 'meaty'—Blank—Yes—More about the story without divulging the plot too much, and less about 'Billy Blank,' star of 'So and So,' was locked up in jail all night, mistaken for someone, or the coat worn by Billy Blank came from generations back. They do not care about the 'props' that go to make up a picture; they want an idea (without telling the story) as to whether they care to spend their time and money in seeing the picture."

D. J. O'Brien, Mirror Theatre, Manchester, N. H.: "Both—Stars—No—If room on Saturday—One or two—Yes—Five hundred words—No—Blank."

Ralph Thomas Kettering, General Representative for Jones, Linick and Schaefer Theatres, Chicago, Ill.: "Both. Also shorts regarding individual members of cast—The supporting cast as well as the star and author. Thus items can be localized—Only the interviews—Yes, if written in an interesting and newsy manner—One or two a week—Plenty of them—Never over a stick—Yes—Press sheets should never be sent to editors; should be sent direct to press agent, who will use experience in distributing proper style of stuff to individual newspapers."

Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Liberty Theatre, Greenville, S. C.: "Both—Both—No—Yes—One or two—Yes—One-fourth column—Yes—Blank."

B. Aronson, Raleigh, N. C.: "Both—Stars seem to have the preference here—No—Yes—One each week—Yes—One column, six to ten inches—No—Blank."

Harry W. Crull: "I would emphasize production—Anything having general news value, whether it be concerning star or production—No—No — No — Blank — Most emphatically—Short paragraphs, not more than a stickful each—Very frequently—They would be glad to get real, honest to goodness news and not the same gush that generally reaches their desks."

John A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio: "Both—The production is gradually supplanting the stars—No—Yes—One

Sunday Situation Is Tense in Erie, Pa.

Three more exhibitors in Erie, Pa., alleged violators of the Blue Laws pertaining to Sunday operation of motion picture houses, were given hearings the past week before Justice of the Peace K. R. Morrison, of Wesleyville, Pa., and were fined $4 and costs each. As was done at the first hearings, in which 12 exhibitors were found guilty and fined similar amounts, attorneys for the theatre men announced their intention of taking an appeal from the decision of the justice of the peace.

Grant H. Harmon, Leo Guerrein and Frank A. Fairgraves were the defendants. Women witnesses, sent out by the Rev. H. C. Shaw, who is leading the Blue Law enforcement movement, testified they traveled in an auto and stopped in the vicinity of the Princess, Hippodrome and Regent theatres, watching people go to the box-office and then into the theatre. Meanwhile, in spite of the campaign, theatres in Erie continue to open on Sunday.

Underwriters Revise Rules

Important Changes Become Effective First of Year

Jessie S. Phillips, general manager of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, announces a complete revision of the rules, classifications and rates for the miscellaneous lines of public liability and property damage liability insurance, to become effective on January 1, 1925, and affect the following classes of insurance in all sections of the country: owners, landlords, tenants, theatre, residence, farm employers, elevators, teams, public liability and property damage liability.

The classification experience developed for theatre public liability during the five latest available policy years shows a total exposure of 10,180,057 seats, with total incurred losses of $549,088.

A rate differential has been established for Greater New York, where the experience indicate that conditions differ materially from those in the remainder of the country. The rate level in the country at large outside of New York has not been changed. In Greater New York the rate level has been increased 62 per cent., and in addition the rates have been made the same for all classes of theatres.

Big San Francisco Deal

The interests of Schneider Bros., San Francisco, in the T. & D. Enterprises, Inc., controlling, with associates, more than forty-five moving picture theatres in northern California and Nevada, have been purchased by M. Naify and Nasser Bros., the deal involving about 200,000 and the exchange of a large block of stock. As a result of the transfer plans are going ahead for the erection of several new theatres in interior towns. The officers of the amusement concern are E. H. Emmick, president; M. Naify, vice-president and general manager; J. G. Hunter, secretary, and J. C. McCann, assistant secretary.

Condemns Cartage Tax

Jensen-Von Herberg Resent Action of Northwest Film Board of Trade

Referring to a recent action of the Northwest Film Board of Trade to the effect that all first-run film furnished theatres in Seattle is henceforth to be called for and returned to the exchange at the exhibitors' expense, the Greater Theatres Company (Jensen & Von Herberg) have gone on record as opposed to the move for several reasons, and state that they will not consent to the additional expense thus imposed. Several of the reasons for their attitude are:

That all existing contracts with their firm were purchased on the basis that these handling charges were to be paid by the exchanges. That the new charge is contrary to custom long since established. That it is in direct opposition to the practice of all other firms from whom supplies and equipment are purchased.

That so far as they have been able to discover, this is the only section in the entire country making such demands on first-run exhibitors. Notification is further served that all contracts made in future must include delivery charges in the purchase price, and must be understood as part of the consideration for the contract even though not in actual printed type of the regular form of the contract.

Unique Law Suit

Position of Furniture Basis of $25,000 Action Against Ohio House

One of the most unusual law suits ever filed in Cincinnati, and probably the first of its kind ever recorded in this region, has developed here in the case of a local resident against the Capitol Theatre Co., of which I. Libson is the executive head.

The suit, which is for $25,000 plus some $500 physician's fees, is based on a claim by the plaintiff who alleges that while a patron at the Capitol late in September, he tripped over a clothes tree in the gentlemen's smoking room striking his head on a towel receiver in such a manner as to permanently impair the sight of one eye. The plaintiff's attorney alleges negligence on the part of the theatre.

Fox Now Has 58 Foreign Exchanges

Thirteen foreign offices have been added to the foreign distributing organization of Fox Film Corporation since the first of the year, according to official statements issued this week from the New York headquarters of that producer. The increase brings the total of the foreign branches to 58.

The 13 new exchanges and their managers are as follows: Weltevreden, Dutch East Indies, V. T. Jeune; Soerabaia, Dutch East Indies, M. Hung; Singapore, Federated Malay States, Tian Lye; Riga, Latvia, E. Stammer; Budapest, Hungary, Bela Colussi; Bologna, Italy, Uga Bassi; Milan, Italy, Carlo Borgheri; Naples, Italy, G. Lauricella; Rome, Italy, Bruno Fux; Kobe, Japan, Delbert Goodman; Tokyo, Japan, W. S. Kingsbury; Seoul, Korea, J. H. Morris.

Coming and Going

Hobart Henley, Metro-Goldwyn director, is in New York looking for new screen material.

John B. Rock, Vitagraph's general sales manager, left this week for Atlanta where, after a sales conference, he will proceed to New Orleans and Dallas.

A. Victor Smith and Edward Auger, of Vitagraph, were in Chicago this week attending a sales conference of their company's mid-western representatives.

Upon returning from Washington and Atlanta, W. Ray Johnston, head of Rayart Pictures, started this week on another trip which will include stop-overs at Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Chicago. In the latter city Johnston expects to meet Dwight C. Leeper, vice-president of Richmount Pictures. Those two will then travel to Los Angeles for a brief stay.

Melvin Hirsch of the Aywon Film Corporation is scheduled to leave New York for a trip through the West this week.

Thomas Geraghty, scenario writer, is scheduled to arrive in New York this week from the Coast.

J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre at Ottawa, Ontario, spent the last week of November in New York City where he conferred with E. F. Albee and Clark Brown at the Keith headquarters regarding picture and vaudeville bookings at the attractive Ottawa house.

Jesse L. Lasky left New York for the Coast this week to supervise the final editing of "Peter Pan."

Gordon Beresford has returned from Los Angeles. He has started work on a picture of his own.

Ernest Bru, managing director for Unity Film, London, and also representative of Richard Talmadge productions in Europe, arrived in New York late this week on the S.S. Paris. He is making his headquarters at the Hotel Astor.

Phil Gleichman is in New York from Detroit.

Colvin J. Brown, eastern representative for the Thomas H. Ince Corporation, according to reports, is expected to leave shortly for the west on a business trip.

J. A. Koerpl, well known mid-western exchange man, is in New York.

Jack Heagney has returned to Detroit after a stay in New York.

Nat Levine, sales head for M. J. Winkler, is in the mid-west on a sales trip.

Due to the illness of his son, John D. Tippett has postponed his trip to Europe.

Ince Studio to Suspend

The Culver City studio erected by the late Thomas H. Ince will be closed on December 11 for an indefinite period. Plans for the reopening will hinge on the decision of officers of the holding company, a statement says. One more picture will be completed before the studio closes. Two productions for which casts had been engaged have been abandoned. Colvin W. Brown, eastern representative, says that the closing move is only to facilitate reorganization plans.

Saenger Loses Appeal; Lease and Contract Conditions Cited

THE value of theater leases, good will connected therewith, and film contracts acquired for stock must be determined, for invested capital purposes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918, in the light of facts and circumstances existing at the time of the acquisition thereof. The subsequent earnings alone which are not shown to have been reasonable, anticipated or based upon past experience or known existing facts are not sufficient evidence to establish a valuation of such assets. This the United States Board of Tax Appeals has ruled in deciding adversely the appeal of the Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., from a deficiency in tax assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The appeal involved excess profits taxes for 1918 and 1919, and arose from the disallowance in invested capital of the value claimed by the company of certain theater leases, good will connected therewith, and film contracts, and also from the disallowance in invested capital of the amount of stock issued, based upon the writing up of the value of film contracts acquired from outside interests in the ordinary course of business.

When the Saenger Amusement Company was incorporated in 1913 as a successor to the partnership of Saenger Brothers, it had a capital stock of $100,000 par value and acquired leases on the Saenger, Palace, Queen, Lyseum and Princess Theatres. John and Ad Saenger each held 40 per cent of the stock and L. M. Ash and E. V. Richards were each given 10 per cent of the stock. No property was turned in by either L. M. Ash or E. V. Richards, but the Saengers exchanged leases on the five theaters, the equipment therein and good will connected therewith, and film contracts for their share of the stock.

In 1915, contracts were made with certain producers, and the corporation issued an additional amount of $50,000 par value stock to its stockholders in proportion to their stock ownership, which represented the value of the contracts as determined by the corporation in excess of the consideration required to be paid for the use of films.

The Commissioner disallowed the value of the leases on the various theaters, on the ground that no value had been established, and also the alleged value of the film contracts on the ground that it was not proven that they had a value in excess of the consideration required to be paid for the use of the films.

In handing down its opinion, the Board of Tax appeals pointed out that the question involved is whether the film contracts and theater leases had an actual value. The taxpayer relied upon the earnings of the corporation and the success which it attained in subsequent years to establish the value of the leases, contracts, etc., turned over to it for stock when it was organized.

"While subsequent earnings are not to be disregarded in determining values of leases and contracts, it must be kept in mind that it is only the value of assets shown to exist at the time stock was issued therefore which can be included in invested capital," the decision holds. "The determination of values of assets paid in for stock must be made in the light of all available evidence existing at the date of the acquisition. Subsequent earnings may be used only to corroborate or substantiate a valuation based on the reasonable expectation of future earnings. A valuation, however, based upon the expectation of future earnings must be determined in the light of known facts existing at that time or upon past experience. A hope of future earnings not based upon some known facts or circumstances, or a mere guess by the owners as to the future earning capacity however accurate it may be proven to be by subsequent events, does not prove value. Future earnings alone are not proof without reference to the facts from which they could have been reasonably anticipated."

Similar reasoning is applied to the film contracts under consideration.

New Willard Opens

Loew Theatre in Richmond Hill, New York, Gets Gala Send-off

The New Willard, latest addition to the Marcus Loew circuit of picture and vaudeville theatres, was opened last week in Richmond Hill, New York. Loew was unable to attend the opening of his new million dollar playhouse, as he did not arrive in New York from the West Coast until the day following, but a large number of stars, including Bebe Daniels, Peggy Hopkins Joyce and Dagmar Godowsky, were on hand to give the occasion a gala aspect.

Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn and of Loew's, Inc., officiated in Mr. Loew's absence, with Charles C. Moskowitz, assistant general manager to Mr. Schenck.

George Kann is the manager of Loew's Willard Theatre. Kann is well known in New York theatrical circles, having previously been manager of Loew's Alhambra, Brooklyn, and also an executive for the Ward and Gylnne circuit in Brooklyn. George is a brother of Maurice Kann, managing editor of the Film Daily.

N. Y. Film Commission Budget Is $117,695

The New York State Motion Picture Commission has requested that the sum of $117,695 be included in the state budget next year to meet its running expenses. This represents an increase of $18,925 over what was granted last year. Among the items in the budget is a request for the sum of $4,000 as a salary to another deputy commissioner, while the commission also, if it gets the money, plans to add an assistant secretary at $2,000, two reviewers at $1,800 each and a stenographer at $1,500. It places traveling expenses at $5,000.

Sees Kenmore Taxpayers

Syracuse Exhibitor Makes Big Offer to Run Community House

Morris Fitzer, of Syracuse, has offered to pay the town of Kenmore, N. Y., just across the Buffalo city line, the sum of $10,000 a year, with an increase of $500 annually until $15,000 is reached to operate the proposed new theatre to be erected soon at a cost of $350,000.

The house will be known as the Kenmore Theatre. It will have a seating capacity of 2,816 and a frontage on Delaware avenue of 260 feet. There will be 12 stores on the Delaware avenue front. It is planned to issue about $150,000 in stock.

The proposition was laid before the Kenmore Taxpayers' Association by Newborn H. Lewis, who presented a sketch made by Architect B. C. Buell, of Kenmore, of the proposed house. Fitzer appeared before the association and offered to operate the house six days a week, with no Sunday performances until such a time as the people of the town desire exhibitions on Sunday. He also offered to donate the use of the theatre Sundays for religious purposes. No decision on the Fitzer offer has been made as as yet. Kenmore business men have long wished a motion picture house in their town, knowing that it will aid business in Kenmore and be a good thing for the community if the shows are high class. A detail story about Kenmore appeared in last week's issue of Moving Picture World.

Coolidge Streeter Dies

Coolidge Streeter of the production department of Producers Distributing Corporation, died November 30 at his home in New York City after an illness of ten days that developed into pneumonia. Mr. Street was associated with Producers Distributing Corporation and the Hodkinson Corporation for the past four years and was well known in producing circles as a dramatic critic and scenario editor. He is survived by a wife and two children, one of four and one of a year and a half.

JANITORS AND ENGINEERS OF CHICAGO AT LOGGERHEADS

A dispute is on between the theatrical janitor union and the steamfitters and engineers' organization in Chicago. The engineers claim that for several years the janitors here have enlisted the theatre engineers into their union where they belong to the other union. The dispute has been carried to the meeting of the national organization at El Paso for adjustment by the American Federation of Labor.

"More Censorship" Bills Crowd Indiana Legislative Sessions

RECENT sessions of the Indiana state legislature have not been considered complete without a fight to put through a measure to provide censorship for motion pictures and the abolishment of Sunday shows, and the coming session of the state assembly apparently will be no exception to the rule. Already one member has announced his intention of introducing a bill that will have some censorship features and at the same time provide more rigid restriction on Sunday shows.

Earl W. Payne, of Bloomington, recently elected as state senator from Monroe, Greene and Brown counties, has announced that he will introduce such a bill. He said it will not be of a radical nature but will tend "to raise the standard of moving pictures and theatrical performances."

Payne was in conference in Indianapolis recently with Roscoe Carpenter, of Lyons, a former minister, who is interested in the bill and is planning to perfect an organization in both the house and senate to crystallize sentiment in favor of the proposed measure. Carpenter said an effort will be made to enlist the aid of all the minsterial associations and other church organizations in the state. He said D. C. Stephenson, former Klan leader, has been asked to organize and lead the forces in favor of the bill.

The censorship and Sunday closing question has bobbed up at every session of the legislature for several years, and in each instance has precipitated a warm fight. A "movie" censorship bill was introduced in the 1923 session of the legislature by Senator Claude Steele, of Knox, and was overwhelmingly defeated. Similar measures at previous sessions have met a similar fate.

Opponents of censorship legislation in Indiana say that before the legislators enact a law providing additional regulation for motion pictures, it would be well for them to familiarize themselves with such laws as have been in force for many years. No obsene or suggestive picture can be exhibited now without violating the law, and if the law is not enforced it is the fault of the public, the police and the prosecutors. The old law against conducting business on Sunday has been held by many lawyers to include Sunday shows, but it is not enforced because there is no demand for its enforcement. Public opinion in Indiana sanctions Sunday entertainment, it would thus seem.

What Exhibitors Say About Press Books on each picture each day—Yes—One hundred words—Yes—Blank."

N. Schechts, Cincinnati, Ohio: "All—Both—No—Yes—One to each paper—Yes—Two hundred words—Yes—Blank."

T. H. F., Bishops-Cass Theatres, Denver, Colo.: "Depends on picture, but when in doubt, production—Stories seem to get by best dealing with production, bringing stars in indirectly. Star stories are acceptable only when they deal with fresh material—Very seldom—Hardly ever—Blank—Yes—Four hundred words—Blank—Blank."

Ed. Turner, Imperial Theatre, Ashville, N. C.: "According to production, but to satisfy local patronage, some of each—According to local conditions—No—Short ones—Three—Yes—Not over two hundred words—No—Blank."

J. S. Phillip, Rialto Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas: "Production. Why build up a star soon gone from you—Theme, name, production—Fifty line will more than tell all the merits—Sunday only—One—Yes—Fifty lines—Mostly bull—Very poor."

H. Laence, Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "Star if known, director if known, or author if book has big sale—Production, with casual mention of star—No—Yes, if short—Several—Yes—About thirty or forty lines—Yes—Press agents have run out of adjectives. They never will admit that theirs is not the greatest production made. People do not believe motion picture advertising any more. Too exaggerated and it seems that just the suggestive or risque situations are picked out for stills and mats, yet the photoplay in question might be as clean as a hound's tooth. Let's get down to earth and try to stop this exaggeration. Flaming ads might get one day's business, but how about the rest of the run? When getting up press books remember the towns of under 100,000 and bear in mind that they play to the same people week after week, with all of them trying to help the manager run his theatre."

JESSE GOLDBURG INTENDS TO BUILD OWN STUDIOS

Having purchased the property, Jesse J. Goldburg, president of Independent Pictures Corporation, upon his arrival in Hollywood, announced that he was ready to see architectural plans and estimates for the new Independent studios which will be located out in the same section as that in which the Fox and Harold Lloyd units now work. The building of the new studios at this time is attributed to the rapid growth of Independent Pictures Corporation.

State Rights Sales

Ray Johnson, president of Rayart Pictures, announces two new deals which Rayart has just closed: The Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., last week purchased for Washington territory the six Harry J. Brown productions starring Reed Howes; also with Eltabran Film Company, of Atlanta and Charlotte, for the Rayart series of six Metropolitan Melodramas, featuring George Larkin, for the Southeeastern States. This exchange also closed for the 101 Ranch production, "Trail Dust," for the same territory.

Dave Mountan, president of Richmount Pictures, Inc., announces an important foreign deal with Co-operative Film Exchange, Ltd., for the territory of Australia. It comprises a minimum of 52 subjects to be taken within a period of twelve months. This will comprise practically the entire Rayart product and other pictures for which Richmount control the foreign rights. Another deal of importance is that of the "Battling Brewster" serial and a second serial to be produced by Rayart Pictures to Universal Pictures Corporation for the Far East and South America and twenty-four features for Japan and the Philippine Islands. Also six features for India, Burma and Ceylon.

The independent exchange contracting for "The Early Bird" along with "The Speed Spook" and the third Johnny Hines feature to come, "The Cracker Jack," received word this week that prints on "The Early Bird" have just been completed by the Lyman Howe Laboratories in Wilkesbarre and will be rushed with all possible haste to the exchanges that have early play dates on this feature. Prints will go forward to American Feature Film Company, Boston, Mass.; Commonwealth Film Corporation, New York City; Dependable Pictures Corporation? F. & R. Film Company, Minneapolis, Minn.; Ludwig Film Exchanges, Milwaukee, Wis.; Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Pa.; Skirboll Productions, Inc., Cleveland Ohio; Trio Productions, Washington, D. C.; Film Classics of Illinois, Chicago; All Star Feature Films, Dallas, Texas; Home State Film Company, Inc., Little Rock, Ark.; De Luxe Feature Film Company, Denver, Colo., and Simmonds-Kann Enterprises, Inc., New York City.

Independent Films, Inc., of Boston, and the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Chicago, have purchased "Flattery" for their territories.

Film Robberies Increase with Approach of Holiday Season

BANDITS, sneak thieves and pickpockets with the approahcing holidays seem to be infesting the motion picture theatres of the country. Moving Picture World correspondents from all over included this weeks in their news letters and dispatches stories of hold-ups and petty thieveries. Below are some of these reports.

Two theatres in San Francisco were entered during Thanksgiving week. The rear door of the Republic Theatre at Sutter and Steiner streets was forced and the combination of the safe manipulated, the yeggs obtaining jewelry valued at $5,000 and $125 in cash. The jewelry was the property of Mrs. W. Jackson, wife of the owner of the house. Efforts were made to effect an entrance to the office of the U. C. Theatre, in the suburban city of Berkeley, but the parties were apparently frightened away before completing their work. Early in the year there were several theatre robberies here, but until the recent robbery, no losses had been reported for several months.

Playing the part of detective, Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany, N. Y., nabbed a man giving the name of Thomas Ross, hailing from New York City, on a charge of stealing a purse belonging to Mrs. William Lakin, as she was watching the picture. Ross was taken to police headquarters and admitted to $500 bail, with a hearing set for a later date.

While hundreds of patrons watched the program at Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, two men robbed George Hillman, manager, and Miss Vivian Siebold, cashier, of between $2,000 and $3,000. The robbers approached the two while they were totalling up the day's receipts, and while one of the men covered the manager and cashier with a revolver, the other scooped up the money.

George Heaney of 4628 North Racine avenue, Chicago, a messenger for the Pantheon Theater of Lubliner & Trinz Circuit at Sheridan road and Eastwood avenue, hailed a taxi and started for a bank with $6,000 of the theater's money. Two blocks from the theater two men jumped on the running board, took the 6,000 from Heaney and disappeared.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., Plans Extensive Future Building

THE annual meeting of the stockholders of West Coast Theatres, Inc., was held on November 17 at the general offices of the corporation, 200 Knickerbocker Building, Los Angeles. Of particular importance at the annual meeting was the election of directors and officers for the ensuing year, and the discussion of matters of prime importance for the coming twelve months, including the huge building program being inaugurated by the big concern.

Among the outstanding events was the re-election of Messrs. M. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser, A. L. Gore and Frank S. Hutton as members of the board of directors. Arthur L. Bernstein and Edwin J. Loeb were the new members of the board elected. Immediately following the election, the same executive committee, composed of Messrs. M. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser and A. L. Gore, was re-elected.

Among the matters of importance acted upon was the approval by the new board of directors of the building program for 1925, which includes the erection of theatres now building and those soon to be erected, totaling fifteen beautiful playhouses in various sections of the state. The total estimated costs represented in the 1925 building program is $2,591,139, which does not include the figures for the new and elaborate theatre to be erected in Oakland. Following are the theatres listed in this group and the estimated costs of each:

Washington and Vermont, $553,139; Orange, $45,000; Long Beach, $465,000; Pasadena Avenue and Avenue 56, $208,000; Tenth and Western, $360,000; Slauson and Mesa Drive, $240,000; Ocean Park, $135,000; Manchester and Moneta, $200,000; Beverly Drive and Wilshire Boulevard, $95,000; Glendale, $300,000; Huntington Park, $205,000; South Pasadena, $165,000, and Washington and Lake, $25,000. The estimated figures for the new Oakland theatre are not yet available.

Bad Film War

The Buffalo Film Board of Trade and members of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., are co-operating with the Eastman Film Company, in an educational campaign to eliminate film mutilation in the Buffalo territory. Sydney Samson, president of the Film Board, announces that the first step in the campaign will be the distribution of the booklet, "Film Mutilation and How to Prevent It," published by the Eastman company, a copy of which will be sent to every exhibitor in the territory. An inspector will also be appointed to visit theatres in the district.

News on Every Page

A smallpox scare is putting a crimp in theatre business in Binghamton, N. Y. The details appear on page 628.

In Ogdensburg, N. Y., Jim Burnham leased the City Opera House for $5,000 per year. This he did with the odds of the "wise" ones against him. He has been there for quite some time now and from the story on page 628 it would seem that he has found in the Opera house a vein of virgin gold.

Thanksgiving proved a joy to most exhibitors. In Pittsburgh it marked an event for Harry Davis since on that day he opened up a beautiful new theatre in his home town, as told on page 629. In Albany, according to the narrative on page 627, showmen spent the greater part of the day in appropriate carving of turkey gobblers.

Due to the diminishing of week-end transients, showmen in Ottawa, according to the story appearing on page 631, have decided to shelve for a time the raise in Saturday admissions.

Quaker Towns Disagree on Use of Ensign

Use of the American flag for advertising purposes is legal in one Pennsylvania town and illegal in another. The mayor of Sharpsburg is said to have sanctioned the use of the ensign to advertise "Barbara Frietchie," while the chief of police in Etna, an adjoining village, is credited with having declared it illegal, and ruled off Etna's streets a float advertising the picture said to have been adorned with national colors.

Samuel Suckno, Prominent Albany Exhibitor, Is Dead

SAMUEL SUCKNO, 55 years of age, owner of the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany, N. Y., a vice-president in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Inc., a member of the Albany Theatre Managers' Association, and one of the pioneer exhibitors in this city, died at the Mount Sinai Hospital, New York City, on November 27, following an illness of several weeks. Mr. Suckno left Albany about a month ago for New York and for a time his recovery was anticipated. He became worse, however, and a day or two before the end came his family was summoned to the hospital.

Mr. Suckno came to Albany from New York about twenty-five years ago, and for a time was the proprietor of a clothing store. Sensing the future of motion pictures, Mr. Suckno converted the store into a theatre known as "The White Way." Later on he acquired other theatres in various parts of the city, and until recently operated not only the Albany and Regent theatres, but also the Delaware and Arbor Hill houses.

Mr. Suckno is well known throughout New York state by reason of his activities with the state association. He was also a member of the Albany zoning committee named at the Buffalo convention a few months ago. Mr. Suckno is survived by his wife, three sons, two daughters, his father and mother, and a number of sisters and brothers.

Practically every exhibitor in this section attended the funeral of Mr. Suckno in this city on Sunday afternoon. Members of the Albany Film Board of Trade as well as members of the Albany Theatre Managers' Association, attended in a body. The floral tributes were unusually beautiful and included pieces from practically every exchange in this city. The death of Mr. Suckno follows that by but a few weeks, of William Berinstein, another pioneer exhibitor of Albany, whose death occurred in New York City the latter part of September.

Black Estate Over Million

Appraised Value is $1,100,437—Stock Sales Are Disclosed

An estate valued at $1,100,437 was left by John A. Black, who died at South Orange, N. J., on December 14, 1923, and was a partner with his brother, Alfred S. Black, in the Black New England Theatres, Inc. According to the report, under a contract made in 1920 he and his brother sold 3,750 shares of the theatre stock, in which they were equally interested, to Famous Players for $86,706. Delivery was made on February 1 last. It also appears that under a contract of June 17- 1922, the Blacks sold 26,250 shares to Famous Players and the sum due the estate on February 1, 1925, will be $35,411. Black left his brother $50,000 and gave his secretary and chauffeur each $10,000. He owned 150 shares of Powers Film Products, appraised at $350.

Suits Are Dismissed

Contractors as Plaintiffs Rejected by Court in Knickerbocker Fatality

The United States Supreme Court on December 1 dismissed suits brought by the Union Iron Works and others connected with the construction of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Washington, D. C., the roof of which collapsed on January 28, 1922, with a loss of nearly 100 lives and more than that number of persons injured. The court held that the suits, which were brought to prevent damage actions against the companies and persons involved, were not properly before it.

The case arose from a suit for damages brought in the lower federal courts by Guy Sturgis, administrator of the estate of Victor M. Sturgis, one of the victims of the disaster. The constructors sought to have the suit thrown out of court and appealed to the Supreme Court.

A large number of cases of similar character are pending, action on which has been delayed until the Supreme Court indicated whether they could be filed.

Big Paramount Earnings

The earnings of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for 1924 are expected to exceed those of 1921, when they reached $4,683,971. Net profits for the first nine months of the year came to $2,921,842. That would indicate that the last quarter's earnings will be about $1,700,000.

Here are the earnings since 1918: That year, $1,281,175; 1919, $3,109,226; 1920, $5,321,240; 1921, $4,683,971; 1922, $4,105,872; 1923, $4,240,669.

Illinois' Good Roads Hurt Small Exhibitors

The ever increasing system of good roads in Illinois is playing havoc with small-town theatres. Almost every day some house in the smaller villages throws up the sponge. With a concrete road it is hard to keep the people with motor cars in the small towns and they drive to the nearest large town to witness the latest motion picture features. Other amusements have also suffered from the same cause.

Schenck Reports Plans

United Artists Assured of Twelve Productions a Year

The industry may count on United Artists for twelve releases next year, according to a statement from Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of directors, and no more productions will be road-showed, including "The Thief of Bagdad." Hiram Abrams will have charge of the distribution. Mr. Schenck will devote considerable time to a study of distribution problems.

Mary Pickford, Doug Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin have agreed to produce as follows: two a year from Mary, three each in two years from Doug and Charlie, Griffith's allotment to be decided later. Default penalties are included in the above contracts.

Norma Talmadge joins United Artists when her First National contract ends next November and will produce two a year. Other plans call for two more units, assuring the organization of twelve releases a year.

Pres. O'Toole Broadcasts

President M. J. O'Toole of the M. P. T. O. A. broadcast from the Gimbel station in New York City on November 29 a message on the motion picture industry in which he stated that it is advancing in a rapid and constructive way. The next evening found President O'Toole in Dover, N. J., as the guest of Chairman R. F. Woodhull of the board of directors and the members of the Business Men's Association of that place. The big event of the week was the joint luncheon session of the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions held in the Penn Harris Hotel in Harrisburg, Pa., when President O'Toole was the principal speaker.

Vitagraph Sales Session

Vitagraph held this week at its headquarters a general sales meeting. Branch managers from the East and upper Atlantic seaboard were in attendance. This was followed by a meeting of Vitagraph's midwestern sales representatives in Chicago. It is understood that the company's 1924-25 schedule was discussed at both of these sessions.

Loew's, Inc., Dividend

The board of directors of Loew's, Inc., has declared a quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on the capital stock of the company, payable December 30, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business December 13, 1924.

Walter Hays Succeeds Walsh as President of M. P. T. O. of N. Y.

(Special to Moving Picture World)

ALBANY, Dec. 3—Walter Hays, of Buffalo, vice-president of the Mitchell Mark Realty Corporation, operating motion picture theatres in New York city, Brooklyn, Albany, Troy and Syracuse, and recently named as a director in the Ritz-Carlton Producing company, was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State at a meeting held in Albany Wednesday afternoon, December 3. Mr. Hays succeeds Michael Walsh, of Yonkers, who was forced to resign through illness.

Headquarters of the state association will hereafter be located in Albany, where a clerical force will be installed and where a room will also be provided for meetings of the board of directors. Mr. Hays is planning to spend at least one day each week, and possibly more, at the headquarters in Albany.

The Albany zone committee was also organized Wednesday with Meyer, Schine, of Gloversville, as chairman; Benjamin Apple, of Troy, secretary; and Uly S. Hill of Albany and Troy, as treasurer. In addition to the three officers, the board of directors will consist of Louis Buettner, of Cohoes; Ray Candee, of Utica; William Benton, of Saratoga Springs and W. H. Farley of Albany.

The Zone Committee will hold its first meeting in Albany on Friday, December 12, at which time the committee will formulate definite plans and begin functioning along lines similar with the Buffalo and New York zone committees, which have been organized for some time past.

Wednesday's meeting also decided that an aggressive fight will again be waged in New York state in an effort to do away with motion picture censorship. A legislative committee with W. W. Farley, as chairman and with Jules Michaels, of Buffalo, and John Manheimer, of New York city, was given authority to draft a bill which will be introduced in the legislature early in January, and which will call for the repeal of the present statute. This committee will work in conjunction with President Hays to the end that one exhibitor will be named in each assembly district to bring about public sentiment favorable to the removal of censorship.

A rotating board of arbitration will hereafter function in settling disagreements between exhibitors and exchanges. Louis Buettner and Jack Krause, the latter chairman of the arbitration committee from the exchanges, will meet and prepare their calendar thirty days in advance, in order that all parties may be fully aware of proceedings. Under the rotating plan, Mr. Buettner will name four exhibitors, drafted from the entire membership in the M. P. T. O. from the Albany zone, to serve at two sessions, these to be then replaced by others. The representation will still remain at three each, the additional person being named in order that there may at all time be a full representation in case of illness on the part of one person. It is believed that by those rotating the membership that exhibitors will not only take a greater interest in the proceedings but that they will also become much more familiar with the work being done.

Children's matinees were given full sanction by the state association and plans are under way to work in conjunction with the public relations department of the Hays national organization to the end that these matinees may become more frequent.

Each zone committee will have equal representation in the state association, having seven members on the board of directors and with the financial quota based upon the film strength of each zone.

The state association met first, its meeting lasting from 12:30 until 3 o'clock, after which the zone committee met and organized and at 4 o'clock, the Albany Film Board of Trade met with the entire assemblage.

Among those present at the meeting were: Robert Wagner, Little Falls; William Smalley, Cooperstown; Charles Moyer, Herkimer; S. A. Moross, of New York, secretary of the T. O. C. C.; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the same organization; Benjamin Davis, of Gloversville; Jacob Rosenthal, Benjamin Apple, Uly S. Hill and Walter Roberts, of Troy; Meyer Schine, of Gloversville; Charles McCarthy, Hoosick Falls; John Manheimer and Rudolph Saunders, New York; Walter Hays, Buffalo; Louis Buettner, Cohoes; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; Sol Raives, New York; Jules Michaels, Buffalo; George Roberts, Elmira; Moe Mark, New York; Abe Stone, Albany; and Henry Manis, New York.

A telegram from William Callahan, representing the Rochester exhibitors, indicated the re-entrance of these exhibitors once more in the state organization.

Tax Free Song Hits

It is rare to find really popular hits in the list of tax free music, but at the present time there are available to exhibitors quite a number of truly good numbers. Among the hits on the tax free list at the present time are several published by the Denton & Haskins Music Company, of 1595 Broadway, New York City. These include "I Want You Back, Old Pal," which makes its appearance on Brunswick Records December 15; "Somebody Stole My Gal," "Of All My Wife's Relations, I Love Myself the Best," the comedy number dedicated to Tad, cartoonist of the Hearst papers, and "Station Y-OU," the radio song hit.

Exhibitors interested in tax free music are advised to use these and other tax free numbers.

T. O. C. C. HOLDS REGULAR MONTHLY LUNCHEON

The Theatre Owners of Commerce, at its Greater New York exhibitor organization, held its monthly luncheon at the Hotel Astor, Tuesday, December 2. The meeting was private and its members listened to a short talk by the honor guest, Judge Moses H. Grossman. Ogden Mills and State Senator James Higgins were also invited but were unable to attend. As far as could be learned the meeting was mainly a social and routine affair.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

Rowland and Clark's Educational Films Are Put Over by Special Announcement

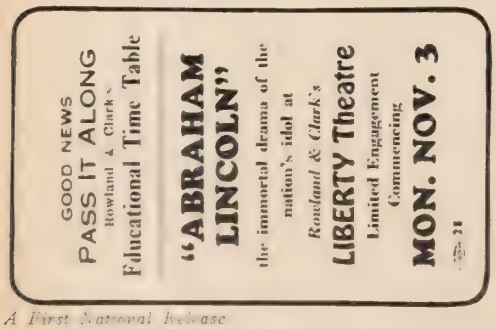
ANOTHER of the stunts used by the Rowland and Clark Theatres in Pittsburg, is what they call an Educational Time Table. Just why they call it a time table is not apparent from the copy sent in by Milt Crandall, but they had to call it something. The main idea is that it makes for business, and secures the cooperation of the schools.

We use Milt Crandall's letter in full, feeling that we cannot well improve his explanation. He writes:

"I am enclosing a sample copy of what we term an Educational Time Table. We have been using this system of getting our pictures before the principals and teachers in the schools of this district, and find it a most effective medium.

Tried Eight Months

As we started the Educational Time Table eight months ago, we have had sufficient time to know of its merits. The plan that we adopted when we inaugurated it was a simple one. We mailed out twenty-eight hundred (2800) postal cards to the principals and teachers of this district, attaching thereto a return postal card. We asked all the principals and teachers that were in favor of announcing pictures of educational character, to serve on our Advisory Visual Education Committee. We impressed upon them that we were open at all times to constructive criticism and assistance, and as fast as they returned the signed cards we filed them in alphabetical order.



A First National Release

THE TIME TABLE CARD

"We received favorable answers from about twenty-five per cent. of the principals and teachers. Not a large percentage, I will admit, but still a very good working basis, as the major portion of the replies were from principals some of the teachers being timid about placing their name on record for a stunt of this kind without the endorsement of their principal or superintendent of schools.

Keep Faith

"We then had printed the inexpensive little card, such as we are enclosing, which can be sent out on a penny stamp, and which is small enough to fit the vest pocket or purse. We made it a rule never to send out this little Educational Time Table unless it was in the interest of a picture of Educational value, and the result has been that whenever a principal or teacher receives one of the little Educational Time Tables, he is enthusiastic about announcing the 'good news' to the children."

The card Milt sends is on hard stock 3⅞ by 2⅝, printed in black on one side with the other left blank for the address. The important part is to reserve this for pictures which really live up to the billing. Use it just once to put over a doubtful subject and you'll lose it forever, but if you hold faith with your educational friends, this is a good stunt twelve months in the year and for a house of any size.

Taken in conjunction with the Student Tickets which we have already explained, it keeps up the interest of the teachers, and assures invaluable advertising at a minimum cost.

Colored the Arab

Using an Arab for a perambulator for The Arab at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., D. Roscoe Faunce gave him a horse for the first two days. Then he put him down on the ground for three more days before the opening and the first four days of the showing.

The reason for the horse was a local parade, after that the Arab hoofed it and while he walked he handed out throwaways. Passes went to the ones most neatly colored.

One thousand samples of talcum powder were given the ladies and the lobby housed a miniature tent just large enough to contain a cutout of the Arab and the girl.

Touring Ad Car Is Real Money Saver

Robert E. Irwin, who manages one of the road showings of The Thief of Bagdad, sends in an interesting picture of the advertising car he uses with his outfit. He is using it in the same way that a circus uses its advertising card.

The interior is provided with racks for the various sorts of paper used on the production, with paste can and buckets and all of the rest of the posting outfit; a complete bill room on wheels.

This car moves from town to town under its own power. When it gets near the city which is to be the next stop, the pasting for that stand is started and the car works its way into town. After the local work is done, the car heads for the next date, posting along that road as far out as is thought desirable. Irwin carries his own crew and is ready to go to work as soon as he hits town. There is no delay for local arrangements. The paper is all laid out and is taken from the rack only as needed, with the result that it does not become torn or jumbled.

He writes that he can save in railroad fares and forwarding costs more than the cost of the car, so that instead of being an expensive luxury it really is an economy.

As the car is painted a bright blue, with gilt lettering and crimson running gear, it serves as a ballyhoo wherever it goes, both in town and on the road.

It strikes us that a similar car would be even more valuable for local use where any considerable pasting is done. The usual truck is the reverse of an advertisement, but a new body on the old chassis would pay for itself in advertising value alone, not to mention the convenience. It's a fine idea.

Sinners in Heaven Had Real Marriage

Because the kick in Sinners in Heaven is the self-marriage of a castaway couple, Harry Feldman, of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn., revived the real wedding idea for his big exploitation. A. J. Callahan, a Paramounteer, assisted him in getting it over.

He stretched the stunt over a seven-day period, adding to the story each day. By the time he was ready to open with the show—and a Friday, at that—he had persuaded the local merchants to donate a complete outfit and the bride and groom come down the aisle wearing some of their wedding presents. Even the ring was a donation.

The wedding was conducted with due solemnity, with the organ playing a wedding march and all the other fixings, and at the conclusion of the ceremony the happy pair were formally presented with such presents as they were not already wearing. Feldman's own contribution was $25 in money, but the gifts ran well into three figures.

It made for a wonderful three-day business, proving that the old stunt is as helpful as ever if you put it over properly.

Scattered

Printing auto license numbers was one of the stunts used to put over The Arab at the Lyric Theatre, Lima, Ohio.

This time the numbers were not printed in the classified ads but scattered through the news stories. Not a single pass remained uncalled for. The "What Is a Sheik?" contest was employed as well.

Brazen Kissers

The old candy kiss stunt was given a new coat of paint out in Des Moines in behalf of Circe the Enchantress at the Strand Theatre.

They have some nice looking girls out in the corn belt and a number were hired to approach all men accompanied by a woman and coo "May I give you a kiss?"

Before the shock was over they would produce a couple of candy kisses with the admonition to "eat the candy and read the wrapper," which of course told all about the Mae Murray picture.

By the end of the first day the "Strand Kissing Girls" were locally famous.

Tie-ups to toilet articles and lingerie were also made. The latter works particularly well because of the excellent stills for use in this connection.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

THANKSGIVING Week had Harold Lloyd as the star attraction, in "Hot Water," a picture which required but fifty-five minutes to put through the machine. Three additional film subjects and four diversified musical presentations brought the whole show up to a total of one hour and fifty-six minutes. With such a short film feature, and the remaining show being broken up by numbers of not over ten minutes, the turn-overs were frequent, a condition that keeps the box-office busy.

The overture by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra was "Il Guarany," by Gomez. It was lighted as follows: An orange Mestrum flood of 150 amperes on the musicians from the dome, and a magenta flood from the booth covering the orange. Silver draw curtains were closed over the production stage, above colors covering them and the pleats being picked out by four orange arch spots. Large, or orchestra, stage in blue foots and borders, and medium green open box lamps back of transparent silver curtains over the windows at either side of the orchestra. Eight minutes.

A timely feature was Pilgrims Going to Church, a transition number the opening of which disclosed a reproduction of the painting of that name on a scrim in a huge frame, backed and masked by a deep blue plush cyclorama. Soft blue and green floods from the side, and green foots, made a good effect on the painting. Behind the scrim singers were grouped the same as in the original, singing hymn to Thanksgiving. As the above named blue and green lights dimmed off these singers became visible, lighted by white flood from one side and magenta from the other. At the close the number went back to its opening position. Four minutes.

Herma Menth, pianist, played Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," accompanied by an Angelus reproducing piano. The backing for this was deep blue plush cyclorama in the center of which was transparent window from floor to flies. Magenta and soft green box lamps behind the window. Two Italian hanging lamps suspended center stage. Pianos back to back, and draped. For encore pianist went to second piano. Six minutes. Light pink spot on artist from the dome.

The biggest number was Garland of Roses, running twelve minutes and offering six selections. The set was a rose garden, including ten rose trees, a rose wall and rose trees in the transparent windows at either side of the musicians. Baby spots of light pink and white picked out branches of the trees. The selections were: "To a Wild Rose," sung by soprano with tenor and contralto coming in on the chorus. "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," by male quartette. "Just for Remembrance Bring Me a Rose," quartette, soprano and contralto. "Rose of Washington Square," danced by six girls. "Mighty Lak a Rose," solo dance by premiere danseuse, and "Roses of Picardy," by ensemble. Costuming was conventional summer stuff, and girls wore artists smocks and hats for Washington Square dance.

Soprano sang "Give Me All of You," appearing on the apron of the large stage, under white spot from booth. Accompanying lights similar to overture. Three minutes.

All of the above numbers, as well as the music for the three short film subjects, was broadcast Tuesday night of the week on the 9 o'clock show through Station WNYC as part of the regular weekly concert of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre. The second portion of the concert was from the specially built studio adjoining the stage.

HOOKING PITTSBURGH SPORTS TO THE CAMEO THEATRE

McManus Praises Studio Assistance

Charles F. McManus, who slipped down the coast with a lot of other northwesterners to join out with the Turner, Dahnken and Langley outfit in Southern California, writes that he gets splendid co-operation from the studios.

As he is located at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, he can do a lot of borrowing denied those further away and he writes very appreciatively of the assistance given him by Fred Stanley, who wrote Those Who Dance; Charles Condon, of the Metro-Goldwyn; Barrett C. Kiesling, personal representative of Cecil De Mille and a lot of the others.

Stanley, for example, supplied him with typed pages from the scenario of Those Who Dance, selecting the big punch scenes. These were mounted on one sheet cards, illustrated with stills of the scene described and with red arrows pointing to the vital moment. They attracted no end of attention, and Mac suggests that doubtless Stanley will be glad to oblige others—if too many do not write at once. It's a good idea for any story.

For Feet of Clay he got the loan of the gowns worn by Vera Reynolds for window displays and he made a drive on The Border Legion, two of the best stunts being shown here. We particularly like the section of paper blocking the doorway.

The Strand plays pre-release and his bookings for October and November run: Beaucaire, His Hour, Border Legion, Feet of Clay, Madonna of the Streets, The Alaskan, Captain Blood and Hot Water. Pretty nice for Mac, and yet the better they are the harder you have to work to sell them to what they deserve. Now that he has found his way back, he promises to be more frequent. He was a year late with this letter.

Nellie the Model Had Fashion Show

Because Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model offers such a fine chance, and also because the release is a trifle old, Don Nichols, of the Paris Theatre, Durham, N. C., decided upon a fashion show with eight local girls as models.

It put the show over like a pre-release, and for two days he tested his capacity. The girls were all well known in polite circles and were better drawing cards than Nellie herself. Nellie's chief job was to give the excuse for the show, but she did that nicely and people liked her.

For several weeks the house has been giving out blotters for Abraham Lincoln, and Mr. Nichols says that it is the best advertising medium he ever handled. People come around and ask for them.

Are Very Popular

The reason is that these are the popular vest pocket size we mentioned some time ago. They are 2 by 3¼ inches, large enough to be useful and yet small enough to go into a vest pocket memorandum book or the pocket check book.

If you have not tried these out, select some title that will appeal to the solid business man, get the blotters into the business section and you'll be delighted with the result. But get good blotters. A poor blotter is the worst advertisement you can have, and generally these cost more than the more absorbent stock. And above all, get blotters that will blot from either side instead of the sort faced with paper, to let it take a better impression. Then use clear type faces, for the ink will spread a little.

If you can get one of Mr. Nichols' blotters, you'll have one that meets every specification.

Wired 'Em In

Oscar White used the telegram to get attention for The Alaskan, but he did not use the customary fake message to "Dear Patron." Instead he pasted stills with a message from Tom Meighan telling that he would be at the Rex on specified dates in "The greatest outdoor picture ever made."

This message was repeated on the backs of 500 star photos and shot into the houses.

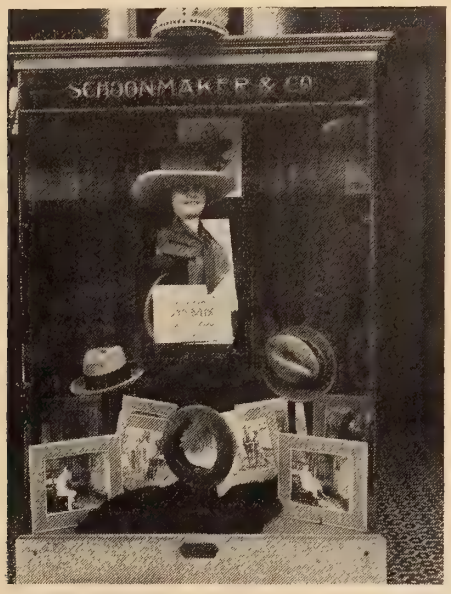
Gets a Window for Tom's Big Sombrero

Louis Abrahams, of Fox's American Theatre, Paterson, N. J., got this nice window on the strength of a hat supposed to have been specially made for Tom Mix by the Stetson Company.



A Fox Release

THE HAT WINDOW

The Stetson concern makes these for regular stock, but they are not carried in the Eastern agencies and only one or two of the New York stores carry even the smaller sized sombreros, so that this big fellow is as much of a curiosity as a silk hat would be in Lapland.

Getting the loan of one was the excuse for a nice display of stills for Oh, You Tony, and helped run the business up at very small cost.

Sold America

Eddie Collins sold America on conservative lines, but he sold to close to the capacity of the Queen Theatre, Galveston. His best bet was to get the picture announced in every class room in the public schools, both verbally and by card.

To get this he ran a private screening on the previous Saturday for the newspaper men, the superintendent of the schools, the heads of all local orders and a few others who might help.

The superintendent of schools liked the picture so well that he ordered all teachers to commend the subject to their classes, and further permitted a window card to be tacked in each room.

The only stunt was an essay contest for ticket prizes, worked with the Tribune.

Hooked to Opening

When the Auditorium Theatre, Minneapolis, opened as the Lyceum, Tess of the d'Urbevilles was selected for the initial feature and three book stores were induced to make a special spread on the sale of the Hardy novel.

These windows helped the opening, but on the other hand the opening helped the sale of the book above the ordinary book hook-up.

$500 for $50

It cost the Lucas Theatre, Savannah, Ga., about $50 for extra stage hands to work a fashion show in conjunction with The Wine of Life. It brought the house more than $500 additional business. That was what this run drew, but a fashion show often makes new friends for a house, and the real gain is probably much in excess of this.

A First National Release

THE NOVEL SETTING FOR THE SEA HAWK IN LONDON

This covers an area of 130 by 140 feet, and the ship is 24 feet wide by 16 feet high and and comes 32 feet from the drop. This is surmounted by the deck house which sinks when the picture starts. The screen is back of the sail.

Presented the Hawk in Scenic Splendor

For the premier of The Sea Hawk in Great Britain, Horace Judge, of the First National publicity staff, and Kessler Howes, of the famous Albert Hall, London, worked out the largest presentation stunts ever used on either side of the Atlantic.

Before the overture the spectator faced what is called a curtain of light. This works on the old Black Art principle of partially blinding the spectator with a glare of light, but the effect was arrived at through a refinement of the crude idea of naked lights. One hundred amber sunray lamps sent into the auditorium a glow of light that prevented the spectator from seeing into the darkness back of the foots.

With the first strains of the overture these lights began to dim down, bringing up the stage picture as shown in an adjacent cut, the galleass of The Sea Hawk.

The topsails are painted on the back drop, which is 104 by 130 feet, but the sail carrying the shield is a drop curtain which conceals the screen until the picture starts, when it is lowered.

From the base of this curtain there projects a built-up prow which extends 32 feet toward the audience. It is 24 feet wide and sixteen feet high. Atop this is a deck house which is lowered when the picture is screened; an operation requiring the services of eight men. In all 27 men are stationed in the hold of the ship to work the light and mechanical effects. Six spots are trained on the set and other lighting is used to pick out the sails, while a number of lanterns give motion to the waves.

On the deck of the ship a Welsh choir, dressed as pirates, sing the theme song, the lighting dying down as the final chorus is reached, when the screen curtain is dropped, the deck house sunk and the singers taken out of the way.

The prologue made such a hit that a firm not using the pictures applied for the use of the device as a stage presentation.

As Albert Hall seats some 6,000 persons, some idea of the stage space may be gained. Probably the prologue will stand for some little time as the most elaborate setting ever used in connection with a picture.

Three thousand yards of canvas were used in constructing the set and the back drop alone weighs nearly 500 pounds and is hung from a roof girder by 32 sets of steel cables.

Silly Questions

Getting columns on an old stunt was what pleased R. H. Ramsey, of the Princess Theatre, Toledo. He dug out the old "What would you do with a million dollars?" and offered 63 prizes for the best replies in 150 words. The Blade sponsored the idea and awarded the prizes which ran $25, $15, $10, ten ones and fifty pairs of tickets.

For $60 in money Ramsey got better than a column a day, and the Blade was pleased with the idea because the thousands of replies suggested a good circulation stunt.

Played to Collegians

Frank J. Miller, City Manager, and J. S. Shields, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made a drive on a local football game to get business for The Wine of Life. With a $15 outlay they brought in about $400.

Most of the work was done in four windows. In a furniture store a half length cutout was placed behind a sofa with an ornamental frame of stills. In a cigar store there was a drive on Murads and the college colors of the competing teams, while in a third window the same colors fluttered away from a masked-in electric fan with a miniature goal on the opposite side to add to the local color.

Cutouts of football players dressed the marquise.

Speed Spook Car Is a Tireless Worker

Because of the success of the original car designed for The Speed Spook, a second car has been ordered and will be ready for delivery very shortly. This will be shipped south, making its first stop at Dallas. Meanwhile the original is busy in the vicinity of New York, and it has proven one of the best ballyhoos of the season.

As the cut shows, this is a car with what appears to be a double bonnet. In reality the car is a Buick with the motor lowered and a false bonnet built to conceal the driver, who uses the horn as a periscope. Merely parked at the curb it gets attention through its oddity, but when it threads through the traffic with no visible driver it is as good as an entire circus parade.

During the last campaign the car managed to horn into the limelight, but it will work in a lot of other ways.

About the best handling to date is reported from Providence where the picture had been booked into the E. F. Albee theatre. Here the management published a photograph of some standard make daily for a week, asking how many readers could identify the make by the appearance of the car. The last day the picture was that of the Spook with the announcement that the car itself would appear on the streets the following day. The result was that people were looking for the car and were all set when it came along. This can be worked with pictures alone where the car cannot be had. Not everyone can get the car, but the photograph is available.

THE MODERN VERSION OF THE HEADLESS HORSEMAN

This is the car used for exploitation of The Speed Spook. The motor has been dropped down and the driver is crouched in the fake bonnet, sighting through a periscope camouflaged as a horn. It made even Broadway take notice.

Animates a Display for Captain Blood

Looking for something different for Captain Blood, the Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, worked out an animated shadow box that sold a lot of extra tickets. Poor perspective makes this display look flat, but in reality the deck is several inches deep and mounted upon rockers which permit a realistic imitation of a ship rolling on the waves.

The background is several inches from the ship, and here two of the boats are provided with flashers which give a realistic imitation of cannon fire.

The model was nicely proportioned and made a fascinating display. Probably the picture could have been sold with merely a painted banner, but it could not have been sold to as great an advantage, and the house wanted to make a cleanup with the picture. Even a slight animation will help a display, but this was on an unusually elaborate scale, and worked proportionately.

The Feet of Clay Served as Passes

Here's something different. E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, had a local concern bake up a thousand clay feet. These were tagged with the statement that a foot was good for one free admission to the Thursday or Friday matinee when accompanied by one paid admission.

Nearly all of the feet walked in on one or the other of these two dull afternoons and all of them served as advertisements, since the recipients displayed them to all their friends.

But the big bet was a pre-showing to the Austin Ministerial Association, a college faculty and others. The ministers were invited because of the other world scenes and their comments made decidedly good copy for newspaper work.

These two stunts were sufficient to put the picture well over the average at a very small extra expense, the feet costing only $20.

If you have no local pottery, perhaps a toy store can order dolls' feet for you if you ask about it in time. Probably they will cost less than these did, though two cents to sell a ticket to an off afternoon is a mighty good investment.

AN ANIMATED DISPLAY FOR CAPTAIN BLOOD

This Is New

Traffic cops got a bump out in Los Angeles while Al Christie's feature, Reckless Romance was playing at the Forum Theatre.

The perambulator was a Ford driven by a young girl who gazed ardently into the face of the young man beside her, her head being turned at right angles to the traffic. She looked to be as reckless a romancer as even Al Christie could devise, but in realtiy the young man who was dressed as a girl was keeping a close eye on the road.

A false face placed on the side of the head and topped by a blonde wig permitted him to look through the curls and catch the traffic signals, but more than one crossing cop started to make a pinch for one-armed driving.

When the first of the fall rains hit town the device was made even more effective by rigging a beach umbrella over the open car and bannering the umbrella, too.

Look Who's Here!

Pola Brown, who pinch-batted for Pola Negri last time she went into a New England window, was the big noise for Feet of Clay at the Bijou Theatre, New Haven.

It was advertised that she would appear in the window of a local store wearing the bathing suit used by Vera Reynolds in the picture.

Yale classrooms played to empty benches, but they filled the seats at the Bijou.

For Mail Orders

Because seats were reserved for the showing of The Sea Hawk at the Orpheum Theatre, Easton, Pa., the first advertising shot was a blank to be filled in as an order for reservations. This not only sold the seats to the forehanded, but it gave everyone a realization of the extra importance of the production.

The local taxis were bannered with an offer to take anyone to the opening performance without cost in the event of rain. The taxi company repeated the offer in the newspapers, paying for the space itself. A special rate had been arranged for in the event of rain.

This House Organ Is Many Volumed

The Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, sends in a throwaway in the form of a one-sheet house organ that presents some new ideas, not the least novel of which is the editor's idea of volume numbering. The first issue is Vol. I, No. 1, and the second Vol. 2. Outside of that it is a mighty useful little sheet, and no one cares about the volume number. This cut shows the front page set for Hot Water. It gives an idea of the usual layout.

Second Week Space Better Than First

About the poorest advertisement on The Sea Hawk used by Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, was that for the opening. They used a small cut of the galley slaves, but the halftone used above by no means suggests the vigor of the subject. Most of the selling was done by the type, so far as this particular display is concerned, though we imagine that any newspaper space is merely supplemental to a number of exploitation devices. It is one of the weakest Sea Hawk ads we have seen, and with such a wealth of good drawing available on this subject, the fault does not lie with First National. They offer strong cuts in all sizes, and it would have been better had the cut space of the two designs shown been exchanged for one larger cut. A spirited cut with large figures would have been a far better attention-getter than the smaller line cut and the clinch halftone. The ship cut in the second example is more striking, largely because of the black mass in the foreground, not heavy enough to be offensive, yet sufficiently pronounced to be striking. The single head is also better than the double cut, though neither halftone helps its space very greatly. The big punch in the second display is that panel at the top, and this is hurt, though not spoiled, by the lettered "special announcement" which in its incompetent weakness detracts a little from the strength of the announcement. Plain white space would have been better than this, but better still would have been some such line as "by popular demand," or "one week more" displayed in a bold type of about the value of that railroad gothic at the top of the first week's ad. The quotations from the local criticisms make a good filler. Argument is scarcely necessary. The hold over is argument enough. Both spaces are spoiled with unnecessary hand lettering. That three-line bank would have been much better in type and could have been set in a letter that would give white space between the lines and distinction to the lines themselves.

Tells Inferno Was Made in Hollywood

Because of the earlier version of The Inferno, made in Italy, the Monroe Theatre, Chicago, gives emphasis to the fact that the Fox production was made in Hollywood. This may give some comfort to the reformers who contend that they are always raising hell in Hollywood, but the line has some value in that it gives emphasis to the American origin of this Fox release. Probably not many recall the old release, but the emphasis is not wasted, for "Made in Hollywood" is assurance of a picture made to American standards.

FOR THE CHICAGO RUN

Double Run Is a Convincing Idea

Booking a picture into two houses is not an unusual idea, but we do not recall that it has been done before in Baltimore, and so this extra large space to tell that Valentino is to be seen at the Century and Parkway conveys in that fact alone the suggestion of unusual drawing power and therefore unusual picture quality. The statement might have carried better in type and with this disposition of the cut we think that type would have been easier than hand lettering and would have gained added display through the value of the contrast with the hand work on the press book cut. The line, "the king of romance," just above the name of the star cuts down the display value of this materially, and is not of sufficient importance to warrant its insertion in a form that will detract from the star name. "Valentino" is easily the best selling word in the space and it should have been given every chance to get over. The lower portion of the display is much better than the upper. Probably it does not matter greatly. Valentino will get over whether the advertisement be good or poor, but if it is just as easy to get a good display, it would seem that a good display were profitable. The cut is particularly good and it prints up very nicely.

A Typical Design for Lloyd Title

We clip this fifty line space from the Chicago papers on Hot Water. It seems to be an original and not a press book cut, and it is cleverly done in a space where the line rate exceeds the inch rate in the smaller cities. It does not show up as well by itself as it does set down in the midst of a collection of conventional displays, but you can get the idea. And it carries the suggestion for a good window display in a hardware store. Get a bunch of teakettles, paint faces on them in watercolor and you'll have a really original display.

Simple Drawing Has Distinction

There is not much story to this simple figure of a woman in the space from the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, but the picture is This Woman, and there she is. You can't ask for better than that. And because she is made to look like a very interesting woman, we think this cut will sell better than the most passionate clutch. There's the woman. She looks interesting. Therefore the play must possess interest. It is one of the best single figure attractors in the past few months, and it works the better because it achieves effect without the use of heavy blacks. The shading has been handled with unusual skill, and it is the contrast between the ground and the slender figure that gets and holds the attention. House artists who desire a good suggestion should paste this reproduction up. It is unusually well worth while.

Works Plan Book Into Good Space

There is nothing much to this large space from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, that was not on the mat as it came from the exchange, yet it works into a very nice looking display, dropping about 13 1-3 inches across four columns. Only the head and tail pieces are supplied, and these work into the general scheme as well as though the entire space had been locally set. Sometimes a lack of harmony in the local type selections makes the supplied cut look like a stranger in the space, but here there is none of that suggestion. Down at the bottom, over to the left is a personal endorsement signed by "The Management." That is necessary where the cut is supplied to a number of theatres, but we think that the value of the personal endorsement is such that it would have paid to rout the general signature to set in the name of the manager. It carries greater conviction than the semi-annoymous "The Management." But such little refinements are not necessary in order to sell Lincoln, and this does very nicely.

Built Up Painting

One of the stunts on The Enchanted Cottage at Nashville was a display in a paint store urging the reader to enchant his cottage with a certain brand of paint and see The Enchanted Cottage at the Knickerbocker.

The new part of the idea was the way the display was worked. The backing was apparently one of the special cards supplied by the manufacturers for window displays. This was set back from the glass and the intervening space was sanded into the semblance of a road, with a neat white fence and several toy autos speeding along.

It made the difference between a picture and a production, and held much closer attention, a part of which went to the signs. The same thing can often be done with lithographic cutouts if you are willing to go to the little extra trouble that will double or better the value of the straight cutout.

Came in Late

James Austin, of the Opera House, Franklin, Mass., was not able to swing the regular Paramount Week, but that did not depress him. He had one all his own.

John P. McConville, Boston Paramounteer, got him a layout of Paramount Week paper and helped him to frame up the only float ever seen in the town with the exception of a circus parade. It housed two pretty girls and had display space for framed pictures of the Paramount stars.

It was a little late in the season, but it gave the Famous Forty a great start.

"North of 36"

Irvin Willat Adds an Interesting Chapter to the Pioneers in a New Paramount Production

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

It is inevitable that all stories of the winning of the West shall be compared to "The Covered Wagon," just as "The Birth of a Nation" continued to be the standard of measurement long after the splendors of that first big play had been eclipsed. In "North of 36" Irvin Willat has produced a story that can hold its own well with the story of the Oregon pioneers. It is not an imitation, but another phase of the development; another saga of the Western plains, picturesque, colorful and with a fairly strong story by the author of "The Covered Wagon."

This is a more intimate type of tale. Instead of following the fortunes of the mile-long train of prairie wagons, "North of 36" deals with the individual fortune of Taisie Lockhart in her effort to win through the Indian country to the railhead with her huge herd of cattle, and in place of the snake-like trail of covered wagons there are seemingly interminable masses of longhorn cattle. Underlying both stories is the single idea of the opening of the Western territory.

With colorful material, Mr. Willat has produced a remarkably colorful picture. At all times the photography is worthy of the unusual scenic settings and there are a score of shots, the stampedes and the night herding, any single frame of which is in itself pure art. Remington never did better with his figures nor Bierstadt with his landscapes. The picture is a treat to art lovers, but the purely pictorial is merely a background for the unfolding of the story. Much of the action deals with the trite theme of obtaining "the papers," but this hackneyed idea is told in such vigorous action that you can forgive the melodramatic standby. The comedy relief is unusually well handled. It is a part of the story, seldom an intrusion, and is so precisely placed that the tension of suspense does not break. There are some delightful scenes in which Guy Oliver, as mayor of Abilene, welcomes the first huge drove, which is stampeded through the tented town to the blare of the welcoming brass band. There is novelty in the arrival of the old-time train with its wood-burning engine, and fine contrast between the prairie scenes and those on the Texas ranch. The picture easily can hold its own with its archtype. Without "The Covered Wagon" it would be well worth a roadshowing. Deprived of the advantage of priority, it remains one of the most noteworthy super-features of the season.

Lois Wilson is even better in this than in the earlier production because she is given a more prominent place in the story. Ernest Torrence dominates the plot with his usual artistry and Noah Beery is capital as the ex-outlaw who has become State Treasurer. With not only the opportunity but the incentive to overact, he holds himself within the picture at all times. Even in spite of his villainy one questions the scene in which he is callously turned over to the Indians for torture, but these scenes are so delicately handled that they will not affect the squeamish.

Jack Holt carries himself well in the role of McMasters and there are a number of capital bits played as carefully as though they were star parts. The entire production has been cast with unusual skill to add to the ensemble. "North of 36" is an achievement rather than a production.

Story

Sim Rudabaugh, ex-outlaw and Treasurer of Texas in the early days, plots to corner the script which represents the rich cattle lands. He particularly covets the last great ranch, owned by Taisie Lockhart. Taisie has not the money to pay her riders, but they refuse to be discharged. There comes Dan McMasters, whose father was an old friend of Lockhart's. He brings word that the railroad has been pushed through to Abilene. If they can get their cattle to the railhead they can realize upon their potential riches —but it is a thousand miles across Indian country. Taisie decides to take the chance. Dan offers his escort, but circumstances raise the suspicion he and not Rudabaugh is trying to get Taisie's land-script. He is driven off and joins up with Rudabaugh, to spy upon his plans and foil his evil devices. During a night attack the cattle are stampeded but are stopped by the cowmen, headed by Jim Nabours, the foreman, and at last reach Abilene, where their arrival is made a gala event. Dan wins Taisie, Sim is given to the Comanche chief, whose wives he has slain, and Jim attains the longed for dignity of a boiled shirt.

"Isn't Life Wonderful?"

Powerful in Its Simplicity and Realism, D. W. Griffith's Latest Is Limited in Its Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In his newest picture, "Isn't Life Wonderful?" which is receiving its initial showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, D. W. Griffith has again dared to attempt something new in theme and in treatment. He has gone to Germany after the war and found his inspiration in a story of the sufferings and hardships of a family of Polish refugees. It is a story which is simplicity itself, a page from life which depends upon its absolute realism, its remarkable character delineation and superb handling. He has steered clear of melodrama or the familiar devices of the drama to heighten the effect. There are no villains, no plotting, no intrigue, but at the same time there is no dearth of drama, emotion, humor, or of the other things that stir the spectator, just as there is no dearth of these elementals in life itself.

This picture is life itself presented on the screen, and the very simplicity of its story and treatment magnifies its power. It is not when life moves along smoothly but when it is beset with difficulties and hardships that it is most dramatic, and what could be more gripping than the struggle for life itself? So, this little story centers in a struggle for mere existence against seemingly insuperable obstacles, and to the average man will seem depressing; but it is brightened by the wonderful optimism of the heroine who, undaunted by crushing circumstances, finds life wonderful and mere existence, when love is present, a reason for enjoyment.

With opportunities for big scenes, Mr. Griffith has contented himself with epitomizing the hunger madness of the workmen in an attack on a profiteer's wagon and on the pitiful little supply of potatoes belonging to the hero and heroine. Even the happy ending is unhappy from a material standpoint, for the couple are left bereft of everything but the thought that they have each other and their great love.

Although there are some slight slips, Mr. Griffith's direction of this picture is marvelous and none but a master of the art could have gotten such dramatic force out of scenes showing the family utterly dejected with their meal of horse turnips, or such pathos as the scene where the heroine waits at her sweetheart's bedside or where she attempts to buy meat and finds the price has risen out of reach before she gets into the shop, or the exaltation of these simple folk over a meal consisting of a single egg, a bowl of potatoes and liverwurst.

Equally fine is the work of the players. Carol Dempster gives a truly remarkable performance; one of the most effective the screen has ever seen is her display of simple emotions. Neil Hamilton, with less to do, scores heavily, as do all of the others. There is no exaggeration in their acting or expression, a simple movement or gesture, a slight smile on a gaunt face speaking volumes.

Comedy in keeping with the spirit of the picture is supplied by Lupino Lane as a strolling actor, and there is excellent suspense and dramatic interest in the futile attempt of the hero and heroine to escape the workmen temporarily made beasts by hunger.

For those who are moved by sentiment or who grasp the simplicity and humanity of this story, the bigness of the drama of life itself, and can enter into the finer points of this truly remarkable interpretation, "Isn't Life Wonderful?" will prove inspiring. But, after all, we seriously doubt its appeal to the masses. Foremost among the considerations which would seemingly mitigate against its general box office success is the depressing nature of the story, despite its note of optimism, for it is a drab little tale that is unfolded. And despite its intensity for those who are moved by its emotional appeal, the very absence of theatricalism and devices for building up punch and interest will have their effect. In short, to many it may prove commonplace and depressing. In its very simplicity and realism lies its greatest strength and weakness, and because of its tone it does not seem the kind of a picture the average patron would recommend to his friend who goes to the theatre primarily to be entertained and amused.

Story

Among the thousands of refugees who flocked to Berlin was the family of a Polish professor and the days following the war show them in a terrific struggle for mere xistence. They manage to get a place to live but their combined resources and the high prices of food result in their only being able to get a potato apiece and for long periods they have to subsist on horse turnips. Despite this, the love of one son, Hans, for his cousin Inga is so great that they determine to overcome all obstacles. Inga works overtime in another place and collects a pitiful supply of things for their new home, while Hans alone builds a little hut and finds a little allotment where he grows enough potatoes to keep him through the winter. All is rosy and they start out to harvest their little crop, but are followed by workmen who temporarily made beasts through their hunger and suffering of their families rob them of all. The world looks black, but Inga rises to the occasion and makes Hans realize that they still have each other, and that after all "Isn't Life Wonderful."

"Romola"

Lillian Gish Starred in Pictorially Beautiful Adaptation of George Eliot's Classic Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

George Eliot's classic novel, "Romola," with its story laid in Florence, Italy, in the fifteenth century, has reached the screen as a Henry King production for Inspiration Pictures, Inc., with Lillian Gish as the star and Dorothy Gish featured, and is being distributed through Metro-Goldwyn.

The most striking feature of this production is its magnificence and wonderful pictorial beauty. Filmed on the actual locations called for in the story, so finely has it been handled, with such painstaking attention to accuracy of detail, that it is a vivid presentation of the life of that period, and the spectator is made to feel as if he has been actually transported back to Florence in the days of the de Medici.

"Romola" is certainly a masterpiece of beauty and splendor, with wonderful shots of the city of Florence, its palaces, streets, market-places and cathedrals, with striking interior scenes, gorgeous costumes and well-handled mobs. We doubt if there has ever been a picture that can excel it in these respects.

As to the story, while there are scenes that are dramatically and emotionally effective, they occur mostly in the latter part of the picture. Narrative in form, it is lacking in love interest, and concerns mostly the rise to fame of the rascally adventurer, Tito, and his marriage to Romola, who does not love him, while her love for Carlo is only suggested and he is provided with no opportunities of a romantic nature.

As presented at the Cohan Theatre in New York, this picture is in thirteen reels, and particularly in the first half there is a noticeable slowness of movement due to the elaborate attention to details and the holding of some of the scenes too long. The tempo quickens in the second half and there is no lack of real action in the climax. These sequences have been effectively handled, and the scene where Savonarola is fastened to a pole and a fire built under him is undeniably impressive, but it is unpleasant and, although rain puts out the fire, he apparently meets death as a martyr, by hanging. The scene where Tito is choked and held under water by the foster-father he has disowned, until he drowns, is decidedly gruesome.

The performance of the players is uniformly excellent. Lillian Gish is not only strikingly beautiful as Romola, with an ideal spiritual type of beauty, but her acting is remarkably effective. Dorothy Gish as the little peasant girl shows to advantage and contributes excellent comedy and human interest touches. W. H. Powell as Tito has the lion's share of the action and is not only a remarkably good type for the role but makes a distinctly fine impression and gives a wonderful performance. Charles Lane does excellent work as Baldassarro, and Bonaventura Ibanez likewise as the blind father of Romola. The portrayal of Savonarola by Herbert Grimwood is remarkably effective and he bears a marvelous likeness to the pictures of the Florentine ecclesiastic painted by the Italian masters.

Personally, while we felt its pictorial charm, the story did not get a strong hold on our emotions and the interest was weakened by the maze of detail and incident, and we doubt whether the magnificence, splendor and beauty of this picture, plus the excellent work of the cast, will outweigh these other considerations in the minds of the average patron. In a word, its box office reaction will rest largely on its pictorial appeal.

A boat approaching Italy is set upon by pirates and Baldassaro, a noted scholar, gives his adopted son Tito a ring that will be a passport with all men of learning. Tito escapes but Baldassaro is captured. Tito reaches Florence at the time that the people incited by the priest, Savonarola, has risen and cast out their ruler, Piero de Medici. Accidentally he aids Bardi, a blind man and noted scholar and is received with honors, finally winning consent to his marriage to his daughter Romola who loves Carlo, an artist. Through the aid of Spini, an adventurer who has become the real power behind the government, Tito rises to the post of chief magistrate. In the meantime he flirts with Tessa a peasant girl, going through a mock marriage during a carnival, which is very real to Tessa, so he installs her in a house and a child is born to them. Tito shows his real nature when he sells the priceless books of Bardi, and Romola leaves him. He issues a decree that means death to Savonarola but his ambition overleaps itself and he is chased by the mob. Jumping into the river he meets death by drowning at the hands of Baldassaro, whom he has refused to recognize. Romola meets Tessa and befriends her, and finally finds happiness with Carlo who has remained faithful to her.

"On The Stroke of Three"

Kenneth Harlan and Madge Bellamy in Good F. B. O. Box Office Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"On The Stroke of Three" is a celevr, neatly constructed and very entertaining box office picture. Without any special high lights, it nevertheless manages to entertain from beginning to end because of a human quality due to its story, written by Henry Payson Dowst, and fine acting by Kenneth Harlan, Madge Bellamy, Mary Carr and supporting players. The plot is logical and possesses increasing suspense, though the well known custom of avoiding unhappy endings insures payment of the mortgage on the stroke of three and winning of the daughter of the big financier.

Worthy of note is the fact that it has sentimental appeal without a bit of sentimentality. Harlan is earnest in his effort to be a man of affairs and manly as the lover; Madge Bellamy is a typical lively American girl in love, but not attempting to elicit sympathy by the subterfuge of downcast glances and tear-filled eyes. They portray romance very effectively. Mary Carr as the mother gives another example of competent, restrained acting.

The tone of the picture is distinctly one of optimism. But it isn't saccharine. It's red-blooded and honest. The village banker is a mean man, but he isn't violently vallainous; the financier is hard-headed, but he logically turns out to be a decent sort of a chap, for a' that.

"On The Stroke of Three" ought to go well in any theatre.

Among the resentful villagers is Judson Forrest, who wants to be an inventor. Mary Jordan, daughter of the financier, is hurt and spends a night at his home. Learning of his attitude toward her father, she poses as a domestic at the Jordan home. Later, in New York, Judson looks her up. He is trying to sell his invention and to get funds mortgages his home. The village banker, in league with Jordan, sells the financier the mortgage and a foreclosure threatens when Jordan's business agent double-crosses Judson. The youth thinks Mary working against him. Friends come to Judson's aid and he pays off the mortgage in the nick of time. He learns that Jordan knew nothing of the methods employed by his agent and that Mary loves him.

"Daughters of the Night"

Fox Offers Cast of Little-Known Players In Program Melodrama of the Telephone Industry

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title of "Daughters of the Night" which is capable of several different interpretations but which probably more strongly suggests a sensational or jazz theme, William Fox is offering a picturization of an entirely different type of story. In reality, it is a small-town-crook melodrama of the telephone industry with the hero as a lineman and the significance of the title lying in the fact that the heroine is a night operator in the village exchange.

There are a number of shots of a training school for operators, of linemen at work climbing poles and repairing wires and in fact the telephone plays a vital part in the story, the theme itself, however, follows familiar melodramatic lines. There are two brothers disinherited because of their wildness. One joins his crook pals and the other makes good by becoming a telephone lineman. Through the stretching of coincidence, both are brought to the same village and a fire in the exchange gives one brother the chance to prove a hero and rescue his sweetheart while the other loses his life after fleeing from a bank robbery.

The telephone sequences are effective and will doubtless prove interesting to those who are unfamiliar with the inside of this great industry. There are thrill scenes and considerable action, but the story does not develop any great punch. After some of the fine work in the past we had expected Director Elmer Clifton to turn out a more forceful picture, although it is true he did not have a story of much strength to start with.

While capable, the cast is composed entirely of unknown or little known players with Orville Caldwell as the hero, and Alyce Mills as the heroine. One of the best performances is that of Alice Chapin as the scheming old grandmother and she is a realistic type.

An inconsistency in the story, probably due to bad assembling shows the hero receiving a message in the country long after the local fire department has been notified and beating them to the fire. There are other weaknesses to the picture, and while the melodramatic angle is mildly exciting and the telephone stuff adds to the interest, "Daughters of the Night" is in our opinion just a fair program picture.

Story

Betty Blair finishes a training course at the school for telephone operators in New York and returns to her home town Midvale where her scheming aunt makes her promise to marry a scheming wealthy lawyer, Kilmaster. Jimmy and Billy Roberts cap the climax to a wild career by getting arrested in a street brawl and are turned out by their irate father. Jimmy joins his crook pals while Billy determines to make good. He wanders into Midvale and gets a job as lineman with the telephone company where he meets Betty and falls in love with her. Jimmy's gang pick out the Midvale bank for a haul. In making a getaway Jimmy rushes into the telephone building. A fire starts and he is trapped but sends a last message to his mother over the phone. The thieves have cut the wires, but Betty stays on the job untill Billy repairs them and sends an alarm which brings about the capture of the gang. Billy rushes back and rescues her from the flames and, having made good returns home with his bride to be and gets his parents forgiveness.

First of F. B. O.'s New Texas Ranger Series Starring Bob Custer Is Exciting Border Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Released through F. B. O., "Trigger Fingers" is the first offering of the new "Texas Ranger" series of Jesse Goldburg productions for Independent Pictures Corporation starring Bob Custer.

As indicated by the general title of the series these are stories of the border built around the activities of the "Rangers" in their dealings with criminals, smugglers and other lawbreakers, and this one has for its theme the masquerading of the hero Sergeant Steele as a noted bandit in order to ferret out the culprits involved in a series of mysterious mine robberies and especially to bring about the capture of a masked bandit leader known as "The Black Hawk."

"Trigger Fingers" is a picture with more than the usual amount of action and villainy, heroism and intrigue. It is true that the plot follows along the usual lines of stories of this type, but it has been capably directed by Reeves Eason and so filled with action and exciting situations that it should prove a satisfactory offering for patrons who like vigorous melodramas of the outdoors. The story moves with such rapidity from situation to situation that there is no opportunity for the interest to lag. There is plenty of excitement and melodramatic punch, a mystery element in the identity of the masked bandit, good riding and hard fighting with a sprinkling of comedy in the character of the boob book-daughter deputy who is always getting in wrong, and of course there is the ever-present and necessary romantic element. Altogether "Trigger Fingers" has an unusual amount of action, vigor and punch and is an auspicious opener for the new series.

In type, this picture suggests the activities of the Northwest Mounted Police with the locale changed to the Southwest and Bob Custer, whom we do not recall having seen before, is entirely satisfactory as the vigorous he-man hero, a sergeant of the Rangers. His support is capable with Margaret Landis as the girl, Bill Dyer and Max Asher supplying the comedy, Joe Bennett and George Fields villainous enough to suit anybody and Fontaine LaRue as an Indian girl.

"The Chronicles of America"

A Dramatic, Thrilling, Truthful, Patriotic and Inspiring Picturization of the Great Events of Our History

A Surprising Fact That You Should Know

Up to the time that the Chronicles of America were released, it was a fact without exception that the longer a picture was released, the less its business value.

It is a surprising fact that not only is each Chronicle of America released today doing a bigger business than any of its predecessors, but that THE FIRST PICTURES IN THE SERIES ARE DOING A BIGGER BUSINESS TODAY THAN WHEN THEY WERE FIRST RELEASED.

This furnishes definite proof of the quality and audience value of every picture in the series. AND THE PICTURES ARE GETTING BETTER ALL THE TIME.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Thanksgiving a Day of Real Rejoicing in Albany, N. Y.

Thanksgiving Day was a day of real rejoicing among the exhibitors of Troy and Albany, business thus far this fall having been far head of a year ago. The majority of the exhibitors managed to take an hour or so off during the day for dinner with their families. Jake Rosenthal, of the Rose in Troy, carved a turkey for eight, including his five children. Ben Apple, of the American in Troy, sat at the head of a table around which no less than seventeen had gathered. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts, of the Troy Theatre, dined downtown, with someone else doing the carving. Tony Veiller, of the Lincoln in Troy, ate his turkey at his aunt's home. Oscar Perrin, of the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany, carved a fifteen pound turkey, while Abe Stone, of the Arbor Hill and Delaware theatres, sharpened his knife and carved a duck.

The Rose Theatre in Troy will become a first-run house for a single night, "Messalina" being scheduled for December 6. Jacob Rosenthal, owner of the house, put over big business last week giving away seven ducks a night, along with double features. Two crates of ducks attracted attention in the lobby, although Mr. Rosenthal admitted that he wouldn't kill one of the birds for anything in the world.

The secret is out. The reason for the strange actions on the part of the beautiful Angora cat recently presented Mrs. Walter Roberts, wife of the manager of the Troy Theatre, is known.. The cat became frightened at Mrs. Roberts' new leopard skin coat, and no doubt thinking its life was at stake, ran helter skelter through the house, refusing to be caught.

With a plentiful display of six-sheets, Exhibitor Weiss is making things hum at the Hudson in Watervliet these days. Just shows you what showmanship can do. A couple of recent pictures shown at the Hudson include "The Covered Wagon" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

The Bijou in Lowville did a whopping business two days last week with a picture taken at Long Pond in the Adirondacks and featuring a well known guide. Everyone wanted to see just what Pete Yousey, the guide, looked like in the movies.

Guy Graves, who owns a half dozen theatres in Yonkers, was a caller in Albany a few days ago. Mrs. Graves accompanied him. The trip was made by automobile.

The Dove of Peace has once more established its home at the Rose Theatre in Troy. Harry M. Brooks, president of the Operators' Union in Troy, and Lester Smith, projectionist at the Rose, who battled a few nights ago, are once more friends, each withdrawing charges made following the fight. Reposing in Jake Rosenthal's safe is a typewritten statement to this effect signed by each of the would-be "Jack Dempseys."

A terrific downpour, sweeping over the Capital district last Saturday afternoon and night, is estimated to have cost the theatres of these three cities approximately $4,000 in lost patronage. It was the worst storm in months. In some houses there was but a mere handful at the evening shows. Sunday came back strong, however, and partially made up the loss of the day before.

Business seems to be on the pickup in Troy, as well as other cities in this section. The collar factories are once more running at normal capacity, while reports from Amsterdam and other manufacturing cities also present favorable aspects.

Abe Stone, who blossomed forth last week with a brand new car, announced that he would not renew his lease of the Delaware Theatre in Albany at its expiration a few months hence. Mr. Stone will confine his efforts entirely to the Arbor Theatre. Just before Thanksgiving Mr. Stone gave away several turkeys to fortunate patrons. It so happened one night that the winner was a little darkey girl, who walked down the aisle only to become frightened when the turkey flapped its wings. Relief was in sight, however, in the person of the little girl's father, who strode forward and made short work of the turkey's efforts to escape.

William Van Alstyne, who runs the Strand in Fonda, doesn't have to depend on his theatre for a living, not by a long shot. Reporting business as being better, Mr. Van Alstyne didn't specify whether he meant at the theatre or at his gasoline station or cigar stand. Anyhow, it's better and that's all that counts.

"Pop" Linton, one of the veterans in the picture theatre business in New York State, known from New York to Buffalo, former owner of the Hippodrome in Utica, is back in the game and has a new house located on the site of the old Hippodrome, although not as large. It is scheduled for an opening at an early date.

Rae Candee has been made general manager of the Robbins chain of houses, with headquarters in Utica. Mr. Candee is an active Shriner and was as busy as the proverbial bee one night last week in connection with a big ceremonial in his home town. Incidentally, Mr. Robbins booked "Hot Water" for his theatres in both Utica and Watertown.

R. J Henry of the Clinton Theatre in Plattsburg has been named manager of the theatre which William Benton of Saratoga Springs is erecting in Plattsburg and which will be opened in December. The Clinton is to be dismantled as soon as the new house opens.

Northern New York

In connection with the first anniversary of the new Family Theatre, Batavia, N. Y., the girl ushers, all members of the Triangle Girls, enjoyed a dinner in the Richmond Hotel on November 26 as guests of the Genessee Theatrical Enterprises, which operates the house. Every one of the nineteen ushers and four guests were present. George W. Fotch, who organized the Triangle Girls, was toastmaster. After the banquet the girls enjoyed the show at the Family as part of the audience, while other Triangle Girls, an organization of ushers, acted in their places.

George E. Williams, former manager of the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, has been appointed exploitation representative at the Paramount exchange. He is now in New York conferring with Claude Saunders, chief of the exploitation department. He will begin his duties in Buffalo on December 8.

A new picture theatre has been opened in Lima, N. Y., by Willard McDonald.

The D. & C. Operation Corporation has been incorporated in Binghamton, N. Y., to engage in the theatrical business. The company operates theatres in Binghamton and Endicott and has a capital stock of $20,000. The incorporators are David Cohen and Ned Kornblite of Binghamton, M. E. Comerford of Scranton and Eleanor Dittrich and S. Howard Ammerman of Endicott.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Circle Theatre, Buffalo, has just installed a new electrically operated organ. Gene says that, in order to convey the impression that he has an organist at the console, he has ripped out a note here and there from the role. He says most organists pull blue notes now and then.

Fred Peters' mother died in Syracuse last week and was buried in Binghamton. Exhibitors throughout this part of the state sent flowers. Mr. Peters is owner of the Majestic Theatre in Hornell, N. Y.

Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount Theatre Department, stopped off in Niagara Falls the other day on his way to Chicago to visit his old friend, Charles Hayman, owner of the Strand and Cataract theatres.

Phil Gentille has resigned as manager of the Family Theatre in Rochester and has returned to Buffalo, where he has been engaged as a member of the First Graphic sales staff by Manager Jack Berkowitz.

The Palace Theatre in Olean is being managed by Mr. Odlum, formerly connected with the Cataract, Niagara Falls, as publicity man. The Palace is now being operated by the Bordonaro Brothers.

Walter E. Greenwood, manager of the Legion Theatre in Wayland, had one of the first showings of "Captain Blood" in Western New York the past week and reports breaking all records with the attraction.

Jimmy Doyle and Mrs. Doyle were touring Central New York last week, trying out a new Buick. Jimmy is manager of the New Academy Theatre in Nunda.

Ben Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Buffalo, lost twenty pounds one night last week. His projectionist, A. Potts, took leave of absence to get married. That was all very well but Ben couldn't find a substitute, so he had to keep the house closed that night.

A smallpox scare in Binghamton has been putting the crimps into business in that city, where the houses run six nights a week. William Mack, of Johnson City, who runs the Endwell and the Goodwill theatres, also felt the effects of the scare, being forced to close his theatres on Sundays as a preventative measure. Binghamton folks flock out to Johnson City on Sunday nights to enjoy the pictures there, but with smallpox in Binghamton it was decided to do away with Sunday shows in Johnson City rather than to take any chance of spreading the disease.

According to a report along Film Row, Mike Bloom, with houses in Oswego, Fulton and Cortland, is negotiating to sell his theatres and may retire from the business.

William Smalley, with his chain of twelve houses, last week booked First National product solid for his entire circuit. Nate Robbins is reported as doing a big business these days with vaudeville at the Gaiety in Utica.

"Try and get in" was the remark made by Oscar Perrin one day last week when asked how "Classmates" was doing at the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany. The picture went over extremely big, with Tuesday's receipts exceeding Monday's and with Wednesday beating out Tuesday. The picture was held over for the second week.

There is one former salesman at least who believes in his line. Jimmy Rose, who recently bought the Bijou in Troy and who was a Pathe salesman out of Albany for five years, signed up 100 per cent. last week for Pathe's short subjects.

When James S. Burnham of Cortland leased the City Opera House in Ogdensburg for $5,000 a year, there were many in the northern city who predicted that the venture would be a failure. Instead of this, the theatre is panning out a veritable gold mine, being packed to its doors night after night. The first three nights of each week are devoted to pictures and the last three to a combination of vaudeville and pictures. Mr. Burnham's lease runs for two years, with a privilege of five.

"Argentine Love" will be given a prerelease run at the Lincoln Theatre in Troy the early part of December. Taking advantage of the fact, Manager Veiller is billing the picture as the world's premiere showing. Although each ran for three days, "The City that Never Sleeps" and "The Fast Set" did what might be termed a week's business in the three days, drawing unusually well at both matinees and evenings.

Well known exhibitors in town during the past week included Louis Schine of Gloversville, Lew Fisher of Ticonderoga, Mr. Shelley and his father of the Orpheum in Amsterdam. Bill Donovan of the Palace in Tupper Lake journeyed to Chateaugay and Malone during the week, while from Plattsburg news came from Jack Matthews that "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" had established a new record at his house.

The American in Troy, playing only first runs, opened big with "Secrets" on Saturday. Mr. Apple is not worrying so much about business these days as he is over the failure of someone to return a spotlight borrowed for the recent film ball in Albany. Both Mr. Apple and Walter Roberts are bowling great ball these days in the Trojan League.

Joe Saperstein, who is doing remarkably well as manager of the Griswold Theatre in Troy, remarked the other night that he could always find something to do. This fact is probably the key to Mr. Saperstein's success. His amateur nights each Thursday with double features throughout the week are packing the house.

Pittsburgh's New Schenley Is Opened on Thanksgiving

Harry Davis, prominent Pittsburgh theatrical man, opened the beautiful Schenley Theatre in the Oakland district on Thanksgiving Day. The policy of the Schenley will be second-run films, program to be changed every other day. Twenty-five cents is the admission price, and the Schenley is probably the finest second-run picture theatre in the country. Music is furnished by orchestra and organ. George J. Reister, formerly manager of the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, and later at the Victoria in Altoona, has been appointed manager of the Schenley. The opening attraction was "The Marriage Circle."

M. Browar reopened his New Kenyon Theatre on Federal street, North Side, on Thanksgiving Day. The Kenyon had been closed for alterations since June and the house has been practically made over. It is without doubt one of the finest picture theatres in Western Pennsylvania, and it will well be worth any exhibitor's time to visit the house. The capacity has been doubled and the house now can seat 2,000. Prices are 35 cents for adults and 20 cents for children. Music is furnished by two orchestras, symphony and jazz, also a pipe organ. For the first ten days an extra added attraction was staged in the form of a thirty-piece saxophone band. Barney Dorn is house manager.

Charlie Feinler, popular theatre owner of Wheeling, W. Va., spent a few days along Film Row last week.

Miss Mildred Clark, manageress of the Helma Theatre, Etna, is again about her duties after having been confined to her home for a week, due to illness.

Theodore Mikalowsky, Masontown exhibitor, accompanied by his wife, was a Film Row visitor recently. Mrs. Mikalowsky came along to do her Christmas shopping early.

More than 10,000 people attended the performances at the new Lerner Theatre at Elkhart, Ind., on November 28, when the new $750,000 picture theatre was formally opened to the public. Many compliments were heard. The building seats 2,200. The theatre was financed entirely by Harry Lerner, formerly of South Bend, who was in charge of the Bucklen Theatre in Elkhart for many years. The interior decorations are in cream, gold and pale blue. The stage is of ample proportions for legitimate attractions. The feature picture for the opening was "The Navigator." A vaudeville program also was given.

Cincinnati

R. C. Steuve, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Canton, Ohio, who has been enjoying a two weeks' sojourn at Mt. Clemens, Mich., has returned to his desk.

James Dunlevy, managerial head of the Strand Theatre, Akron, who has been confined to his home for several weeks with illness, is able to be about again, having spent a few hours at the theatre recently.

Among the recent deaths recorded is that of Emmett Wright, who was previously an exhibitor at Tiffin, Ohio. Wright died at Columbus.

Forrest C. Templin has been made directing manager of the Duchess Theatre, Warren, Ohio, a new house recently opened by the Smith Amusement Company, of which Lemotto Smith is president.

R. R. Ripley, who operated the Karrylon Theatre, New London, Ohio, is off for California for the winter, having disposed of his house to P. M. Howard. Ripley announced before leaving that it was probable he would locate in California permanently.

The East Ohio Theatre Company, Cambridge, Ohio, has been incorporated for $100,000 by John F. Smith and Frank O'Hara. Among the recent incorporations also is the Pela Theatre Company, Cincinnati, with a capital of $75,000.

Manager John Schwalm of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, recently showed "The Shepherd King" for the benefit of the I. O. O. F. lodge. He expects to shortly put on a benefit for the local Kiddies' Tuberculosis Camp, to which organization he will turn over the entire receipts. Schwalm is connected with the camp in an executive capacity

News of the Chicago Territory

The picture theatre being erected by Vincent T. Lynch and associates at Central and North avenue, Chicago, will soon be under roof. The builders hope to have the house ready for opening by April 1. The house is the last word in neighborhood theatres and will seat 1,500, with provision for an additional 1,000 seats when the district demands it. A fine organ will be installed and orchestra pit for the musicians. Mr. Lynch also owns the New Tiffin Theatre in that part of the city. He is conducting a contest for a name for the new house.

Earl J. Johnson has been made president of the new Brookfield Theatre Corporation at Brookfield, Ill., C. B. Mead is vice-president and R. W. Teeter is secretary. The new firm will close the Brookfield Theatre for a month and remodel the house thoroughly, installing a new organ, new chairs, new screen and new projection room equipment, and will reopen in time for the Christmas business. Mr. Johnson also owns the Berwyn Theatre at Berwyn, Ill., which was opened last year, and the house boasts of one of the finest organs in this part of the country.

Meyer Saperstein has been named manager of the Lexington Theatre of the Saperstein circuit. Aaron Saperstein will look after the Garfield Theatre, taken over last week by the circuit, and Hyman Saperstein will devote his time to the Palais Royal and Lincoln theatres.

The many friends of Charley Schaefer, for fourteen years owner of the Garfield Theatre on West Madison street, will be sorry to hear he will retire from the business and take up other lines of work in the future.

The McVickers Theatre management made the inmates of the Oak Forest Infirmary a happy lot when, in co-operation with the Evening American, "North of 36" was sent out to them for a free show on Thanksgiving.

Another theatre will go up in the Loop soon, as the old Bismarck Hotel will be torn down this month and on the site at Randolph and Wells street a huge hotel building with a theatre will rise in its place. It is planned to have the new buildings ready by January 1, 1926. Eitel Brothers will build and operate the enterprise.

Lubliner & Trinz will make a change of their bills at the Pantheon Theatre, their big North Side house, on Monday instead of Sunday hereafter.

Joseph Hopp reports the following enrollment of new members last week: Ed. Brennemann, Colonial Theatre, LaSalle; Barney Ernat, Fairy Theatre, Granville; Mrs. A. Machek, Liberty Theatre, Spring Valley; Brown & Wirth, Palace Theatre, Wyoming; George W. Roberts, Cozy Theatre, New Windsor, and J. E. Epperson, Epperson Theatre, Alpha.

Norman J. Powers, Cedric H. Smith and Leo M. Churan have organized the Beacon Theatre Corporation with a capital of 1,000 shares of no par value and will build and equip a picture theatre. The offices are located at 29 South LaSalle street.

Several days last week the Ascher and Lubliner & Trinz circuits showed "The Covered Wagon" and "America" in practically all their houses. One night four Ascher houses showed "The Covered Wagon" and eight showed "America," nine Lubliner and Trinz houses showed "The Covered Wagon" and six "America." The two features will now go on a tour of the neighborhood houses.

Frank Schaefer has sold the Garfield Theatre on West Madison street to Saperstein Brothers. They will add this house to their circuit, which includes the Lincoln, Palais Royal and Lexington theatres.

The Ridge Theatre, Ridge Park, Ill., opened on November 15 with "Her Night of Romance." William J. Mueller is booking the Ridge. It belongs to Lynch-Langdon chain, which includes the Tiffin, Melford, Karlow, Avon, Hub, Alvin, Famous and York at Elmhurst, and the Ridge. Those connected with the circuit are V. T. Lynch, William J. Mueller, Verne Langdon, Charles H. Ryan and Arthur Sass.

Charles Mensing has resigned his connection with the Ascher circuit and will announce his new affiliation in a few days.

Harry Ascher, district supervisor of the South Side houses of the Ascher circuit, is making his headquarters for a few weeks with Manager Harry Crawford of the Metropolitan Theatre on Grand avenue at 47th street. Bennie Cohn is in charge of the West Englewood Theatre of the Ascher circuit and reports business as good.

Balaban & Katz were the hosts to 1,000 crippled children Friday morning at the Chicago Theatre. Many of the youngsters had never been in the Loop before and they had some wonderful time. In addition to the show the children were given candy.

Emil Stern, general manager of Lubliner & Trinz, who has been confined to Michael Reese Hospital is out again after an operation.

The Irvin Theatre at Bloomington, Ill., held "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" over for additional days after a three days' run.

Lloyd Lewis, of the publicity department of Balaban & Katz, is back on the job after a bad attack of poison ivy.

A new picture theatre is to be erected at Sycamore, Ill., by Walter E. Owbridge that will seat 600 and cost about $50,000.

Robert Cox and James R. Grigsby will build a picture theatre at Blandinsville, Ill., fronting on Main street. Shiffing Brothers of Peoria will build the house from plans by H. Dox of that city and work will start at once.

The Blank circuit is having plans drawn for a new theatre at Marshalltown and it is expected that work will start in the spring.

John S. Burns has made a loan for eight years at 7 per cent of $200,000 to build a theatre and recreation hall on the northeast corner of Crawford and Fullerton avenue. The house will seat 1,500 and cost $425,000 with equipment.

Brown & Wirth have opened the Palace Theatre at Wyoming, Ill. This gives the town its second house. The Palace seats 340.

J. Kelly has sold his theatre at Tonlon, Ill., to E. Eggleston of Peoria, who took possession of November 22.

Ottawa Exhibitors Quitting Saturday High Price Plan

Advancing the argument that there is little, if any, transient business in the Canadian Capital over the week-end, such as in the big American cities, the exhibitors of Ottawa are breaking away from the long-established policy of charging evening prices for the Saturday matinee. One of the latest to decide on regular matinee prices for Saturday afternoon was Manager J. M. Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre. "Joe" Franklin declares that raised prices Saturday afternoon only tend to keep many young people away from the theatre altogether, and that the transient patronage in Ottawa on Saturdays is not worth considering.

An early change is promised in the management of the Auditorium at Ottawa, Ontario, as a result of the decision of T. P. Gorman to resign because of excess of business activities. Mr. Gorman is to step out at the end of the present calendar year and the management of the big amusement centre is slated to pass to Eddie Charlton of Montreal. Mr. Charlton has been identified with the Princess Theatre, Montreal, for a number of years and for a time was manager of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa.

Manager Leonard Bishop of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has departed temporarily from the policy of changing programs on Saturdays and Wednesdays "because of the excellent quality of current attractions." Mr. Bishop played "The Covered Wagon" during the whole week of November 22 and this was followed by "Hot Water" during the week of November 29. Other bookings for week runs included "The Sainted Devil" and "Forbidden Paradise."

The New Majestic Theatre at Stratford, Ontario, is the latest of the handsome picture houses to be opened in a Canadian city. The new house, which was built by local capital, is under the management of C. H. Moody, a well-known veteran exhibitor of Canada. The theatre is owned by the Majestic Theatres, Ltd., Stratford, of which Tom Brown, the mayor of Stratford, is the president.

The Auditorium at Sarnia, Ontario, has been reopened as a picture theatre with T. H. Cook as the manager.

No less than four of the prominent theatres in Montreal presented "Monsieur Beaucaire" simultaneously for four days under a booking arrangement made by George Nicholas Ganetakos, managing director of the United Amusement Company, Ltd. The four houses were the Belmont, Regent, Plaza and Papineau, leading neighborhood theatres. A controlling interest is held in these houses by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Los Angeles

Sid Grauman now announces that the next attraction to follow "The Thief of Bagdad" at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre will be "Romola," with Lillian and Dorothy Gish. These two film stars will come to Hollywood for the opening, according to their wire to Grauman. Sid is now personally rehearsing an elaborate prologue for the presentation. The price for the opening is $5.

All the Orphans in Los Angeles were the guests of Sid Grauman at a special performance of "The Thief of Bagdad" at the Hollywood Egyptian. The theatre was packed to the roof.

Roy Miller, formerly with his brother in the management of the California and Miller's Main street house, has resigned to go into publicity and exploitation work. The theatre is supervised by Harry Arthur.

Big Surprises Promised at St. Louis Film Men's Ball

Great interest is being shown in the first annual ball to be given under the joint auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the St. Louis Film Board of Trade at Arcadia Dance Hall on the evening of December 12. The committees in charge are promising some big surprises for those who attend, but the details are being withheld. They want to be certain of all arrangements before making final announcements.

The presentation of motion pictures will be a feature of Castle Dance Hall, 2839 Olive street, when a large addition is built to the academy, according to Herman Albers, the owner-manager. The management has purchased ground to the east of the dance hall for the improvements. Light operas and vaudeville will also be given. The management plans to revive the features of Uhrig's Cave, which was popular with St. Louisans a few generations ago. The Cave served refreshments and luncheons to the accompaniment of dancing, vaudeville and light opera. The movies will be a modern addition to the old program.

Frank Galvin, well known St. Louis newspaper man, has been named publicity director for William Goldman's chain of theatres, which include the Kings and Rivoli. Galvin's first important work was with "Dante's Inferno."

V. R. Anderson has temporarily closed his theatres in McKittrick and Warrenton, Mo. Other theatres in this territory that have closed are: Brooklyn Theatre, Brooklyn, Ill.; Rex Theatre, Carrier Mills, Ill.; Victory Theatre, Farmersville, Ill.; Star Theatre, Hollow Rock, Tenn.; Myers Theatre, Silex, Mo.; Gem Theatre, Martinsville, Ill., and Ewart Theatre, Greenup, Ill. The latter house will reopen as soon as a heating plant is installed.

D. C. Frew has purchased the Royal Theatre, Lake City, Ark., from W. L. Johnson.

The J. and J. Theatre, Hume, Ill., will continue under the management of the wife of the owner.

George Fissell and Robert Tague are the new owners of the Piedmont, Mo., Princess Theatre.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis, through Secretary Joseph Walsh, is taking a prominent part in the St. Louis Civic Council on Rapid Transit, a citizens' commttee that is sponsoring a movement to have the city expend $100,000,000 for the building of a subway system downtown. Fourteen other organizations are assisting in the campaign.

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

The Southwest

Two important theatres have opened in the Southwest, both Saenger Amusement Company houses, one in Pine Bluff, Ark., on November 17, and one in Texarkana, Texas, on November 18. Both of these houses used "America" as the opening attraction.

The management of the Pastime Theatre at Woodward, Okla., is running continuous shows on Saturdays in order to accommodate the country people.

J. R. Draggins has purchased the Queen and Grand theatres at Yoakum, Texas, and will add many improvements in the near future.

Pictures for the first time in several years are being shown in the afternoon at Mineral Wells, Texas. No shows are being given after 6 p. m., in deference to the church people.

J. D. Wineland, owner of three picture shows at Picher, Okla., has opened his new theatre at Treece, Kans.

A. J. Lochmann and John Stahl are erecting a new theatre at New Braunfels, Texas.

E. P. Connally succeeds Rube Platt as manager of the R. & R. Theatre Enterprises at Ennis, Texas, Mr. Platt having moved to Dallas.

Munnicutt and Gallagher have opened their new theatre at Girard, Texas.

The Capitol Theatre at Newport, Ark., has been purchased by the Arkansas Amusement Company and will be under the personal management of F. H. Jones, Jr.

The Queen Theatre at Tyler, Texas, is being renovated.

Reuben Frels has purchased the theatre at Victoria, Texas.

M. M. McNeese has purchased the Haskell Theatre at Haskell, Texas.

Paul Hamilton has opened his new theatre at Ballinger, Texas.

A new $13,000 organ is being installed in the Palace Theatre at Muskogee, Okla.

Leads for "Recompense"

Monte Blue and Marie Prevost recently deserted the Warner Bros. studio to be married. but—not to each other. Now they are both back to work after their respective honeymoons, and after receiving a big reception from their fellow workers, were assigned to play the leading roles in "Recompense," adapted by Dorothy Farnum from Robert Keable's sequel to "Simon Called Peter," to be directed by Harry Beaumont.

Montana Showmen Preparing "Abraham Lincoln" Splurge

Screenings have been given at various Montana key cities for "Abraham Lincoln," which is making a decided hit with all exhibitors and bids fair to rouse the enthusiasm of theatre fans. W. J. Sullivan of the Silver Bow Amusement Company as its manager sent out special invitations to a number of representative citizens for pre-view. Manager W. Stiege of the Liberty Theatre at Great Falls has made extensive preparations in his campaign for its screening by inviting all the civic organizations to a pre-view. Besides, Mr. Stiege is a past master in the art of lobby displays and heavy newspaper advertising.

Manager Albert Nadeau of the Bluebird Theatre at Anaconda has shattered all records with his "Sea Hawk" screening. He had all kinds of piratical atmosphere, including a regular pirate ship and paintings of marine scenes, until the little lobby was converted into a story of the stormy seas.

Merle Davis, exhibitor for the chain of theatres in Butte formerly known as the Ansonia Amusement Company, is now leasing all these theatres for himself, including the big Broadway Theatre of the legitimate stage, where he stages his large and brilliant photoplays. "Captain Blood" was given at the Broadway for three nights and played to fine business.

The Empress Theatre, formerly controlled by the Northwest Theatres, Inc., has been reopened at Butte and renamed the Bluebird. It opened with "In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter," playing to a fine business.

F. A. Boedecker has purchased a new $20,000 organ. He is manager of the Ellen Theatre in Bozeman and has an established reputation for being one of the most active and successful theatre men in the state.

F. E. Charters has opened the Grand Theatre at Grass Range and is having a successful run on the fine programs he has staged.

The Temple Theatre, the newest theatre of the Northwest, under the management of W. Wisner, has closed until a contract can be obtained for some of the better class of photoplays. That seems to have been impossible due to the many prior books from the older theatres. In the meantime, Mr. Wisner has adopted the policy of opening for vaudeville. The Temple seats 1,500.

Enrico Raneiri of Shadow Lane Theatre at Stockett has opened his house for the winter and arranged bookings for the winter season that spell real entertainment for this isolated coal mining town.

At Choteau, Mrs. T. E. Cary of the Royal Theatre is a sincere exponent of the stories told on the installment plan, also the short two-reelers.

Manager Murray Dolliver of the Hollywood Theatre at Stanford is giving his patrons a fine line of photoplays so that his people will hardly need to run over to Great Falls or to Lewistown to get the best there is in amusement.

F. J. Mattson of the Pastime Theatre at Cascade has recently opened his theatre and is making a number of substantial bookings.

D. C. Scott, owner of the Imperial Theatre of Anaconda, who was recently burned about the head and face when he attempted to put out a blaze in the projection room of his theatre, is recovering and it is thought that his burns, while severe, will leave no ill effects.

The efficient young ladies who preside over the Butte switchboards were specially honored a few evenings ago when Manager W. J. Sullivan of the Silver Bow Amusement Company sent 100 tickets to the telephone office inviting the "Hello Girls" to attend en masse any performance of "Daughters of the Night."

The Orpheum Theatre of Deer Lodge, which has been dark these many months, has been opened by Stanley Mathewson of Deer Lodge and Carl Benzik of Garrison.

Writing to a Butte friend, George Donahue, who attained much recognition in the theatrical world as "The boy manager" and who a number of years ago was a successful theatrical producer in Butte, expresses deep regret regarding the death of "Uncle Dick" Sutton and pays eloquent tribute to his memory. He was especially close to Mr. Sutton in producing and managing many of the stage successes which added to the reputation of both. Mr. Donahue has been adding to his stage prestige during the years since he left Butte and is now at Terre Haute, Ind.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Sullivan of the Silver Bow Amusement Company in Butte are receiving the congratulations over the arrival of a baby girl in their home.

Iowa

Hats off to Mrs. Hockenberry, Oakland, Ia., exhibitor, who has not had a picture show operating on Sunday for years. Mrs. Hockenberry was not willing to give up the effort entirely. She booked "Abraham Lincoln" and then appealed to all the civic organizations for permission to run the picture on Sunday. The appeal was heeded, and owing to the type of picture it was run on Sunday and no objection was raised from any quarter. Not even the most ardent advocates of Sunday closing offered an objection.

Exhibitors in other towns who have had trouble with the Sunday closing element, and many who have long since been obliged to keep closed on Sunday, are taking notice of Mrs. Hockenberry's tact and method of approach. Some exhibitors are saying that perhaps there is a lesson in this incident, and suggesting that perhaps after all Sunday shows could be most possible everywhere if some plan could be agreed upon whereby only pictures of a given character or of particular educational, spiritual or uplift value were run on the Sabbath.

JACQULINE SAUNDERS

Nebraska

A suburban picture theatre costing $30,000 consisting of several stories, is to be built at Twenty-fourth Street and Ames Avenue, Omaha, it has been announced by B. J. Scannell, trustee of the Paxton estate. Walter and William Creal, owners of the Suburban Theatre, signed the contract for the erection of the new building. The theatre faces Ames avenue and is to seat 500. It is to be 40 by 112 feet in dimension. Plans for the building are made by George L. Fisher, architect.

R. H. Deahl has taken over the Ideal Theatre at Omaha and re-opened the house.

Among theatre owners in Omaha recently were: J. A. Ebersole, Majestic Theatre, Avoca, Ia.; M. W. Sells, Sells Theatre, Randolph, Ia.; W. A. Bowker, Opera House, Onawa, Ia.; Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Holdrege, Zenith Theatre, Shenandoah, Ia.; Robert Booth, Paramount Theatre, Nebraska City, Neb.; Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Mayland, Rivola Theatre, Seward, Neb.; J. A. Preston, Crescent Theatre, Audubon, Ia.; Herbert Engelbrecht, Mars Theatre, Snyder, Neb.; L. E. Carns, Palace Theatre, Sioux City, Ia.; H. H. Cruickshank, Diamond Theatre, Wakefield, Neb.; Robert Livingston, Strand Theatre, Lincoln, Neb.; A. Burrus, Lyric Theatre, Crete, Neb.

Newman Signs a Five-Year Lease on Spokane Theatre

M. H. (Mike) Newman has become a Spokane exhibitor. Mr. Newman has leased the American, a legitimate house which has been closed for some months, for a period of five years. He will show Orpheum, Jr., vaudeville and high-class feature pictures. The first contract signed was for the Producers Distributing Corporation product and Mike says it "ain't because we're good friends, either." If we know Newman, he will doll the house all up and make it a reg'lar place. He has already purchased a $20,000 Robert Morton organ.

We met lots of "Exhibs" this week. Must be a turkey raffle or something. There were S. R. Stuleup, Ned Edris, D. Constanti and "Let's Go" Perunko, from Tacoma; Roy Czerney from Kent, who tells a thrilling tale of boating on the floodwaters (Roy is thinking of having a boat garage put in for the rainy season and advertising "Plenty of Parking Space"); Frank Hewitt of Hillman City; C. M. Dunn, Cle Elum and Frank W. Graham of Shelton, who will build a new 700-seat house. Don't confuse this Frank with Frank A. Graham of Centralia and Chehalis. And we probably missed a few at that!

This is Alaska Week in Seattle. Capt. Austin E. Lathrop of Anchorage and Cordova, W. D. Gross of Ketchikan and Mr. Kubely, also of Ketchikan, are all "mushing" along Film Row.

Things in Kelso seem to be in more or less confusion. From what we can learn there has been a consolidation of theatres, including Joe Praggastis' Liberty, Strange's Vogue, Strong's Auditorium and Bashar's Blue Mouse in Kalama, Wash. Praggastis is said to be out entirely, and plans are under way to tear down the Vogue and build a fine new theatre. On the heels of this comes a report that opposition has plans for a new theatre, which will soon be placed under construction.

R. W. Bruen and Frank Edwards bowled this week for the exhibitors' championship of the city. It is hoped this will pep up a few of these chaps who used to have, or think they had, a good bowling wing, and start them out after the scalp of the few who are now walking away with the honors. Come on, boys, get together!

E. O. Gabrielson, former owner of the Oak, Seattle, and the Blue Mouse, Davenport, Wash., has bought R. K. Dunham's Manhattan Theatre, Charleston, Wash.

Ed Myrick has sold his Myrick Theatre, Billings, Mont., to Lloyd A. Pennington.

An interesting rumor, incomplete in detail, states that before another month has passed Jensen & Von Herberg will control Olympia, Wash.

The Potters, who own the Clinton Theatre, Portland, are planning a new house in the Moreland district. The house has been started and will be completed within four months. The Potters have affiliated with the Multnomah Theatres Corporation.

Suburban activity continues in Seattle. Queen Anne Hill seems to be in the spotlight at the moment. L. R. Stradley has his Community Theatre well under way. W. L. Steele, who owns the Queen Anne Theatre, an old house, plans a new theatre and is reported to have purchased a $15,000 Robert Morton organ for it. Then comes a published report that Jensen & Von Herberg will build a large "suburban playhouse in the Queen Anne district," for which negotiations are practically completed.

San Francisco

The Alexandria Egyptian Theatre, Geary street and Eighteenth avenue, San Francisco, celebrated its first anniversary during Thanksgiving week. For anniversary week the management tried the experiment of holding a picture for an entire week, the offering being "Monsieur Beaucaire."

Manager J. J. Cluxton of Pantages Theatre, San Francisco, has commenced the presentation of feature pictures with the regular vaudeville show, the first offering being "Bread." The added length of the show has made it necessary to open the house at an earlier hour.

California exhibitors were shocked to learn of the sudden death of Frank A. Le Suer, which occurred at Palo Alto on November 25. Mr. Le Suer was associated with Ellis K. Arkush in the Palo Alto Theatre Company, which conducts the Stanford and Varsity theatres in that city and which has another house in course of construction.

W. Stuart Webster, formerly of Woodland, Cal., where he conducted picture theatres for several years, is now a member of the brokerage firm of Webster & Kendall, operating in Central and South America. Moving picture equipment will be handled, together with other lines, and arrangements have been made to handle Walter G. Preddy's Reflector Arc.

J. Harvey, formerly of Vacaville, Cal., will shortly open the Strand Theatre at Merced, Cal.

J. Roy, for years located at Burlingame, Cal., where he conducted a leading theatre, and for a time in the state-rights film business, has opened the Nevada Theatre at Reno, Nev.

A fire occurred recently in the projection room of the Loring Theatre, Crockett, Cal., destroying six reels of film and wrecking the projection machines. New equipment was rushed to Crockett and installed by Walter G. Preddey.

The Granada Theatre, East Fourteenth street and Eighty-ninth avenue, Oakland, Cal., was opened on the evening of November 20 with Mayor John L. Davie making the opening speech. This house is the twelfth in the string in the east-bay region operated by the syndicate headed by Robert A. McNeill, president of the Golden State Theatre and Realty Company. The new theatre is Spanish in design and seats about 1,000. It is being managed by John Peters, a pioneer show man of Oakland. The opening attraction was "The Border Legion."

A new screen and other improvements have been installed in the Acme Theatre, San Francisco. This house, conducted by I. H. Marks and his son Ralph, is one of the oldest in the city and enjoys a unique cosmopolitan patronage.

The construction of a new picture theatre at Tulare, Cal., is being considered by the management of the T. & D., Jr., Enterprises, Inc., and M. Naify, J. T. McCann and W. Nasser of this circuit paid that city a visit recently to look over available sites. A theatre seating 1,400 is planned.

Bids are being invited for the construction of a $100,000 theatre on Bancroft Way, near Telegraph avenue, Berkeley, Cal., for Frank Atkins.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

Associated Exhibitors

(Includes Selznick)

COMMON LAW. (8 reels). Star, Corinne Griffith. A satisfactory program for our house. All played it late and would have done better had we played it sooner. Corinne Griffith is a splendid actress and is easy on the eyes. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

LONE WOLF. (6 reels). Star cast. This is a crook drama, with the action laid in Paris. Too dark. Story long drawn out and the action is in the last reel. The Saturday crowd was disappointed in this one. The aeroplane stuff poorly done and gave the crowd a laugh as it was obviously fake. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Town of 6,000. Admission 10-20. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

WOMAN TO WOMAN. (6,994 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Very very fine. Settings the most beautiful you have ever seen. Well worth extra advertising and will please one hundred per cent., if you get them in. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal, Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

F. B. O.

ALIMONY. (7 reels). Star cast. Good picture, but no special. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

BLOW YOUR OWN HORN. (6,315 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. A very good comedy drama; out of the ordinary. Full of good comedy. Received a poor print, which hurt the effect of the picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Average audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BLOW YOUR OWN HORN. (6,315 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Fair picture but no drawing power with us. Tone good. Sunday, no. No audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. Star, Jane Novak. A little old but fair picture which went over well with a "Telephone Girl" comedy on Saturday night. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Farmers and townspeople, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

FIGHTING SAP. (5,138 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Not as good as the former releases but will please Thomson followers. Horse, Silver King, getting the honor of being a real actor. Buy 'em all; you can't lose. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, ninety-nine per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. All of the Talmadge pictures have made money for me. They should do the same for any exhibitor as they are all very good, this one included. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. Lots of good comments on this boy's acting and is commencing to draw patronage. Tone, yes. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, yes. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma .

NAPOLEON AND JOSEPHINE. (6,591 feet). Star cast. This type of picture is no good for our house; we couldn't afford to run it gratis. Foreign-made pictures don't appeal to the American public. We don't want any more of them. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (300 seats), Havana, Illinois.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Hokum, yes, but pleasing hokum. Did a pretty good two days' business and all seemed to like it especially well. It is not big in any way, but will stand up under a rather pretentious campaign. It plays on the emotions with unerring skill. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star cast. My hat is off to Mr. Johnson, for he knows just what the American people want. Of course the picture is hokum, but it is the kind that gets next to the hearts of the audience, for they stood up and cheered here and went out saying, "Some picture" and "I liked it because it is what happens in every-day life." I played the picture on Armistice Day and the ladies of the American Legion Auxiliary sold poppies in the lobby. Had "That Wonderful Mother of Mine" sung and illustrated with a moving picture as a prologue. Advanced the prices to twenty-five and fifty cents and cleaned up. Am playing "America" on November 27 and 28 and if it gets as much money and pleases as many people I will be happy, although it cost me a lot more money. Go after it, small town exhibitors; put it over with music. It's there for you. Tone excellent. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent here. Attendance, S. R. O. Cotton class and farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

FOX EDUCATIONAL ENTERTAINMENTS

UNTAMED YOUTH. (5 reels). Star, Ralph Lewis. Just a fair program offering; should please the majority. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,000 feet). Star cast. An extraordinary feature that every theatre should use. Schools are willing to co-operate and if it is well advertised it will draw. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. Farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,000 feet). Star cast. In our opinion it is the very best yet produced by anyone. Every man, woman and child in America should see this one. Historically correct. Educational value big, and a story that will hold interest as nothing ever did before. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, everyone. Best class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (12,000 feet). Star cast. Personally consider this one of the finest things ever screened. Did not draw, so lost money. Couldn't get them in for some reason. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, hard to tell. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-20-25-30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

BRASS BOTTLE. (5,790 feet). Star cast. Opinions were divided about fifty-fifty on this one. Some thought it was great, some thought it was foolish and far-fetched. Didn't pay much for it, though, and didn't expect much. Tone fair. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Cotton class and farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

BRIGHT SHAWL. (7,500 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Although rather dragged out, I would say that this is very good. Personally I think that he is more suited to other roles, such as in "Tol'able David." Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Old one but not too old if you haven't played it. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

ENCHANTED COTTAGE. (7,120 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Extremely poor. Not worth playing. In justice to producers wish to say this is the first picture I have played from them which has not been satisfactory. All from First National are as a rule extra good but leave "Enchanted Cottage" alone. Good attendance. College class, town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Sometimes you scribble little notes on the top or back of report blanks.

Thank you! They certainly please me, because they show that the spirit of good fellowship and intimacy is growing among "Our Gang."

As—"Thanks, Van, all O. K., with little or no bum pictures, due to the co-operation of 'Our Gang,'" comes in on good old Hedberg's slip.

And—"Some record that brother Purcell of Cortez, Colorado, made on the "Wagon." "More power to him" comes with reports from Warren Rible.

And letters!—I welcome them, because you know, all of you, that I am always in keen sympathy with your print troubles and your other difficulties.

Send reports as often and as fulsomely as you can. And I'm always glad if you add a little report on your own doings.—VAN.

GOLDEN SNARE. Star cast. Old but good. Pleased one hundred per cent. Tone okay. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883 feet). Star cast. Just a fine picture in every way. John Stahl the best director in the business is our candid opinion. Don't miss this one. The picture is a wampus cat and will please. Lew Cody, Lewis Stone, Florence Vidor excellent. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, all classes. Best class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Here's a matrimonial bombshell. Tips about marriage that will startle you. A picture filled with richest humor, but also a dramatic punch. One of the best pictures of the year. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LILIES OF THE FIELD. (8,500 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A picture that has proven itself one of the greatest, certainly the strongest in story interest thus far. In it Corinne Griffith gives the finest performance of her screen life, ably assisted by Conway Tearle and a wonderful cast. The theme is gripping and its picturization well-nigh flawless. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN OF ACTION. (5 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. A fairly good picture if shown before "The Hottentot," for it's not nearly so good. Tone okay. Fair audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star cast. A mighty good bet for small towns. It's the kind they won't forget. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Some of "Our Gang" thought this somewhat morose, but our audience ate it up. This is an excellent picture with an all-star cast and is well worth playing. Picture very interesting from beginning to end. Can't see why this one won't please everywhere. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, over ninety per cent. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. A real good all-around picture that will please ninety per cent. Those that are still human will thank you for showing it. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star cast. This picture went over nicely here. The acting of Frank Keenan is good. Can't see why this capable actor is not seen more on the screen. Buy it right and play it. Good paper and good trailer. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Tone okay. Cotton class and farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Good production artistically, but failed to draw even a fair crowd, and failed to please lots of those. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, hard to tell. Small town class, town of 1,360. Admission 10-30. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Norma Talmadge always popular. "Secrets" is as good as any picture she has ever made and should prove popular anywhere. Patrons complimented the picture, but in spite of this it is not a big special. Tone splendid. Sunday, yes. Attendance only fair. College class, town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SELF MADE FAILURE. (8 reels). Star cast. Clever comedy drama that will please the folks. Well acted. Finely produced. A real picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Best class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SINGLE WIVES. (7,626 feet). Star cast. Milton Sills and Corinne Griffith put this one over big. This Sills is a box office bet and is some actor, you tell 'em. Actor of the old school. First we noticed him in "The Honor System," a Fox picture, years ago. Best class, city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Splendid picture of melodramatic nature. Well worth extra advertising of the proper kind. Tone all right. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. College class, town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A fine picture and will please most any audience. Title slightly misleading as picture is a bootleg story. Drawing power

DAWN OF A TOMORROW. (Paramount). (6,084 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Fair picture but it is too drawn out. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good.

DARK STAIRWAY. (Universal). (5,030 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Good picture of its kind. Seemed to please ninety per cent. of audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (Paramount). (6,881 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A very good picture that should please any audience. Well acted. Tone, good. Sunday, no. C. E. Molley, U. S. S. Oklahoma, Los Angeles, California.

poor. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

TRILBY. (7,321 feet). Star, Andree Lafayette. Another one of those things that makes us agree that something is wrong with the movies. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, none whatever. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-20-25-30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,785 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A very pleasing picture but hardly as good as "Smilin' Through." Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star, Lewis Stone. This is an extra good domestic drama. Holds the attention from start to finish. Has enough amusing moments to make it thoroughly enjoyable. Running two or three pictures per week, I can't exploit all of them, so I let this one slip. In spite of very light advertising it did more than average business. My people liked it and it seems to be a business puller. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

Fox

GENTLE JULIA. (5,837 feet). Star cast. The box office was very gentle and I paid a special price for it. Fox sure made some awful specials during 1923-24, but we have to grin and bear it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, thirty per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A clever comedy that kept our audience laughing throughout. It drew better than average business and pleased all. A dandy attraction from every angle. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LONE CHANCE. (4,231 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A good program picture, with hero spending year of his life in prison for $20,000. Very well directed and Gilbert brought forth lots of praise for his splendid acting. Tone fair. Audience appeal about eighty-five per cent. Town of about one thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOVE BOUND. (4,407 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Not up to Mason's previous offering in drawing power nor entertainment value. Fair attendance. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. A good northern drama which held interest to the end. Some good hokum and surprise stunts. Very good crowd. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PLUNDERER. (5,812 feet). Star cast. Good picture. Interesting story and fine cast. Good heart appeal, but rental too high for this small town. No profit for me. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SILENT COMMAND. Star, Edmund Lowe. About as well made as anything the writer has seen in recent months. The direction is superb and the photography especially good. Many enthused over it and all agreed it was excellent. Did not shatter any box office records, however. Tone good. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THREE JUMPS AHEAD. Star, Tom Mix. I consider from outside reports that this Mix is a little above his standard. It pleased. Good attendance. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

YOU CAN'T GET AWAY WITH IT. (6,152 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A gruesome, morbid story. One that was handed to me in order to get some pictures I did want. Rental too high. Lost money on it. Tone good. Sunday, hard to say. Poor audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Metro-Goldwyn

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A very good picture. Better than "Long Live the King." Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal good. Small town class, town of 1,360. Admission 10-30. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star cast. A very pleasing picture. Some said it was a little too gruesome. Tone good. Fair attendance. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

DAY OF FAITH. (6,577 feet). Star cast. Here's another super screen classic that deserves its name. The faith business isn't new on the screen by any matter of means, but the treatment given it by the director and the continuity all the way through make it an evening's good entertainment. Our gang liked it pretty well. The attendance was not up to standard. Moral is good. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

HELD TO ANSWER. (5,601 feet). Star cast. Those who saw it said it was good; but not so many saw it. Tone good. Sunday, yes Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. One of the best. Played to a large audience and all were pleased. Certainly one big production which will stand up under any boosting you can give it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Wonderful audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (Metro-Goldwyn). Star, Marion Davies. A great costume picture that got more money than the average. Marion Davies excellen.t Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal and Capitol theatres (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. As fine a picture as one would care to see. Pleased all the folks and brought them to the theatre. Business good. Good picture. Jackie good, and we are all happy, thank the Lord. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Best audience appeal. Best class city of 10,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. As fine a picture as one not go wrong on this as it has audience appeal if you can get them in. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Fair Coogan. Good entertainment for the masses. Tone, okay. Sunday, questionable. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-20-25-30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

LOST AND FOUND. Star cast. A good program picture but didn't draw an average house. Attendance below average. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

MADEMOISELLE MIDNIGHT. (6,778 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Throbbing adventure, lurking danger, nights of love and thrill. A splendid picture throughout, splendidly played, well executed and splendid photography. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN LIFE PASSED BY. (6,208 feet). Star cast. To my mind this is one of the best pictures I have seen. There is some hokum, of course, but on the whole it carries an entertaining story that people will like, if they are in any way thinking people. Poor attendance on this show the moral of which could not be better. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

NELLIE THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Many favorable comments. Picture didn't seem to drag, no complaints from anyone so we were satisfied, don't be afraid of it. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RECOIL. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Splendid production. It is not a small town picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre (110 seats), San Andreas, California.

RECOIL. (6,800 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. A real good picture but nothing great. Heard no complaints on this one so considered that they called it fair. Print good. Tone, questioned. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, fair. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Everyone liked it. Had to pay too much to make us any money. The mob scene was a great piece of work. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, yes. Rural class town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star, Lew Cody. A money getter. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Splendid audience appeal. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 10-20. M. Pois, Gem Theatre (440 seats), Wichita Falls, Texas.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. A wonderful picture. Well acted, well directed. Good story and cast. Will please all of them. A number of people called this one the best they had ever seen. Held up fine here for entire week. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. Draw elite class city of 91,000. Admission 40-50. Guy A. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,151 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

SOCIAL CODE. (5 reels). Star, Viola Dana. This was the first Dana we have played in sometime and one all patrons came to see and praised the picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Country class town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

THREE AGES. (5,500 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. An ordinary program picture which appeals more to highbrows than our usual patronage. A fair picture if you don't promise too much. Tone, good. Audience appeal, good. Farmers and townpeople town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

THREE WEEKS. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A very slim crowd saw this on account of a big parade in Lancaster and it being the night after Halloween but those who saw it though said it was great and it went over at least ninety-five per cent. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THY NAME IS WOMAN. (9,087 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Almost everyone disappointed on this one. It sounded just like a dressed-up, fussy picture and it turned out to be an outdoor picture with a tense interest prevalent throughout. Almost any town ought to like this. Fair attendance although weather was against it. Tone, a bit doubtful. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

UNDER THE RED ROBE. (12,000 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This picture went at about a ninety per cent difference here as our patrons are not stuck on costume pictures, but this one was real, exciting and very prettily costumed, not too long I don't believe and no one complained on that score. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Speaking of Drawing Cards—and Dependability!

"Dear Van, and 'Gang': Speaking of the drawing cards, for small towns, I find the News Reel my best friend for the weaker nights.

"I use Kinograms on Fridays, and with it I have induced the better class of people to come out and see what I really am doing.

"You will note that I have increased my seating capacity. STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER MADE THIS NECESSARY. Thanks."—T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,167 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan did not seem to enter into the spirit of this story but beautiful scenery and otherwise good cast got it by. No kicks, and some increase over previous Meighan business, which had been dropping with me lately. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

ALASKAN. (6,167 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Although some nationally circulated reports did not flatter this one, I put it over to one of the biggest week's business in the history of the theatre. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes city of 100,000. Admission matinee 20-40, night 20-50. Guy O. Kinemer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

BEDROOM WINDOW. (4,550 feet). Star, May McAvoy. A very interesting mystery drama although I think that Ethel Wales runs off with the honors in the role of detective. One good thing about this picture is that it has a surprise ending. Good print. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Some liked it some did not. More didn't than did, but for myself it's rotten. Tone, fair. No audience appeal. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

CODE OF THE SEA. (6,038 feet). Star, Rod LaRocque. Extra good sea picture. Played on a Saturday to good business. Tone, all right. Good attendance. College class town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good picture. Good business. Good reports. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. General class town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not as good as many previous pictures, but good entertainment at that. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,360. Admission 10-30. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Didn't go over very well with my bunch. They considered it just an ordinary program picture. Tone, okay. Fair audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good picture. Pleased the patrons. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,741 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture with wonderful direction and settings. Did not do much on this, but no fault of the production. Something different, handled in a masterful manner. Ought to have one hundred per cent audience appeal. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Best class in the world, veterans of the World War, in town of 1,000. Adolph Schutz, Fort Bayard Theatre (500 seats), Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,741 feet). Star cast. One fine picture and done in real DeMille style. The hereafter scenes in this are wonderful and will sure get any audience; also it is something new. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Oil field and business class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

FEMALE. (6,167 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Pretty good picture but could have been better for a Compson. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Oil field and business class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

son. Was considered about the best thing Paramount has put out this year. The only bad feature to be found is the title. I wonder why they didn't call it "Dalla the Lion Cub?" I stressed the story by Cynthia Stockley, and went soft on "The Female." Built a jungle lobby and mentioned the South African lion hunt and it went over nicely to good business. The posters are extra good. It is a picture that is easy to advertise. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. A fine picture and one that will please. However, nothing big but you can promise an hour and a half of good entertainment in this one. Torrence is a knockout as usual. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). A very good production. Good tone, Sunday yes. Audience appeal good. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star, Mary Astor. An excellent picture with plenty of entertainment. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Right good program picture that pleased Saturday crowd. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-30. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good story of revenue service. Plenty of action and comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. Star, Pola Negri. A young officer imagines a paradise of love for himself and his queen, but like all dreams of youth he finds his desire a forbidden paradise. Here is Pola displaying all the fire and seductiveness that made her famous. A Negri lavishly gowned and splendidly supported in a fine story of regal romance and intrigue. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A delightful comedy picture that pleased my patrons very well. Jack Holt is well liked here. Tone good. Agricultural class, town of 1,255. Admission 10-20. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Elsberry, Missouri.

GO GETTER. (7,771 feet). Star cast. Pleased all. A nice story, great characters, pep, action, everything to make a fast moving picture. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

GUILTY ONE. (5,635 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Only fair, is my opinion of this one. The fact that it is a Paramount will help to put it over. Just passable. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,785 feet). Star cast. Very good out-of-door picture. Seemed to please generally. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 1,360. Admission 10-30.

Scene from Vitagraph's "Greater Than Marriage."

S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,785 feet). Another great picture, and it draws. Good tone, great appeal, Sunday yes. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Admission 10-30. Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Rental was too high for me, but this is a fine picture. It pleased everyone, and, better still, they went out and boosted it. Was considered a far better picture than "Manhandled," but not as good a picture as "Humming Bird." Tone O. K. Good audience appeal. Draw all classes, small town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria Swanson always pulls them in for me and this one made a high record mark here. The picture pleased one hundred per cent. and I think equals if not surpasses anything she has done before. Completely establishes Gloria as one of the screen's finest actors. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal very good. All class city of 100,000. Admission 20-40, 20-50. Guy O'Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. (8,300 feet). Star cast. A show that to me was excellent. It had a good lesson illustrated in it. This show deserved better attendance as we only had enough to just cover our expenses. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. A mighty good, entertaining picture. My people enjoyed it and told me so voluntarily. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,290. Admission 10-15, 10-20, 15-25. Hubert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

Pathe

CALL OF THE WILD. (7 reels). Star, Buck. This is a good picture of the north country, and a story of animal life. Was well liked by everyone. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

CHRONICLES OF AMERICA. (Pathe). Faultlessly produced, historically correct, but the biggest box-office flop ever recorded at my houses. First night with big advertising and special school tie-up went fairly well. Receipts fell off sixty-five per cent for each remaining night. I have cancelled remaining one, paying for them and running something else. Lay off them unless you want to run in a hole. All classes in small town. Admission 10-15-20-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Pleased everyone and drew good attendance for two days. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. College class town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,800 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Although a bit old, I managed to get a new print on this one and ran it Election night. It is certainly good, in fact, better than some of his newer ones. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Large audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. He certainly got into "Hot Water," but you will know all about that when you see the story built around Lloyd's attempt to please the mother of his bride. Being but a young man and just married, he didn't know that it was impossible to kill this kind of a mother-in-law with kindness. It's the kind of a picture to make the crowd waiting outside anxious to get inside. This was the second showing in the country. The Metropolitan Theatre, in Los Angeles opened with it a week before and Oklahoma was second. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. One grand riot of entertainment. The hard boiled roared at this one. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Big audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andreas Theatre (110 seats), San Andreas, California.

Preferred

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. The cast should be a good drawing card and the picture will please the classes. The acting is all that could be asked. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Excellent. In a class with "America" and "Birth of a Nation." It's a classic. Book it. Lynn Overton, Regent Theatre, Bongor, Michigan.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND. . Star Carlyle Blackwell. Fair detective story. Had no comments from the few that saw it. Tone, good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

HER OWN FREE WILL. Star, Helene Chadwick. A nice program picture well acted but no box-office appeal for us. Just made house expenses so was out of pocket film rent. We hope to do better with the Producer's product as they are a decent bunch. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Poor audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (300 seats), Havana, Illinois.

HIS DARKER SELF. (5 reels). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Nothing to it. Just a waste of film. Better pay for it and lay it off. Tone unsuitable. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LIGHTNING RIDER. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. This series of Carey pictures are above anything I have ever seen Carey in. As good as any of the westerns in the program line and better than some. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit Theatre (250 seats), Union, Maine.

"Yak" Canutt, the Cowboy Champion, in "Romance and Rustlers," an Arrow-Great Western.

LIGHTNING RIDER. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. Did not please or draw as well as his former pictures. I believe the fault lay in the posters. They lead people to think it was a costume picture. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

MIAMI. (6,317 feet). Star cast. A fair picture, that let me get by with a small profit. C. B. Davis, Norwood Theatre, Norwood, Ohio.

NIGHT HAWK. (5,115 feet). Star cast. Very good western. Will please ninety per cent. Poor service from Cleveland exchange. D. B. Follett, Star Theatre, Gibsonburg, Ohio.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Very good print. Title good. Story fair, acting good. Universal satisfaction first night. Business normal. A. E. Andrews, Opera House, Emporium, Pennsylvania.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Very good picture a little above ordinary program pictures. Plenty of action. Very interesting and worth selling. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SECOND FIDDLE. (5,810 feet). Star cast. Average program picture. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

TIGER THOMPSON. (5,700 feet). Star cast. An excellent program picture where action is desired. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

WISE VIRGIN. Star cast. Pleased all who saw the picture. We played this on Monday night and business was poor. John Machno, Fairmont Theatre, Detroit, Michigan.

United Artists

BIRTH OF A NATION. Star cast. An excellent picture and well worth seeing. William Noble, Express Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. (9,350 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. A good picture, only more suitable for high-class patronage or big first-run houses. Mary is really at her best in this one. Our people liked it very well, only it did not draw very big. Pleases about ninety per cent. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal good. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

Universal

BLINKY. (5,740 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Oh, why do they try to make something out of a western star that people do not want him in? Let them stay in westerns or take them out altogether. People expect to see such stars as Gibson in real western pictures, and if they don't they are disappointed. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Mixed classes, town of 2,714. Admission ten cents and up. T. S. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

CLEAN UP. (5,051 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good program picture. Pleased eighty per cent. Ran a Century comedy with this feature, which made a good show. Print in fair condition. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. Farmers, town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneiger, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

EXCITEMENT. (4,912 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. Fair. Laura LaPlante is quite good for program pictures. Tone all right. Fair audience appeal. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

FAST WORKER. (6,506 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. An exceedingly good comedy drama that every exhibitor should play. Denny is now the most popular male star here; in fact, the people ask, "When are you going to play another picture with Reginald Denny in it?" Would advise any exhibitor, large or small, who has not yet secured "Reckless Age" and "Sporting Youth" to secure all three immediately. Every one a good bet. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

FAMILY SECRET. Star, Baby Peggy. Love, laughter, and thrills based on Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "Editha's Burglar." Baby Peggy fine in this one. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Not the usual western but will please all Gibsons fans. A fine baseball story. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

PHANTOM HORSEMAN. (4,399 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Such pictures as this will soon kill Hoxie. Nothing to it. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal and Capitol Theatres (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RIDE FOR YOUR LIFE. (5,310 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. About on a par with his offering. Contains some good riding but rather weak on plot. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RIDGEWAY OF MONTANA. (4,842 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A modern western with good story and plenty of action. Ought to please any audience. Tone, good. Audience appeal, good. Farmers and townpeople town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, but by no means the best railroad story ever filmed. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Small town class town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star cast. A good picture of Hollywood that has rather a surprise twist at the end. Pleased well for me. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

BORROWED HUSBANDS. (7,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A society drama that seemed to please. Vidor is a sure fire pleaser here. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. A vivid romance of the gallant days on the high seas. The most thrilling sea battle ever filmed. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star cast. As good as they make 'em. For a small town picture it's there. Tell 'em you've something they want. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. A great picture. Everybody who came was pleased, but for some reason was nothing extra at box office. Buy it and don't be afraid to boost it. Tone, good. Audience appeal, good. Farmers and townpeople town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,000 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. Is the Vitagraph crew coming back? It certainly looks that way. This picture is an absolute knockout with Kerrigan in the midst of feverish activity different from the broad brimmed western stuff. A good sized crowd enthused over the picture which has no serious moral failings. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. A pleasing and faithful adaptation from the novel that more than satisfied those who saw it but did not draw. The production is elaborate, the cast capable and the story splendid, but picture aroused little interest. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAN OF MIGHT. Star cast. Melodrama of the wildest sort. Too much action and kills the continuity. About the same as "Smashing Barriers." If they like westerns get it for them and show it Saturday. Tone, will do. Audience appeal, sixty percent. Cotton class and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

MY MAN. (6,800 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Very ordinary picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,360. Admission 10-30. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

ONE LAW FOR THE WOMAN. (6 reels). Star, Cullen Landis. Another real humdinger from Vitagraph. It's got comedy and action aplenty. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

PIONEER TRAILS. (6,920 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. The story runs away from title somewhat but it has real drawing power and pleases and can be bought right. What more can we ask. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Farmers and townpeople town of BROADWAY AFTER DARK. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Splendid, satisfied them all. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BROADWAY AFTER DARK. (6,300 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Score another bullseye for Warner Brothers. As fine a bit of work as we've played in many a day. Just a corking fine picture, well done, pleasing and worthy a spot on any programme. Bad weather held down attendance but it drew more the second night than the first. It is a high class, almost flawless picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, very high. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A real good comedy drama. One that leaves a good taste and shows up well at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Splendid audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-15, 20-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. Star cast. The supporting cast is distinguished, representing names well known on the screen, Willard Louis, Torrence, "Pat" Moore, Pierre Gendron, Rose Dione, Rosa Rosanova, Trilby Clark, Brandon Hurst, Winifred Bryson and Rosita Marstini. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOVER'S LANE. Star cast. The horror of the finger of scorn. Clyde Fitch's "Lovers Lane," a faithful screen presentation of the best known dramatic story in the history of the American state. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LUCRETIA LOMBARD. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A genuinely fine production from every angle. Pleased a majority of our patrons. Drew only average attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. (7 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Picture pleased one hundred per cent. Print good. Warners always have good stuff. Wesley pulls some good ones. Sunday, yes. Town of 1,000. P. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

TENTH WOMAN. (6,250 feet). Star cast. Mighty good program picture. June Marlowe promises to make a good star. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal and Capitol Theatres (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

THIS WOMAN. (7,000 feet). Star, Irene Rich. This is one of the best and most interesting pictures that we have seen in many a day. Rich in dramatic incidents and human pathos, and the story excels by far, in interest, the title of the picture. You will make no mistake in booking this one. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TIGER ROSE. (8,000 feet). Star cast. A good title and a splendid picture. They liked it for they told me so. Just a length of time and Warner Brothers will lead the field. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Comedies

NIP AND TUCK. (Pathe). Sennett Comedy. Not so extra much. Only fair and very few laughs. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Neighobrood class town of 4,200. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

PERFECT THIRTY-SIX. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Good, lively comedy. Clean from start to finish. Bobby Vernon seldom fails to ring the bell. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PIGSKIN. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. This is a very amusing and timely football comedy. College towns will eat it up, if it is properly exploited. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Good audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

RISKS AND ROUGHNECKS. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. A one-reel comedy reissue and a knockout. The best of this series. Vitagraph should reissue some of Semon's later comedies. Prints all good. Sunday, yes. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SLOW AND SURE. (Fox). Star, Al St. John. Best comedy we ever had. Almost tore down my house. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

THREE CHEERS. (Educational). Star, Johnny Fox, Jr. One of the best juvenile comedies have ever played. Played it with Oliver Twist and made a pure "kid" program that pleased old and young alike. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THREE STRIKES. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Fast comedy that kept the crowd in laughter. Lige Conley up to his standard in this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, guess so. Strong audience appeal. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHY ELEPHANTS LEAVE HOME. (Pathe). Good for a change. The title gets them. Town of 1,000. P. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

FIGHT AND WIN SERIES. (Universal). Star, Jack Dempsey. These are not as good as the "Fighting Blood" or "Leather Pushers," nor will Dempsey draw as one might think. Only fair drawing power. Don't pay too much for these. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. Small town class of 5,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

TELEPHONE GIRL SERIES. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. The majority of this series gets over fairly well, although it has not broken any attendance records for us. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Miscellaneous

BLACK GOLD. (William Steiner). Star, Pete Morrison. A very good program picture. Just a few more as good as this one and star will be on the road to success. Print good. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

COME ON COWBOYS. (Arrow). Star, Dick Hatton. (4,700 feet). In reporting on this picture I want to compliment the director, Ward Hayes. He shows marked ability. He has given Dick Hatton and Marilyn Mills every opportunity to show their ability, in fast the whole cast shines out and Beverly, the horse, is a dandy. Fellow exhibitors, this is one of the best western pictures of this year, and I am proud its an Independent. Progress Picture Company of Chicago are distributors for the Arrows in this territory. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

CRASHING THROUGH. (Anchor). Star, Jack Perrin. A darn good Saturday picture. The Independents are making good pictures and they deserve every dollar's worth of business you can give them. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cnt. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

CROSSED TRAILS. (Independent). Star, Franklyn Farnum. Fair western that pleased a majority of a Saturday night crowd. Played with one episode of "Fighting Blood" and comedy. Tone, fair. Sunday, no Fair audience appeal. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ENVIRONMENT. (State Right). Star, Milton Sills. A real feature in every sense of the word. A crook story that went over big. Fair sized audience highly pleased, no kick from anybody. Pictures of this standard make new patrons. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

MARRIAGE MARKET. (C. B. C.). Star, Kate Lester. This is the best picture we ever bought for the price. Will stand a lot of boosting. Buy it right and advertise it big. Audience appeal about ninety per cent. Tone, okay. Cotton class and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

NOT BUILT FOR RUNNING. (State Right). Star, Leo Maloney. This is one of the best westerns that we have run of this star. Has action and comedy and that its what the fans want. Tone, yes. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

OUT OF THE DUST. (State Right). Star, Russell Simpson. An excellent special of the "Covered Wagon" type. You can class this as a high grade western suitable for the very best houses. Story is entirely logical, direction wonderful and acting without a flaw. A strictly high class western special. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

OVER THE TOP WITH THE ALLIES. (U. S. Gov't.). Star cast. Official Government picture of the World War. The real thing. No hokum to this. Some fine scenes of action throughout. Had good patronage for entire run. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

PALS IN BLUE. (State Right). Star, Tom Mix. A bunch of two reelers made into a feature will certainly fool the people in but will disappoint. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, forty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal and Capitol Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

PUTTING IT OVER. (Goldstone). Star cast. Quite a bit of action in this one, but rather foolish. Can't rate very high. Tone, okay. Fair attendance. Small town class of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

RECKLESS RIDIN' BILL. (State Right). Star, William (Bill) Mix. The first of this series we have played and in fairness to all if the others are like this one, we trust there will not be many; looked like a bunch of amateurs all working on an unknown story. Don't like to cold water any young man, but can't pass a good word on this picture. It may not have been Bill's fault. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

RIDERS OF MYSTERY. (Celebrated). Star, Bill Cody. A good western picture. This boy should prove a comer as he has action and is a good rider. Go to it Bill, we love to see you young fellows make good. The old boys wear out your know. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

SATIN GIRL. (Arrow). Star, Norman Kerry. A story of the underworld. Title too tame for picture. Should please any type of patronage. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

THREE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING. (C. C. Burr). (6,293 feet). Star, Constance Binney. Good program picture. Tone not much; fair audience appeal. Draw middle class city 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal-Capitol (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

UNKNOWN. (Goldstone). Star cast. Poor program offering. Attendance low tide. Small town class of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHIRLWIND RANGER. (Arrow). Star, Richard Hatton. Good average western in the program class. Fair audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHITE PANTHER. (Progress). Pleased a capacity house and heard good comments on horse used in this picture. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 10-20. M. Pois, Gem Theatre (440 seats), Wichita Falls, Texas.

WILD CAT JORDAN. (Goldstone). Star, Richard Talmadge. Just another movie. Audience appeal, below average. Small town class town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Story

In order to better be able to run down a notorious bandit, "The Black Hawk," Serg. Steele of the Rangers, who has captured another bandit, "Lightning" Brady, impersonates him and joins the gang of unsavory characters led by Murtison. Soon he finds The Black Hawk has attacked an official of the mining company and paralyzed his sense of speech. He sends for Dr. Deering, who arrives with his daughter, Ruth, but returns for instruments and fails to come back. Instead, Murtison's gang attacks Steele and in the rumpus Murtison is killed by The Black Hawk. The gang captures Ruth and an Indian girl, Wetona, and takes them away. Steele rescues them and returns to the shack to find The Black Hawk bending over the patient, who has recovered his speech. Steele forces him to unmask and finds he is Dr. Deering. During a terrific fight Deering is shot by Wetona. Ruth is shocked to find her father a bandit, but finds consolation in the love of Steele, who reveals his real identity to her.

"The Roughneck"

Fox Melodrama Starring George O'Brien Packs a Big Wallop and Looks Like Box-Office Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Robert W. Service's novel "The Roughneck," with its stirring backgrounds of the San Francisco waterfront of a couple of decades ago, the sea and a tropical island, has reached the screen as a William Fox production.

Here is out-and-out melodrama that packs a prodigious punch, yes, a wallop, for all who like stories of adventure punctuated with thrills and vigorous action, romance and heart interest. Like all of Service's works, "The Roughneck" is strong in the primitive and elemental attributes of mankind, and with George O'Brien in the leading role and Jack Conway directing, it is a picture that not only interests and thrills, but proves absorbing.

There is action from the word go and despite its length of nearly eight reels there is not a slow moment in it. Designed to thrill and entertain, almost all of the devices of action melodrama have been employed and despite the fact that there are several times where the story could be brought to an end, with the introduction of each new angle it builds up to another wallop. Naturally there is a strong reliance on coincidence to bring the characters together but you forget this in watching the stirring action.

It would be impossible in a limited space to enumerate all of the punches, but among them are a collision of a rowboat with a steamer in a fog, a scene where the hero is jerked by a derrick from the hold of a ship out on deck and then catapulted into the water which is breath-taking in its thrill, an unusually fine ring fight, realistically handled, with the hero taking terrific punishment to wear his opponent down and then landing his blows like a sledgehammer, the kick that comes when he believes he has killed him, his escape and stowing away on a liner, his jump into a shark-infested sea and rescue by a native girl after excellent underwater scenes showing the killing of the shark, the leap of the native girl off a cliff and finally the terrific fight with the villain to save his sweetheart and avenge his mother. This last scene is a hummer, with the star with one arm disabled finally conquering big Harry Morey with one hand, and it is convincing, too. With his superb muscular development there is nothing faky about this stuff of O'Briens. When he leaps through the air at Morey or when he threw his assistant through a window it was all intensely real and thrilling. There is none of the milk and honey goody-goody hero about him, in fact there is a sequence where it looks like he is going to let the heroine take care of herself.

George O'Brien, one of the finds of the season whose screen rise has been meteoric and has already appeared in principal roles in such films as "The Iron Horse," achieves merited stardom in this picture, and he is indeed ideal for the role in every way. A magnificent physical specimen he has a personality that grows upon you and sincerity without affectation. Really O'Brien is the whole picture but he is ably supported by pretty Billie Dove as the girl, Harry T. Morey as the meanest type of a villain, Cleo Madison as the hero's mother and Anne Cornwall as a native girl.

John Conway's direction of this picture is excellent and he seems to have gotten the ultimate out of the story's possibilities. "The Roughneck" is certainly a picture that should prove a "wow" with the average audience, for in addition to its punch and action, there is a pleasing romance and good pathos and heart interest in the mother-love angle and some colorful and effective tropical island scenes.

Story

Mad McCara, a sea captain, on the promise of marriage lures the widow Delaney aboard his ship. A collision in the harbor gives him the chance to say her son Jerry was drowned, though he sent him ashore. Years pass. McCara has tired of Mrs. Delaney who has found shelter with the natives on the tropical isle of Taohing. Jerry, grown to manhood, conquers his adversary in a prize-fight and believing him dead escapes by hiding on a ship bound for Taohing. He is discovered and Felicity who is going to the tropics to paint pictures becomes interested in him. To escape being sent back home he starts to swim ashore. A native girl rescues him from a shark. McCara now prosperous and using an assumed name seeks to win Felicity but she declares her love for Jerry. To save her from his disgrace he pretends he does not love her. Felicity seeks shelter in McCara's home from the rain. To convince Jerry of Felicity's peril, his mother discloses her identity. Jerry arrives in time to save Felicity and avenge his mother. Returning home with his mother and Felicity to take his medicine he learns that the man he thought he killed is still alive.

"Smouldering Fires"

Exceptional Cast and Human Interest Theme Mark Achievement for Universal

Reviewed by Tom Waller

A middle- aged woman and business executive marries an employee half her age. Upon this marriage Universal bases the title of its production, "Smouldering Fires." The woman is intensely in love with the youth and he and the woman's school-girl sister are enamored. The fires smoulder until their repression becomes obvious to all three. The production is a mastery of sophistication yet the psychology of this human interest theme should prove discernible to the average mentality.

As the elder sister, whose best years have been devoted to the executiveship of a factory, Pauline Frederick is remarkable. Malcolm McGregor excellently essays the role of the employe. Laura La Plante is equally as good in her part of the younger sister. Their acting and that of the entire cast is most convincing.

The interest which Pauline Frederick as Jane Vale first exhibits towards McGregor, in the role of Robert Elliott, is construed by that youth as accentuated solely by his business ambitions. Its interpretation by other employees causes him to view it in the true light. His sterling character prompts him to shield his employer and thus they become engaged. It also prohibits him from breaking the promise after he has met the younger sister with whom he immediately falls in love. From here on is injected a suspense lasting right up to the climax which comes at the close of nearly eight reels.

Most artistic and clever is the gradual conception by Jane Vale of her actual position as a wife. The sacrifice of the young husband and his rigid adherence to the marital vow is another of the many commendable features of this production, which is so clean-cut and absolutely void of life's sordid things.

The production comes to a close which satisfies, gladdens and yet sorrows. Jane clothes her grief and sacrifice in the lie that she never really loved her young husband and that she will seek freedom from the marriage bond. But this is barely made known by a sub-title. The fade-out is beautiful and exceptionally fine. The three have their arms around one another but the story of the future is in their eyes.

Sam E. Rork's production "Inez from Hollywood" distributed through First National is another story of the motion picture studios, but it differs from the others. While there is a substantial proportion of the footage devoted to peeps behind the scenes of picture making, it is with the contrast between the real and reel life and public conception of a notorious screen vampire that the story deals.

The heroine is a woman who recognizes the value of keeping in the public eye and who submits to the schemes of an enthusiastic press agent until she becomes known to the fans as "The Worst Woman in Hollywood," but the plot shows her as in reality an entirely different sort of person with an intense mother-like love and solicitude for her younger sister.

This paves the way for an out-of-the ordinary story well filled with heart-interest and beautiful sentiment, of pathos and sacrifice on the altar of sisterly love. Alfred E. Greene has capably directed the picture, playing up this angle and effectively contrasting the popular conception with the heroine as she actually is. As portrayed by Anna Q. Nilsson there is a strong note of realism to this role and there will be many tugs at the heart strings. It is a picture that because of its appeal to sentiment should have a stronger fascination for women, but we believe it will prove a generally satisfactory attraction for the majority of fans.

Miss Nilsson's performance is excellent, there is good drama and pathos in her scenes with her sister, and with the hero where she seeks to win him away to save the sister, and tear-compelling melodrama where she obliterates herself from this girl's life and disguised by a heavy veil sneaks in to witness her wedding to the only man she ever thought she could really love. Sob stuff, yes, but effective.

Lewis S. Stone, always an excellent actor, gives a fine portrayal of the philanderer with women who seeking a rival finds real love in the beautiful character of the sister which is ideally presented in the person of Mary Astor. The minor roles are all in good hands.

Don't get the impression that it is all drab for the heroine for she finds consolation in the love of her faithful manager who tells her she is the finest woman in Hollywood.

Story

Because of lurid publicity and frame-ups including wild parties raided by the police which enables her to break into front-page space in the newspapers, Inez Laranetta, the screen vamp, is known as the worst woman in Hollywood. Among her host of admirers is Stewart Cuyler, a millionaire, who tires of her playing with him, and breaks with her. Securing an address from a letter in his room, he believes it is a rival, but is surprised to find at this address a very charming young girl, who is Inez's sister though he does not know it. This girl Fay falls in love with him, and her guardian wires to Inez, who stops in the middle of a big picture and rushes to New York. Judging Stewart's motives to be dishonorable she visits him and is prepared if she cannot lure him away to kill him. She learns he intends to marry Fay, but that his family will never receive her. Inez finally agrees to give up Fay so as not to interfere with her happiness. In a heavy veil, she attends the wedding, hiding in the back of the church, and weeps at the thought that she has given up the only person she ever really loved. Summerfield her manager, declares he has always loved her and that she is the best woman in Hollywood, and she finds consolation in his love.

"On Probation"

William Steiner's Second, Starring Edith Thornton, Has Good Story and Unusually Effective Climax

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the second of a series of features starring Edith Thornton, William Steiner is offering on the independent market "On Probation," a picture that in our opinion will prove a thoroughly satisfactory attraction for the majority of patrons.

In the first place, J. S. Nattleford has contributed a real story. Charles Hutchison, who has won his spurs as a stunt actor, has capably directed it, the settings are good, even to the standpoint of lavishness, the cast works with intelligence and enthusiasm, the construction is excellent building up to a smashing and unhackneyed climax, in which there is finely built-up suspense and an unexpected denouement, and there are a number of good punches scattered throughout the film.

"On Probation" starts off with a bang, with the heroine in an auto being chased by a detective and ending in the wreck of the car as it goes down a steep incline. This is unusually well handled, the whole thing being caught by the camera with no cut to the wrecked car. This gets the interest and it is held by good dramatic development right up to the climax and there is no waste footage in quickly winding up the story after the big punch has been put over.

We believe spectators are going to get a real kick out of the climax when they find out who is going to sign the herone's bond to keep her from prison, and that very few will be able to anticipate it. Here is good suspense and the whetting of curiosity without any veil of mystery.

Miss Thornton's supporting cast is uniformly good and contains such well-known players as Robert Ellis as the hero, Joseph Kilgour, Wilfred Lucas, Betty Francisco and Lincoln Steadman. The star herself gives a fine performance.

Charles Hutchison's direction of this picture is surprisingly good and gives fine promise for the future. All in all, "On Probation" is a picture that is entirely capable of holding its own with an audience in competition with a lot of widely heralded productions. And don't overlook the fact that there are excellent exploitation possibilities in the point of law on which the climax hinges.

Directed by Charles Hutchison.
Length, five reels.

Story

Inheriting more money than she knows what to do with, Mary becomes the leader of a set that indulges in reckless escapades culminating in a chase to elude a detective and motorcycle cop which ends in the car being wrecked. Her actions displease her boyhood sweetheart Bruce, the son of a judge, but she will pay no attention to him. Through the jealousy of others Mary is identified as the owner of the car, tried and convicted, but the judge offers to put her on parole if she can get anyone but his own son to sign the parole with the alternative of going to prison in her stead if she failed to keep her promise. She fails utterly as her fair weather friends desert her and is faced with prison, when the judge himself signs the parole, saying he has faith in her. Chastened, she finds happiness with his son who offers to assume his father's responsibility.

"The Cure"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this number of the Out of the Inkwell series, Max Fleischer's little clown is assisted by a rabbit, and the two are kept busy taking care of the dental needs of a variety of animals. There is a good burlesque angle where in their ignorance they use actual plates, bridges, crowns, etc., instead of the dental variety to repair teeth. There is the usual mixture of cartoon and photographic work, with the clown finally ridding Mr. Fleischer of a troublesome tooth by tying a cord to it and to the elevator which drags him across the floor and up against the elevator door. This is fully up to standard, the rabbit brings in an element of novelty and it should prove amusing with any type of audience.—C. S. S.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"The Burglar"

(Fox—Comedy Series—Two Reels)

The first two of the series of Van Bibber comedies produced by Fox from stories by Richard Harding Davis were corking good comedies, and each succeeding number seems to be still better. Number five, "The Burglar" is certainly a humdinger and sets a high mark for the later ones to even equal, much less beat. These stories concern the adventures of a young society swell, and in this one, a visit to a police station starts the chase of a notorious thief and killer and Van finds himself, against his will, dragooned into the role of an arm of the law. How he succeeds in capturing the criminal who escapes and hounds him and accidentally captures him again and is acclaimed as a hero makes a comedy that should amuse all classes of patrons. It is good clean, straight farce comedy with some slapstick and rough and tumble, but with the laughs mainly in the action and situations. The way Van attempts to get away from the killer and danger and keeps butting into it, is a scream and should keep any audience in an uproar. This comedy is packed with enough laughs and amusing situations to supply an average length feature comedy, so you can see how fast-moving it must be as a two-reeler. Van is the whole show and Earl Foxe is excellent in the role. Fred Kohler is capable as the blood-thirsty killer.—C. S. S.

"Off His Trolley"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Mack Sennett comedy features Ralph Graves and is the fifth released of the Sennett Star Comedies. Also in the cast are Alice Day, Natalie Kingston and Marvin Loback. Eddie Cline directed. The fun centers around a street car conductor who, though badly in debt and engaged to a fair damsel, succumbs to the wiles of a cabaret vamp. She leads him a merry chase, winning a diamond ring partly paid for and a car owned to some extent. But love's sweet dream dissolves when rain falls and car wrecks, forcing man and maid to splash home through mud ankle-deep. There are some corking gags in this subject, one of the best being when a speeding motorcycle picks up a traffic cop about to serve a summons on Graves, and the cop economizes time and effort by serving it on the astonished cyclist. Action is plenty. The subject keeps moving all the time, and it ought to thoroughly please.—S. S.

"Noah's Athletic Club"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Aesop's Film Fable deals with a prize-fight between animals and the big fight between old Noah himself and an ape, with disastrous results to Noah's visage. Knocked out and dreaming, however, he finds compensation in visions of fair and affectionate damsels, and once recovering consciousness, immediately has an attendant knock him unconscious again. No, dear reader, it is not anti-dope propaganda but a cartoon done in Paul Terry's best manner.—S. S.

"Earth's Oddities"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

In this issue of Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge distributed through Educational, oddities found in different parts of the world supply the theme. For instance scenes of a quaint stepping stone bridge in England change into stepping stones in ancient Moab and in France. There are a couple of amusing cartoon sections and such "oddities" as a zig-zag ski trail in the Alps, a tractor outpulling 300 men, a life-boat drill, the one boat being continually turned over and over, a unique method of quickly mounting an auto tire and the gathering of locusts for food on a tropical scale. This reel is both interesting and instructive and amusing and is up to the high standard of the series.—C. S. S.

"The Going of Cumming"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Apparently Sylvester and Tim has about forsaken their railroad and trucking jobs for in this number of the "Go-Getters" distributed by F. B. O. they are again seen in a barber shop. There is a clever idea used in this issue. Harold as usual has a fight scheduled with Ted, but a regular fighter, Cumming, is run in on him, and Harold is getting the worst of it when Peggy remembers he gets excited and goes all to pieces when he hears the stuttering song "Katy." She brings the phonograph to the ring and this brings about the "going of Cumming" for Harold easily knocks him out. It is an amusing number and well up to the standard of the series.—C. S. S.

"Goat Getters"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Juvenile Comedy distributed by Educational opens in an orphan asylum where there are a lot of babies and a few kids and then switches to a hot springs health resort with the kids tormenting the patrons and especially the mayor of the town who has gone there to get away from them. The best thing about the picture is the baby stuff, some of this is clever and quite amusing and will appeal especially to the women. After these sequences, the kids take up the action and there is considerable chasing, conventional kid comedy and slapstick stuff which lacks originality but should amuse the small boys and the slap-stick fans. There is practically no plot, the picture being a series of gags with but little relation to each other. The subtitles are amusing, though some of them are overdone. Two of the comedy sequences are the finding of a hornets nest by the kids which is taken to a directors meeting in mistake for a turkey, ending with everyone being stung and leading into the sulphur springs, and the disguising of the fat boy as a bear, his meeting with a real bear that chases him and finally ends up by getting after the little negro boy and upsetting the place in general. This comedy is not up to the standard of the majority of this series.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 50"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

This subject is mainly based on photographic views of hunting elephants in India, taken by the Vernay-Faunthrope Expedition which represented the American Museum of Natural History. There are numerous excellent views of wild deer and elephants in their native habitat, and of the shooting of one fine specimen of tusked monster. Another part of the reel is devoted to views of New Haven, Conn., which show why it is nicknamed the Elm City. Strangely, there are no scenes of Yale University. "Speakeasy Speed" is a bit warning against speeding motors. This is propaganda presented in a very interesting manner.—S. S.

"The Mysterious Mystery"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this third release of the sixth series of the "Our Gang" comedies we see Hal Roach's children running down various criminals after donning novel disguises. Their first victim is a dumb detective, and he they truss up in their underground den by the use of wierd apparatus. Then a rich child is kidnapped and the rascals join the police—unofficially—in trying to apprehend the kidnappers. They climb into an aeroplane that sets off in pursuit of a homing pigeon winging to the criminals' resort, and narrowly escape with their lives when the operator of the 'plane falls out. Probability is thrown to the winds in this subject, everything yielding to the invention of gags and stunts, and for humor "The Mysterious Mystery" undoubtedly ranks high among two-reel comedies. Director Robert McGowan has given it smooth direction.—S. S.

First National Sales Staff on "Specials" will "Carry On"

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES will continue for the coming half-year the method of marketing its special productions which was in effect during the last six months on "The Sea Hawk," "Secrets," "Abraham Lincoln" and "Sundown." When the selling campaign started on those specials, E. T. Eschmann appointed a special sales staff to market the productions, with A. W. Smith, Jr., in charge. He built up a staff of half a dozen salesmen made up of men of wide experience in the selling of pictures. As a result of their experience, ability and team work, the four First National specials have been booked in nearly every important key city point in the country. Practically the only large ones remaining unbooked were signed up for the four productions last week by A. F. Hickox, one of Mr. Smith's men. The towns contracted were Elmira and Binghamton, N. Y.

Because of the exceptionally good results obtained by Mr. Smith and his staff in marketing the four productions named, Mr. Eschmann has decided that the new First National specials shall be handled by the special sales staff already functioning to advantage.

The production announced by First National for marketing as specials during the six months beginning February 1, 1925, include "The Lost World," from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel in association with Watterson R. Rothacker, under the supervision of Earl Hudson; "Sally," Colleen Moore's new starring venture for First National from Guy Bolton's musical comedy success in which Flo Ziegfeld starred Marilyn Miller and Leon Errol; the two new Norma Talmadge productions, "The Lady," from Martin Brown's melodrama in which Mary Nash achieved one of her biggest stage successes, and the new international musical comedy hit, "Mme. Pompadour," in which Wilda Bennett is now appearing in New York, and a new Earl Hudson production, "United States Flavor," an epic of the American steel industry, founded upon R. G. Kirk's short story of the same title recently published in the Saturday Evening Post.

The sales staff on the specials will not confine its activities entirely to these five productions in the coming half-year, however, but will also help sell the pictures in First National's Leader Group at major points.

The exploitation staff on the specials, which has functioned so successfully on "The Sea Hawk," "Secrets," "Abraham Lincoln" and "Sundown," under the supervision of Allen S. Glenn, will be continued on the new specials. Their activities will be enlarged, however, as in the case of the sales staff on the specials, to include exploitation in points to be designated on pictures of the Leader Group.

Up to November 15, Mr. Glenn's exploitation men had handled eighty-two engagements, ninety-five exploitation weeks, giving in all cases campaigns which brought greatly increased takings at the box office.

Dome Theatre, in Youngstown, Warners' First Ohio House

WARNER BROTHERS have started to physically forge the chain of theatres that will eventually put the firm into possession of houses all over the country where their product is not now shown.

This was acknowledged yesterday by Sam Warner, at Warner Brothers New York office, who confirmed reports from the west that his company had taken over the Dome Theatre in Youngstown, Ohio, intended to form the first link of the chain of theatres to be built in that state, and eventually all over the United States.

At the same time, Mr. Warner denied that Dan Robbins, of Warren, Ohio, is a partner in the Youngstown deal, as published in brief dispatches from the middle west.

"In fact," said Mr. Warner, "Robbins has nothing to do with the transaction, and is in no way connected with the arrangement whereby Warner Bros. secured possession of the house for a term of years. We had intended to keep the matter quiet for the time being for business reasons, but since it has leaked out in another section of the country, I will say that the Dome Theatre is the first of several houses, which we will obtain either by taking over or building in Ohio, wherever business policy warrants it.

"Several deals of this nature are now pending in other Ohio localities. Concerning these, I do not care to make any further statement at the present time. Suffice to say that we mean business, and details of the others will be made public just as soon as pending negotiations are completed."

Mr. Warner states he wanted it distinctly understood that the firm had no intention of entering into competition with theatres where Warner Bros. booking is now satisfactory, and where the product of his company is getting a play. But he just as emphatically stated that the firm would protect themselves by going into every territory with its own house wherever it was found necessary to protect itself.

Henry King Casting

Filming of "Sackcloth and Scarlet," featuring Alice Terry, Henry King's first production for Paramount, will begin in about two weeks, according to Robert Kane who is presenting the King productions.

Pat O'Malley, Wanda Hawley and Wallace Beery in Producers' "Let Women Alone."

Snitz Edwards and Anna Q. Nilsson in First National's "Inez from Hollywood."

"The White Sheep" Included in Pathe Release for Dec. 14

PATHE heads its program for the week of December 14 with a Hal Roach feature length picture, titled "The White Sheep."

"The White Sheep," in six reels, was written and directed by Hal Roach himself. The story is of the comedy variety and is filled with many broad laughs. The white sheep is a young member of a family of fighters, but the young man does not run true to form, according to their way of thinking. But where they use brawn he uses his head, and he shows his real mettle when at the close he is called upon to save his father from a hangman's rope. Featured in the cast are Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey, with Jack Gavin, Bob Kortman, Leo Willis, Richard Daniels and Chris Lynton in the principal supporting roles. One of the outstanding features of the production is its subtitles written by H. M. Walker. Assisting Hal Roach in the direction were Roy Clements and Hampton Del Ruth.

The third release of the sixth series of the "Our Gang" comedies. "The Mysterious Mystery," in which the members of Hal Roach's rascals all become detectives, is also scheduled for release on the Pathe program for the week. Robert McGowan directed.

The Mack Sennett comedy for the week is a two-reeler, featuring Ralph Graves, and is the fifth release of the Sennett Star Comedies. Graves, as a street car conductor, puts over many laugh-getting situations, assisted by Alice Day, Natalie Kingston and Marvin Loback. The picture was directed by Eddie Cline.

The tenth and last chapter of the Pathe-serial, "Ten Scars Make a Man," is the serial release for the week. This picture features Allene Ray, and carries a strong supporting cast headed by Jack Mower.

How the modern girl keeps fit and crowds her brothers for athletic honors is the subject of the Grantland Rice "Sportlight" release, "Nature's Rouge." The scenes were taken at the Sargent School Camp at Peterboro, N. H., showing field sports, hockey, soccer, swimming, rowing, etc.

The main subject in the Pathe Review No. 50 is the instalment based on "Hunting the Jungle Animals of India." It is an exclusive Pathe Review feature and was "shot" by the Vernay-Faunthrope Expedition while collecting specimens for the American Museum of Natural History. This instalment deals with the elephant hunt and has many thrilling situations. The other two subjects of the Review are a Pathe Review novelty on "Speakeasy Speed" and a Pathecolor of interesting views of New Haven, the elm city, in the "Visiting Our Own America."

"Noah's Athletic Club" is the title of the Aesop's Film Fables for the week. "Topics of the Day" No. 50 and Pathe News Nos. 102 and 103 complete the Pathe program for the week.

Chadwick Pictures Planning Early "Wizard of Oz" Release

I. E. CHADWICK, President of Chadwick Pictures Corporation in 729 Seventh avenue, last week wired the home office, from Hollywood, as follows:

"'The Wizard of Oz' goes way beyond even our wildest expectations. A thing of great beauty and fantasy. Marvelously entertaining. A knockout."

Mr. Chadwick went to Hollywood to witness the closing shots of "The Wizard of Oz," Larry Semon's new feature comedy, and to arrange for the production of several other features which will conclude the series his organization is releasing on the independent market this season—the famous Chadwick 9. He is expected back in New York in about three weeks, when he will bring a print of "The Wizard of Oz" back with him.

"The Wizard of Oz" is Mr. Chadwick's most ambitious project this season. Its purchase for Semon was the culmination of months of negotiations, for Semon had desired to do it for a long time. Its long record as a book and as a play is unprecedented despite the long list of best sellers and successful plays that have appeared since the publication of "The Wizard of Oz" took the nation by storm. Fred Stone achieved fame in the play.

A week before Mr. Chadwick left for the Coast, stills of "The Wizard of Oz" arrived and gave evidence of what Semon had accomplished. The settings were brilliantly conceived and executed with the atmosphere of fantasy and grotesqueness for which the book and play were noted, and with added beauty. The cast includes Bryant Washburn, Charlie Murray, Josef Swickard, Dorothy Dwan, Virginia Pearson, and Mary Carr. Oliver Hardy is the Tin Woodman, and Semon has the main character of the Straw-man.

Goes Into Production

This week sees the start of production on "The Merry Widow," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's big special starring Mae Murray under the megaphone of Erich von Stroheim. For months preparation for the filming has been going on at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Culver City studios. With arrangements finally completed for the elaborate screen version of the internationally popular Lehar operetta, von Stroheim is taking the first scenes this week.

Hale Starts First Picture

Alan Hale has started work on his first picture as a director at the Fox West Coast studios. It is "The Scarlet Honeymoon," starring Shirley Mason and every member of the company is working tooth and nail to make it a big success.

Plays Opposite Shirley Mason

Bryant Washburn, who played opposite Shirley Mason in her recent release, "My Husband's Wives," will again be seen opposite the petite little Fox Film Corporation star in her first release for next year, "The Stardust Trail."

"Silent Accuser" Wins Fine New York Reviews

APPLAUSE from the Gotham critics and public has met the showing of Chester Franklin's "The Silent Accuser," the picture starring the new wonder dog, Peter the Great, at the Capitol Theatre, New York. Harry Rapf's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film was adapted from Jack Boyle's story by Director Franklin and Frank O'Connor. Eleanor Boardman and Raymond McKee head a supporting cast that includes Earle Metcalfe, Paul Weigel and Edna Tichenor.

"'The Silent Accuser' is the best dog picture we ever saw," remarks Harriette Underhill in the Herald-Tribune. "It is cute and, we think, presents a canine artist in a more lovable light than any picture up to date. Jack Boyle has written an interesting story with a chase in it that beats anything you ever saw on the screen."

"If you have children," says Regina Cannon, writing in the New York Graphic, "take them to see this wonder dog; if you haven't, take some one else's, for you've got to see the picture yourself and you may as well have appreciative company. Peals of laughter emanated from the Capitol audience yesterday during the showing of this picture and a good round of applause was given at its conclusion."

Louella O. Parsons declares in the New York American: "To me Peter is the most intelligent and most human of any of the motion picture dogs that we have seen on the screen. Peter by his personality makes 'The Silent Accuser' first-rate entertainment."

"At the performance yesterday afternoon," testifies the New York Telegram and Mail, "Peter the Great was applauded. In the thrilling moments he was cheered. Persons who love dogs, who understand them, and even those who have only a superficial interest in man's greatest friend will find in Peter much to admire. The dog is exceptionally intelligent and a fine actor. He is almost human."

Says Dorothy Herzog in the New York Daily Mirror: "The best dog picture of the season, 'The Silent Accuser' has come to the Capitol. Peter the Great wins his audience from the moment he comes on the screen. Director Franklin has supplied his players with beautiful scenery and has worked out the story with a simplicity and sincerity that scores."

"We saw a great motion picture star at the Capitol," confesses the New York Evening World. "He is the most intelligent actor we have ever seen. And he's a dog. Peter the Great is the hero of 'The Silent Accuser.' We believed we had seen intelligent animals, but this performance topped anything we have ever seen."

"If anyone is interested in intelligent acting in the movies," remarks the New York Evening Post, "let him see Peter the Great in 'The Silent Accuser.'"

"Yesterday afternoon the audience on several occasions applauded Peter's feats," states the New York Times, "and there were sighs of regret when the dog was supposed to have been slain by a prison guard. Clapping signaled the pleasure of the people when they realized that crafty Peter had only been shamming death."

Cast for Nungesser's Film

Jacqueline Logan, Gladys Walton, Walter Miller, Wilton Lackaye and Lawford Davidson have been added to the cast of "The Great Air Mail Robbery," starring Captain Charles Nungesser, the French Ace and now in the course of production at the Glendale studios under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter.

The picture is being produced for distribution by Associated Exhibitors and will be released in February. The story is based on the U. S. Air Mail service from an original by Jack Lait.

Massachusetts Likes 'Chronicles'

Parent-Teacher Associated Eudorses Series For Entire State

Two "Chronicles of America" productions came in for considerable praise last week at the hands of the Parent-Teachers Association of Massachusetts when that organization passed a resolution lauding "The Frontier Woman" and "The Declaration of Independence."

The resolution follows:

"Whereas: through the courtesy of Pathe Exchange on Wednesday afternoon two pictures, "The Frontier Woman" and "The Declaration of Independence," of Chronicles of America, released by the Yale University Press were shown to an appreciative group of our delegates, and

"Whereas, the woman found these films educational and interesting, and

"Whereas, we cannot too highly recommend this contribution made to American photoplays, therefore be it

"Resolved that we, the Massachusetts Parent-Teachers Association endorse the use of the Chronicles of America in all moving picture theatres in Massachusetts.

Work Starts on "One Way Street"

Filming of Deale Davis' novel, "One Way Street," was started in First National's studios in New York recently with John Francis Dillon at the megaphone and Ben Lyon and Anna Q. Nilsson the co-featured players. This is the second picture to be put into production by the Earl Hudson units of First National since their removal from Hollywood. Ben Lyon has the role of a youth who uses the wealth and social influence of Miss Nilsson by pretending love for her. Those chosen for the supporting cast thus far are George Howard, Edward Fielding and Mona Kingsley.

Frances Howard Opposite Dix

Frances Howard, who has just completed her work in "The Swan," has been selected to play the leading role opposite Richard Dix in his latest starring picture, "The Maker of Gestures," which Paul Sloane will direct.

Anna Q. Nilsson in Paramount's "Top of the World."

Miller With Nazimova

Sculptor-Actor Cast for Role in Vitagraph's "The Redeeming Sin"

To impersonate Paul Dubois, a young sculptor, in "The Redeeming Sin," in which Mme. Alla Nazimova makes her debut as a Vitagraph star, J. Stuart Blackton, the director, has engaged a sculptor in real life. He is a sculptor, that is, when he is not acting, for Carl Miller divides his time between the two arts, that of the screen and that of the chisel.

The turning point in Mr. Miller's career came when he was signed to play the part of a struggling young artist in Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris." Starting in pictures as an "extra," he was soon given more important roles in a series of Universal Westerns. Then he played with Lois Weber in "The Doctor And The Woman," and after the war, in which he saw service, he appeared with Miss Weber again in "Mary Regan." This was followed by a five weeks' engagement as juvenile lead with Marion Davies in Cosmopolitan's "The Bride's Play." After "A Woman of Paris," he impersonated Jackie Coogan's father in "The Kid," and he has worked also in several Fox productions, in support of Barbara Bedford, among others.

Three Warner Stars Loaned

Louise Fazenda recently made the remark that she would rather work than idle her time between pictures, and Warner Bros. have taken her at her word. Miss Fazenda is under contract to Warner Bros. but J. L. Warner has loaned her to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for "Cheaper to Marry," directed by Robert Leonard, and also to Waldorf productions to play one of the leads. In this picture Dorothy Devore and Beverly Bayne, both Warner Bros. stars, will also play important roles.

Work Started on "Riding Grit"

According to a dispatch received from the Coast, work has already been begun on "Riding Grit," the sixth of the series of eight Bill Cody's which this stunt performer is making for Independent Pictures. The story concerns a young man who has been left a great cattle ranch by his father.

Ford Directing a Special For Fox Film Corporation

JOHN FORD, youthful Fox Film Corporation megaphone wielder, who rose to directorial pre-eminence overnight as the result of his splendid picturization of "The Iron Horse," now in the fifth month of a successful Broadway run at the Lyric Theatre, has started work on another giant special for William Fox.

This production, as yet unnamed, deals with the sport of kings—horse racing. The theme of the story is built around the breeding and racing of the thoroughbreds with a love plot full of heart interest interwoven. It will combine the romance of Arabia, the land of turf kings, and the Blue Grass country of Kentucky, which today is to the world what the land of sand and tents was to an older civilization.

For several years Mr. Fox has been interested in making a picture which would present, on motion picture screens throughout the world, a true picture and a better understanding of the American thoroughbred. Miss Elizabeth Daingerfeld, one of America's leading horsewomen, and other Kentucky horse lovers, consented to help him, and shortly thereafter a company headed by Mr. Ford was despatched to the Blue Grass region.

With the reputation of being the maker of "The Iron Horse" to live up to Mr. Ford took no chances of producing a "dud." Immediately upon his arrival in "Ky." he began a thorough study of horse breeding, training and racing. For months, in season and out, the insistent director haunted the racetracks and breeding farms surrounding Lexington. All the lore of the "bangtails" that it was possible for him to gather was picked up from negro stable boys, jockeys, trainers, breeders and owners.

It is with this foundation that Mr. Ford has started work on his first production since "The Iron Horse," and now the sounds of the word "camera" are as familiar in the Blue Grass country as "They're off!"

Many effective combinations that resulted in the perfection attained by "The Iron Horse" are at work with John Ford on his new production. For instance, George Schneiderman, who was responsible for the beautiful photography of the epic photoplay, is Mr. Ford's cameraman on his latest effort.

J. Farrell MacDonald, whose interpretation of Corporal Casey in "The Iron Horse," will be remembered as one of the screen's humor classics, is playing a typical character role in the new Ford photoplay.

Others in the cast who have vital roles are Gertrude Astor, Malcolm Waite and Belle Stoddard. Miss Astor is cast as a Mrs. Beaumont, a heavy role. With her, stirring up deviltry, is Mr. Waite in the role of Greve Carter, unscrupulous horse owner. Bell Stoddard is cast as Mrs. Dunnivan, wife of Dunnivan, horse trainer, the role essayed by Mr. McDonald.

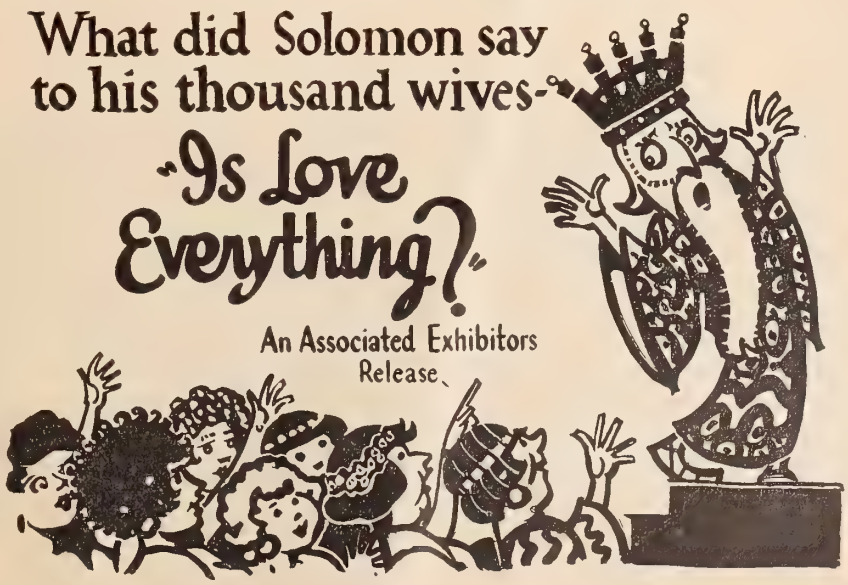
Henry Walthall has the leading male part, that of Mr. Beaumont, gentleman of Kentucky, who through the scheming and machinations of his wife and her lover, Greve Carter, is forced to dramatic acts that produce thrills and tears.

Several important juvenile roles which will give the heart interest to the picture have not been filled as yet. A careful survey of the ingenues and young actors is being made to find the most fitting types for these parts.

Europe Praises "Romola"

"Such a work of art merits every success," was the statement by Georges Clemenceau, former premier of France, after witnessing Lillian Gish in Henry King's Inspiration production of "Romola," a Metro-Goldwyn picture, with Dorothy Gish in a featured role.

Numerous other European celebrities have expressed their enthusiasm over "Romola," including Giavonni Poggi, resident director of the Uffizi Gallery, Florence, and curator of all the royal galleries of Tuscany; P. Bonnard, one of the greatest living French painters; Leonce Benedite, director of the Luxembourg Museum and the Rodin Museum in Paris; Santiago Alba, former Minister of Fine Arts in Spain; Dr. Guido Biagi; and Firmin Gemier, director of the Odeon National Theatre, Paris.



Elfelt Designates Davis to Handle Sales on His Films

CLIFFORD S. ELFELT PRODUCTIONS, INC., announces that J. Charles Davis, 2nd, has been appointed general sales manager of that organization, and will have full charge of the sales of Elfelt Productions, which consist of four series totaling thirty pictures, to be released on the Independent market.

In making the announcement it was stated that this will in no way interfere with Mr. Davis' present affiliations or his handling of the sales and distribution of the J. J. Fleming Productions, Inc. Mr. Davis is general manager of Fleming Productions, producing and distributing on the Independent market. They are at present releasing a series of six productions starring Al Ferguson, of which four have been completed, and it is understood that this series to be followed by a second series of eight pictures which will feature a star new to the motion picture industry but whose name is internationally known.

The first of this series is scheduled for release on February 15, 1925, and a number of contracts have already been signed by exchangemen for this product.

In commenting on the announcement by Elfelt, Mr. Davis said: "I am very much pleased with the deal and believe it will be mutually beneficial. The Elfelt pictures are excellent, and, I believe, fill a distinct want in the independent field. It is understood my handling of these productions in no way interferes with my own production and distribution activities. Fleming Productions are meeting with marked success with our series of Al Ferguson pictures and both Mr. Fleming and I are very much gratified with the progress made to date. In fact, we have decided to make a second series of eight pictures and will release the first one February 15. Our Ferguson series will be completed on January 1, as four are now ready. "Shackles of Fear" has been released. "The Trail of Vengeance" will be released December 1. "Phantom Shadows" is completed and ready for release, and "Scarlet and Gold" is now being edited, the actual shooting having been completed this week. Work on the fifth production will be started at once, and the success of this series has been so gratifying that we have decided to make another series starring Al Ferguson to follow this one. This will be in addition to the series of eight already mentioned.

"We are also going to make a series of six pictures for distribution through an important releasing company, announcement of which will be made by that organization shortly, so you see that J. J. Fleming plan a very active season.

"In taking over the sales end of Clifford S. Elfelt Productions, I believe I am in a position to offer the independent exchangemen a remarkable line of product. In fact, sufficient to completely supply him with his requirements.

"The Fleming Productions and Elfelt Pictures are of totally different types and in no way does one conflict with the other. They do not have the same stars nor are they the same type of pictures. Therefore an exchange can handle the entire output to advantage of both Fleming and Elfelt pictures, or two exchanges in the same territory can divide the product without conflict. Both series are being sold separately and the exchangemen can buy Fleming Productions or the Elfelt Productions without having to take the other."

The contract between Elfelt and Davis was closed last Saturday and Mr. Elfelt immediately left for the Coast where he will devote his entire time to the production of the series he has scheduled.

Completes Cast for "My Son"

Edwin Carewe has completed the cast and the technical staff for his next First National production, "My Son," from the successful play by Martha Stanley now running in New York. Active work on photography was begun on December 1.

Nazimova is starred. The leading members of the supporting cast are Ian Keith, William Collier, Jr., Hobart Bosworth and Pauline Garon.

Patsy Ruth Miller and Lou Tellegen in Banner's "Those Who Judge."

Lewis S. Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson in First National's "Inez from Hollywood."

Independent Producers Active

Levee Crowded Out of His Own Studio—Leases Space for "One Year To Live"

M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, has been forced out of his own plant due to the capacity producing activities there of independent producers.

Under the direction of Irving Cummings, Mr. Levee's own producing company will shortly start the picturization of John Hunters's, "One Year to Live," at the McClune Studios where the producer has leased space for the making of his initial photoplay under his new First National contract.

Every available inch of studio space at the United is occupied by the many producers now established there so Mr. Levee has to look elsewhere for the activities of his own unit.

Among the prominent stars already engaged to appear in this picturization are Aileen Pringle, Antonio Moreno and Dorothy Mackaill.

Frank Lloyd Finishes "Judgment"

Filming a leap over a high cliff, Frank Lloyd has just finished the production of his latest First National picture, "Judgment," with a decided thrill. Antonio Moreno was the jumper and inasmuch as the script called for the character to attempt suicide by jumping off the cliff, Mr. Lloyd saved this dramatic scene until the last so that it might be executed with utmost care and exactness.

Antonio Moreno, Patsy Ruth Miller, Ruth Clifford and David Torrence are the featured players in "Judgment" and other prominent members of the supporting cast are Frankie Darro, Phyllis Haver, Robert Bolder, Joseph Girard, Pauline Neff, Harry Lonsdale, Edith Yorke, Edward Clayton and Frank Coffyn.

Florence Gilbert Signs With Fox

Florence Gilbert has signed a long contract with Fox Film Corporation. The young actress has been appearing in the Fox Van Bibber Comedies from the tales by Richard Harding Davis.

Alan Hale and Mildred June in Fox's "Troubles of a Bride."

Inaugurates Sales Campaign

First National Stages a "Phillipson Month" Sales Drive in England

First National Pictures, Ltd., the English branch of First National Pictures, Inc., enthusiastic over the wonderful sales results accomplished through the Eschmann Month sales contest in the United States, has instituted a sales drive in England. In compliment to Percy Phillipson, manager of sales and distribution in the United Kingdom, the drive has been designated as "Phillipson Month."

The drive began on November 10 and has been making a very excellent showing. The sales force for England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales is directing its efforts towards three objectives during the sales drive; bookings to mature before the end of the year; franchise contracts and ordinary bookings. The sales force is confident of rolling up a record that will distance any yet made in Great Britain and Ireland as the Eschmann Month contest distanced all previous drives in America.

Plays Opposite Florence Vidor

Malcolm MacGregor, who was most recently seen in "The House of Youth" opposite Jacqueline Logan and in "Idle Tongues" and "The Bedroom Window," has been re-engaged by Regal Productions for the leading role opposite Florence Vidor in "The Girl of Gold" which has now gone into production under the direction of John Ince.

Bessie Eyton, Alan Roscoe, Claire Du Brey and Charles Franch will also be seen in the cast of "The Girl of Gold" which will be scheduled as an early 1925 release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

This will be Florence Vidor's third starring picture on the Producers Distributing Corporation program.

Edmund Lowe Finishes

Edmund Lowe, starring in pictures for the first time this year, has completed another picture for Fox Film Corporation called "Ports of Call," by Garrett B. Fort. It is a combination mystery, thrilling and detective film.

Three Specials Will Close 1924 Season for Fox Films

ONLY three more special productions, one Shirley Mason star series, two Sunshine Comedies, one Educational and six issues of Fox News Reels remain to be released by Fox Film Corporation to wind up its 1924 release program.

The special productions remaining are "Folly of Vanity," "Gold Heels" and "In Love with Love." Shirley Mason's remaining 1924 starring vehicle is "Curlytop." The last 1924 Sunshine Comedy releases are "The Milk Bandits," and "Dangerous Curves," while the Educational Short Subject is "The Last Word in Chickens."

Of the special releases, "Folly of Vanity," to be released for the week of December 21, is the most important. It is the "Christmas Week" special and is expected to be the outstanding attraction of the entire winter season. With the allegorical sequence directed by Henry Otto, who directed "Dante's Inferno," and a modern sequence directed by Maurice Elvey, the celebrated English megaphone wielder recently acquired by Fox, this picture is a giant special. In the modern sequence Billie Dove is cast in the feminine lead, with Jack Mulhall playing opposite her. For a heavy, the Fox casting director selected Betty Blythe, of "Queen of Sheba" fame. Others to grace the cast of modern sequence in this exceptional feature are John Sainpolis, Fred Becker, Paul Weigel, Otto Matieson, Byron Munson, Edna Mae Cooper, Franzi Gunn, Marcella Daly and Lotus Thompson. Billie Dove also has the lead in the allegory. Others in this sequence are Consuelo, the dancer; Jean La Motte, Al Mazola, Lola Drovnar, Bob Klein and Edna Gregory.

"Gold Heels" is also a "Christmas Week" release. This picture is an adaptation from Henry M. Blossom, Jr.'s stage play, "Checkers." Peggy Shaw and Bobby Agnew are cast in the leading roles of this picture which is a story of the race track.

"In Love with Love," the last special to be released by Fox in 1924, is an adaptation from the New York stage success of last season by Vincent Lawrence. Cast in the leading roles in this picture are Marguerite De La Mott and Allan Forrest. Others in the cast include Harold Goodwin, William Austin, Mary Warren, Will Arren, Allan Sears and Mabel Forrest. It was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Shirley Mason's final starring vehicle of the season, "Curlytop," is from one of Thomas Burke's "Limehouse Nights" stories. This is Miss Mason's first appearnce in films with a blonde wig. Wallace McDonald has the leading role. Diana Miller has an important role in this picture. Although it is a "heavy" part, Diana proves herself capable, and her interpretation of an English gutter-snipe is a revelation in acting.

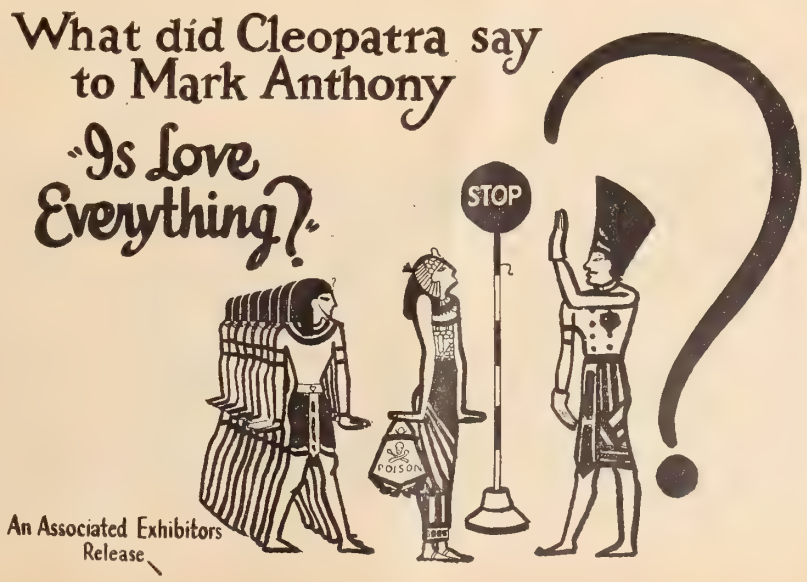
The Sunshine Comedy, "The Milk Bandit," has the distinction of being the only Fox release for the week of December 14. "Dangerous Curves," the final Sunshine shares honors with Miss Mason's release of the week of December 28.

The Educational, "The Last Word in Chickens," will be released the week of December 21. This is thought appropriate in view of the number of chickens that will substitute for turkeys at many an American Christmas dinner if the high price of the latter bird is maintained. It deals with the raising of these feathered providers of the best part of a breakfast of ham and eggs and shows the aims of the farmers and chicken raisers of the country to better poultry conditions.

The weeks of December 14, 21 and 28 will see the usual Fox News Reels issued twice every seven days with each one representing an effort to be better than the one preceding it.

"Peter Pan" in Last Week

The J. M. Barrie fantasy, which Herbert Brenon is producing for Paramount, was begun at the West Coast studio on September 15, and will be completed this week. Betty Bronson, Ernest Torrence, Cyril Chadwick, Virginia Brown Faire and Ann May Wong are playing the featured roles.



Julius and Abe Stern Pick Four Century Comedy Stars

WITH the recent acquisition of Eddie Gordon, star comedian, Century Comedies now have four big stars on their roster. The others are Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian and Al Alt. In addition to these stars there are the well known and justly famous Century Follies Girls, Hilliard Karr, the celebrated comedian with the wide girth, and a score or more of featured players who specialize in character delineations.

Wanda Wiley is Julius Stern's "find" of last spring. She is winning host of followers in every section of the country, and exhibitors are rapidly booking her special series of two-reelers, being made by Century from stories by the noted French humorist, Georges Fouret.

Edna Marian has had a very successful career in motion pictures. She has been starred and featured in a number of comedies and has played many featured roles in feature productions. She enters the Century studios prepared for the exacting demands of stardom in Century Comedies. Miss Marian has just completed a special production known as "The Doll Baby" in which she portrays the very difficult role of a doll in a toy store. Her work in this picture is said by those who have seen the picture to be marvelous. She poses in a box for several minutes without moving a muscle. This picture will be a special release on the Century program for Christmas week.

Favorite on Century Program

Al Alt has long been a favorite star on the Century program. His work is well known to comedy lovers all over the country. Alt has been starred in a number of Century Comedies, and has supported many of the feminine stars of that organization. He is working in support of Wanda Wiley in her latest production.

Eddie Gordon comes to Century after several years' experience on both the stage and screen as a comedian. He is noted for a style of comedy that is distinctly his own. Being small and wiry, Gordon can do many laugh provoking stunts that other comedians would find impossible. His first work at Century is in support of Edna Marian in her series of rural life comedies. Later, Gordon will be starred in a special series.

It is planned by Julius and Abe Stern, head of the Century organization, to produce four series of comedies, using each one of the four stars. In several of these pictures the Century Follies Girls will be featured in addition to being featured in a series of all star comedies.

"The Sporting Venus" Cast

Ed. Martindale and Kate Price have been added to the cast of "The Sporting Venus," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production which Marshall Neilan is directing from the Gerald Beaumont story with Blanche Sweet, Ronald Colman and Lew Cody in the featured roles. This completes the cast, which also includes George Fawcett, Arthur Hoyt and Josephine Crowell.

Diana Miller in Fox's "Flames of Desire."

Eight New Harry Carey's For Producers Dist. Corp.

JOHN C. FLINN, vice-president of Producers Distribution Corporation, who has just returned to New York from Los Angeles, announces the signing of a new contract with Hunt Stromberg for the release of eight big Western subjects starring Harry Carey, during 1925.

Both Well Pleased

Mr. Flinn says that both Stromberg and Producers Distributing Corporation are so well pleased with the series of Harry Carey subjects thus far released that the new contract was signed after discussions only on the matter of still further improving the production quality of the new pictures.

"Stromberg has made works of art of the Carey pictures," said Mr. Flinn, "without losing any of the fast action and melodramatic elements of the western drama and the result of this improvement in this type of story elevated the series to a prominent first run position."

Carey Delighted

Carey is also delighted with his association with Stromberg and the closest harmony exists between them.

It is expected that Sol Polito who is directly responsible for the artistic photograph of the current Carey subjects will continue to supervise the camera work on the new series.

Hunt Stromberg presents Harry Carey in "The Flaming Forties." Released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Two Warner Pictures Listed

W. Ward Marsh, of Cleveland Plain Dealer, Picks Seven Best Films

In selecting the seven best pictures presented in two months W. Ward Marsh, the critic, picks two of Warner Brothers' Screen Classics in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and pays a high tribute to Ernst Lubitsch, who is under contract to Warner Brothers.

Mr. Marsh heads his list with Ernst Lubitsch's "Three Women," with Pauline Frederick, May McAvoy, Marie Prevost and Lew Cody and gives third place to Harry Beaumont's "The Lover of Camille" with Blue and Marie Prevost.

Speaking of "Three Women," Mr. Marsh says: "Distasteful subject was done in excellent taste and without false moves. That is Lubitsch's habit as well as his forte. He has ability of glossing over the somewhat sordid sex tale with a fine veneer of charm and delicacy and to some degree respectability. No other director, save possibly Chaplin, can make the serpent wear a jeweled crown so becomingly."

Comedy Breaks Records

Buster Keaton's feature comedy, "Our Hospitality," has broken all records at the Madeleine Theatre in Paris. This information has just been received by Arthur Loew, manager of the foreign department of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which releases the Joseph M. Schenck-presented Keaton comedies. On Armistice Day "Our Hospitality" drew 11,500 francs to the Madeleine, a new "high" for the Paris theatre, and the week showed 24,400 francs.

Warner Bros. Announce New Screen Classics for 1925-26

WITH the idea of completing their present program by February 1, Warner Bros. are busy perfecting plans for the 1925-26 season with the intention of getting an early start on what will probably be the most pretentious schedule of production since the firm stepped prominently into the lime light as producers of Screen Classics.

"Every Warner Day a Day of Profit" will be the slogan for next year, and the New York office announces this week that the firm will continue its policy of the past in filming only the bigger selling novels of the day and the most successful plays enjoying New York runs.

The library shelves of Warner Bros. are now well stocked with material to be screened in the new season. In this array are several novels which at present are the most widely read fiction on book stands, and the best advertised books of the day.

Other purchases include novels not yet off the publishers' presses, but which, because of their unusual themes, popularity of the authors, and general appeal, were called to the attention of Warner Bros. in proof and found to be such excellent screen material with big box office angles that they were bought immediately.

The works of more than thirty popular authors will be represented in the Warner Bros. output next season, according to word from the firm this week. Announcement of the books purchased will soon be forthcoming; just as soon as several minor details are adjusted. Deals are also pending for the purchase of other material, and included in the Warner Brothers' library of Screen Classics to be filmed next season are the works of:

Arthur Somers Roche, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Ruth Cross, Charles Hanson Towne, Kathleen Norris, Carolyn Wells, Sophia Kerr, H. C. Witwer, Wallace Irwin, Frank Craven, George Barr McCutcheon, Rube Goldberg, George Agnew Chamberlain, Meade Minnegerode, Ruby M. Ayers, Stephen McKenna, Gertie Wentworth James, Flavia Chaudoin Dafoe, Mrs. Jay Gelzer, and others pending.

With the signing of several famous directors who made good on Warner Bros. product this year, and the retention of scenarists who have proven their ability to turn out entertaining adaptations, the firm feels it is in a position to announce soon the best program of exhibitor and audience pictures in its career.

Jans Announces Second and Third Production in New Series

FOLLOWING the completion of "Playthings of Desire," set for release on December 1, H. F. Jans announces the two pictures to follow it in his series of six new productions for the state rights market. "The Mad Dancer" is the second in the series, and following it will come "Ermine and Rhinestones," both of which will be made under the direction of Burton King, who was also responsible for "Playthings of Desire."

"The Mad Dancer" is by Louis Winter and will be published in Young's Magazine in the issue dated December 15. It is a story unusually well adapted to the screen, with plenty of outstanding dramatic scenes, heart interest and suspense, while there is opportunity for the injection of any number of good thrills. William Laub is now at work on the scenario and as soon as this is completed Director King will put the work into production with another of the typical casts that Mr. Jans always insists upon. "The Mad Dancer" will be presented for release about the first of February next year.

"Ermine and Rhinestones" is also by Louise Winter and is adapted from a novelette in Breezy Stories. It will be directed by Burton King and will follow "The Mad Dancer" on the Jans release schedule.

Artclass "Westerns" in England

George Smith, Long With Goldwyn, to Handle Weiss Bros. Pictures

Louis Weiss, head of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announced this week that George Smith, formerly managing director of British Goldwyn activities, before that organization merged with Metro and who was recently in New York, will distribute both the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and the Buddy Roosevelt series in the British Isles.

In handling these popular series in Great Britain, Mr. Smith who has organized George Smith's Films, Ltd., with headquarters at 197 Wardour Street, London, W., plans to reenter the field of British film activities as an independent. The Graham Wilcox Productions, Ltd. of 174 Wardour Street, London, W., will handle these popular thrillo-action features for Mr. Smith in the British metropolis and adjacent territory.

According to advices received by Louis Weiss, both the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., pictures received an ovation at each of several private showings arranged by Mr. Smith. The pictures shown were "Hard Hittin' Hamilton," with Buffalo Bill, Jr., and "Rough Ridin'", with Buddy Roosevelt. Both were hailed as a new type of "Western," presenting "fine, clean stories" that are "100 per cent. entertainment."

The regular trade showings, announced in the current issue of "Cinnema," will be held in Manchester and Liverpool early in December, and at the New Oxford, London.

Schertzinger to Direct

Victor L. Schertzinger is to direct Elinor Glyn's next production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which is to be a lavish picturization of her popular novel, "Man and Maid." Preparations for the making of this picture have already been started at the Culver City studios. No announcement has yet been made as to the players.

Pola Negri in "Forbidden Paradise," a Paramount picture.

Banner Pictures' New Story, "Speed", Will Have Star Cast

TELEGRAPHIC advices received by George H. Davis and Samuel J. Briskin, directing heads of Banner Productions, Inc., from Ben Verschleiser, chief of their western producing unit, announces the completion of the all-star cast assembled for "Speed," Grace Sartwell Mason's Saturday Evening Post story, to be picturized under Banner auspices on the Coast.

The completed cast, headed by Betty Blythe, who will be featured, includes Pauline Garon, Robert Ellis, William V. Mong, Arthur Rankin and Eddie Phillips. Edward J. Le Saint, who recently completed "Three Keys" for Banner from Frederic V. R. Dey's novel, a picture which is heralded as one of the outstanding independent productions of the coming season, has been engaged to direct "Speed," his masterly work on the former feature making him the logical selection for directorial honors on this production which Producer Verschleiser and the Banner officials expect to be a box office attraction of the first magnitude.

The story of "Speed" is a high-powered rural melodrama in a decidedly modern, up-to-date setting, and Banner officials, it is said, plan to make it on a scale, which, in elaborateness of sets and technical perfection will stand up with any of the biggest, finest features of the leading companies.

Unusual pains have been taken by Producer Verschleiser in adapting Miss Mason's story for the screen, in order to accentuate to the fullest degree possible the high lights and dramatic suspense of the original plot, now rated among the big stories of the year.

Camera work on the production was begun December 1, at the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood, under the supervision of Ben Verschleiser.

Charles Ray in "Percy"

Second Ince Production Has Been Retitled, Pathe Announces

Pathe announces this week that the second Charles Ray production made at the Thomas H. Ince Studios under the working title of "The Desert Fiddler" has been definitely titled "Percy."

The story is an adaptation from William Hamby's novel, "The Desert Fiddler," with the scenario written by C. Gardner Sullivan. The cast consists of Don Marion, Louise Dresser, Joseph Kilgour, Clyde McAtee, David Winter, Charlie Murray, Victor McLaglen, Jack Cosgrove, Richard Neill, Betty Blythe and Barbara Bedford.

"Percy" marks the second production to be made by Charles Ray since his return to the fold of Thomas H. Ince, who originally promoted him to screen stardom.

Alberta Vaughn Signed for Leads by Schulberg

THE newest arrival in stardom is Alberta Vaughn, who has just signed a long-term contract with B. P. Schulberg to play leads in his future Preferred pictures. Following feature roles in two productions to be made immediately, Mr. Schulberg will star this young comedienne.

J. G. Bachmann, vice-president and general manager of distribution for Schulberg Productions, said yesterday that Miss Vaughn's contract was the result of talks he had had with exchangement and exhibitors during his recent trip to key cities. In discussing potential stars with them, he heard everywhere that Alberta Vaughn is considered the best bet among the partially developed talent.

Through her recent work in "The Telephone Girl" and "The Go-Getter" series, she has become one of the biggest box-office names on the screen.

There has been much speculation concerning her future plans since the expiration of her last contract. Several big producing companies were making bids for her, but under the terms of the contract just signed Miss Vauhn's services will be at the disposal of the Schulberg organization for several years to come.

Alberta's first step up the success ladder was when a Vitagraph casting director singled her from among the extras in "The Affairs of Anatol" for a part in "The Son of Wallingford." She then joined Mack Sennett's bathing girls until she was chosen by F. B. O. for their series of two-reel comedies.

It is Mr. Schulberg's plan to give Miss Vaughn her first featured part in the Preferred Picture, "Free to Love," which is to be started next week.

Turpin in Trick Photography

Ernie Crockett, Mack Sennett Camera Chief, Has Something New for the Fans

Ernie Crockett, chief cameraman for Mack Sennett, has devised some very remarkable trick photography which will be seen shortly in a new Mack Sennett comedy, featuring Ben Turpin and released by Pathe.

Mr. Crockett has been specializing in this kind of work for many years, and his new achievement has aroused the interest of a number of experts in camera work.

The new tricks will show Ben Turpin exploring the depths of the ocean one minute and soaring through the clouds the next.

Camera experts believe this development marks a very important step forward in this branch of motion picture photography.

Buck Jones Balks

Buck Jones, Fox star, recently completed a picture which was made under the working title, "The Man Who Knew Women."

"My God," said Buck, when he learned the title, "what do I know about women? This is a horse opera, isn't it?"

So they changed the title to "The Arizona Romeo" and Buck went back to work with a relish.

With Hoot Gibson

Marceline Day, who recently was signed by the Universal Pictures Corporation on a five-year agreement, is playing her second leading feature role at Universal City. She is playing opposite Hoot Gibson in "The Taming of the West," adapted from "The Range Dwellers" and directed by Arthur Kossan.

Scenes from "The Lost Chord," a Whitman Bennett production distributed by Arrow Pictures Corporation.

Sales Contest Extended

Century-Universal Product, With Three Baby Peggy's, Involved in Drive.

Abe Stern, president of Century Comedies, announces that the time limit for the Sales Contest on Century product, which includes also "The Darling of New York," "The Law Forbids" and "The Family Secret," three feature length productions featuring Baby Peggy, has been extended to include the month of December.

Great interest is being taken in this contest by the Universal sales force in all exchanges, and the race to win one of the three cash prizes, totaling $500. I. Sweeney, of the Universal Pittsburgh exchange, leads the race, according to latest reports.

H. M. Herbel, sales manager for the Century organization, has just returned from a trip to the various exchanges and reports unprecedented business in practically all sections of the country on Century product.

Weiss Bros. Exchanges Have Paintings of "Western" Stars

IN recognition of the record bookings made on the popular Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr. series, by the exchanges handling these distinctly high class westerns for Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, Louis Weiss, head of the distributing organization, has made each exchange a present of a handsome 30 x 40-inch oil painting of each of these screen favorites.

The vogue of both Buffalo Bill, Jr. and Buddy Roosevelt has been growing so rapidly during recent months that Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation felt that some special notice should be taken of the uniformly excellent sales campaigns conducted by the exchanges and it was decided to let this recognition take the form of handsome oil paintings of the stars.

No announcement of the firm's intentions was permitted to leak out, but early this week, National Photographers, Inc., who had been commissioned to make up the oil paintings, shipped out to each exchange handling the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr. series, a colorful portrait of each star in a suitable gold frame. With each picture went a card, "Compliments of Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation," without other comment.

Since the receipt of the paintings, letters and telegrams have been pouring in on Louis Weiss from the numerous exchanges, expressing in enthusiastic terms their acknowledgment and appreciation of the star portraits. As one exchangeman put it:

"Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr. have been our best bets this season among the list of 'Westerns' we are handling, and have stood up in fine shape against the best features of this kind distributed by any of our competitors. With these handsome oil paintings of the stars hung in our outer office, which was the first thing we did with them after receipt, we believe that we can double the number of our bookings on these popular features, for the paintings will sell themselves to every exhibitor who visits this exchange."

Vitagraph Exchanges Receive a Wire From President Smith

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, who returned to New York recently from London, where he attended the English premiere of "Captain Blood," left almost immediately for the Pacific coast. He was accompanied by Mrs. Smith, known on the screen as Jean Paige, and expects to be away until after January 1.

At Hollywood, Mr. Smith will confer with Vitagraph directors regarding production plans for future pictures on Vitagraph's 1924-25 schedule. Among the earliest of these are Basil King's "In the Garden of Charity," to be produced by J. Stuart Blackton, and James Oliver Curwood's "Baree, Son of Kazan," which is to be a David Smith production.

Work on the "Redeeming Sin," starring Mme. Alla Nazimova, and directed by Mr. Blackton, and "Pampered Youth," from Booth Tarkington's "The Magnificent Ambersons," which David Smith is making, already is well under way.

Before leaving for the West, President Smith sent the following telegram to each of the twenty-nine branch managers of Vitagraph:

"Have just returned from London. 'Captain Blood' is the greatest motion picture smash that has been shown in Great Britain since 1907, when Vitagraph opened first foreign office ever established by an American producer.

"John B. Rock, general manager, reports to me forward steps Vitagraph has taken in this brief six months of 1924-25 season. Congratulations to every one in organization. In 'Captain Blood,' 'The Clean Heart' or 'The Cruelties of Life,' 'The Beloved Brute,' already released; Nazimova in 'The Redeeming Sin,' and 'Pampered Youth,' now being produced by J. Stuart Blackton and David Smith, respectively, as well as 'Greater Than Marriage,' Victor Hugo Halperin's special, and Whitman Bennett's 'Two Shall Be Born,' production department is keeping pace with you."

"Our Gang" in "The Big Town"

Hal Roach's Rascals To Be Seen in New York City Locale

Pathe announces this week that the "Our Gang" comedy, just completed under the title of "In New York," has been given the permanent release title of "The Big Town."

Heretofore Hal Roach's aggregation of rascals have confined their mischievous exploits to their native West, but in this production New York City settings serve as their playground. The Brooklyn Bridge and the East River, with its far-famed skyline, appear in the background. Robert McGowan directed the production.

Marion Davies in Cosmopolitan's "Janice Meredith," released by Metro-Goldwyn.

"The Last Man on Earth," Fox Surprise Picture on New List

REPORTS from Fox Film Corporation bookers to the main office indicate an unusual demand on the part of exhibitors for the farcical novelty special production, "The Last Man on Earth," an adaptation by that concern from John D. Swain's screamingly humorous imaginative story of a manless world, which appeared in Munsey's Magazine.

Although expected by officials of the company to do a big business because of its claim to being really "something different," the reports at hand at the present writing indicate it will go far beyond all expectations.

An idea of its appeal can be gleaned from a glance at the number of important first-run houses which have booked it for extensive runs.

For instance, in the South the Temple Theatre in Birmingham, Ala., the Tivoli, Rialto or York in Chattanooga, Tenn., the Arcade, Imperial or Republic in Jacksonville, Fla., the Riveria, Imperial or Queen in Knoxville, Tenn., and the Alhambra in Charlotte, N. C., have all booked this "surprise" picture for early playdates.

In the Middle West early playdates on the picture have been booked by the Dreamland Theatre in Columbus, O., the Strand in Huntington, Va., the Mozart in Canton, O., the Rivoli in Toledo, O., Leade's Hippodrome in Cleveland, O., the American in Evansville, Ind., the Alamo in Louisville, Ky., the Pantages in Minneapolis, Minn., and the Palace in Des Moines, Ia.

From the Dallas Exchange in the Southwest, the Hancock Opera House in Austin, the Wigwam in El Paso, the Odeon in Fort Worth and the Iris in Houston have booked the remarkable picture for playdates assuring its presentation to the public of these cities in short order.

In the New England and Atlantic states the same demand is noticeable and there is the Emery Theatre in Providence, R. I., the Strand in Worcester, Mass., the Victoria in Rochester, N. Y., the Arcadia in Reading, Pa., the Rialto in Erie, Pa., and the State and Blackstone in Pittsburgh, Pa., which have booked this special to lure the crowds during the holiday season.

From the West, although it just has been put on the salesmen's list there, comes the report that the "Last Man" has been booked by the Goddards Theatre in Sacramento, Calif., the American in Butte, Mont., the Helig in Seattle, Wash., and the Class A in Spokane, Wash.

Among the smaller theatres throughout the country the salesmen with this picture find a hearty welcome from the exhibitors.

The story deals with the denuding of the world of its male population by a plague called "masculitis." The year 1950 finds a frantic feminine world sending expeditions to the far corners of the earth with the hope of finding a male who escaped the dreaded scourge. Expedition after expedition meets with failure and hope is abandoned when "Red" Sal, a gangster of that future day and year, flying from New York to Chicago, has trouble with her plane and is forced to land in a mountainous region, where to her great surprise she discovers a healthy looking young artist.

Repairing her plane she hastens to her underworld haunts and organizes an expedition to capture the "last man." This she succeeds in doing. He is brought back to the underworld where his disposal is discussed amid many humorous situations. It is finally decided to auction him off. As a result of this step he becomes the property of the U. S. Government. What to do with him proves as big a problem to the Government as it did to the gangster and a prizefight between two beautiful and healthy senatoresses is finally decided on, winner to get the only remaining male specimen in marriage.

The fight takes place, the winner is declared when the "last man" espies his childhood sweetheart in the audience. It is this girl, who, in a prologue to the picture, caused the "last man" to become a hermit by declaring she wouldn't marry him if he was the last man on earth. Notwithstanding, the now much coveted "last man" jumps into her arms and declares she is the only woman he will marry. As there is no way of revising his decision, it is agreed to.

A final fadeout shows an ultra-modern news service broadcasting the announcement that the "last man" and his bride have been blest with twins.

Gus Schlesinger Reports

Warner Brothers Pictures Rapidly Selling Throughout the World

According to word just received from Gus Schlesinger, manager of Warner Bros. foreign department, who is now in Europe closing up several deals, the entire world will soon be sold on Warner Bros. product for 1924-1925. Bookings have already been arranged all over the globe with the exception of two or three minor countries, and, according to Schlesinger, these territories will be closed within the next week or so, putting the Screen Classics in every country where motion pictures are shown.

Schlesinger states that the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands have all been booked through the Gaumont Co., of London. Australia, New Zealand, Dutch East Indies and Strait Settlements through Australasian Films, Ltd.; Scandinavia and Finland through Ernest Mattson, Inc., who buys for Svensk Filmindustri; South Africa through the International Variety and Theatre Agency; Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Russia, Baltic States, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia and Holland through Paul Davidson, of Berlin, Japan through Tassho Film Co. Ltd. and China through S. Hertzberg, of Shanghai.

Several of these firms having been taking Warner Bros. product since their first picture "School Days," and are the first each year to inquire about the new pictures. Mr. Schlesinger is expected to remain abroad for several more weeks, and upon his return will have the world solid for Warner Bros.

Big Chicago First Run

"Mine With the Iron Door" to Be Shown at the Randolph

Harold Bell Wright's "The Mine With the Iron Door," a Principal Pictures Master Attraction, will have a big first-run in Chicago at the Randolph Theatre, State and Randolph streets. Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal, closed a deal by which the picture opens at the Randolph on December 14 and will be shown there for an indefinite period.

Elaborate arrangements have been made for the run. A big prologue will be staged and the picture will be heavily advertised and exploited. Ted Malone, of Principal's exploitation staff, will handle the details of the Chicago run under the supervision of Mr. Lesser.

"The Hunted Woman"

Work Started on Curwood Story in Fox West Coast Studios

Production has started at the Fox Film Corporation West Coast Studios on "The Hunted Woman" from the novel by James Oliver Curwood, with Seena Owen and Earl Schenck in the leading roles. John Conway, who directed "The Roughneck," is directing the screening of the Curwood novel.

Diana Miller, who is winning a name for herself in "heavy" roles, has this kind of a part in the new production. Others playing important character roles are Cyril Chadwick, Francis MacDonald, Harvey Clark and Edward Piel.

"The Hunted Woman" is a story of the Canadian lumber camps. This territory, which surrounds Hudson Bay, is really the last frontier on the northern continent of the western hemisphere and it is rich with romance and adventure.

Passed up by all the modern writers of fiction, it was left to Mr. Curwood to "discover," and it has justified his faith by inspiring him to some of the most interesting fiction published. Of these, "The Hunted Woman" has been hailed by critics and public alike as the best.

"The Hunted Woman" is scheduled for release in the latter part of January.

New Title For Racing Film

"The Dixie Handicap" Picked as Name for for Next Barker Production for Metro

"The Dixie Handicap" has been settled on as the title of Reginald Barker's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, originally called "Dixie." It is a Gerald Beaumont racing story of Kentucky, with Frank Keenan, Claire Windsor and Lloyd Hughes in the leads. Barker completed shooting a short while ago, after racing scenes were filmed at Latonia, Kentucky, and the picture is now in the cutting room being edited for release.

Argentina Sequences

A slight change will be made in the screen version of "The Dancers," the New York and London stage success now in the course of production at the Fox Film Corporation West Coast studios. Scenes that in the stage presentation were laid in the Canadian northwest will have the more romentic background of the Argentine Republic in the picture which is being directed by Emmett Flynn. Walter McGrail and Noble Johnson have been added to the cast.

"Romola's" Great Beauty Fascinated N. Y. Critics

BEFORE a distinguished audience Lillian Gish's long-awaited appearance in Henry King's Inspiration production of "Romola," with Dorothy Gish, occurred on December 1 at the George M. Cohan Theatre in New York. "Romola" is a Metro-Goldwyn picture, based on George Eliot's greatest novel, and it was acclaimed by metropolitan critics.

There was a large delegation of film stars. Marcus Loew, Adolph Zukor, Joseph M. Schenck, Edward M. Bowes, William E. Atkinson, Jesse L. Lasky, Harry Rapf, Hiram Abrams, Nicholas M. Schenck, David L. Loew, Leopold Friedman, Charles K. Stern, Arthur M. Loew, David B. Bernstein, J. Robert Rubin, Charles C. Moskowitz and Messmore Kendall were among the prominent executives in the industry who were present.

After the opening night it was reported that the remainder of the week was then practically sold out.

"Personally, I like 'Romola' better than 'The White Sister,'" said Louella Parsons in the New York American the morning after the premiere. As the story was filmed on the actual locale at Florence, Italy, the unrivaled beauty of the settings received marked comment from the press, Miss Parsons said, "The scenery in 'Romola' will please the most fastidious and act as a tonic for those who believe films the lowest form of art."

"It seems a perfect product," was the praise of Harriette Underhill in the New York Herald Tribune, adding that, "it represents the art of the cinema in its highest form."

Mordaunt Hall in the New York Times wrote: "This is a film to be remembered, and the gorgeous scenes will never be forgotten."

"To the end the charm of the Gishes hold one," wrote the reviewer of the New York Morning World, calling it "amazingly wondrous to behold," adding that "the mob scenes are excellently done," and stating that "the aesthetic pleasure of admiring the profile of Lillian is almost enough for one picture."

"An ambitious picture," was Mildred Spain's endorsement in the New York Daily News, adding that the picture "boasts the rich tale by George Eliot, superb photography, able direction, noteworthy backgrounds."

"Henry King has produced a lovely work of art," said the New York Evening Post, adding that many shots are "lovelier than words can describe."

Greiver Gets Rights

To Handle Harold Bell Wright Films in Chicago Territory

Si Greiver, of Greiver Productions, 831 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, has just closed a deal by which he will handle the works of Harold Bell Wright for the Chicago territory, according to an announcement made this week by Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures Corporation, which is producing the Wright stories. Details of the Chicago deal were worked out by Harry Rathner, special representative of Principal Pictures.

"I feel proud of my achievement in getting Harold Bell Wright's 'The Mine with the Iron Door' and 'The Re-Creation of Brian Kent,'" Mr. Greiver wrote to Irving Lesser after the deal had been closed. "These are truly wonderful box office attractions and are especially adapted to my territory, where Mr. Wright has a tremendous following. Statistics prepared by the public library here show that Harold Bell Wright's works are the most in demand. We are going to back up our bookings on 'The Mine with the Iron Door' in every way."

Warner Brothers Confer

Abe Warner is on his way back from the coast where he has been for the last two weeks looking over production with H. W. Warner. Instead of returning direct to the New York office, he will stop off in Pittsburgh where he will be joined on Saturday by Sam Warner and Sam Morris from the home office, who left Thursday to look over sales conditions in the Pittsburgh territory.

Grauman Books Lillian Gish in "Romola" for Hollywood

ONE week after its world premiere at the George M. Cohan Theatre in New York, the Lillian and Dorothy Gish special, "Romola," will go into Sid Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood, for a long run starting December 8.

Sid Grauman plans to give Henry King's new Inspiration production, distributed by Metro-Goldwyn, the most elaborate prologue he has staged in the Egyptian Theatre. As the Egyptian prologues are famous for their lavish beauty, Mr. Grauman's intention in regard to "Romola" indicates that the production is expected to achieve a record run there.

With "Romola" playing at both ends of the country at the same time, the publicity from these two engagements is expected to "cover" the entire United States territory in which the picture will afterward play.

"Romola" has an immense audience waiting for it, as the George Eliot novel on which the picture is based is one of the most famous standard books, and the reunion of Lillian and Dorothy Gish in the picture is counted on to prove a big draw. Dorothy has a featured role in the production in which Lillian is the star.

"Romola" was filmed in Florence, Italy, more than a year being required for the massive production, which abounds in spectacular features.

"Lady of the Night" Fourth of Banner Big 4 Series

GEORGE H. DAVIS and Samuel J. Briskin, the directing heads of Banner Productions, Inc., announced early this week that "Daughters Who Pay," originally scheduled for release as the fourth and last of the Banner Big Four series, will be retitled "Lady of the Night," and will go into production at the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers on December 20.

The decision to make the change in title, it is said, was brought about because of the possible confusion in the minds of the public and exhibitors between "Daughters Who Pay" and the title of a feature about to be released by another company The Banner officials also feel that the new title is more fully descriptive of the story, which is a society melodrama with many novel and unusual situations, calling for the maximum of technical and artistic direction and scenic effects.

William B. Laub is at work on the adaptation of the story, having already prepared the action plot, which received the approval of the Banner officials. Casting on "Lady Of The Night," which will be produced with talent of unquestionable box office quality, in accordance with Banner's established policy on all their pictures, will be begun at once.

"Lady Of The Night" will follow "Those Who Judge" and "Three Keys" on the Banner release program, the last named of which was produced by Ben Verschleiser, under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint.

An Unusual Tribute

An unusual tribute was paid Florence Vidor's ability as a box office attraction when four of Cleveland's first run houses, the Circle, the Allen, the Park and the Mall, simultaneously presented features in which the new Thomas H. Ince star plays the lead, "Barbara Freitchie," "Husband and Lovers" and "Christine of the Hungry Heart."

The Cleveland newspapers devoted a good deal of space to this unusual feat. "It isn't often one actress plays the lead in three new pictures shown in one week," declared the Cleveland News.

Schulberg Signs Director Hogan

James P. Hogan has been signed to produce a series of pictures for Preferred, B. P. Schulberg announces. Hogan is now directing the Schulberg special, "Capital Punishment," with Elliott Dexter and Clara Bow.

Betty Blythe in Fox Film

Famous "Queen of Sheba" Has Heavy Role in Elvey Picture

Memories of the triumph of Betty Blythe in the "Queen of Sheba," are recalled by the announcement by Fox Film Corporation that the popular actress has been signed to play an important part in that company's special production, "Folly of Vanity," now in production at its West Coast Studios under the direction of Maurice Elvey, the English director.

Miss Blythe is cast as a "heavy," "Mrs. Ridgeway," a beautiful and scheming matron, who makes things hot for Billie Dove and Jack Mulhall, playing the leading roles, throughout the modern sequence of the picture.

"Folly of Vanity" has an allegorical sequence directed by Henry Otto. Billie Dove has the lead in the allegory, but Miss Blythe and Mr. Mulhall do not enter until the modern story begins.

Lewis Stone and Alice Terry

Cast for Leading Roles in Metro-Goldwyn's "Kings in Exile"

Lewis Stone will appear in a leading role opposite Alice Terry in Victor Seastrom's next Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer production, "Kings in Exile," it was announced this week. Eugenie Besserer has also been added to the production, on which filming has already been started. This is the first time Stone has appeared with Miss Terry since Rex Ingram's sensationally successful "Scaramouche." Both players are particularly suited to roles in the screen version of Alphonse Daudet's famous novel, adapted for the screen by Agnes Christine Johnston.

John Bowers also has been assigned a leading role in the new Seastrom picture.

Stonehouse in Radio Talk

Ruth Stonehouse, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer screen actress, in a radio talk in Minneapolis (WCCO) last week, discussed the crisis in Hollywood caused by girls from all parts of the United States flocking to the Coast to play in pictures. Miss Stonehouse, herself a screen star, advised the girls to stay at home, and gave details of the situation created by the making of fewer pictures and the multiplicity of players now on the idle list in the film capital. Miss Stonehouse is one of the featured players in "Broken Barriers," and while in Minneapolis she made a personal appearance at the new Lyceum Theatre, where the picture was shown.

George O'Brien Presented by Wm. Fox as a Star in Service's "Roughneck"

GEORGE O'BRIEN in his first starring vehicle, the screen version of Robert W. Service's novel, "The Roughneck," was presented by Fox Film Corporation at the Central Theatre on Broadway on Monday, December 1.

Succeeding another Fox production, "Dante's Inferno," which concluded a successful run of nine weeks, the initial O'Brien starring film started off in a blaze of glory to an enthusiastic and capacity audience. It promises to be the Christmas special of the town, for it received warm praise from the critics and public alike.

O'Brien was seen in "The Man Who Came Back," also a Fox production, which preceded "Inferno" at the Central.

O'Brien's achieving of stardom is one of the romances of the screen. Starting as a camera carrier for Tom Mix, a little over three years ago, this smiling youngster has gamely climbed the ladder to screen fame in so short a time that his story reads like an imaginative bit of fiction.

In order to exploit the picture effectively enough to attract the bland eye of Broadway, the Central Theatre lobby was transformed into a scene on the south seas. The effect was so realistic that with but little imagination, the raw wind that swept up from the East River was forgotten and the slate sky over New York likewise. The trick was not merely a matter of green foliage and palm trees, but by means of clever cut-outs and well done paintings, some of the girls stopped traffic.

Harry Morey at Premiere

Harry T. Morey, who plays the role of "Mad Marrat," a domineering, two-fisted villain of the Pacific, came from California, to attend the opening.

WILLIAM FOX

Whose ability to distinguish and develop to stardom the promising players of the screen has been proved again by his elevation of George O'Brien to be a star in Fox pictures

Billie Dove, as "Felicity Arden," the beautiful artist who wanders to the south seas for local color, not only appears to be exactly what she is intended, but she acts her part with fine sympathy. Cleon Madison, as "Ann Delany," the pitiful victim of "Mad Marrat," plays with her usual ability. Others in the cast are Charles A. Sellon, as "Sam Meldon"; Anne Cornwall as "Zelle," the girl of the south sea island; Harvey Clark, as the funny fight promoter; Maryon Aye as "Marrat's girl"; Edna Eichnor, as "Zamina," a native girl, and "Buddy" Smith, as "Jerry Delaney at three."

That the new Fox star has made a success of his first opportunity to star in a picture is proved by the unanimous favorable criticisms appearing in the metropolitan papers following the first night showing. Excerpts from these follows:

What the Critics Say

Harriette Underhill, in the Herald Tribune: "'The Roughneck' makes an absorbing picture. We know nothing about the merits of the original, as conceived by Robert W. Service, but we doubt if it could be as good in the pages as it is on the screen."

Dorothy Herzog, in the Daily Mirror: "The action crescendoes to a feverish climax."

Louella O. Parsons, in the American: "As far as I can see there is no reason in the world why William Fox will not make money at the Central Theatre with 'The Roughneck.' If the author neglected to describe any human emotion I did not notice it. John Conway, the director, must have decided that he would give William Fox value received, so he added several touches of spice to this thrilling melodrama. O'Brien is a young man who grows on one and gradually wins favor. He seems to have so much natural common sense that any scene in which he appears, no matter how ridiculous, seems sane and right when he plays it."

Rose Pelswick, in the Journal: "There is a great deal of action in the photoplay. The scenery is gorgeous, and, even though there aren't as many of them as there was in 'Dante's Inferno' the girls of the ensemble are attractive."

"The Roughneck" gives O'Brien a remarkable opportunity and he scores on every point. This was true of the balance of the cast, according to New York opinion.

Robert W. Service, of course, known for his book of poems, "The Spell of the Yukon" and other stories, adds materially to the drawing power of the production. John Conway, who directed it, caught the spirit of the tropics and his cast worked in unison. "The Roughneck" rates as one of the best films in New York and it is only a few days old.

HELENE CHADWICK
Who stars in "The Dark Swan," a Warner Brothers' production.

Helene Chadwick's Artistry in "Dark Swan" Scores Hit

THAT the important art of make-up and subtle expression is not a lost one, is evidenced every once in a while in pictures when a player rises to an opportunity, and makes a part stand out so cameo-like by the sheer submersion of her personality into the character, that the audience is given a delightful thrill and the newspapers rise up and take notice.

When this takes place, the exhibitor can make a mental note that the entertainment value of that particular picture has been raised fifty per cent, and his patrons are going to have something to talk about.

The subtle characterization of Helene Chadwick as Cornelia in Warner Bros. "The Dark Swan," which had its premiere at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York City, recently, came in for a lot of favorable comment from the people who paid to see it, and attracted the attention of the New York press.

Here is an instance that shows just what an individual player can do to raise the entertainment value of a production, and how quick the public is to notice a fine bit of artistry.

Miss Chadwick was given this difficult role of the dark swan, calling for the complete suppression of her natural loveliness, and a delicate shading of the character so that while she would not appear absolutely ugly, she would be so plain that no man would notice her when more attractive women were present.

For Miss Chadwick, who is one of the prettiest women on the screen, to accomplish this seemed impossible, and she was called on to bring all her artistry into play to make this part live. But she succeeded, and as the story unwound, she forced the audience to believe that she is the plainest thing in the world; a colorless heroine who just happened to screen well. She fooled everyone completely as regards the true state of her personal appearance.

The New York papers were unanimous in their praise of her characterization, stating that they never had seen her so happily cast, and that heretofore she had been wasted.

Delighted Author Radios Opinion of "Dark Swan"

SO unusual is it to find an author who is absolutely satisfied with the way his story is adapted for the screen, that when it really occurs it is worth broadcasting to the world, as actually happened in the case of Ernest Pascal, author of "The Dark Swan," which had its world premier at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, on Saturday, November 22.

Incidentally Warner Bros. and the Piccadilly secured some fine radio advertising, because the author was so delighted with the way his novel had been screened that he not only called at Warner Bros. office and congratulated them on the fine way they had visualized the characters of his novel, but insisted that he be permitted to "tell the world" what a fine picture it was by means of the radio.

Arrangements were made by Station WGBS, at the Piccadilly Theatre, to have Mr. Pascal talk on Thursday night, November 20. He did so, telling his audience just how he came to write the bok, how the characters grew in his mind and (this was the big point!) how they actually "grew into life" when he saw them presented in the Warner Bros. picture.

This was exploitation, but not baldly so, as Mr. Pascal is really enthusiastic about the screen adaptation, and gave an entertaining talk on the methods of authors. In fact it was so interesting that telephone requests came in the next day for a repetition of the talk, and he again broadcasted from the same station on last Sunday evening.

Hoffman Signs Gladys Hulette

Gladys Hulette, who is now working in the Renaud Hoffman production "On The Threshold," has been signed by Hoffman for feature roles in all four of the pictures he will produce for release by Producers Distributing Corporation during the coming season.

Cast of "Adventurous Sex"

Howard Estabrook's Second Production Listed for Release February 1

Associated Exhibitors this week announce that Howard Estabrook's second production "The Adventurous Sex" will be released February 1.

In addition, they announce the entire cast of the production which consists of Clara Bow, Herbert Rawlinson, Earle Williams, Harry T. Morey, Flora Finch, Lillian Beck, Edna Giblyn, Joseph Burke, Doris Freeman, Mae Atwood, Wilton Lackaye, Jr., George De Carlton and Alton Hamilton.

Charles Giblyn handled the direction from an adaptation made my Carl S. Clancy from the story written by Hamilton Mannon. The editing was done by Bert Seibel. The entire production was supervised by Howard Estabrook.

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Shutters

Maurice E. Clark, Projectionist Grenada Opera House, Grenada, Miss., grabs his argumentative war club, gives it a preliminary swing or two, and bats the following in my general direction:

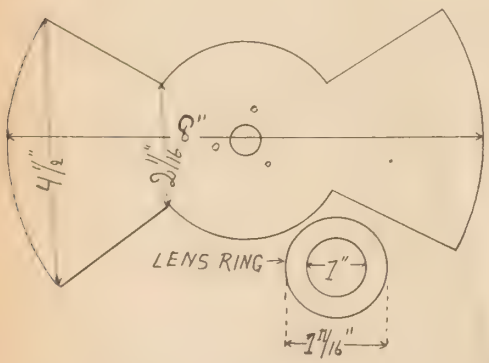
Having concluded the reading of brother John Maurer's letter, page 182, November 8 issue, and your remarks concerning same, I think it high time that "One of Us" stand forth on his two hind feet and give vent to his, or her long pent-up feelings in this matter.

Attached find copy of an article I wrote, which was published in the Exhibitors Trade Review in 1921. I am glad that after three years some one is found who coincides with my views in the matter of taking advantage of the blocked-down light beam by reducing the rotating shutter blade by the additional amount such procedure makes possible.

Until January, 1924, I used A. C. at the arc, and the 2-wing shutter and a lens ring like inclosed sample, achieving results with 60 amperes which compared favorably with any projection in this territory where not to exceed 75 amps D. C., and the rotating shutter supplied by the projector manufacturer employed was used.

Since February last I have been using D. C. from a double arc Hertner Transverter. Use from 50 to 60 amperes, according to film density, and have used the same 2-wing shutter and lens ring employed with A. C. arc. My picture is twice as good as formerly, with no flicker when the machines (Mean projectors, don't you?—Ed.) averaging around 80 feet of film per minute. Powers projectors are used.

When I changed to D. C. I started all over again experimenting with both 2 and 3-wing master blade widths, but found best results were had from same one used with A. C. Can you beat it?



I am submitting, for your examination and consideration, one of these shutters and the lens ring, made to fit my local conditions, which are:

Crater to collector lens (50-60 amperes D. C.)	3.5"
Collector plano convex, focal length.	6.5"
Converging lens plano convex, focal length	6.5"
Distance face of converging lens to aperture	15.5"
Projection lens Bausch & Lomb, diameter	1⅜"
Projection lens equivalent focus	4.5"
Projection lens working distance	2 15/16"
Shutter aerial image. (Meaning at aerial image, I think.—Ed.)
Propection distance	17'
Picture size	14'x10' 6"

Am also enclosing a chart showing increase in light gained by using the shutter and lens ring, as against the shutter supplied by projector manufacturer, used with unblocked light beam. I hope some of the other men will also wake up, and give their views on this and other pertinent topics relating to projection a breath of air. Oh, yes, by the way: our auditorium is sixty feet wide by eighty long, semi-dark and seats 650.

Unless I am in error, brother Clark, this department has many times advocated blocking down the front end of the projection lens to the actual effective beam, and it has always advocated reducing the master blade to its lowest possible width. However, I am not sure now whether we have ever dealt with the matter from exactly the angle you have presented.

I have but one or two suggestions to make, and will then let others deal with it, as I would far, far rather YOU folks did that, since that is the real, fundamental purpose of this department—to get YOU to discuss matters, and thus gain real knowledge of them.

The ring should be at the front end of the projection lens. It should not cut into the effective light beam at all, but should come right up to it. It should be painted dead (non-gloss) black on its interior surface, so as to avoid reflecting light back into the lens.

Determining Diameter

The diameter of the effective light beam may be ascertained by holding a sheet of writing paper against the front end of the lens, preferably while a film is being projected, outlining the beam diameter upon it with a soft pencil, and from this pattern the actual stop ring may be made of any suitable material.

Friend Clark also sent a drawing of a shutter showing that there was an increase in light of twenty per cent as against the regular stock shutter which is sent with the projectors.

This increase may or may not all be due to the stopping down of the lens. It is quite possible the shutter blades were too wide in any event for the local conditions. As I have repeatedly pointed out, the projector manufacturer is COMPELLED by circumstances to send with the projector a shutter which will cover the WORST average condition, else he would be in hot water all the time. It is up to the projectionist to trim the shutter blades to fit the local condition. I was much amazed some years since when I visited Memphis, Tenn. I visited a projection room, and saw at a glance that the shutter blades were, in all human probability, too wide for the conditions present. I spoke to the projectionist, who evidently did NOT like Richardson a' tall, about it, only to get this reply: "Huh! I reckon you think you know more about what shutter them machines ought t' have than the comp'ny that made um!" And as he said it the look of utter scorn on his face was good to see. I was supposed to be properly squelched, I suppose. It was to laugh!

His Ignorance Revealed

I did not bother explaining that the "comp'ny that made um" did not know anything at all about the conditions they would work under. I was there and could know the conditions they did work under, hence could very well know very much more about it than the manufacturer. The absurdity of his reply was so great that the incident stuck in my mind all these years. He did not know it, but his reply was highly illustrative of what he did NOT know about his business.

Brother Clark's figures, as I understand them, are that the stock shutter has 165 degrees of blade, while the total blades of the trimmed shutters he uses in their stead is but 145 degrees—truly a worth-while addition to screen illumination. It would mean an addition of twenty per cent to the screen brilliancy—one-fifth more screen brilliancy.

Brother Griffith?

There, darn it! I was only going to say a few words, and here I've said oodles and gobs of 'em. Well, you know how it is when you get talking on a subject you're interested in!

I think we had better let Brother Griffith comment on the why and wherefore of the best results being had with A. C. and D. C. with equal shutter width and lens ring opening. I am not certain as to whether or not the difference in diameter of light source would alter diameter of aerial image, but I don't think it would. In fact I don't see how it could, and if it does not, and your shutter is at plane of aerial image, then the shutter and lens ring opening which was best for one would be best for the other.

Bluebook School

Question No. 171—What is meant by "interfering light?" Name its various causes or sources.

Question No. 172.—Explain how you would test your screen for interfering light.

Question No. 173—Explain to us your ideas as to why the projectionist should make a close study of screen surfaces.

Question No. 174—Name the chief fundamental requirements of a screen surface. This is perhaps to a considerable extent the repetition of a former question, but the matter is of such great importance that it is justified. Watch your step. This question involves quite a few things you may miss unless you use your thinker.

Question No. 175—What kind of material should be used for a cloth screen, and tell us why (here is one to use your brains on) even this material is not good for a screen surface, as compared to other materials used?

Bluebook School—Answers 143—147

Question No. 143—Explain what effect a sharp side angle view of the screen has on the apparent shape of objects thereon, and tell us why it has that effect.

I only find correct answers to this series of questions from very few. Only A. F. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.; Chas. Armentrout, Mason City, Ia.; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. D.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Ia., and G. T. Allbright, San Francisco, Cal., have made good on No. 143.

Incidentally I find that several of the men are sending in replies too late for consideration. Constantino sent in a big bunch last week, but they were all too late for use, as the answers to the questions dealt with had already been gone over and the whole thing was down at the printer's.

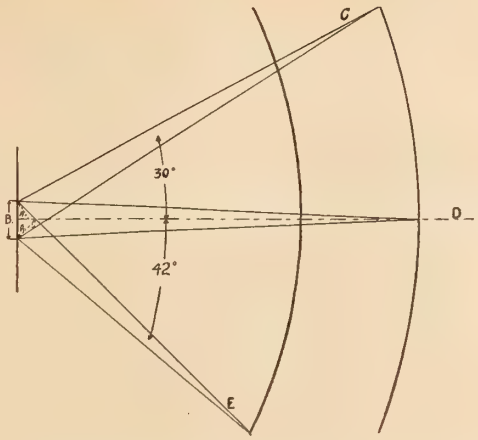
Armentrout's reply to 143 puzzled me a bit, because he sets up the item of distance as having an effect on the distortion due to side view. After thinking the matter over, however, I don't believe he is correct in this. Perhaps, as one advanced toward the screen, viewing angle remaining constant, there would be an apparent lessening of the effect, but if so I believe the distortion would be relatively the same. Can't see it any other way. Perhaps, too, I have misunderstood his meaning and he means distance of front row of seats from screen.

I believe, if Dobson will permit, I will publish Fell's reply, together with Dobson's drawing, answering Question 143. Here they are:

To a person seated at an extreme side angle to the screen surface, all figures thereon will appear to be abnormally tall and very thin. The effect of abnormal tallness is in part due to the foreshortening of the natural width of the object, because if we greatly decrease the width, the effect is to give the impression of greatly added height.

Figures on a motion picture screen are often very much taller than in real life. This is not realized by the one who has a full-front, undistorted view, because the figure is then in correct proportion. If, however, the breadth be foreshortened until the abnormally tall figure has only the width of the breadth of the normal, undistorted figure, the effect is that of a ridiculously tall, thin caricature of the original.

Arthur H. Gray, Projectionist, Lancaster Theatre, Boston, a man who respects his profession and believes it to be a profession—and an honorable one.



The drawing illustrates the distorted view the spectator seated at an angle has of figures on the screen. B is the full width of an object upon the screen, which same is the width one seated on line D would get. C and E, respectively, represent a 30 and 42 degree viewing angle. The width one seated on these angles would have would be the distance straight across from a line drawn from the eyes to both edges of the object viewed, the measurement to be taken from the edge of the object nearest the eye to the opposite line, as shown by dotted lines A A.

Hanover brings out one point no one else has touched upon, viz:

It will thus be seen that to the one seated in the extreme right end of the front row of seats (he has set up a condition where the extreme front seats give a heavy side viewing angle.—Ed.) the effect will be much worse on the left of the screen than on the right, whereas to the man seated to the left the exact opposite would be true. Also this latter effect would be greater with a large than with a small picture.

Question No. 144—Bennewitz says this is answered in his drawing, which, I think, is not altogether true. Fell answered briefly, though not completely. Hanover gave a very good reply and Armentrout did very well, but you may all take a rubber at the following, by Allbright, whom I hope will remain with us, though at this writing this is his only set of replies. He says:

To reply to question No. 144 exactly as it is asked would, it seems to me, not complete the matter. First of all I would make a drawing like the one attached, only I would make it exactly to conform to the conditions—to exact scale. As I have drawn it, the object measures exactly 1 11-32 inches wide in the drawing, which is of course intended to represent a figure several feet wide on the actual screen. As it now is the distortion viewed by one seated in position 3, which is presumed to be the end seat of the front row, would be as five-eighths is to 1 11-32, or as 20-32 is to 43-32, or as 20 is to 43. From viewing position 1 the distortion would be (through the same process of reduction) as 25 is to 43.

In other words, I would thus show my employer, in a way which could not be disputed or questioned, that viewing position 3 would reduce the apparent width of an object in the center of the screen by a trifle more than half, whereas position 1 would improve this condition materially, giving an apparent width of as much more than one-half the actual width as the difference between 43 and 50, with 25 as the base.

If any such condition as the drawing illustrates were actually proposed I probably would be able to convince my employer that such a condition would be very bad indeed, and probably induce him not to undertake it. X, of course, shows full front viewing position.

Question No. 145—What effect would distance of front row of seats from screen have on viewing angle?

All the before named, plus A. L. Hornby, Lowell, Mass., who for some reason answered this one question, and no other, agree that under any given set of conditions the greater the distance of the front row of seats from the screen the less would be the viewing angle, and vice versa, though Hanover stubbed his toe a bit by saying it would make no difference as to the seats which were central with the screen, meaning, of course, central with the center of the screen. This is not strictly correct, friend Hanover, because no seat can possibly be central with any but a very small portion of the width of the screen, and while your comment on this may be considered as correct in practice, still when it comes right down to brass tacks there is viewing angle from all seats, as applies to at least a portion of the screen. Of course it is not sufficient from a seat opposite center of the screen to set up perceptible distortion, but it is there just the same.

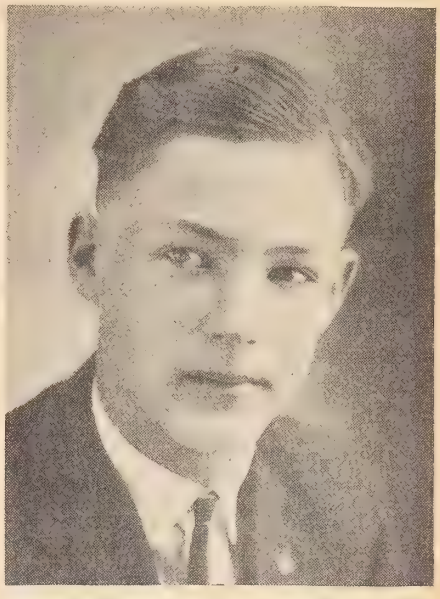
Question No. 146—Why is it that objects appear abnormally tall when viewed from a heavy side angle?

This question was answered in the answer to Question 143.

Question No. 147—Exactly what is a keystone effect, and is there more than one kind?

All those before named, except friend Hornby, made answer correctly, but Hanover made the best one. He said:

When the projection lens is exactly opposite the center of a screen, then all rays



Introducing Karl H. Sommermeyer, Projectionist, Amuzu Theatre, Marrietta, Minnesota. Don't seem to have any gray hairs, but a mighty clean cut looking chap, don't you think?

from it must travel exactly the same distance in order to reach the center of the screen, or any portion of the screen a given distance from its center. Under this condition there is, of course, no distortion of the screen image.

When the lens is placed out of center with the center of the screen, then it follows that rays reaching the various portions of the screen a given distance from its center must travel different distances, and since the beam as a whole diverges, or spreads out, and the amount of spreading is exactly proportional to the distance traveled, it follows that that portion of the beam which must travel the farthest in order to reach the screen surface will spread out more than the portions which travel a less distance. This of course will make either one side wider than the other, if the lens be placed to one side of the screen center, or will make the bottom of the picture wider than the top if the lens be placed above the screen center, and this is called "keystone" effect, because it resembles the shape of the keystone of an arch.

There are two kinds of keystone effects in motion picture practice, viz: The up and down and the sidewise, though it is possible to mix the two by placing the lens both above or below and to one side of the screen center.

I like this answer, because it leaves no doubt but that the one who made it thoroughly understands the principles underlying the whole matter. I have not the slightest doubt but that Bennewitz, Armentrout and Fell do, too, but just the same that fact is not proved by their answers, even though they are correct enough as to their actual wording.

And thus endeth the lesson, BUT if you chaps want this school to continue you gotta do YOUR part and get your answers in, and in better time, too, by heck. I'm willing to do my part, but just the same I've oodles of things besides the school to attend to, believe you me, and unless enough of you care enough about having it kept going to not let the replies, or the correct ones, anyhow, dwindle down to less than half a dozen at ANY time, why, that's that.

I know—not guess, but KNOW that a very large number of men are religiously following the Bluebook School who never even think of sending in answers. Well, that may be all right, in a way, but just the same they are NOT doing their share. If everyone pulled that stunt, then real pronto there would not be any Bluebook school. Get busy, if you want me to keep busy—on this matter, anyhow!

By the way, I just noticed that way down at the extreme end of everything else Bennewitz remarks that the amount of reduction in width (question No. 144) of object may be found by dividing A (distance across the beam) by distance B (width of object on screen). This will give percentage of reduction in apparent width.

Playing Hookey

P. E. Thomas sends an excellent cartoon, and this letter:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Glad to report that I'm through playing hookey from the Bluebook School. It is pleasing to know that "Teacher" has resumed his duties, and it is to be hoped that our excellent school will continue to cultivate fertile (???) soil. (The question marks are hisen.—Ed.) I trust you will pardon the a bit pertinent inquiry, but why don't our school enroll more students? Nope, I have that in reverse—why do not more pupils enroll in the school? Considering the very moderate tuition fee, and the liberal weekly payment plan—a two-cent stamp each week—I am inclined to think there is something terribly rotten, which does not concern that gran-n-nd country of Denmark. Golly, there must be a lotta diplomas hanging from walls of projection rooms of this country and Canada!

Horace Greely advised wisely, perhaps, when he said go west, but I regret conditions prevented you from giving matters in your home state, and my particular vicinity in particular, the once over while you were out here.

I, too, have been peering about, observing some B V D (better, vorser and d—m rotten) projection. I will say that Chicago motion picture theatres have darned good music—most of them I visited, anyhow. And, with the friend, Swede, Ay tank dad bane 'bout all, too!

Buffalo

Buffalo, New York (The East held charms for yours truly), deserves the prize for good projection, but good or bad makes little difference to the projectionist, because the man who gives bad gets just as much as he who strives for and attains excellence.

I feel that I owe brother Harry Dobson an apology. The sadness of the occasion which took me to Toronto made me disregard my projection connection, and that I was temporarily a near neighbor (87 Godfrey street) to my Canuck Brother and Country-best men in our "School." I expect to visit Toronto again in December, and if permissible, I'll slip over to the Palace Theatre and get my Bluebook schooling, as per usual.

On behalf of Brother Dobson, whom I can personally vouch for as a good scout, as well as a thoroughly capable projectionist, I'll take the liberty of inviting you to call upon him. He'll be glad to see you. Sorry you don't "make" New York City.

More Pupils?

As to why more men don't enroll, well, it is a queer situation. There are quite a few more answers (incorrect ones) each week than appear in the department, and I have evidence that the actual "class" is a very large one indeed, probably running well into the thousands. The letter of one good brother lies before me now. He says: "Frankly, Brother Richardson, I have many times felt ashamed that I have not sent in answers to the Bluebook school questions. The fact is, I am just plain afraid to. One does NOT like to expose his ignorance, you know. I never realized how very much I did not know about my business until, quite a while ago, I tackled some of the Bluebook questions, just out of pure curiosity. Then, like the cross word puzzle, they 'got' me. I nearly had heart failure when I saw how far from correct most of my answers were, and how many of the questions I just could not even make a decent stagger toward answering. I got a Bluebook real sudden. Had always rather turned my nose up at them, but friend nose came down with a jerk. I have organized a 'class' of four projectionists who live near me, and we are getting a lot of fun and benefit out of it. Even my wife and daughter have got in the game with us, to some extent. We four are all old timers, except one, who has been in the "game" only three years. We thought we knew a lot, but the conceit has been taken out of us already, and good and plenty, too."

And there you are! That is, I believe, the exact case with nearly everyone. They are "enrolled" all right, but feel afraid to send in answers, either fearing they will not be found correct, or that they cannot put their ideas into the right form in words.

I would have been delighted to visit you, but it just could not be done—and that's that.

Likes Mirror Arc

W. Gerard Craig, Durban, South Africa, in writing on another matter says:

Since writing you last I have installed two mirror arcs and am more than pleased with the results.

So you see the mirror arc is making headway, even in far-off Africa.

Film Damage!

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been conducting research work with relation to damage done to film in the course of projection, and the causes contributing thereto. I have, through the courtesy of the above-named corporation, been permitted to print a series of photographs which were taken under the direct supervision of Earl J. Dennison, to whom the work has been intrusted by the company.

I feel it is impossible to compliment either the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation or Mr. Dennison too highly. The work accomplished has very large practical value and should result in a great reduction of the entirely useless and utterly senseless damage done to film through wrong procedure, or perhaps through lack of proper procedure fits better, on the part of the projectionist, and through failure of exhibitors and theatre managers to provide suitable projector repair parts, plus a diminishing, but still present tendency to overspeed projection unreasonably, and thus set up great overstrain on the projector mechanism and upon the delicate film sprocket hole edges. This latter compels an excessive projector gate tension, which automatically tends to overload the sprocket hole edges.

With this prelude I shall print the first photographs, with Mr. Dennison's own comment appended to each picture.

MY OWN COMMENTS: It must not be forgotten that the dirty mechanism shown in plate No. 1 speaks eloquently of a careless, lazy, sloppy man in charge of projection. There is and can be no possible legitimate excuse for such a condition. Those worn sprocket teeth will add a hundred times the cost of a new sprocket to the overhead of

PLATE NO. 1

Above: Projector mechanism from a theatre in Tucson, Arizona. Note the badly worn sprocket teeth and the hole worn in the apron, or film guard. Also note the extremely dirty condition of the entire mechanism, which if it were kept clean and in proper adjustment would still pass film through without damage to same.

PLATE NO. 2

Left: This photograph shows corner fractures in perforations. This is a most common form of film damage. It is caused by excessive projection speed, together with too much tension at the aperture. However, film in this condition may still be used a good many times, if properly handled.

the industry (every cent of which must be paid by the combined theatre box offices, because the motion picture industry has no other form of income) through and by reason of damage to film. Also, don't forget that all such damage sets up heavy loss, other than the actual cost of replacement of films, because it operates to injure and decrease the box office value of every show of which the injured films form a part of the program thereafter, of course provided the damage be bad enough to injure screen results.

In viewing the photograph shown in plate No. 2, observe that the cracks are in the LOWER corners as the film is in the projector mechanism. This means that the cracks are caused by excessive pull, either by the upper or the intermittent sprocket. Since, except in very rare instances, excessive pull by the upper sprocket is caused by the upper reel sticking, the pull is intermittent only. These cracks are at every hole, and of about equal size, hence we may assume that the diagnosis of Mr. Dennison is entirely correct.

The Big Point

The big point, however, is this: These cracks are caused by excessive projection speed and too much gate tension, Mr. Dennison says. Granted, but we must not overlook the fact that excessive projection speed compels excessive gate, or aperture tension, and if only one reel, or one scene is run at speed largely in excess of normal, then the tension must be set to take care of that speed, and since it is impracticable to be changing tension (which is a thing which can only be very carefully done when an audience is not in the theatre) THEREAFTER ALL FILM, NO MATTER AT WHAT SPEED IT BE PROJECTED, MUST BE SUBJECTED TO THE HEAVY GATE TENSION MADE NECESSARY BY THE SHORT RUN AT HIGH SPEED.

MORAL: Don't project at high speed at ANY time.

An Absurdity

Recently the editor has had brought to his attention, from several sources, a small pink slip which is being, or was being sent out with each shipment of film to theatres in certain localities. In fact, in many cases there was one enclosed with each reel. This slip, I am advised, was put out first in the Los Angeles territory, though in that I may be in error.

The thing is a ridiculous absurdity. In the name of all that is wonderful where do these wiseacres get their ideas from? Don't they know anything at all about projection? If they don't, then why do they not call in some one who does before tackling the getting out of appeals or instructions to projectionists? Here is the wording of this particular "gem," which insofar as has to do with its wording, is something of a classic. I have seldom seen a document of its size in which so many "bulls" occur and which is so thoroughly misleading and bad.

The "Pink Slip"
IMPORTANT
Date 9-16-24

This film thoroughly inspected and is now in good physical condition.

Inspected by ———— ————.

Any complaints as to physical condition must be made immediately upon receipt, as the theatre owner will be held fully responsible for any and all damage after exhibition date, and collection will be made for the full amount of any damage to this print.

Operators—Attention

This film is now free from punch marks, or any other mutilations used by operators to denote reel ending. Any markings of any kind found in this film after its return to the exchange from your theatre, the operator and theatre (Meaning the man who operates the theatre?—Ed.) will be held fully responsible and subject to the fine and penalties imposed by the Operators' Local and Film Board of Trade.

The white leader at the end of each reel is to be used as your feel ending warning. Do not remove it under any circumstances.

Signed ———— ————.

Out of pure charity I have omitted the signature; also the number of local unions which have allowed their endorsement to be placed upon this monstrosity.

So there is to be a "leader" at the END of each reel now! Wull, wull, wull! Fine. I suppose the tail piece, or trailer, as it is promiscuously called, will hereafter be placed at the beginning of each reel, what? And this "white leader," which presumably means an opaque trailer, though it may be a transparent one, is to be the reel-ending warning, is it? How glorious. All the projectionist now has to do is wait until the "leader" trailer comes over the aperture and the screen goes dark, or the white, blinding light comes on it, and he will then be well advised that it is time to change over. How gloriously simple!

Of course this may seem a bit queer to the audience when a multpile reel production is being projected, but then who in (deleted by censor) cares what the audience thinks anyhow? If the audience don't like it they know where the door is.

Worse Still

But bad as is the dark-or-light-screen-between-each-reel stunt this "pink slip" proposes and in fact orders, there is very much worse to come. I have in my posession samples cut from a comedy in which one "splice" was made by the convenient pin-'em-together method. THIS REEL WAS ACCOMPANIED BY AN UNDATED PINK SLIP, MINUS ANY INSPECTOR'S SIGNATURE. Read the pink slip again and be assured that the reel has been thoroughly inspected and repaired, and therefore is in good shape for projection. Samples cut from another pink-slip-accompanied reel contained one mis-frame, one splice just about as punkly punk as any I have seen lately—and I've seen some reasonably bad ones, too—and one two-inch-long stretch of sprocket holes ripped on one side.

Dangerous Procedure

Who will have the temerity to dispute my statement that the sending out of films in such condition, accompanied by a statement that they have been "thoroughly inspected and are in good physical condition," does not SET UP A HIGHLY DANGEROUS CONDITION? The projectionist has, after reading that slip, every right to believe the film is in shape to project. He has no reason to believe the exchange to be a liar, therefore he places them in his film cabinet, and in their turn, they are placed on the projector for use. Mind you the pink slip is the OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF THE FILM EXCHANGE that the films are in good physical condition. Suppose that pin-spliced reel were put on for projection. The very least we might expect would be a complete stoppage of the show when the pin reached the aperture assuming that it came through the fire trap and over the upper sprocket all right while danger of an aperture fire is not at all remote.

This department and its editor are thoroughly in favor of the thorough inspection and repair of film, and the careful recording of all unusual damage done to them while in use, or any damage done them by reason of careless packing for the return journey to the exchange, such damage to be charged to and collected from the theatre; also that report of same being made to the local union of projectionists, BUT the sending out of such a slip without backing it up by competent and very rigid inspection and repair of film, certainly is NOT to be approved, much less endorsed, while the advocating of an opaque or transparent trailer—beg pardon, LEADER as a change over signal is almost bad enough to be funny.

Bad, Bad, Bad

The endorsement of such a slip by a projectionists' local union, which could have no possible means of knowing whether or not the film it will go with is competently inspected and repaired, is just about as poor procedure as anything I have ever heard of. I was tempted to tell you the names of the locals which have pulled such a stunt as this, but guess it would be rubbing it in a bit too much, so they may read this and square the matter with their own conscience —if they can.

I wrote one Film Board of Trade, calling their attention to the absurdity of this "slip" procedure. They were sensible enough to give the matter consideration and promptly withdraw the offending document.

Here Is One

If exchanges wish to really send out something that may accomplish some good, here is one which might help:

IMPORTANT

Mr. Projectionist: This exchange desires to give you the best service possible under the conditions. WILL YOU HELP IN THIS BY TAKING GOOD CARE OF THE FILMS WHILE IN YOUR POSSESSION?

REMEMBER

Remember that every bit of unnecessary damage YOU do to the films must and will REACT TO THE DAMAGE OF EVERY SHOW IN EVERY THEATRE IN WHICH THEY ARE USED THEREAFTER.

Only the man who is too shiftless to make a proper cue sheet places punch mark change-over signals in the film. Are YOU of that type, or in that class?

Excessive speed in rewinding and rewinder elements out of line do a great deal of damage to the film. Examine your rewinder. Line it up if necessary.

Excessive sprocket wear and a too-tight projector gate tension injures the edges of sprocket holes and often cracks them. Have you examined YOUR projectors lately for these possible faults?

A too-tight take-up tension damages film badly. How is yours?

Sprocket idlers wrongly adjusted causes the film to climb off the sprocket teeth, with resultant rows of sprocket teeth indentations. Examine yours if the film leaves the sprockets occasionally.

Lens Chart

John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., writes:

Dear Frank: Well, Old Scout, you see I was right in my diagnosis of the reason for the blurred edges in the Cooley case, but it is not just to crow over that that I am writing. Cooley's letter was very interesting. He confirms much of what I said in replying to Maurer's article. Note what he says about the faint travel ghost when the picture is viewed from the front seats.

Guess I will have to make up a chart for the users of the reflector type arc—the low intensity—together with my version of the light ray action in same. As a rule these outfits are installed by a company representative who knows his business. I will get hold of the crater diameters for 20-25 and 30 amperes very soon, and will then get busy.

Strand, Waterbury

By the way, Mr. Hoffman, my employer, now runs the Strand in Waterbury. I was sent over to see what the trouble was with the projection. If you remember, that case has been before us and we diagnosed it as lack of voltage from the converter, as well as other items. With the hearty co-operation of the projectionist in charge I recommended the purchase of a 100 amperes series type motor generator, and Cinephor optical systems. Now they are proud of their projection, and with very good reason. Also they use less power for the present excellent result than they formerly used for the poor one.

However, friend Boss doesn't care for the color of the high intensity light, and I am puzzled as to just how to tone it down. What can you tell me about this matter? I don't like to touch the light beyond the film plane.

Might Help

Well, John, I dunno. The Runcie shutter is about all the means I know of being used, aside from color in certain condensers. The Amberlux condenser is unbreakable, and develops a pink color with use, which helps some. The Pyrex condenser lenses have color, but this department must know more about them before offering advice concerning them. Who of our readers can offer Griffith help in this matter? Will be mighty glad to have that lens chart.

Direction of Current

Earl Boyer, Projectionist The Liberty Theatre, Heavener, Okla., asks:

Please advise me as to the direction of current in an arc lamp using direct current, and does the arc stream travel in the same direction as the current?

Frankly, I don't fancy questions like that overly much, because I think no man on earth knows just what does take place in the matter of current "flow." Looked at from some points of view, there just simply must be something flowing in, through or over the wires carrying an electric current, and that flow is presumed to be from positive to negative. Looked at from other angles, it seems utterly impossible and nonsensical that anything can or does actually flow.

Puzzling

It is equally puzzling with light. We are solemnly told that the light which reaches our eyes from some of the stars took a million years to travel from the star to our eye, zipping along at the rate of 186,000, I think it is, miles per SECOND. Now that all sounds utterly nonsensical—that something which has substance of a sort, which it must have else how could we see it, can travel a million years through space without getting worn out, and strike our eye with a velocity of 186,000 miles a second, without our even feeling it. What in His Satanic Majesty's Dominions IS a thing that pulls stunts like that???

Well, it is somewhat the same with the "juice." We haven't the most remote idea as to what the darned stuff is. It "travels" with tremendous speed. It travels on, over or through some substances, and not through others. It pulls motor armatures, induces enormous temperatures under some conditions, and blasts and kills under others.

We say it "flows." We don't know whether it does or not, but certainly the electric force generated one place is found extremely active at a place more or less far removed. If it doesn't flow, how in gahena does it get there?

Ask Something Easy

Man dear, ask me something easier, but, anyhow, we will say the action of the current is from positive to negative. The arc stream is formed of the gases generated in the volitization of carbon. The current seems to have no effect upon its direction of flow, which naturally is upward, as is the direction of flow of all heated gases.

In addition to the upward flow, however, I think there is an outward impetus from the positive carbon, probably caused by the tremendous expansion when carbon becomes gas.

Many will answer your question, off hand, just like that. In my opinion their answers have little value. Until we can say what the electric current consists of, I think we will be unable to tell with any degree of certainty how it does things. We know the effect produced, but just how Mr., Mrs. or Miss Electricity does it—well, that's something else again.

SITUATIONS WANTED

LIVE WIRE MANAGER desires position. First-class exploiter. Do own card and press work. Just disposed of interest in small town and would like to become connected with ambitious owner or new chain, where the opportunity for advancement is the prime consideration. No objection to taking hold of a losing venture, providing location, seating capacity and population are such as to give the theatre a fighting chance. Competition welcomed, as it acts as a stimulus to better results. Will give exchange managers as reference as to my ability. Right up to the minute on new releases. 8 years' experience as manager and lessee, also nearly one year as salesman for one of the leading producers. Age 37. Married—3 children. Total abstainer, having never touched intoxicants. Considered good mixer. Good appearance, and am able to take care of every angle of the business. Prefer salary and commission if possible, but will take flat rate salary, provided there are REAL opportunities for advancement. Please be as frank in your reply as I have been and state fully size of town, number of seats, how many competitors—salary to start, and do not be afraid to say your house is showing a loss, if it is, as the returns eventually will probably be greater if made successful, than if the house is already a paying venture. Location no object, but there must be a future of promise. Reply S, care Moving Picture World, New York City.

As to Screens

John Erricson, St. Louis, Mo., says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am owner of two small-town theatres and have been able to pretty well get away with most things, with the aid of your books, two of which I have. A thing came up recently, however, to which I was unable to find the answer in either the Third or Fourth Editions of your Handbook. A supply house has been trying to get me to instal a new high-priced screen in place of my kalsomined canvas surface. One of his arguments is that the screen he advocates is backed with a material which won't let any light through.

My kalsomined screen does "leak" light. That is to say, it lets some light through, though not a great deal. I am sure there is nothing to his claim in so far as the dark colored material with which the screen in question is backed, but I don't know how to meet his argument. I do think his screen is a good one, but the question is, is it enough better to pay me to put into it a hundred or more times what it costs me to recoat with kalsomine, which I do every three months regularly.

I would appreciate it if you would set me right in this matter.

As to the relative worth of the screen in question as compared with your kalsomined canvas screen—well, that is a matter you must decide for yourself. I could not say without knowing what make of screen it is, the size and shape of your auditorium and the distance from screen to front and back rows of seats.

As to backing a screen surface with dark colored material and claiming benefit by so doing, why, let us examine into what it is a screen does.

A screen surface has two major functions, viz: THE PERCENTAGE OF THE TOTAL INCIDENT LIGHT WHICH IT REFLECTS BACK TOWARD THE AUDIENCE and THE DIRECTION IN WHICH IT IS REFLECTED—see figures 66 and 67 of the Bluebook of Projection.

Use Your Judgment

Now use your brains. Granted that a dark colored backing will stop (absorb) the light, so that none will pass through, still what good does that do unless the light is reflected back toward the surface? Might it not exactly as well pass on through the screen? Use your brains and answer your own question just as well as I can.

If a thin white surface were backed with a highly reflecting surface, such, for instance, as a mirror, it is true the light reaching the mirror would be reflected back and would probably have some effect in making the screen surface more brilliant, BUT I seriously doubt if this would not be harmful rather than helpful because it seems to me that while the light reflected back from behind white surfaces would make them still more brilliant, the light reflected back to surfaces carrying the graduations of photographic shades would be distinctly harmful. Maybe I am in error in this matter, but I think not

I believe that ONLY the surface of a screen counts for anything, in so far as has to do with the observer, because it is only the surface can possibly reflect the correct graduations of shade, which is the thing, and the ONLY thing the picture on the screen consists of.

If screen men or others care to discuss this highly important matter I will be glad to hear from them, and will gladly give space to as much of the discussion as seems pertinent.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

A total of eight motion picture companies incorporated in New York state last week. The capitalization of the companies was generally small, ranging from $10,000 to $35,000. This is about the usual number of motion picture companies that incorporate during the later part of the year. The following gives the companies receiving charters from the secretary of state following incorporation, capitalization and directors: Paul J. Swift Exchange, Inc., $10,000, Stabley Eisenberg, D. L. Budner, Marcus Stone, New York city; D. and C. Operating Corporation, Binghamton, $20,000, Ned Kornblite, David Cohen, Binghamton, B. H. Ditrich, Endicott; Nedson Amusement Corporation, $20,000, C. V. O'Loughlin, C. J. Davis, Jamaica; Laura Ruskin, Brooklyn; Sonunu, Inc., $20,000, J. M. Downes, Samuel Macpeak, M. E. Downing, New York city; Olympic Theatre Corporation, $35,000, E. A. Bauder, Benjamin W. Gerwig, Utica, E. W. Linton, Little Falls; Belban Productions, Inc., capitalization not specified, Harry Lewis, Henry Herzbrun, May Spero, New York city; Parthenon Pictures Corporation, with O. A. Price, H. P. Lovelace, Joseph Deitch, New York city; Monty Banks Pictures Corporation, capitalization not stated, Monty Banks, Los Angeles, Cal.; Howard Estabrook, H. G. Kosch, New York city.

THE INEXHAUSTIBLE GOLD MINE!

FOR EXAMPLE—THE EXHIBITOR SAYS

"D. W. Griffith's 'The Birth of a Nation' is the best, the biggest and the greatest of them all. Rented this outright for the biggest price I have ever paid for a picture and it packed them in like sardines and made five times more money than I ever have made on any picture before.

"Buy this picture by all means for it is one that you can see again and again and enjoy. A good many of my patrons have seen it several times and yet they came again. They said it was the best picture they had ever seen.

"I think I will play it again as a return date soon.

"I thought we would go broke when I bought this, but I sure raked in the kale, and only charged 25c and 35c and could have gotten 50c just as easy as 35c.

"I cannot say praise enough about this picture."

OH BOY!

By DANNY of Film Daily

There are great pictures. Fine pictures. Artistic pictures.

And then there are great box office successes.

And the fine, artistic pictures. Are not necessarily the great box office successes.

Which prefaces this:

That "Broken Laws" (F. B. O.) should be one of the great box office successes. Of 1925. Because it will be released far too late. To make much of a dent. Of what is left of 1924. But watch it go. Even with the few days left of the year.

Here's a woman's picture. Built for women. Mothers particularly. And if it isn't a clean up. If it doesn't set women talking their heads off. Then this is a bad day for predictions.

Mrs. Wally Reid produced it. You know what "Human Wreckage" did. Well this one looks to beat that. All hollow. The story is far more interesting. Not so morbid. And tells of how a pampering mother spoiled her son. Until he kills an old woman with his car—is sentenced to manslaughter, and the mother then tries to take the blame on herself.

If you think the courtroom scene of "Madame X" was a wallop—with the son defending his mother—you'll get another greater kick. When you see the mother in this one, pleading to take the punishment meted to her son. Boy, what a kick!

They finish this with a dream ending. Sort of lets you down. Think it would have been better otherwise. But that's just a trifling matter of individual opinion. Because no matter what they do with it. This one registers sure fire.

"Broken Laws" may not get a listing. By the critics. As one of the best pictures for 1925. But unless all signs fail. It will make a real record. At the box office. I'd rather have box office records. For mine. Than the likes—or dislikes—of critics.

Although released only a few days and although selling has not even started through our 34 exchanges—more than 84 first-run theatres have booked "BROKEN LAWS." In New York City, last week, 33 Exhibitors saw "BROKEN LAWS" in our Projection Room, and the entire 33 of them booked the picture without stepping outside of the room. 14 of these 33 exhibitors announced their intentions to shelve another costly feature in order to play "BROKEN LAWS" after they had seen it. Play dates now being booked through our 34 exchanges in order of Exhibitors' applications. Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., 723 7th Ave., New York City.

John Kunsky, Jensen Von Herberg, Harold Franklin, Frank Newman, Sid Grauman—and—

a score of other big exhibitors used to pay W. Stephen Bush ten dollars a week each to write a weekly letter giving the high-lights of the Broadway motion picture presentations.

The Service is still in existence, though Mr. Bush severed his connection when leaving for Europe three years ago.

Since his return Moving Picture World has induced Mr. Bush to again take up the work—but this time, instead of costing twenty-five big first run men ten dollars a week, two hundred and fifty dollars in all—it goes to all readers of Moving Picture World as just one feature in the paper that is packed with features. This week's instalment of the new service appears on page 706.

Keep your eyes on the paper that is FIRST IN THE FIELD.

MOVING PICTURE
WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

"TWENTY-FIVE million people attended motion pictures daily at one time—today only five million persons walk past the ticket-taker every day."

A half dozen film men have quoted the above thought—with the figures varying slightly—to us within the past few weeks. When we pressed the individuals to state where they had secured their information five admitted that they had "just heard it somewhere or other." The fifth had a faint idea that the figures were based on the Admission Tax figures for the last period available.

On the spot we attempted an analysis of the Admission Tax figures and agreed finally that you could prove anything or everything from them, according to the desire.

But the figures will go merrily on their way. They will travel the country, be quoted in the newspapers, wander back to New York, and eventually be accepted as authoritative.

Then someone, someday, will decide that twelve million people are attending motion picture theatres every day. He will start that estimate in circulation. With similar results in the end.

It's a great business for authoritative figures. Never admit that you can't answer a question. If someone asks you how many close-ups have been taken in the past six months, don't hem and haw.

Look thoughtful, and then reply: "Eight thousand, nine hundred and seventy-six, of which six thousand, four hundred and fifty-three were eliminated before the pictures reached the screen."

You'll live to see your figures quoted by the Literary Digest and some prominent film magnate —to be accepted by the industry as gospel truth.

"EIGHTY per cent. of your business comes from small towns," said a district manager to an exchange manager in Cleveland a few months ago. It was an important statement—for on its acceptance depended decisions of sales policy.

The particular exchange manager has a penchant for getting the facts. Barring an attempt to get the district authority to define that hazy term "small towns" he agreed on an arbitrary definition and went after the records.

The results came very close to proving the exact opposite of the statement made by the district manager. But by the time the analysis had been made that worthy was on his way to another exchange city. Once more quoting authoritative New York figures. And most likely the next manager did not bother to check up the facts. The estimate lives on forever.

Yessir! It's a great business. Never admit that YOU don't know. If someone asks you how many fans passed out of theatres last Tuesday evening wishing they could get their money back, don't hesitate. Give them a figure.

It will live to find its way into The World Almanac.

* * *

AND there is a more serious side to it.

You meet this to some extent inside the business, to a greater extent in contacts with outsiders.

The fan to whom you have just been introduced has learned that you are in that mystic and hallowed walk of life—the motion picture business. "Do you meet many of the stars?" he says. "Uh-uh," you respond, because you remember seeing Gloria Swanson at a first night a year ago last September. Then comes the question on the edge of the fan's tongue. "Is it true that So-and-So lives a terrible life? Has been married at least six or seven times?"

You can't even remember distinctly whether So-and-So is that Fox ingenue or whether she used to play in Universal serials. But you are not going to be caught napping. Nosir! You just look mysterious and respond, "Oh, worse than that! If I could only tell you!"

And another authoritative bit of information is given renewed impetus. Never to die.

Let's adopt a rule. The next time a man gives you a definite figure, a "well-founded estimate," or a hint of dread scandal, let's check it with:

"Who told you that? Where did HE get it from?"

Robert E. Welsh

If its Worth quoting- It's Worth adding- "I saw it in THE WORLD"

The Hamilton National Bank

130 West 42nd Street

Does your bank look askance at the motion picture business? Is there a certain fear of the unknown in the attitude of officials when they discuss your problems with you?

To the motion picture theater owner there is real value in dealing with a banking institution that is in touch with the operations of the industry as a whole.

You feel more free to speak and deal frankly yourself; you receive a sympathetic understanding of your industry's problems that is greatly helpful.

In addition to these advantages our two new offices offer the further advantage of CONVENIENT LOCATION to a great number of motion picture exhibitors.

There is the 170th Street Office — at 96-98 East 170th Street; and the Queens Village office, at 215-33 Jamaica Avenue.

Step in, say "Hello" and get acquainted with the type of service that has made Hamilton National so favorably known to the important motion picture factors.

Speaking Freely

The livest question in this industry for a few months is going to be that one word, "Sternberg." First we get it on the authority of such as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Joseph Schenck, Charles Chaplin—and I don't know how many more—that the man is a genius. And the industry is in sore need of any new sparks of genius it can discover and encourage. Then a pretty capable critic—and our personal opinion goes stronger than that—in the person of Wid Gunning sees "The Salvation Hunters" and we read, "If this shows great direction I'm a prima donna." There's a clash for you.

And we are beginning to feel convinced that the man must be a genius. It takes genius to be considered either very, very good, or very, very bad. Most of us have the hard luck of "just getting by."

It's great these days to see the ease with which the gates are opening to the unknown or to the comparatively unknown plodder who has been doing good work for years without the luck to attract the lightning. It's a cheerful sign for the industry.

Sternberg steps right into the shoes of Mary Pickford's director; Frank O'Connor finally gets his chance from Benny Schulberg; Monta Bell is nowhere today, and an accepted director of class tomorrow.

Joe Farnham plugs away in New York, his broad experience and high worth known only to a few—and we pick up our "Greed" program and read: "Edited by Joseph W. Farnham." And what a job that boy did! What a job he must have had to do! Before he tackled it "Greed" was THE editing job of the year; after he finished it "Greed" had become THE editing job of the year. More power to you, Joe.

Harry O. Hoyt plugs away doing good work at jobs that don't deserve it; Jack Dillon is in much the same situation. Earl Hudson comes along, opens the magic gates—and there they are—within the sacred circle.

Anytime anyone wants you to define the word "producer"—as differentiated from the words "director," "magnate," and the rest of the terms—just reply: "Earl Hudson."

Is it coming to the day when the man who wants to make and distribute super-costly, super-pictures will set down as Step Number One: "Build or buy into from twenty to two hundred theatres?" Looks that way. After Joe Schenck's initial once-over of the distributing situation he seemed to decide that way. His Egyptian Theatre idea in association with Sid Grauman is intriguing. At first glance it doesn't have to mean out-and-out competition with picture theatres in first run cities. The theory can be stated so that it doesn't signify that. But in practice it is a pretty safe bet that most of the dollars that go in to Egyptian Theatre box offices will be motion picture dollars.

So there's a pretty scrap ahead. Because there is already a "long run" house in every city that an Egyptian might enter. Doug, Mary and associates don't make ALL the long-run pictures.

They probably will make ENOUGH—for the Egyptian Theatres. But there'll be some mighty good attractions across the street at the present long-run house. And then the battle is on.

There are quite a few cities where First National franchise holders have all the cards—cities that don't require the services of many architects to become badly over-seated for top admission money. Add that to the battle.

Incidentally. A few months ago there were those who thought that First National's product outlook for the second half of the year was not so bright. Just "one of those impressions" that got around. But when you get it all spread out before your eyes for weighing at one glance—well, it strikes pretty high to us. Look over the insert in this week's World and see if you don't agree with us.

Speaking of "unknowns"—and the chances that are coming to them these days. Sumner Smith had an interview with Harry Rapf during the week that will appear in next week's World. Started out to be one of those ordinary "interviews on production plans." But finished a real story on the search for the unknown. Because Harry talked sincerely and frankly on the plans of Louis B. Mayer, Rapf and Thalberg to get new ideas, new energy and new enthusiasm into the making of pictures. Says that it is one of the most important tasks facing producers. A lot of exhibitors whom we know will throw up their hats and cheer for Harry when they hear that. They've told it to us many a time.

This Harry Rapf knows what he is talking about. He is another real synonym for that word "producer." That used to be thought to mean "the fellow with the money." We know better now. The Earl Hudsons, Louis Mayers, Irving Thalbergs and Harry Rapfs have shown us why.

What a lot of talk these days about giving the worthy foreign production a chance. Frankly, we can't get all of the ideas that fill the air. Because we would hate to walk into the office of any distributor in the city with a REAL, unquestioned piece of merchandise—whether it had been made in Timbuctoo or Hollywood—and then try to get out of the door with our negative.

The trouble comes with the piece of goods that this fellow thinks is good, that fellow thinks is no good, and the third fellow says, "Might get by."

There has been more grief incurred on the "might get bys"—whether originating in Germany, Sweden, England, or the Bronx—than there have been by plain ordinary everyday bad pictures. Ask Adolph Zukor. Ask William Fox.

But if the "might get by" has been made with your own cash—you have some justification for giving yourself and the picture the benefit of the doubt and setting it for release. If the "might get by" is the product of a competitor in Montenegro—should there be international gabfests to decide why you prefer to dodge the grief?

You tell the foreign producer, "It's a fair picture—might even be a great one; no telling what the public will do. It might get by. But I'm pretty well loaded up with product—let the other fellow have it. And then because the other fellow has the same thoughts about the subject that you have—we hear of a blockade, a sorrowful situation, etc.

There's a way to test any "might get by" picture. If the American producer has one, we don't give him any hands across the sea sympathy—we tell him to hire a Broadway house with his own money and let the public be the judge. If the public says "yes"—we have a "White Sister" experience. If the public says "no"—well, what about Asta Neilsen in "Hamlet?"

Stories of the Builders

A Pioneer and Pathfinder Looking Into the Future

By W. Stephen Bush

THIS is the story of the most original of all the builders, the briefest kind of an appreciation of the man who has built the motion picture entertainment. Until he came the motion picture still depended for most of its drawing power on its novelty. It was the genius of Rothafel—since dubbed Roxy by national consent—that created a coherent, organic and permanent institution out of the motion picture show and gave the world a new sort of entertainment, which today ranks as the peer of any other in the world of amusements. In spite of the unanimous and persistent croak and caw of all the wise ravens, with which this glorious industry of ours has been overburdened from the very beginning, he demonstrated the possibilities of the motion picture entertainment as a more than sufficient attraction in a first-class theatre, the equal of the best in equipment and location.

Roxy Came, Saw and Conquered

When Roxy came here from the northwest, where he won his spurs, people talked of him as a man with brilliant ideas and then hastened to add that he seemed a bit impractical and extravagant. Roxy gave a convincing proof of the practical nature of his ideas by turning an uptown theatre of doubtful value into a property of high value. It was the Regent Theatre on 116th Street and Lenox Avenue. The experiment had been watched with keen interest by one showman, who possessed vision, the late Mr. M. Mark. He built the Strand, called Roxy to manage it and gave him carte blanche. Even Mr. Mark, however, was not free from lingering doubts as to the permanent success of a motion picture entertainment on Broadway. The Strand was built in such a way that if Roxy's hopes had failed it could have been turned into a home for musical comedy. That in a way was something of a handicap to Roxy at the start but it was in Roxy's line of specialties to overcome handicaps and blow obstacles and difficulties down the wind.

Pioneer and Creator

Today Broadway has more motion picture entertainments of the kind that originated in Roxy's brains than theatres of any other variety. It is the sincerest tribute to Roxy's genius. What the motion picture as a factor in the field of amusements owes to Roxy cannot be told in a few columns of the Moving Picture World, but this much can and ought to be recorded right here and now. The vast improvement in the tone of the motion picture entertainment, the coming of better and bigger pictures, the close and harmonious alliance of the picture with music are due primarily to Roxy. And Roxy is still building. More than a decade has gone by since the memorable opening of the Strand but not a week passes that Roxy does not improve with new ideas, always striving upward.

S. L. ROTHAFEL

A Word on Program Building

"It has been hard to get to the top," remarked Roxy to me when I found him in his office the other day, "but it is still harder to stay on top."

"How do you build these Capitol programs," I asked, "that keep your audiences in a lasting mood to applaud?"

"For one thing," came the reply, "we do not build our programs too far ahead. They might be lacking in freshness and spontaneity if we tried that. And I say we advisedly. Our programs are arranged in conferences in which all the staff participates. Of course, I take part, too, and I reserve the right of veto on all offers and suggestions. In compiling our programs as we go along we keep our minds well attuned to the present and there is no danger of exhausting ourselves. We try to arrange a program which presents a harmonious whole and in which, for that very reason, each single unit derives special strength from the harmony of the whole. Now our program next week revolves around one central theme, the idea of the spell or lure of enchantment which dominates the feature, "Circe the Enchantress." We start with the prelude to the "Meistersingers" not a brilliant or pretentious unit, but one which does create a desirable atmosphere at the beginning of the show. We follow this with another unit from the series of Robert E. Bruce Tales of the Wilderness called 'Windows of My House.' The musical accompaniment to this short subject is the famous 'motif' from Wagner's 'Siegfried,' 'The Spell of the Forest.' The music alone suggests the subtle charm of the wooded glade; when rendered with a picture detailing the glories of the forest it brings the idea of a spell or an enchantment to every person in the audience. We follow this up with a woodland fantasy in which hunters and the spirits of the forest play their parts. Then we crash back to the living present, i.e., into our weekly. That is always a welcome diversion and probably the most popular permanent unit on the program. As we are approaching the feature we go back to our central theme of the spell with a living picture which brings out the underlying thought of the 'Lost Chord.' After this a trumpet solo which serves as a suitable immediate announcement of the feature. I am not pointing to this particular program as something extraordinary, but I mention it merely as a sample and as typical of the ideas and methods that govern us."

All Progress, the Growth of Ideas

Roxy spoke of his long and successful activities on Broadway and seems to cherish a tender spot in his heart for the scene of his early pioneering, The Strand.

"In those days," he said, "the foundations were laid, foundations which still endure. In the present state of the screencraft, however, the fundamentals alone will only assure a moderate measure of success. The science of presentation never stands still, it cannot stand still. It must continue to grow on ideas, as it has grown in the past. The whole advancement from the store show to such a theatre as this has after all been nothing but the growth of an idea. It has all been a development of thought. There lies our future. The hope of American artistry is the hope of our industry."

Intuition the Royal Road to Success

Keen Student of Audiences

Roxy is a keen and tireless student of the psychology of the motion picture audience. The big prizes in the study of this vast and all important subject do not, however, go to the mere student and observer and if Roxy has been a steady prize winner it is due not so much to his observation as to his intuition. The secrets of swaying an audience by entertainment, of moulding and impressing the daily thousands, are possessed by Roxy's in an uncanny degree, but these secrets are not easily communicated to others. I asked Roxy how he accounted for the unique behavior of his crowds, for their respectful attention, for their excellent conduct, for their deep appreciation and obvious loyalty. His answer is well worth pondering. "I think," he said, "it is the thought behind it all, the living idea that animates the program. Of course the institution itself must command respect; we have sought to create an atmosphere, that inspires patrons with respect.

"Music Hath Charms"

"Once inside the theatre and under the influence of our entertainment they yield easily and perhaps unconsciously to the compelling power of our program. To win the highest tribute from the patron, to attach him to the theatre as to a permanent part in his life there must be a soul back of everything. Just a show without that spirit will never attain the best possible results. The close attention and admirable conduct you have observed in Capitol audiences are not accidental, they have been striven for consistently and conscientiously. I know our public feels that this is their theatre. They love and are proud of it and will quickly resent any unjust criticism. Thought is behind every element in our presentation, behind the light, the music, the scenery, the service, etc. Thought appeals to thought. The entertainment with a soul compels the fullest recognition and appreciation."

The Triumph of Music

I could not help speaking of the musical side of the Capitol programs. Anyone going to the Capitol is bound to observe how much the audiences respond to musical units on the program and to musical settings. Here, too, an enviable intuition seemed to be at play.

"The selection of music has become second nature with me," explained Roxy. "In the course of fifteen years I have come in contact with scores upon scores of able and gifted musicians. I have naturally become rather familiar with the literature of music in all its phases. I have enjoyed opportunities which few men share with me. As a result I feel that the musical settings almost suggest themselves in every instance. However, it is not

Roxy's First Program at the Family Theatre, Forest City, Pa., Showing How Even Then He Valued Music as an Adjunct to a Picture Show

As Exhibitors See Press Sheets!

By Tom Waller

What size scene cuts do you prefer, and how many?

What size ad cuts do you favor and how many?

What do you consider the best standard size for ad cuts?

Do you like "catch lines" in press sheets?

Do you believe photographic sketches of stars and directors giving the high lights of interesting points in their lives have news value in your territory?

Do you favor a plain four-page press sheet about the size of a newspaper with eight columns to each page?

Do you favor a press sheet printed in colors and containing miscellaneous material in addition to stories of newspaper value?

Would you prefer to have your press sheets printed only on side and issued in several pages, or do you like the straight four-page newspaper size?

Please write below any miscellaneous comments that you might care to make on press sheets as now issued.

"BLACK and white is all right." That is the verdict of America's theatre advertising and publicity men, 315 leaders of whom received the questionnaire on what is needed in press sheets to get the most worth out of such mediums, sent out by Principal Pictures Corporation.

In other words fully 95 per cent of the motion picture theatre men who filled out the quizz sheet state that the colors of the rainbow in press books are futile as a magnate to movie goers and mean nothing more than an extravagant waste of the producers' and distributors' good money. The same percentage condemns to the same class glazed paper and elaborate type.

This 95 per cent, as a careful resume of answers to that pertinent question reveal, are of the general opinion that the simplest lay-out on the cheapest paper is the requisite. The one essential is legible type.

It would seem that a profusion of color and an expensive lay-out irritates the average exhibitor: that its cost is made to come from the rental of the production it expounds.

Why? The answers prove that, in the case of that 95 per cent., press sheets are received by these theatre men and handled by them exclusively. They read over the sheet, pick from it the material they want for their newspapers and publications, and after that resign it to the waste paper basket. The gold, orange and etc. colors therefore is a waste of printer's time and producers coin. The same applies to the extravagant "heads" over the news items since very few newspapers use the same type and, even if they did, would not be inspired by a forty point press sheet heading to dig up identical type and use it for splash display in their own papers.

An argument seems to be proffered by some producers that color and extreme type catches the exhibitor's eye. It does but, as the answers prove, means absolutely nothing since that theatre owner has already booked the production which the sheet exploits. If such were the case, some of these theatre men say, press sheets should be submitted at the time of the sales talk and before the showman has taken his pen in hand.

Of the five per cent advocating a color splurge only one gives a reason for this stand. He is R. J. Relf of the star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa. "I find colored press sheets fine to use in the lobby display case," he comments.

Decorah's population is 4,000 and Relf conducts a 600 seat house with admission price ranging from ten cents to a quarter.

This causes a situation to arise, not only as to color and layout but press sheets in general. Milton D. Crandall, director of advertising and publicity for Rowland and Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa., declares, under the request in the questionnaire for miscellaneous comments: "We do not believe that any company can issue a press sheet adapted equally to the large city and the small town, and would suggest two different press sheets."

That this is an excellent point, and the only one of its calibre in the entire maze of replies and suggestions, is borne out by the first two articles of this series appearing in the December 6 and December 13 issues of Moving Picture World under the respective headings: "What's Wrong With Press Sheets?" and "What Exhibitors Say About Press Sheets!"

From the data secured from the replies to questions used in those articles it was readily deduced that what was good stuff in the smaller city and town was unfit in many cases for the majority of metropolitan areas. Thus, in our resume in the second article, we suggested that press sheets be written with this point of view: that the news articles be divided into two classes—short and dignified, in a stick or so, including everything you have got to say, for the big city newspapers, and well written and roomy yarns for the other territories.

As to the subject of cuts and drawings in press sheets, Spiegel of Comerford Amusements, Scranton, Pa., turns on the steam in his declaration: "A lot of cuts and drawings used that when you do want same the exchange is all out of them." We construe this to mean that some scene and ad cuts appearing in press sheets may prove a greater attraction than others and that, as Spiegel cites, there is such a demand for these that "first come first served." When the "early birds" have flown the later arrivals have to content themselves with the remaining assortment.

One and two column scene cuts prove to be the most popular dimensions, these to be made suitable for standard newspaper width, both in cities and towns.

A few of the showmen in some of the bigger cities make their own cuts and desire only "stills." But the consensus of opinion would indicate that a model press sheet should contain one four and five column cut and several three, two and one column cuts.

These cuts should have for their subject some outstanding incident in the production which will not only carry a message and prove interesting but which will identify the picture as well.

Cuts for advertising purposes should be relegated to the same dimensions as those mentioned above. In the majority of instances showmen who answered this question in the Principal questionnaire request that more white space be left, rather than that an attempt be made to crowd the production and all of its merits into such space.

There should be a greater profusion of one column cuts and from one to two four column cuts in each press sheet.

A few exhibitors from the smaller territories say that they can use one five column cut. Several say they have no use for cuts of any sort and want line drawings. This is true of exhibitors having their own artists and a few of such drawings might be incorporated in press sheets to accommodate showmen of this class.

Vic Gauntlett of the Blue Mouse Theatres in the West suggests that ad cuts could be greatly improved by using a combination line and halftones with big heads of the stars in the halftone. Gauntlett believes the standard size for ad cuts is two columns.

Ninety-five per cent. of the advertising and publicity experts for film theatres in America who answered Principal Pictures Corporation's questionnaires, on what is needed in press sheets, are emphatic in their denunciation of rain-bow tinted picture sellers and elaborate type on glazed paper. Only five per cent. approve physical splurge in press sheets and of that percentage only one gives a reason. There are some mighty interesting details in connection with these facts. In this week's article Moving Picture World tells exclusively many other vital matters concerning press sheets from the pens of the men out in the field for whom they are created.

Verdict Is for Four-Page, Newspaper Size, Press Sheet

These showmen favor a plain four-page press sheet about the size of a newspaper with eight columns to each page. A possible five per cent of their number is opposed to sheets being printed on both sides. In the latter instance it would seem that such exhibitors use most of the news material and clip it from the sheet.

In the case of the majority it appears that they either find sufficient material so as not to be hampered by type on both sides or that they rewrite the press sheet stories.

The stories, at least, should not be clipped and pasted upon a piece of paper and then submitted to the city editor. It immediately antagonizes the average city desk, with the result that a perfectly good press sheet story may be thrown out because of the carelessness of its presentation.

We did not find a single exhibitor answering the questionnaire who registered disapproval of "catch lines." When such are snappy and pertinent they are excellent material for house organs and sometimes are good enough to be accepted for box display by newspapers.

As to the news value of photographic sketches of stars and directors, including the high lights of interesting points in their lives, the verdict is about 60-40, with the odds against their use in press sheets.

The most interesting and enlightening answers to the request for miscellaneous comments on press sheets are as follows:

Sayre, Greater Theatres, Seattle: "First National is the best of all for exhibitors like ourselves who really want to advertise pictures."

F. M. Hamburger, Circle Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "No further comments. Would like to suggest, however, that cuts be sharper and more clear cut. The average now is too blurry."

A. S. Wieder, Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "The greatest trouble is the newspaper advertising. The mats of the majority of press books are absolutely the bunk and it necessitates more expense to us because we have to have an entirely original campaign. Your own drawings, etc., which cost extra."

George C. Greenlund, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Washington: "Press sheet in general might be greatly improved if the editor would be practical in his compilation of material instead of trying to sell his brand of pictures and twenty-four sheet some director who doesn't mean a dime at the box office. Let's use that space to sell the highlights of the production."

Harry Castle, Palace Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "Aside from First National and Paramount we find the press sheets and advertising mats very poor, and would suggest you adopt their style."

George E. Guise, Miles Circuit of Detroit Theatres, Detroit, Michigan: "Most of them poorly written. Should be gotten out by good ad writers and newspaper men or women who know news values and who know how to handle them."

E. Beatty, Butterfield Circuit in Michigan, Elizabeth and John Streets, Detroit, Michigan: "As I have stated before, my chief trouble is with the exchanges not carrying sufficient stuff to properly take care of the exploitation requirements. I rather think that most press sheets are okay, although many advertising managers seem to think the smaller towns will swallow anything. Good advertising displays, a good trick or two that may be used, such as some of the suggestions contained in the press sheet for Goldwyn's 'The Navigator,' help a lot."

R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa: "Strikes me a two column seven inch mat for house organs would be great if issued by all companies. Mat to have cut, cast, brief story and big scenes mentioned. An eight page booklet could then be printed very reasonably."

Milton D. Crandill, Rowland and Clark, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania: "We do not believe that any company can issue a press sheet adapted equally to the large city and the small town, and would suggest two different press sheets."

Eller Metzger, Strand and Willard Theatres, Creston, Iowa: "Some are evidently written by person with no knowledge of publicity or the psychology of the masses. Some appear to have only one object, to use so much ink regardless of what you say. Some have many very good points but still have a little room for improvement."

W. H. Youngblood, Majestic and Edisonia Theatres, Johnson City, Tennessee: "I think the colored press sheet is a waste of money. The exhibitor is usually sold when he buys, so I do not see why gaudy press sheets help any."

Reeves Espy, Skouras Brothers, St. Louis, Missouri. "Of course, I'm only speaking for first-run theatres and I know cuts are essential to the small exhibitor who gets out handbills. For us, though, we need high-class hand-drawn illustrations that we can make into cuts of any size we need."

G. E. Brown, Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, North Carolina: "If four page press books are used, keep all press notices on one page, all cuts on another, use back sides for general bunk, but leave the notices and ad cuts and publicity cuts on separate pages so when a notice is cut out it does not kill an ad cut. Reproductions of paper, etc., can go on back sides of press notices and ad and publicity cuts. Service is what the exhibitor wants in his press books, not colors, glazed paper, bunk and exploitation dope set in forty-eight point type."

Charles M. Pincus, Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, California: "The usual press sheet contains poor art work, especially the First National press sheet. Good art work would help the key town art department and the small town could use ad cuts which many now fail to use due to poor art work."

L. W. Brophy, Yale Theatre, Muskogee, Oklahoma: "Music cues are important and necessary."

Harry Spiegel, Comerford Amusement Co., Scranton, Pennsylvania: "A lot of cuts and drawings used that when you do want same the exchange is all out of them."

John Hart, Jr., National Theatre, Richmond, Virginia: "One of our local papers has a twelve pica column basis, the other a twelve and a half. I want to emphasize that no single column mat should be over ten picas, allowing the use of four point borders in any newspaper, without having to break the border at the mat."

Vic Gauntlett, Blue Mouse Theatres, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland: "Ad cuts could be improved by using combination line and halftones with big head of stars as the halftone."

H. Barnes, Rialto Theatre, Burlington, Louisiana: "Press sheets contain too much about producing companies and directors. Too much bunk and too many superlatives. They should tell the highlights, the nature of the picture and not how good it is."

Russell Brown, Eugene Greater Theatres Co., Eugene, Oregon: "Appreciate any and all, though somewhat outdone, with those made up mostly of material telling the exhibitor how good the picture is or the producers are. Why sell the picture after it's bought? Save those lines for trade paper ads, give the exhibitor material to resell his stock with, thus saving his time for other duties."

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "If you will look at Universal press sheets, say, for instance, on 'Fast Worker' and most any First National picture, you will see what we want; if you will look at Warners' or Metro's, you will see what we do not want. Usually these latter have only a picture and the name of the picture."

Next week Moving Picture World will publish the last article of this series based on replies to Principal Pictures Corporation's questionnaire. In this story the exhibitor will give his idea of what a press sheet should consist. He will also render his opinion as to the value of advance reviews and their effectiveness when properly written. A few of the theatre managers not only answered the many questions, but went to the trouble of adding and answering some of their own. All of these will be clearly presented in the closing article, which appeals to us as one of the most important of the series.

"Catchlines" in press sheets meet with 100 per cent. approval of America's representative film showmen who filled out the blank spaces in Principal's quizz sheet. One and two column cuts are the standard size for scene and ad cuts in this medium of service to the exhibitor. A straight, four-page newspaper size, press sheet, with eight columns to the page, is what the major portion of showmen want.

Ideas!

Gathered Along Broadway By W. Stephen Bush

[Editor's Note—It is the purpose of this new department to make a brief record of new ideas in presentation on Broadway. Every new angle in presentation, which seems to meet the approval of the audience will be set down and described. No doubt other showmen in other cities are helping their box offices with original ideas. Every theatre owner is invited to send reports of interesting and successful new ideas to the Moving Picture World, when full credit will, of course, be given.]

A RARE sample of the welding and building of a successful program was presented at the Capitol. The program was built around one central and dominating thought, the influence of spells and enchantments on the soul. All the bigger units on the program tended toward that object. The effect led up to the biggest lure of all, the charm of a woman's beauty and the spell of her witchery. The centre in these cleverly constructed circles was the feature, "Circe, the Enchantress." To judge by the lively applause following the musical introductions and the splendid prologue, the audiences, afternoon and evening, appreciated the ruling idea back of the program. It may be remarked here in passing that Mr. Rothafel knows how to select a musical opening which goes well on Sundays, creating an atmosphere in harmony with the character of the first day of the week.

The first theme accentuating the idea of enchantment came with the first unit after the prelude to the "Meistersingers." It was unit No. 2, described on the program "From the Windows of My House." The call of the great outdoors was the subject of these pictures, part of the Robert E. Bruce serial, "Wilderness Tales." The idea of a spell was undoubtedly conveyed by the film but it was most emphatically heightened by the accompanying music, chiefly the "Siegfried Idyl." The impression of mystery and enchantment was deepened again by the pantomime of the ballet, which represented the fascination of nymphs of the woods. The nymphs lured on a hunter who proved an easy prey to their charms; the music was from Henry Hadley's Dance of the Nymphs, from the Idyl, "The Atonement of Pan." There was a touch of humor well conveyed, relieving the hitherto grave and profound tone of the entertainment. It was unit No. 3, called "A Woodland Fantasy." From this dainty number the program crashed into the weekly, which presented no unusual features except that it was most intelligently placed and that it contained an explanatory scientific chart in the form of a cartoon, supplementing the news item of the new Flettner ship with its workings of rotary cylinders. Back to the central theme with what was easily the star number of the program outside the feature itself. I am speaking of Unit 5, "A Series of Impressions of Famous Songs." The famous song this time was "The Lost Chord." Quite effective here by way of preparing the audience for a return to the main theme was the swift change from a fully lighted house at the end of the weekly to a dark house with only the orchestra showing any lights. The scene revealed the interior of a clubhouse, an old man seated by the wall, a group of five young men in a corner lit up by a large lamp. A short monologue by the old man, dwelling on reminiscences of the past; the quartette, singing "The Lost Chord," which makes the old man dream of the past; toward the end of the song the dream of the old man vanishes and he is transfixed by his memories as the entire scene fades out. The whole scene was presented with a light but masterly touch and it evoked no little applause. A trumpet solo, "Souvenir de la Suisse," was played by a member of the regular Capitol orchestra. For an encore the artist responded with a fine rendition of "The Last Rose of Summer."

A big crash from the orchestra introduced the prologue. The setting suggests the interior of a Greek Temple, the enchantress standing on top of the last step of the entrance and practising her wiles on two men, a philosopher and a warrior, who pleaded with her in song. The prologue closely followed the opening scenes of the feature. The theme for the story in "Circe" was taken from the waltz of Victor Herbert's "The Enchantress." Another dominating theme was taken from Haines' "Eastern Romance."

THE Rivoli presented a distinct novelty in the field of short subjects. It was described on the program as "Ludwig Van Beethoven," one of the famous music master series by James A. Fitpatrick. As the number was most heartily applauded and had evidently been followed with lively interest by the audience a brief description may be ventured here. The film ran eleven minutes, depicting in part episodes in the great composer's life and in part illustrating well-known and popular parts of his works. Short parts of the following Beethoven pieces were rendered by the Rivoli orchestra while the film was on the screen:

Egmont Overture
Two Movements from Symphony in G Major No. 8
Moonlight Sonata (piano only)
Sonata Pathetique
Country Dance
Adagio from Sonata Pathetique (piano only)
Minuet in G
Overture to "Coriolanus"

There were several outstanding musical items in the musical scoring of the feature, "North of 36." For the opening scenes, "Telemaque" and overture to "Undine"; for the scenes of the funny courtship, "1849 Overture"; for the great stampede, "Orgies of the Spirits"; for the first scenes following the title, "Virgin Wilderness," "The Waters of the Minnetonka." Dr. Riesenfeld had prepared some good original musical accompaniment in which a western "motif" built

Correcting a Wrong Impression

Cosmopolitan Productions,
127th Street at Second Avenue,
New York City.

December 9, 1924.

W. Stephen Bush,
Dear Sir:—

You pay a very nice tribute to the music of "Janice Meredith," in your department of "Ideas," in this week's Moving Picture World.

I should like, however, to correct an impression which you had in regard to the presentation. You state that Roxy was responsible for the innovation for removing the list of credits for the picture to the end of the last reel.

I should like to call your attention to the fact, that when "Janice Meredith" played the Cosmopolitan Theatre, these credits were shown on the screen at the tail end of the last reel at direct orders of Mr. Hearst.

Sincerely yours,
LOUIS R. REID,
Director of Advertising and Publicity.

Coming and Going

Two Universal sales executives left the home office in New York early this week for extended conferences in various branch exchanges. They are Ned Marin, sales director of the western division, and F. J. McConnell, sales manager of short product. The two executives are holding sales conferences in the following Universal exchanges: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines and Omaha.

Jules Levy, sales director for the eastern division of the Universal sales force, has just completed a ten days' tour during which he visited eight of the principal cities in his territory. The purpose of his trip was a series of conferences with Universal salesmen in the various exchange centers and with leading exhibitors.

Samuel Goldwyn arrived in New York from the Coast late this week.

Joseph M. Schenck, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Mrs. Talmadge are scheduled to sail for Europe on December 17.

Edward C. Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield Circuit, Detroit, is in New York on a business matter.

Nate Robbins and Barney Lumberg have returned to Utica, N. Y., after a business trip to New York.

Hanna Winter has arrived from Berlin. He is in America representing the official Association of German Film Authors. He is interested in a co-operative plan with American scenario writers.

Ralph Block has returned to New York after a month's stay on the Coast. Block is managing editor of Paramount's story department.

Robert Lieber was in New York this week from Indianapolis.

Robert Keable, English author, is expected to arrive in New York late this month, when he is scheduled to leave immediately for the Warner studios on the Coast.

Arthur C. Bromberg, head of the Progress Pictures, is back in New York after a business trip through the West.

Mike Connolly of the Metropolitan Casting Offices, returned to New York this week after a trip to the Coast.

Maurice Brodskie is scheduled to leave early next week on a sales trip to key cities for Jans Productions, Inc.

Nathan Burkan, attorney, is back in New York after a brief stay on the Coast.

Returning to New York from the Coast a few days ago, Abe Warner expects to repeat the transcontinental trip within the next week.

Richard Barthelmess, accompanied by Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., will start for Los Angeles on December 26. This will be a hurried business trip, the two returning on January 11.

J. D. Williams and Hawley Turner, president and director, respectively, of Ritz Carleton Pictures, are expected to arrive in New York from the Coast about December 17.

Louis B. Mayer arrived late this week on the Aquitania after a visit overseas. In about two weeks he and Harry Rapf are scheduled to leave for the Coast.

Frank Lloyd arrived in New York this week. He is stopping at the Hotel Gotham.

Madge Bellamy arrived in New York this week from the Coast.

Harry Rowson was among those who reached New York during the week from the West.

Edgar Lewis is in Manhattan after working on a production in the West.

Betty Bronson, new Paramount star, is slated to come to New York during the week beginning December 28.

Film Mutilation in Albany

Trade Board Campaigning Against Alleged Carelessness of Owners

Declaring that one out of every twenty shipments of film received back from exhibitors contains damaged film, due to carelessness on the part of exhibitors or their employees, members of the Albany Film Board of Trade are planning a campaign in the hopes of changing this condition of affairs. Only last week John Moran, a well known exhibitor of Coxsackie, was before the Film Board of Trade, as the result of mutilated film having been received back by one of the exchanges in the city. A settlement in favor of the exchange was effected.

According to members of the Board of Trade, there is a great deal of carelessness these days in this territory on the part of both operators and shippers in the employ of exhibitors. In many cases the exhibitor is also the operator and the shipper. Not only is film ripped through imperfect sprockets, but film is very frequently shipped without the band being securely fastened. As a result, the film shakes about in the container and is frequently in a badly chewed up condition when it reaches the exchange.

Exchange managers, when interviewed as to the attitude of the Board of Trade, admitted that carelessess also occurs on the part of their own shippers and that the fault is not entirely the exhibitor's at all times. At any rate, the Film Board of Trade is now working with both the exchanges and the exhibitors throughout the territory with the idea of lessening the amount of mutilated film, the value of which is said to run into thousands of dollars during the year.

Pithy Minneapolis Decree

Arbitration Board Rules Hasbrouck Must Live Up to Old Contract

An important ruling was made by the Minneapolis arbitration board this week when it decided that Joe Hasbrouck, former owner of the Grand, Graceville, Minn., must fulfill the terms of a film contract made while he was an exhibitor.

The board held that the sale of the theatre does not permit the exhibitor to "get out from under" his contracts and in event his successor does not assume the obligations the exhibitor is responsible for their fulfillment.

Hasbrouck was ruled against in five decisions by the board. Suits against Hasbrouck are forecast as the next move to collect on the film contracts.

T. O. C. C. PLANS BALL FOR JANUARY 17

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, Greater New York exhibitor organization, at its meeting this week made plans for its annual ball, which will be held January 17. This affair is one of the outstanding social events of New York's film world. William Brandt, a former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, was made chairman of the ball committee.

Two Cents Admits Kids To Cleveland Show

A radical departure in moving picture entertainment is about to be put into effect by the School Board at Cleveland, Ohio. Floyd A. Rowe, physical director of welfare, plans the establishment of children's entertainment centers in two of the city's leading schools, where carefully selected pictures will be shown every Saturday afternoon at an admission price of two cents. Community pool rooms will be operated along the same line. The plan has had the approval of the Board of Education, who maintain that it will not only be a boon to the poorer children, but will likewise tend to keep them off the streets and away from evil associations.

Palace for Cincinnati?

Keith Planning $2,000,000 House Downtown Is Persistent Rumor

The Cincinnati movie colony is all agog over a persistent and apparently well-founded rumor in circulation to the effect that the Keith interests are negotiating for the purchase of a site at the corner of Fifth and Vine streets, in the heart of the downtown business district, upon which to erect a $2,000,000 picture theatre.

One of the leading Cincinnati dailies recently carried a story claiming that the sale was ready for consummation, only the official checking of the plans and settlement of certain minor details in New York being necessary before the transfer papers would be signed.

The site, which is occupied by store rooms and offices, was purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation several years ago, and an announcement was at that time made that this organization would erect a large building, one of the features of which would be a handsome movie theatre. The plan, however, was subsequently abandoned. According to the report, the theatre now proposed will be one of the most palatial of its kind in this section of the West, with a seating capacity of 3,000. I. Lisbon of Cincinnati is said to be interested.

MANITOBA CRUSADES AGAINST AMUSEMENT TAX

The Moving Picture Exhibitors Association of Manitoba has undertaken a definite crusade against the amusement tax in the Province of Manitoba as a preliminary move to a direct application to the Manitoba Legislature this winter for a repeal of the ticket tax for theatre patrons in the province. The association has issued a special booklet which is called "A Book of Facts," giving details of the collecting of the amusement tax, the revenue derived through it and other details. References are also made to the manner in which other governments have either repealed or reduced the amusement tax and arguments are presented regarding the desirability of cancelling the tax in Manitoba.

F. P.-L. Dividend

At a meeting held late this week the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the preferred stock, payable February 2, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business on January 15, 1925. The books will not close.

Million for Production Not Excessive When Art is Achieved, Mayer Declares

LOUIS B. MAYER, first vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and in charge of the production of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, returned Tuesday, December 9, to New York on the Aquitania from Rome, where he has been for the past three months inspecting the progress of his company's mammoth production of "Ben-Hur."

Returning with Mr. Mayer were Mrs. Mayer and their daughters, Edith and Irene. The party went abroad the last week in September. Since then Mr. Mayer has been on the scene of Fred Niblo's production. "Ben-Hur" is being rushed toward completion, Mr. Mayer said. A print is expected in New York shortly after January 1.

Mr. Mayer stated that "Ben-Hur" is the greatest motion picture, both in quality of entertainment and in magnitude, that has been produced in screen annals.

Building a Monument

"We started out to make 'Ben-Hur' a masterpiece that would stand as a monument, not alone to our organization, but to the whole industry, to the art of motion pictures, and that I am convinced is what we have succeeded in doing," Mr. Mayer told reporters.

"We have assembled the finest cast of players that ever appeared in a single production. Ramon Novarro, May McAvoy, Francis X. Bushman, Carmel Myers, Kathleen Key, Frank Currier, Claire McDowell, Nigel de Brulier and Anders Randolf, who are the leading American players in 'Ben-Hur,' are favorites with film audiences throughout the world.

"For the sea battle scenes of 'Ben-Hur,' taken at Leghorn, Italy, Fred Niblo used the largest fleet of ships built for photoplay. I do not like to use superlatives in describing any picture, but really, it is impossible to do justice to 'Ben-Hur' without talking 'press agent's language.'

"The Circus Maximus set, for instance. That is where the famous 'Ben-Hur' chariot race takes place, and believe me, it is the greatest thrill I personally ever got from a picture. The set itself took several months to construct. It is more than a thousand feet in length, several hundred feet high, and seats the largest number of people ever seen in a picture.

A Picture for the Ages

"I want to state that what seems to be an extravagance in production of 'million-dollar pictures' is not extravagance when you consider that these motion pictures are going to be exhibited years, decades from now. The time is gone when really great pictures can be made for immediate consumption by its contemporary public. 'Ben-Hur' is costing a fortune, of course, but it is being made, not only for the present, but for all time. Under such circumstances, I believe that any expenditure, provided it creates a lasting achievement of art, is justified."

LOUIS B. MAYER

Mr. Mayer was asked about the comparative advantages of producing such an elaborate spectacle here and abroad. He observed that the foreign extra players, of whom a host appear in the "mob scenes" of "Ben-Hur," entered into the spirit of the story with enthusiasm that would have been hard to duplicate.

"In the battle scenes on sea they worked themselves into such a pitch of frenzy," Mr. Mayer stated, "that forgetting this was, after all, a sham fight, they went into the fray so fiercely, hacking at each other with their swords, that Mr. Niblo had to halt hostilities at intervals to have medical attention administered to some who suffered actual wounds in the fighting.

"I am quite sure that it needed the descendants of the 'Ben-Hur' Romans to give our production faithful realism," the producer added, with a laugh at his recollection.

Mr. Mayer stated that there is one other Metro-Goldwyn production unit abroad at the present time. Rex Ingram is in Europe preparing to film Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Mare Nostrum," on its locales in France and Spain.

Mr. Mayer's associate studio executive, Harry Rapf, who has been in New York several weeks looking for new screen material, will return with him to the Culver City studios of the company. Mr. Mayer will confer with Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and with other of the company's officials before returning to the coast.

State Rights Sales

Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago and the Independent Film Company of Kansas City, independent exchanges, have purchased "Flattery" for their territories, it was announced this week at the offices of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, who are distributing this picture.

Henry Ginsberg announces the following additional territorial sales of the Benny Leonard series of two-reel features, "Flying Fists": Washington, Idaho and Montana, De Luxe Feature Film Company, 2016 Third avenue, Seattle, Wash.; District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia, Trio Film Exchange, 926 New Jersey avenue, Washington, D. C.; Kentucky and Tennessee, Big Feature Rights Corporation, 221 South Third street, Louisville, Ky.; Upstate New York, Golden Rule Pictures, Inc., 565 Pearl street, Buffalo, N. Y.

W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart Pictures, announces the following: To Irving Mandel, of Security Pictures, Chicago, the rights for Northern Illinois and Indianapolis on the following: The series of 6 H. J. Brown comedy-dramas starring Reed Howe; the 101 Ranch production, "Trail Dust"; "Street of Tears," and "Safeguarded," with Eva Novak; to J. W. Williams, of the Independent Film Company of Dallas, the rights for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas on the fifteen episode serial produced by Dell Henderson, "Battling Brewster."

Back from Coast, Marcus Loew Sees 1925 as Biggest Year

MARCUS LOEW looks for 1925 as the biggest year, from the standpoint of box-office prosperity, in the annals of motion pictures and the theatre. Loew, as a result of his analysis of the situation which he found during his recent trip west, expresses this confident.

"There will be no slump," he stated this week, "for the reason that caution, necessary to the adjustment of business all along the line since the war, has been exercised. Conservatism has been applied where it was needed, and the period of stress has been weathered by fractional production in mills, factories, the film business, in all branches of amusement, in fact.

"Especially has this been true in the motion picture field. Conditions have been foreseen, and they have been most carefully prepared for and as carefully met. The reward for this vision and its consequent fulfillment has placed the motion picture industry solidly on its feet ready to reap the harvest of the year now at hand.

"Metro-Goldwyn anticipates for itself the most successful season any film organization ever enjoyed," Loew said, "and we are going ahead with plans that will surpass in scope anything before attempted in the industry."

MRS. MARY SEIDER, WIFE OF N. J. PRESIDENT IS DEAD

Mrs. Mary Seider, wife of Joseph M. Seider, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, succumbed on November 29 to an illness of several months at Fox Chase, Philadelphia. The funeral was conducted from the Seider home in Brooklyn. In addition to her husband, who is also head of the Prudential Film Delivery Service, New York, Mrs. Seider is survived by two sons, Daniel, 11, and Henry, 7. Mrs. Seider was 31 years of age.

Increased World Sales of Pictures to Cut U. S. Rentals, Says Frank Green

FRANK GREEN, representing the Provisional Committe of the International Film Congress, to be held late next month in London, outlined last week, for The Moving Picture World, the objects of the Congress.

Dates will be fixed to enable the American trade to be fully represented and to meet the convenience of H. R. H., the Prince of Wales, who is expected to be the first president of the Congress, and guest of honor at the banquet in the English capital.

Objects of the Congress

Mr. Green, who is stopping at the Hotel Astor, said in his statement, in part:

"The objects of the Congress can easily be definid by anyone who will study in an unbiased manner the slogan, 'Co-operation—World Circulation of Films—Bigger Patronage.' Quite personally, I should like to add to this slogan, 'To Put the Film Trade on the Map in All Parts of the World.' By this, of course, I refer to the fact that in this country the Film Trade is recognized by business men and financiers, and your potential audiences vary around 50 per cent. of the population; whereas in other parts of the world the Film Trade has no entry to financial circles, and generally, a potential cinema-going population of very much less than 10 per cent. It is in these questions that America should be, and is, doubtless, interested to an enormous degree. The theatre owner of America is interested, because of other countries of the world are made capable of playing a greater proportionate of a film's cost, his proportion would consequently fall in a fair ratio to the increased returns of other parts of the world.

"The producer and distributor is equally interested on account of bigger world-wide sales or distribution, giving him a far greater proportion from outside sources towards the cost of production, and also a very much greater margin of profit.

"These two references are, of course, purely financial, and concern only the trade. But what of the public? The multitudes who actually pay every bill there is to be footed?

"The primary obpect of the moving picture industry is to provide entertainment. It is not primarily concerned with anything else. The trend of entertainment value is ever on the increase. With few exceptions, bigger pictures mean more expensive pictures.

Marcus Loew, President of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, last week accepted a vice-presidency in the International Film Congress.

"Two ways only present themselves to provide for increasing expense. By charging the exhibitor more, or by expanding world markets. The latter is the only solution.

"By meeting peoples of all countries, a knowledge of world markets may be gained, and outside prejudices, so great in parts of the world outside America, may be overcome, and a better understanding of each country's individual tastes arrived at.

"Variety is the spice of life, and a reasonable interchange of films creates variety. As in every other industry, America can sell her goods to the best advantage where the industry is in a healthy condition.

The Tariff Question

"One or two matters present themselves very forcibly, however, and these concern, I presume, as far as America is concerned, the question of the imposition of tariffs, duties, etc., into foreign countries, and for that matter into this country. Censorship regulations throughout the world. The advisability of free admittance, into all countries, of all films. The question of interchange of films, and the combination of producing interests and efforts. National barriers, such as the German quota, and a host of other interesting matter so vitally important to us all, and so ripe for discussion.

"It might be well to state immediately that the complete backing and support of the whole of the British Film Trade is behind this movement. The French, German and Italian organizations, representing exhibiting, distributing and producing interests, are solidly behind it, and are sending a large number of delegates to the Congress.

"At this very moment their suggestions are being tabulated and are arriving daily at the office of the Honorary Secretary.

Event of First Magnitude

"The Swedish Government has taken the matter up through their Board of Trade, and the League of Nations has taken the initiative by writing the secretary in the following words: 'Your Congress may well be an event of the first magnitude internationally, and you may depend upon our cordial co-operation.'

"An indication of the importance of the event is the fact that the British Broadcasting Company has agreed to broadcast by radio to the world the chief speeches at the Congress, together with the music at the banquet which will close this Congress.

"Our list of vice-presidents includes the most notable names of the British aristocracy, financial and trade leaders, and is rapidly adding to the list.

"It is my pleasure to thank the many leading members of the trade in this city who have so cordially received me, and so diligently accepted the excellent principles of the Congress, and to them and to the leaders of the film journals, I wish to offer my very sincere thanks."

Australia to Produce

Island Continent, Washington, D. C., Hears, Plans Big Film Unit

Efforts are being made to float a new All-Australian enterprise to produce moving picture films, the company to be known as Phoenix Films Limited, says Consul Norman L. Anderson, Melbourne, in a report to the Department of Commerce. The objects of the company, among others, are as follows:

(A) To carry on the business of producers, manufacturers and providers of moving picture films. (B) To acquire lands and buildings for the purpose and to erect and equip studios similar to those in Hollywood, California. (C) To engage expert producers of moving picture films. (D) To acquire the picture rights of literary and dramatic works, particularly those of Australian origin. (E) To carry on any business incidental to the foregoing. Apart from the business objects of the company, it is proposed to "establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production, and to develop an educational as well as the entertainment value and the general usefulness of the motion picture."

Arrangements have been completed whereby the company has acquired ten acres of land at Corio, near Melbourne, Victoria.

The company has not yet been incorporated, but a page advertisement in the daily press states that its nominal capital will be £250,000 divided into 50,000 fixed cumulative 10 per cent preference shares of £1 each, and 200,000 ordinary shares of £1 each. Early application will be made for listing of the company's shares on the stock exchange. The temporary office of the company is at 430 Bourke Street, Melbourne.

FIRST NATIONAL AND EDUCATIONAL AFFILIATE IN CANADA

Arrangements are being made at Toronto, Ontario, it is announced, for an affiliation between the Canadian organization of Associated First National and the Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., whereby Educational will undertake the physical distribution of all First National attractions through its chain of six offices across the Dominion. First National will continue to maintain its selling force with branch offices in the various key cities of Canada but the distribution will be done through Educational, it is said. Canadian Educational is already carrying out the physical distribution of releases of various companies in Canada and also holds the Canadian rights for the Ideal British productions. The Canadian general manager of Educational is O. S. Hanson, with offices at Toronto, while the Canadian manager for Associated First National is Louis Bache, Toronto. Further announcement regarding the working agreement are to be announced, it is stated.

Finkelstein-Rubin Interests Reported To Be About to Invade Wisconsin

Wisconsin theatre men are watching with interest reported invasion of the Badger state by the Finkelstein-Ruben interests of Minneapolis, who, according to word received in Milwaukee, have organized the Northern States Theatre Company and will shortly erect a new house in Eau Claire, Wis.

The venture is regarded in some quarters as an opening wedge in a plan to enter several key centers of the state, particularly the northern portion.

Coming as it does on the heels of an announcement by the Eau Claire Theatre Co. of a new theatre which that firm intends to erect shortly, the Finkelstein-Ruben move is looked upon also as an indication of a finish fight between the two interests in Eau Claire. The Eau Claire Theatre Co. at present controls the four theatres in the city.

The Finkelstein-Ruben interests, according to word received in Milwaukee, have obtained a 20-year lease on a highly desirable site, while the opposing firm is planning a 1100 seat house near the Elks clubhouse.

Films, as Entertainment Medium, Here to Stay, Says Aaron J. Jones

"THE cinema is still in its infancy. This is a statement that has been made truly archaic through overuse during the past twenty years. True, compared with legitimate and variety shows, there is still a great deal of room for progress and advance before the motion picture industry acquires the mellow, substantial perfection of a true art." So said Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago.

"Nineteen Twenty-five will undoubtedly mark a new niche in the rapid advance of the films. Greater and finer productions are promised for the approval of an eager public, and at least ten stupendous productions will be screened worthy of comparison with the leading legitimate successes. Last year saw the advent of the true two dollar picture. 'The Ten Commandments' and others proved that the public is both willing and anxious to support the higher and finer type of motion picture art. Regardless of the opinion of others, I sincerely believe that the two-a-day pictures are here to stay.

"Two great departures from the usual were seen in the perfection of technicolor photography and the natural vision films. The former has already proven its value, while the latter is still in the embryo, but will undoubtedly soon be completed and offered to the millions that compose the motion picture audience. No one knows, or can tell, what will be the ultimate results of the painstaking efforts of those who are sincerely working toward the goal of perfect film presentation.

"Chicago itself is a colossal example of the growth of the cinema. Back in 1904 when Jones, Linick & Schaefer opened its first picture theatre we little realized that some day huge palaces of amusement seating thousands of persons and garnished with the thought and millions of the builders would offer entertainment to the masses.

"My sincere belief in the motion picture industry is illustrated by the fact that we are soon to open a new theatre on the North Side. This will be the first of a chain of many which we hope to spread throughout the communities, supplying entertainment to the family group.

"Certain fundamental facts lie at the foundation and make it positive that the motion picture as a form of entertainment will always prevail. After all is said and done, the family is the basis of our life. The home is the ultimate criterion of what is wanted, either in the form of entertainment or otherwise. Slowly and surely 'the movie' has crept in and proved to everyone that it is both a clean and suitable form of entertainment for anyone between five and one hundred.

"Sensational and sex pictures are rapidly passing into the discard; thus the parent has little to fear in taking his children to a motion picture show, whereas the legitimate shows seem to be veering toward the suggestive and risque.

"Truely, the cinema has outgrown its swaddling clothes, and although it has not as yet reached its zenith, it is well on the road toward the final goal."

News on Every Page

For the first time in the history of its existence, the Alhambra, Milwaukee, this week, is reported to have found it necessary to refund money to patrons whom it could not accommodate. The business for the week grossed $20,000 which amount is said to be the largest sum realized by that theatre in downtown Milwaukee in years. Gilda Gray seems to have been the attraction. Incidentally Milwaukee is her home town. For full details of this unusual box office record turn to page 747.

Short Subject Jury

Leading Exhibitors to Make Award of Riesenfeld Gold Medal

The following exhibitors have agreed to act as jurors in determining the best short subject of the year, the producer of which is to get the gold medal offered by Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York: Joseph Plunkett, Strand Theatre, New York; J. A. Partington, Rothschild Theatre, San Francisco; Fred Meyer, Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio; Frank L. Newman, Kansas City; Harold B. Franklin, Famous Players Theatres; Harry C. McArthur, West Coast Theatres, Los Angeles.

Inasmuch as the medal will not be awarded until the end of the current season, the jurors will have ample time to consider any changes in the suggestions under which the donor of the medal hopes that it will be awarded. Except to carry out his ideas on broad lines, Mr. Riesenfeld states that he has no desire to interfere in the slightest degree with the wishes of the jurors, and will not be connected in any way with the decision.

It is his hope that the awarding of the medal will prove a stimulus to the producers of short subjects. That, he says, is his sole interest. He hopes soon to inaugurate a contest for the best original design to appear on the medal, which will be awarded yearly.

Kodak Official's Gift

George Eastman during the past week has contributed $15,000,000 to four educational institutions. This increases the total of Eastman's benefactions, made in the course of the last twelve months, to $58,602,900. This is understood to represent the bulk of Eastman's holdings in the Eastman Kodak Company. It is known, however, that Eastman has retained sufficient holdings to enable him to participate effectively in the management of the company.

TWO ONTARIO THEATRES RAZED BY BIG FIRE

Cobalt, Ontario, an important mining city in the northern section of the province, lost its two main theatres on December 4 when a disastrous fire swept a central block. The destroyed houses were the Grand and the Lyric theatres. The big fire is believed to have started in the basement of the Grand Theatre. Arrangements are being made to rebuild the two houses.

Radio Influence Manifested in Small Town

The influence of radio upon small town picture theatres is illustrated by a new 350-seat house being completed in Orfordville, Wis., by A. J. Fuller. Mr. Fuller, in ordering two Motiograph projection machines from the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company, Milwaukee, specified that they must be equipped with Mazda lamps instead of arc lamps, "because citizens of the town have warned that arc lamps may interfere with the radio programs, and if that comes to pass theatre patronage will suffer." Orfordville is a town of approximately 1,000 inhabitants near Janesville.

1,000 Less Amusement Centers, But Admission Tax Exceeds Last Year's Total By $7,468,925

A REDUCTION of more than 1,000 in the number of theatres, museums and concert halls in the United States within the past eighteen months is indicated by statistics included in his annual report by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. During the fiscal year 1923, the Commissioner shows, a total of 23,075 such places paid the capacity tax, while during the fiscal 1924 the number was but 21,897.

Analysis of the figures show that the number of places paying the capacity tax increased from 248 to 299 in Arkansas; in California it dropped from 902 to 723; Colorado dropped from 476 to 331; in Connecticut from 210 to 182; in Florida it increased from 213 to 229; Georgia dropped from 219 to 196; Hawaii registered an increase from 95 to 108; Idaho jumped from 177 to 456; Illinois showed an increase from 1,470 to 1,567; and Indiana jumped from 695 to 732.

The number in Iowa increased from 864 to 889; in Kansas from 663 to 712; in Kentucky from 446 to 648; in Louisiana from 287 to 461; in Maine from 270 to 339; but in Massachusetts it decreased from 641 to 440, and in Michigan from 728 to 702, but Minnesota showed absolutely no change, the number in both years being 695. The number in Mississippi decreased from 158 to 142; in Missouri from 778 to 757; in Nebraska from 609 to 596; in Nevada from 42 to 21; New Hampshire lost 10, leaving 148; New Jersey dropped from 543 to 506; and in New York the number dropped from 1,894 to 1,613.

North Carolina showed a drop from 536 to 294; North Dakota a drop from 260 to 192; Ohio from 1,274 to 934; Oklahoma from 580 to 456; but Oregon an increase from 257 to 281, and Pennsylvania a decrease from 1,594 to 1,505. The number in Rhode Island dropped from 142 to 62; in South Carolina it increased from 149 to 172, and in South Dakota from 287 to 293. Tennessee dropped from 254 to 233; Texas from 1,013 to 906; Vermont increased from 89 to 140; Virginia from 271 to 297; Washington, including Alaska, dropped from 469 to 407; West Virginia increased from 428 to 458; Wisconsin decreased from 704 to 689; and Wyoming dropped from 116 to 77.

Despite the decrease in the number of places of amusement, admission tax collections increased materially in the fiscal year 1924 over the preceding year, it is shown. The total tax collected on tickets sold at regular prices at the box office in 1924 was $76,809,510.88, against $69,340,585.82 in 1923; on tickets sold at places other than places of amusement, $139,674.85 against $115,325.37; on tickets sold by theatres, etc., at prices in excess of the regular established price, $27,971.81 against $34,667.13; and on leases of boxes and seats, $33,879.17 against $24,703.09. The total tax collections under these four heads was $78,011,036.71 in 1924 against $69,515,281.41 in the preceding year.

How the collections from such admissions were divided in 1924 among the different States is shown in the following table:

	Box office sales at regular prices	Sales at other than box office	Sales in excess of b. o. prices	Leases of boxes or seats
Alabama	$ 401,615.14

$5,000 in Prizes

Carl Laemmle Makes Offer to Exhibitors Who Exploit "U" Serials

As an encouragement to exhibitors who exploit serials, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, has arranged to give $5,000 in prizes during a twenty-week serial exploitation contest, just announced.

The Universal chief will give $250 a week in prizes to exhibitors who do the best work in selling Universal serials to their respective publics. The weekly prizes will be in the form of a first prize of $100, a second prize of $50, a third prize of $25, a fourth of $15 and six honorable mention prizes of $10 each. The contest will begin the week of January 12 and end on May 30. In case of a tie, the prizes will be duplicated.

The prizes will go to exhibitors exploiting any of the five recent Universal serials, "The Ghost City," "The Steel Trail," "Beasts of Paradise," "The Iron Man" and "The Fast Express."

The contest, as explained by Fred J. McConnell, manager of short product for Universal, has been arranged as a result of Mr. Laemmle's belief that the average exhibitor does not pay enough attention to the exploitation of short product, notably serial offerings.

Canadian Chain Incorporates $3,000,000 Company; F. P.-L. Has 30% Interest

United Amusements, operating a chain of nine moving picture theatres in the City of Montreal, has been organized as a $3,000,000 company under a Quebec Provincial charter, under the title of United Amusement Corporation, Limited. The head office is in Montreal. The notice of the incorporation was made December 4. This is the group of theatres in which the Famous Players Canadian Corporation recently acquired a 30 per cent. interest, according to a recent announcement, the securing of which brought the chain of houses under the control of Famous Players in the Dominion up to 82 theatres from Montreal to the Pacific Coast.

According to a published statement, the officers of the United Amusements include: President, Ernest A. Cousens, Montreal; Vice-President, Isidore Crepeau, Montreal; Managing Director, George Nicholas Ganetakos. The head office of the United Company is in the Albee Building, Mayor Street, Montreal.

The chief theatres in the United Montreal group include the Regent, Strand, Mount Royal, Belmont, Plaza, Papineau, Corona and Moulin Rouge.

Famous Players also operate a number of theatres in Montreal, including the Capitol, Palace, St. Denis and Loew's Theatres.

J. C. Brady Is Re-elected Head of Ontario M. P. T. O.; Big Meet

J. C. BRADY, proprietor of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, is again the head of the organized independent theatre movement in Ontario, through his unanimous re-election to the presidency of the Ontario branch of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Canadian Division, for 1925, his election taking place at the annual meeting of the Ontario M. P. T. O. at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, December 3.

Brady has been the head of the independents in Ontario for the past 12 years, being the original and only president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association, which operated for years until it was merged into the Ontario M. P. T. O. one year ago.

While a pioneer independent exhibitor was re-elected to the Ontario presidency, a newcomer in the moving picture theatre business was made vice-president in the person of Ald. W. A. Summerville, proprietor of the new Prince of Wales Theatre, Toronto. J. C. Cohen, proprietor of the Classic Theatre, Toronto, was re-elected treasurer, while Ray Lewis, Toronto, was again made secretary.

The 1925 board of directors comprises 12 exhibitors, half of whom represent the City of Toronto and the other half represent theatres in cities and towns throughout the province. The Toronto directors for the new year include Harry Alexander, Park Theatre; J. A. Boyd, Model Theatre; Harry Ginsler, Iola Theatre; Adam Baillie, Cumbac Theatre; Sam Lent and George Lester. Only one of the outside directors has been elected as yet, this being W. H. McMullan, proprietor of the Castle Theatre, Guelph, Ontario. The other five are to be elected shortly.

Auditors for the Ontario branch for 1925 are B. Hudson, owner of the Astor Theatre, Toronto, and Roy O'Connor, manager of the Prince of Wales Theatre, Toronto. The appointment of members to the grievance and arbitration committee was left to President J. C. Brady. The report of this committee at the annual meeting showed that many disputes between exhibitors and exchanges had been amicably settled without resorting to legal measures, thereby saving thousands of dollars to both sides, while mutual good will had been maintained between exchange managers and exhibitors through the satisfactory adjustments made.

Reports showed that the Ontario M. P. T. O. was in a very healthy condition, with an active membership list that constitutes a record for Ontario associations.

Wampas Holds Rally

Western Advertising Men Oppose Unethical Publicity Stunts

J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Carlton Pictures, and Hawley Turner, member of the executive committee, were the principal speakers at a recent meeting of the Wampas in Hollywood. Williams said advertising and publicity were 90 per cent of the picture business. Mr. Turner, an authority on national advertising, spoke on the handling of big campaigns.

The casting directors of the various studios were guests. Among them were Fred Datig of Universal, James Ryan of Fox, Dan Kelly, Dave Thompson of First National and H. L. Huginin of Mack Sennett.

The Wampas went on record as unalterably opposed to two unethical publicity stunts. One of these was the placing of a fake bomb in a San Diego newspaper office, and the other was an attempt to use the Democratic National Convention to publicize an actor.

June Mathis Weds Balboni

June Mathis, scenario editor for First National and other leading film producing companies, who has written many romances for the screen, has a first rate romance of her own on hand just now, which culminated this week, according to a private message received in New York of her marriage to Silvanio Balboni at the Mission of St. Cecelia, Riverside, Cal. Balboni was one of the group who journeyed to Italy to make the screen version of "Ben Hur" which has been adapted by Miss Mathis.

JACK WEINBERG RESIGNS FROM TWO NEW YORK FIRMS

Wisconsin Rules on Fight Films; Federal Jury Has Another Angle

WISCONSIN exhibitors who show fight films in their theatres are not guilty of violating any state law, providing they had no hand in bringing the pictures into the state. This is the substance of a ruling handed down by the attorney-general's office, according to word received in Milwaukee from the state capitol at Madison.

The ruling is contrary to the opinion previously held by many theatre men who were under the impression that to show the pictures constituted a violation of state law as much as transportation of the film into the state does.

The attorney-general's office points out, however, that its ruling is based merely on the state law and does not take into consideration the federal statutes which provide a heavy penalty for bringing fight films into the state.

The state ruling was prompted by the inquiry of numerous district attorneys in counties where prize fight films have been shown.

In the former respect the appearance of Leo A. Landau, prominent Milwaukee exhibitor, before the federal grand jury now in session in the Eastern District of Wisconsin has given rise to reports that a new investigation is under way which may result in indictments for those responsible for bringing fight films into the state.

Although anything which tranpires in the jury room is of course a matter of the utmost secrecy, exhibitors recall that Landau several months ago showed Dempsey-Firpo pictures at the Garden Theatre, one of his two downtown houses. Under the federal law an exhibitor who shows the pictures is not guilty of any offense, but the transportation of the film from one state to another constitutes a crime punishable by a severe sentence.

Several years ago indictments were returned by a grand jury sitting in Milwaukee naming a number of prominent men in the motion picture business as responsible for having brought other fight pictures into the state, but it was revealed some months ago that these indictments were not pushed. However, recently, numerous complaints have been received from various parts of the state that fight pictures are being shown without interference and it is reported that it is a result of these new complaints that action is contemplated.

Texas M. P. T. O., Now 350 Strong, Holds Annual Meeting; $15,000 for 1925 Budget

FOUR propositions of importance were put before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, in annual meeting in Dallas, Dec. 3-4. They are:

Tent shows: A proposal for a bill to tax travelling organizations showing under canvas on the same basis that the local exhibitor pays. The tax would amount to about $75 a week and it was estimated, would put 75 per cent. of the present travelling companies out of business. It would not apply, however, to circuses and carnivals, which are taxed separately and rather heavily under Texas laws. The proposal passed unanimously and the association's attorney was instructed to draft a bill for immediate presentation to the legislature.

Taxation: A report by the president, Col. H. A. Cole, of Marshall, on interviews with Texas legislators. The latter were told that Texas amusement men are willing to be taxed as other industries are but will balk at assuming an onerous burden. A unanimity of opinion existed on this question.

Censorship: A few words disposed of this subject. All present favored its elimination as far as possible.

Sunday shows: On this subject there was a divergence of opinion. A majority favored nothing being said at present concerning Sunday shows, although all the amusement men, naturally, want them. There is in Texas an obsolete statute prohibiting Sunday showing, also the sale of cigars, soft drinks, merchandise and like articles. In a number of towns, principally the larger ones, the shows are open, not in a spirit of defying the law, but because the will of the people demands that the shows stay open on the Sabbath.

A proposal to present a bill to the legislature looking to a repeal of the old statute and providing for "local option," met rough sledding. This was because motion picture men believe any agitation along these lines will result in closing the present "open" towns and in general would work harm to the industry.

Charles Pettijohn, counsel for the Film Board of Trade of New York, although not a programmed speaker on opening day, when the Sunday show matter came up, endeavored to set the motion picture men right on the subject. He related experiences in other states where the exhibitors sought similar measures and visioned what would happen in Texas if, at the present moment, with the element of psychology missing, they agitated the repeal of the old law.

Pettijohn cautioned slowness in taking the step, however desirable it may seem to be. He said that the minute the M. P. T. O. Texas put itself on record in legislative halls as favoring a wide open state, the ire of every preacher and three-fourths of the rural residents would be awakened. He advised waiting until other industries are sold on the idea. Then, with the oil men, the druggists, restaurateurs and others solidly backing the amusement purveyors, the latter stand some chance of getting the proposition put over. Joe Philips of Fort Worth and others spoke along similar lines and the proposal lost by a vote of about 10 to 1.

The Dallas convention was record-breaking in every respect. Nearly two hundred attended, although registrations did not reach that figure.

The bill covering the ten shows was presented and explained by Frank W. Wozencraft, ex-Mayor of the City of Dallas and general counsel of the M. P. T. O. Texas. Two years ago the Strickland bill, seeking to equalize taxes between the exhibitors and travelling dramatic and "tab" organizations was passed but a high court declared it unconstitutional in that it is discriminatory. The present bill is labelled as "100 per cent. law-proof." In its preamble it is stated that a theatre is a theatre, whether its walls are of mortar or canvas. Therefore to recognize this similarity, no distinction is made; in fact, the new bill eliminates a distinction.

"These traveling fly-by-nighters," Mr. Wozencraft said, "are a parasite in any community where a tax-paying, God-fearing exhibitor, a community builder, is forced to foot the bills and let the transient get away with the 'gravy.'"

President Cole added that the average tent show would be forced to pay between $2,000 and $3,000 a year for the privilege of showing in Texas. He estimated it would drive out three-fourths of the organizations at present making Texas a port of call. He had an argument against this, however from his own brother, H. S. Cole of Bonham. H. S. Cole wanted the tax set at a higher figure, claiming $75 weekly would not scare away the average transient. That amount is but the salary and expenses of a single trouper, Mr. Cole added. He suggested that the law be made more stringent, and embrace fire protection, etc. He was told that the bill could not embrace anything but taxation.

B. S. Ferguson, Opera House, Hamlin, Texas, said: "We must fight fire with fire. In my own town we are worried with scores of tent shows yearly. My theatre has lost money every time one of them came in. Now, I want to suggest that we group ourselves, say ten or twelve exhibitors in a specified territory. First, we will give the itinerant a chance to book our own house, for folks do get tired of the sameness of pictures. Failing in that, we will own our own tent and we will offer him that. Then, if he shows opposition, why, buck him. Let's buy attractions and fight him out."

Another exhibitor wanted to know what would happen to "auspices," showings; those given by the Arab brother who promises a percentage of the intake to the American Legion, Red Cross, firemen and similar organizations. He was told that even auspices showings will bear the same tax under the pending bill.

The exhibitor in Henderson announced he would give away five $5 gold pieces on a Saturday night. Admission tickets given throughout the week were placed in a hat. The exhibitor got such an overflow house that night that an additional announcer was required to convey news of the winners to an overflow audience. The tent show had an attendance, by actual count, of fourteen. That same exhibitor trotted out the college band for a theatre concert during the entire week that another tented organization showed. Result, more packed houses and one more transient placing the taboo talisman by the side of that town for the benefit of his travelling brothers.

H. T. Hodge of Abilene, Texas, owner of shows in five towns, who claims he has lost thousands this year by reason of tent show patronage, had a concrete suggestion. He said that the tent show interests, in retaliation over taxes and other matters, might erect twenty permanent tents in twenty stands throughout the Lone Star State. Then they would combine and send road shows over the circuit, playing in these tents and thus escaping the occupation tax in each town. Hodge gave the idea not as a remote possibility, but as a nearby probability.

Col. Cole said he wished the M. P. T. O. Texas was strong enough financially to send out two exploitation men over the territory, following up the tent shows. Their mission would be the thinking up of stunts to draw patronage to the exhibitor.

Colonel Jason Joy, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, was a featured speaker during the afternoon session. He said he had discovered in the southland a tremendous interest in the motion picture among the laiety. He drew a parallel between two exhibitors in the Carolinas. One man keeps on good terms with his public, finds out what they want, takes an interest in their welfare and prospers. The other, with the same pictures, the same music, but lacking the personal contact touch, is a rank failure. He urged the picture men to get to the parents through the child.

Business Manager H. G. McNeese in his annual report showed an unusual growth of membership. Approximately 350 are numbers, contrasted the forty-two of eighteen months ago.

Secretary of State J. J. Strickland followed McNeese, declaring the whole problem of the industry today lies largely in having the industry understood by the public. There was an automobile tour of the city before noon and an informal dinner followed by a dance, beginning at 7 p. m., in the Palm Garden of the Adolphus Hotel, convention headquarters. The convention steering committees included:

Finance and budget: E. L. Byar of Terrell; Harold Robb of Dallas and Lou Bissinger of Dallas. Resolutions: H. S. Ford of Wichita Falls; Leslie Witt of Waco and H. S. Cole of Bonham.

Constitution: J. A. Holton of Port; Arthur P. V. William of Munday and Mrs. T. C. Christopher of Beaumont. Reception, W. A. Fairman of Bryan; Ross Rogers of Amarillo and Sebe Goodlett of Georgetown. Registration: Jack Lilly of Greenville; William K. Greever of Vernon and J. P. Jones of Groesbeck.

A feature of the closing day was the announcement by Earl L. Crabb, district manager of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., in Texas, to the effect that every Southern Enterprise house in the Lone Star State sought membership in the present body. He said he did not understand why his organization was not represented in the Texas

Association, and promised clean, straightforward competition at all times.

Crabb was asked if there was a distinction between the exhibitor and distributor, and he pointed out that the theatre department of the Southern Enterprises was separate and distinct from distribution of the Paramount products. In fact, he said, the theatres had their usual squabbles with the distributing ends, just as any other theatre.

"We feel we should do our part," said Mr. Crabb, "in the onward march of this successful organization. I repeat, that I pledge for every S. E. house in Texas the full weight of its influence in anything you may undertake."

Col. Cole answered Mr. Crabb, saying he felt now that Southern Enterprise houses were needed. In the past, it is true, there have been conflicts and incriminations, he said, but a new day is dawning that spells co-operation.

Si Charninsky of Dallas, Joe S. Phillips of Fort Worth, and Charles C. Pettijohn of New York, all clamored for the floor at this junction. Each of them in turn paid tribute to Mr. Crabb personally and urged immediate action on the application. A resolution was passed unanimously admitting the Lone Star houses of Southern Enterprises.

Trade problems were discussed at the Wednesday afternoon session, non-theatrical bookings leading off. Open-air trade boosting propositions, at which films are shown, were proven a bugaboo to exhibitors. It was related that in Paris, Texas, the local exhibitor went to his Chamber of Commerce and headed off an event that would have proven disastrous to his patronage, and at the same time been a money maker only to its instigators.

Prices of advertising posters and accessories received attention. It was stated that business in this line has dropped to an alarming extent in this territory. Cole said the exchanges' viewpoint is that they can not make money and therefore must put up the price. Prices for 24 sheets in the Texas territory vary from $1 to $2.40. A Fort Worth exhibitor claimed that if he were able to obtain all his 24 sheets at $1 he would absorb ten times the quantity he now is using. Mr. Pettijohn said the price of paper will never come down until "wild-catting" poster exchanges in seven or eight cities throughout the country are abolished.

Senator John G. Willacy, State Tax Commissioner, told the exhibitors that there is a scheme afloat to levy an additional tax on picture shows. He said the State has no right to ask any additional penny on picture shows or any other industry.

Nathan Adams, president of the American Exchange National Bank of Dallas, the largest financial institution in the Southwest, was the principal speaker of the afternoon, taking as his subject, "Financing the Theatre."

He likened the motion picture industry to that of selling automobiles. Both in their infancy were looked upon as experiments. But today are listed among the great industries of the world. Financing motion picture ventures in the Southwest has been a pleasant and profitable business, for his bank, he said. It is true there have been some losses, but no higher ratio than any other line of business. He depreciated the efforts of the under-capitalized adventurer.

"At no time in the history of Texas or the Southwest has business faced a better outlook than at the present," was the cheering message Mr. Adams left with the delegates.

It was decided that engraved passes be sent to all Texas legislators, good at all Association theatres. Further that each theatre maintain in colored glass an insignia soon to be worked out. This insignia also will be carried on the stationery.

Colonel Cole was presented with a handsome gold watch, the gift of the Association in appreciation of his services.

Treasurer Byar reported a budget of $15,000 was necessary for 1925. This amount will be collected from cities and towns on a basis of population. O. E. Engelbrecht of Temple spoke on trailers and the amount of money to be made by running them. A motion was passed indorsing a proposition of the Alexander Film Company with reference to these business getters.

Ross Rogers of Dye, Ford & Rogers, Panhandle showmen, declared the Texas organization could secure from the defunct Selznick firm twelve Norma Talmadge pictures at $2,000 a print and a split of fifty-fifty after the $2,000 was received. He urged the Texas association to align itself with institutional advertising as broadcast from New York headquarters. He also broached a proposition to send President Cole on a speaking tour of Texas, to accomplish what Colonel Joy is doing in a national way. Colonel Cole took kindly to the suggestion, which likely will be put into operation as soon as the association is financially able.

In executive session Wednesday morning, protection of individual exhibitors' rights against film exchanges for poor prints was discussed. Members were urged to use non-taxable music wherever possible, although it was pointed out that most of the present day popular music is taxable. The tricky film salesman came in for much condemnation.

W. G. Underwood of the Specialty Film Company of Dallas spoke on "Buying Pictures," and C. D. Hill, Dallas architect, discussed "Theatre Architecture."

Trade problems took up so much time that addresses by James P. Simpson on "Theatre Advertising" and S. G. Howell on "Merchandising the The Theatre," were eliminated, but will be published in the Texas organ of the exhibitors.

A banquet Wednesday evening with the Dallas film exchanges as hosts closed the convention.

Not all of the delegates registered. Among those in attendance were:

Delegates included John Paxton, Paris; M. T. Flanagan, Longview; E. L. Parnell, Troup; H. T. Hodge, Abilene; R. W. Henree, Coleman; Thomas Darnell, Stephenville; Non Briner, Lufkin; H. S. Ford, Wichita Falls; Roscoe D. Rogers, Amarillo; J. E. Draginis, Yoakum; C. W. Batsell, Sherman; H. B. Chamberlain, Henderson; J. B. Jones, Groesbeck; John Victor, Abilene; John E. Universal Purchases Heavily of the Selznick Receiver

THE Universal Pictures Corporation has bought all the rights, physical properties and assets of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, Universal announced this week. The purchase was made by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal organization, at the receiver's sale held in Judge Winslow's part of the United States District Court.

Universal's purchase not only includes such appurtenances as the Selznick offices in No. 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C., with a floor space of 6,000 square feet, various exchanges offices and fixtures in other parts of the United States and certain holdings in foreign countries, but the negative and positive film possessed by the Selznick corporation, including a large number of pictures made by some of the screen's most popular stars.

The positives include several pictures not yet released. A number of Selznick pictures recently were bought from the receivers for distribution by Associated Exhibitors and the Film Booking Offices. The percentage of the rentals on these pictures which were to go to the receivers, will now accrue to Universal.

Among the assets acquired by Universal are motion picture rights to many stories, books and plays. The most important of these probably are the rights to "The Easiest Way" and "Cheating Cheaters," both Broadway stage successes.

Universal also gets the various Selznick electric signs and the Selznick store-house in West Twenty-eighth Street. The lease on the Selznick home offices in No. 729 Seventh Avenue has 14 months to run, it is understood.

The story rights include hundreds of manuscripts which have never been made into pictures. Among them are novels, plays, short stories and other writings from the pens of such authors as Lewis Allen Browne, John Lynch, Eugene Walter, Jack Lait, Garrett E. Fort, John Galsworthy, Roy Horniman, Meredith Nicholson, Edgar Franklin, Herbert Footner, George V. Hobart, Isola Forrester and Mann Page, Louise Winter, E. J. Montague, Elizabeth Redfield, Charles Belmont Davis, Edward Montagne, Alan Crosland, Dorothy Farnum and Leighton Osmun.

Among the outstanding rights are those of "Justice" by Galsworthy, "Proof of the Pudding" by Nicholson, "Shirley Kaye" by Footner and "Catch of the Season" by Charles Belmont Davis.

The location of the various branch distributing offices of the Selznick, which are being taken over by Universal, are as follows: Albany, Boston, Denver, Detroit, Milwaukee, New Haven, New Orleans, St. Louis, Salt Lake, San Francisco, Seattle, Atlanta, Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Washington.

It is not known what Carl Laemmle intends to do with these various properties. Universal already has exchanges in all of these cities, but may make some changes to the newly acquired locations.

Cautious St. Louis

Mayor Henry W. Kiel, of St. Louis, has just signed an ordinance which requires that in all new theatres and motion picture show buildings the boiler room must be located in a strictly fire-proof room with no openings into the building proper. The walls of the boiler room must be of 12-inch masonry on all sides and the ceiling of 12-inch slab construction.

merely the proper selections which count, important as that is. Equally much depends upon a conscientious and technically perfect execution. The care bestowed on details brings results in this field as well as in others. It has happened of late that I have made a certain piece of music familiar to my radio patrons and when they hear this same music as a setting for a picture, say a short subject, for example, it impresses them with double force and gives them a new thrill."

The Background of Achievement

Years ago Roxy was voluble to the bubbling point. He is still voluble, but now there is an impressive background of achievement that lends weight and worth to his utterance. An enthusiastic love for his work dominates him today as it did more than ten years ago. Ambition buoyed up by an inexhaustible optimism is still his daily bread. It had been suggested to him to write a book embodying the unique experiences of his career.

"Why should I do that?" queried Roxy of himself rather than his interlocutor. "No, I am not hungry for such fame."

He paused for a moment.

"No, not that," he said, "there is a crowning achievement that I am looking forward to—in the future—I don't know how distant."

Whatever, Roxy meant he kept the idea locked in his brain. If he himself speaks of it as a crowning achievement the motion picture industry may once more become debtor to a fertile and creative mind, that in its own chosen field has been without a peer.

Ideas Gathered Along Broadway

on the well-known "Western Allegro" was conspicuous. The whole musical score was conceived and executed to suit the swift pace and thoroughly American spirit of the picture.

AT the Strand the striking thing was the unusual musical presentation, which, as far as appeared from the program, had no particular relation to the pictorial part of the bill. The audiences seemed to be much impressed and for this reason a brief description is offered here. The setting is simple. It consists of a memorial column surmounted by a bust of Verdi, which is an exact replica of the Verdi monument at 72nd street and Broadway. Three singers, baritone, soprano and tenor, are grouped around the column, the baritone and tenor at the right and left, respectively, the soprano in the center. The singers are in costume, which, however, is covered with a white plastering, for they are supposed to be parts of the statuary group and relapse into marble immobility after they have rendered their songs. The selections in the order here given are as follows:

Iajos Credo from Othello (Baritone)

Pace, Pace, Dio Mio from "La Forze del Destino" (soprano)

"Celeste Aida" from "Aida" (tenor)

Each of the performers sang five minutes, which accounts for the unusual length of this purely musical unit on a motion picture program.

The music used for the feature, "Husbands and Lovers," had no outstanding themes. It was rather prettily introduced by "Out On a Terrace," an entr' acte, and "An Enchanting Night," by J. L. Zawbonik.

The windy and unsettled weather was in some part responsible for the great interest aroused by a colored weather bulletin displayed in the lobby of the Piccadilly as close to the sidewalk as the law permits. The bulletin displays weather signals in the shape of little white and colored flags, indicating rain, high winds, etc. It shows in larger size than the rest a signal supposed to give warning of an approaching tornado (a small black square in a large red square) and then goes on to say, "Look for a tornado in New York on Sunday," which is not a bad way of advertising the feature of next week's program, House Peters in "The Tornado."

GOLDEN RULE EXCHANGE INCORPORATES; BUFFALO OFFICES

The Golden Rule Pictures Corporation, recently incorporated at Albany, N. Y., has opened offices in Buffalo at 505 Pearl street. This is the newest independent exchange in the state. Richard C. Fox, former manager of the Paramount and Selznick offices in Buffalo, and who at one time was general manager for Universal in Great Britain, is president of the new company. Maurice A. Chase, recently vice-president and general manager for Selznick, is vice-president, and A. P. Rappe is secretary. Buffalo will be the headquarters of the company, but offices will be opened in Albany and New York.

PARAMOUNT SALESMAN CLOSES BIG SALE IN PITTSBURGH

Edgar Moss, sales representative for the Paramount Philadelphia exchange, made good his promise of a week ago when he declared at the Paramount District Sales Meeting in Philadelphia that before the end of the week he would sell over one hundred thousand dollars' worth of Second Famous Forty contracts. Harry Ballance, divisional sales manager, has just received contracts from Moss amounting to $108,450.

West Coast Theatres Deal

The California and Miller's theatres in Los Angeles will become an operating link in the great chain of West Coast Theatres, Inc. playhouses, it was announced, following a conference recently between Marcus Loew, president of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer corporation, which, heretofore has held exclusive control of the two houses, and members of the directorate of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. Details of the big deal as outlined by M. Gore, president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. include the acquisition by the latter corporation of a one-half interest in both the California and Miller's theatres, while the Loew corporation assumes a one-half interest in the Criterion Theatre on Seventh near Grand. All of these houses however will be operated by the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Young at Spargo Studio

Lon Young, who recently resigned from the advertising and publicity departments of Warner Bros., after four years with that organization, is now associated with the Edgar Scott Spargo photographic studios which will soon be opened at 131 West Forty-fifth Street. In addition to the activities in connection with his new association, Mr. Young will also handle personal publicity for a few well known screen players. One of Mr. Young's clients is Marjorie Daw, who was recently signed by First National for a prominent role in "One Way Street," now in course of production under the direction of Jack Dillon at the Biograph studio.

STORK VISITS MR. AND MRS. JAMES FRANCIS DILLON

It has just been learned that a son, James Francis Dillon, Jr., was presented to Mr. and Mrs. James Francis Dillon on November 29. Mrs. Dillon is known in professional circles as Edith Hallor and was the star of "Leave It to Jane" and other Broadway successes. Mr. Dillon is now directing "One Way Street," which is being produced at the Biograph Studios in New York City for First National release.

"GIRL OF LIMBERLOST" AUTHOR DIES AS RESULT OF ACCIDENT

Gene Stratton Porter, author, died this week in Los Angeles as the result of injuries received in an automobile accident on the outskirts of that city. She produced one picture from her book, "The Girl of the Limberlost."

PRODUCERS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION SALES SESSION

The first of a series of three anniversary sales conventions was held in New York, December 12 and 13 by Producers Distributing Corporation at which the achievements of the company's first year were reviewed and the plans and picture for the coming season discussed in detail. The New York meeting was held at the Commodore Hotel. It was attended by the branch managers and chief salesmen in the Eastern division and will be followed by meetings in Cleveland and Chicago, at which the managers of the Central, Mid-Western and Western divisions will be present. L. W. Weir, Western Division Manager was also present at the New York meeting having come East to be presented with a big silver loving cup, won by his division in the efficiency contest between the four divisions of the company's sales force.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Free Tickets for Advertising Ideas Are Valuable in Making You Friends

E. E. MEREDITH, who does the advertising for the Kearse Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., and the Virginia Theatre, Fairmount, has been making an advertising cleanup at a small cost through advertising for ideas to be used in the theatre ads.

He started the scheme by using a sample verse in one of his displays. This was:

When I am sad and tired and blue,
I tell you what I always do.
I get my hat and away I go
To see the Kearse picture show.

This was run with his own name as author, with his street address. Below was "Send in your advertising ideas. Two tickets for each one adopted."

He did not specify that the idea must be a jingle, but he gets mostly verse, because he used one. He points out that the samples should not be too well written, lest they discourage the amateurs. To the same end, he did not use the best verse sent in the first two or three weeks, though tickets were sent with the promise of later use.

Answer All Letters

He writes that it is important that each letter be replied to, for the preservation of good will, and adds that where a verse seeks to disparage an opposition house it is always returned with a courteous suggestion that the theatre does not care to adversely comment upon its competitors.

He favors a daily jingle, and insists that the name and address of the author be used. Where the request is made that only the initials be used, he writes that he cannot use initials only. Generally the consent to the use of the full name is given, and he feels that the name has a real value.

In his own experience he finds that the idea appeals to all classes, and often he will receive a reply from someone locally prominent. In the list was one Congressional candidate, a court clerk and a number of city officials.

Rouse Local Interest

The chief values of the scheme lie in the interest aroused by the work of the neighbors and the fact that where a jingle is sent in it is generally read to the entire family. In other words each entered poem has already advertised the value of the theatre's entertainment to the entire family circle.

This emphasis given the study of the theatre's good points is by no means the least of the advantages of the scheme. To tell about the good points they must formulate the idea, and this alone is worth the tickets sent. What you actually express is always more definite than what you think. It has been put into concrete form, and given exact words. Then when the jingle wins a prize the proud author spreads the glad news.

The scheme has been in use for a considerable time in both threatres which Mr. Meredith handles. The verses take up only five or six lines in the advertising space, and any one does the house considerably more good than is represented by the value of the tickets sent.

If you are looking for something to revive interest in your house, try this out. It's a sound scheme and its practicability has been proven.

Printed Checks

Printing up restaurant menus is old stuff, so the Arcade Theatre Jacksonville, printed the backs of the checks used by two restaurants with the message "And now go see Barbara La Marr and Percy Marmont in The Shooting of Dan McGrew, Arcade Theatre all this week." As the checks were presented the diners face down, they all got the message.

Los Angeles Waging a Big Type Contest

Pat Dowling writes that because of the heavy posting done in Los Angeles the average 24-sheet is an also ran. It's just another one of them, and to get out of the ruck the managers are going to special painting and huge block letters.

Harold Lloyd came out strong for Hot Water, but the 24-sheet for The Thief of Bagdad took all records with most of the area given to a single word.

Just to show that Christie Comedies are in the running, Pat photographed these along with his own special for Reckless Romance.

The color contrasts do not photograph well and the name sinks in, but in the original the moniker of T. Roy Barnes, Harry Myers, Wanda Hawley and Sylvia Bremmer stand out for all they are worth.

Pat writes that Mark Larkin, who handles the Grauman work on The Thief of Bagdad, is using 700 stands in Los Angeles and the suburbs. Not all 24's, of course, but a goodly proportion.

Think of that next time you wonder whether to order one or two 24's. You won't feel so badly about it.

A Christie Release

PAT DOWLING WANTS IT UNDERSTOOD THAT CHRISTIE COMEDIES ARE THERE, TOO

Los Angeles advertisers are going to big letters for their stands to get away from the multitude of posters. The record seems to be held by The Thief of Bagdad, but you don't have to use a mic roscope to tell that Reckless Romance is in town. He's keeping Christie right up with the procession and the snappy comedy is making good.

Students Helped

Before the run of America at the New Grand Theatre, Topeka, the management, Hooper and Jencks, interested the Seaman Rural High School in the idea of making a miniature of Fort Sacrifice. United Artists supplied plans and specifications for the design and the work was done by the students as a part of their annual manual training.

The model was exhibited in a store window and attracted very general interest. It had the local angle and was worth many times the advertising value of a model done by the theatre in its own shops.

The surrounding towns were circused for a radius of fifteen miles, and though the run was during the height of the political campaign, a splendid business was had.

A Patriotic Week Held for America

With America booked into three of their houses on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, Haring and Blumenthal proclaimed a Patriotic Week, with parades and everything.

In the parade they supplied a float and a mounted Paul Revere, the United States Lines providing the band from the S. S. Washington and also a float showing a model of the same ship; a unit in the Shipping Board fleet. The theatre float showed Cornwallis surrendering to George Washington with Uncle Sam, Betsy Ross and an Indian chief looking on. Betsy was chaperoned by a silhouette Statue of Liberty.

For a lobby display in the Central Theatre, the major house of the circuit, the managers obtained the loan of a large model of the Leviathan, which is generally on exhibition in some window in New York. It is eight or ten feet long, weighs two tons and is valued at $10,000 a ton. It was new over in Jersey and fully 10,000 school children were brought to the theatre to see it. It easily is one of the most minutely exact ship models ever constructed.

With the picture playing day and date for four days in the three houses, an exceptional business was done.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

TEN incidents, three of which were films and seven of which were musical presentations, made up the show of which "The Fast Set" was the feature picture. The musical numbers required 40 minutes, while the feature picture took 1 hour and 15 minutes, leaving 14 minutes for the remaining two film subjects. One of these was the Mark Strand Topical Review, 8 minutes long, and the other was a Lyman Howe. It took 6 minutes for this.

Beginning with the overture, the show ran as follows: The overture by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra was Rossini's "William Tell," with the following lights—llama cloth curtain was closed over the small production stage and a 160 ampere Mestrum flood light of straw covered this, the side drapes and the musicians. The footlights of the big stage were straw one half. As the overture worked up to the storm scene, all lights except the foots dimmed out and lightning flashes were seen through the transparent windows at either side of the orchestra. At the storm climax a rain effect was thrown from the booth covering the entire stage. After the storm a rainbow appeared across the entire set, projected from the dome and the covelights came up magenta, as did also the foots of the small and large stage and the borders. Pure white floods from the booth and dome covered the orchestra and all the drapes. Eight minutes for this overture.

"The Incident of the Fan" was put on a bare stage with deep blue plush cyclorama backing it up. Eight members of the ballet were used, costumed in silver dresses with ropes of pearls and carrying large green feather fans. The entire number was a series of fan poses by the girls coupled up by various dance steps. For a finish soprano in white silk dress and rose-feather fan sang "Every Little Movement" from "Madame Cherry." Lights for this were baby spots of orange from either side of the stage and floods of the same color from the dome. Four minutes for this number.

Coloratura soprano appeared on the apron of the large stage to sing "Polonaise" from Thomas' "Mignon," under a straw spot from the dome. The silver draw curtains were closed on the production stage and were lighted by four color blend arch spots and two light blue floods on the musicians from the dome; green and magenta spots from the sides crossed the ceiling drapes. Four minutes for this number.

Following the Howe picture, a Schumann Cycle was presented in 8 minutes. The opening showed a cellist and contralto seated on opposite sides of a fireplace. The only lighting was 2 magenta spots coming from the fireplace and picking out the artists. The whole set was backed up by deep blue plush cyclorama. The cellist first played Schumann's "Traumerie" and this was followed by the contralto singing "I Chide Thee Not." At the finish the spots dimmed, leaving a dark stage as the curtain closed.

Next came the Topical Review, after which was an Indian Suite, the biggest number of the show. The back drop for this was a transparent mountain scene with set runway and rock and trees. At the opening a basso as an Indian brave was seen centre stage, while in various poses were Indian maidens. The basso sang "Pale Moon" by Logan, after which the members of the ballet danced.

Selections from "Il Trovatore" came just before the feature picture. These were on a bare stage with a prison back drop. Magenta foots on the small stage were the only lighting at the opening. The contralto sang "Fierce Flames Are Soaring" and exited on the opposite side. The orchestra then played measures of the "Anvil Chorus," lighted by magenta floods from the booth, augmented by blue foots and borders on the large stage. The close of the number was a duet by soprano and baritone.

All the above musical presentations, including the music for the Howe and the Topical Review, were broadcast direct from the stage at the 9 o'clock performance on Tuesday as the first portion of the regular weekly

THE TWO FLOATS AND PAUL REVERE USED TO PUT OVER AMERICA IN NEW JERSEY

Haring and Blumenthal booked the Griffith picture into their three houses and then proclaimed a Patriotic Week, with a parade which included these ballyhoo floats. On the first float are Uncle Sam, Betsy Ross, Cornwallis, an Indian Chief and the Statue of Liberty. The second float is a model of the S.S. Washington of the U. S. Lines.

HOOKING GLORIA TO COOLIDGE AND DAVIS HELPED

Her Love Story came to the Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., about election time and photos of the candidates were used to get added interest for the cutout of the star, while the Prince of Wales was tied to a lobby card.

Hooked the Prince to Her Love Story

Because Her Love Story came to the Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., about election time, the management got added interest in a cut-out of Gloria Swanson by hanging pictures of Davis and Coolidge and Dawes just below her outstretched hands.

But the Prince of Wales was made a runner up, for a lobby card asked: "Will the Prince of Wales ever marry an American Girl? Gloria Swanson will show you. The story of a princess whose forbidden romance shocked and rocked a kingdom."

Between the prince and the politicians—and Gloria—the feature went over like a house afire.

Leslie F. Whelan, Philadelphia Paramounter, assisted the local management.

Tried Out Mertons

Reviving an old idea, John J. Friedl landed a local paper on a movie tryout when Merton of the Movies came to the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

The paper explained that it wanted to find out if the town had any unsung talent and also that it would save them a trip to Hollywood, as tests were to be made of the three winners and sent to Paramount.

Several hundred entries were made, and the paper took plenty of space to tell all about it.

Well Written

An adaptation of the "What I know about ——" book comes from J. M. Weist, Paramounteer, who is working it for Merton of the Movies. This one is "Instructions to Back Seat Drivers," and the inside pages contain only a huge "SHUT UP." The back page is given to the house advertisement.

Everyone will appreciate this one.

Novel Lighting on Schade's Balloon

George Schade, of Sandusky, got a ten foot captive balloon for his ballyhoo on The Sea Hawk, and let it float over his theatre with the lower half lettered with the title and the fact that it was at the Schade.

That was all right in the daytime, but the night came early and he wanted to sell in the evening. He borrowed a searchlight from the captain of one of the lake steamers, tied up for the winter, and this was trained on the balloon.

Naturally only the lower half of the sphere was lighted from below and as there was no trace of the light beam, a lot of people spent much time trying to figure out how the partial illumination was effected.

He even managed to dog a story in which a reporter told how he almost was fooled into believing it to be the Shenandoah, which was just then completing its cross country trip. He was all set to give three rousing cheers when he saw the title of the play and connected that with the fact that the Hawk was billed at Schade's house. It made a readable story, so it was good advertising.

Backed by a lavish use of paper and newspaper work, the picture got all existing records for attendance and receipts.

One clever idea was the use of special memorial stamps on mailed heralds. This is a local issue and the one cent denomination showed a galley. It was not that of the Sea Hawk, but it fitted in and Schade mailed out 5,000 heralds under these stamps.

Merton's Postcards

Four hundred hand written post cards were sent from Dallas to as many young women in Oklahoma City. They read:

"Dear Miss ——, Some mutual friends have advised me that you contemplate entering the movies. Before doing so I would suggest that you see me at the Capitol Theatre, November 2-3-4 or 5, between the hours of 12 and 11 P. M. Sincerely, Merton Gill.

Earl Settle figured out the idea, but he made his assistant meet the girls who flocked to the Capitol, unable to wait until the dates named. They were told that Merton was playing at the Palace Theatre that week, but could be seen at the Capitol on the dates named. It made for laughs—and business.

Who Can Tell?

Just to get a laugh the Olympic Theatre, Altoona, Pa., mailed two pair passes to the secretary of every business and social club in the city with the request that the President present them to the two handsomest members of the club. Most of the secretaries entered into the spirit of the thing and it gave hundreds of dollars worth of advertising to Yolanda. The beauty of this stunt is that it will work for any picture. Try it on your own Rotary and Kiwanis.

THE WINE SHOP

A stand was erected in the lobby and each patron was offered a sample on his way from the box office to the entrance. It's rather late in the season for the sampling of summer drinks, but the manufacturers are trying to put it over for a year-around beverage, and they have been generously sampling the entire south, and not always with so apt a title.

Make Christmas something more than a day of good business. Make it happy for the kids.

Turned Away Crowds From Local Prologue

Here's how it worked.

The show was to start at half past eight.

At seven o'clock the last seat was taken.

At seven thirty the ticket sale was stopped.

By eight o'clock hundreds were turned away.

Can you blame Herry Seel of Saenger's People's Theatre, Greenville, Miss., for calling it a wow?

He had Being Respectable and he wanted to get more people than usual in to see it. He put his orchestra on the stage, along with a few chairs and tables for a cabaret set, framed up a very sketchy little skit which was handled by local talent—and then missed the show himself because he was too busy turning people away.

He got out a special circus throwaway written in jazz style, and wrote off the cost of that by letting the bank announce in three inches that Being Respectable meant having money in the bank. The local talent were only too glad of a chance to frollic in front of the neighbors, and there were some really clever entertainers in the lot.

You can make all the money in town with a local show, and you'll find it surprisingly easy to frame one up. This one got the turnaway an hour before the show opened. Unless you are doing a similar business, try the local stuff.

Now will Mr. Sell please write in and tell us what Heebe Jeebes are. He says they were the hit of the show, but we never heard of them before. Did you? We'll let you in on it if we find out.

Whirled the Girls

If you want something a little different for the next style show, cut out the runway and use the revolving table worked by the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, in conjunction with Manhandled.

The show was called When Winter Comes and was devoted to winter garments. Eight girls from the University were engaged as models, and they stood upon a slowly revolving table in the centre of the stage to display their gowns and wraps.

There was a slight thread of dialogue running through the show and a toe dancer was employed to bridge the waits.

The day before the opening fully a third of the front page page of the society section was given to pictures of the eight girls. With society girls there was no question of salary, but the shoes and hose worn in the production were presented to them, these being contributed by the store supplying the dresses.

Talked Through Teeth

Getting hold of a picture of Barbara La Marr with a toothy smile, Guy V. Kenimer cut away all but the mouth and displayed it in the window of a drug store in Jacksonville with the offer of a tube of tooth paste free to all who could name the player. Of course everyone who tried came back to see if they had won, and found out that Miss La Marr would be seen at the Arcade in The Shooting of Dan McGrew.

The tooth paste was sample size, and cost nothing.

Turned the Banner

Paul Perez, who formerly was assistant to Paul Gulick, of the Universal home office, is doing the exploitation for the English handlers of Big U.

In Liverpool, for a football match, he put up a banner for the Hunchback that was seen by 37,000 persons.

After the crowd was in he had his men face the banner the other way so they could see it again as they left the grounds. That's the big idea.

ALL THE WINE WAS ON THE OUTSIDE OF THESE GLASSES

The Albany Theatre, Albany, N. Y., bottled up the box office with a compo board front and dressed the ceiling with two or three dozen wine glasses. There was a display of bottles in the lobby and a perambulator was used.

Changeable Cut

In some interesting advertising matter sent in by Joseph Conway, of the Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, there is a cut showing a crowd trying to break into the theatre to see The Galloping Fish. Apparently this is a stock cut on which the title of the play can be lettered. Most managers would be content to use the cut without the title lettered in, but Mr. Conway knows that to put the title over the door is worth a great deal more than it costs, for it sells that at the moment when interest is highest.

Perambulator Car Ran Three Weeks

For the Washington, D. C., run of The Sea Hawk, the special trolley car built especially for perambulator use was hired for three weeks and for ten hours each day it covered the traction system of the National Capital.

Most of the routes run through the business section, so the car caught the shoppers as well as the residents, and very thoroughly advertised the attraction. The car has been shown in these pages very recently.

Several good windows were obtained, notably that of the Washington branch of Brentanos, an entire window being given to a display of the photoplay edition. It was dressed with stills, the model of an ancient ship and one of the costumes used in the play, to give a touch of color other than the jackets of the books.

This makes a much prettier display than where the window is literally stuffed with books. There were a number of drug store book hooks and rugs and tapestries were shown in a department store window. The newspaper and lithographic campaigns were unusually heavy as the picture was in for a two weeks' run at the Crandall Metropolitan.

All But

Les Whelan sloganed very effectively for The Story Without a Name. Les calls it "The picture with everything but a name."

And all over his territory Whelan is offering a four tube radio set for the best title, regardless of the $5,000 offered by the magazine sponsoring the stunt. Bill gets them for less than list price in return for the advertising the set receives. The best title in each town is sent on to the Photoplay Magazine in the hope that it will pull down one of the cash prizes. The result is that the nameless story has been an unusual clean up in his territory.

Another Cinderella

Irvin Waterstreet, Paramounteer, has switched the old Cinderella contest over to Feet of Clay in his territory, and he goes around offering $25 for the smallest feet in town—if the local management will put up the money. He has worked it to fine effect in Terre Haute and elsewhere.

A First National Release

A WELL DRESSED WINDOW ON THE SEA HAWK

A Nice Library

Down south The Alaskan is coming close to breaking the records, very possibly because of the Alaskan scenery.

In Jacksonville it probably would have cleaned up on a record had it not been for the inclement weather.

One of the stunts Guy Kenimer, of the Arcade, worked, was a library hook up. Markers were placed in every book given out and there was a picture and a card reading "This library circulates 57 books by James Oliver Curwood including The Alaskan." This was placed directly over the desk from which the books are given out, and could not be overlooked.

Rudy Recommends

Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, probably figured that if Valentino could trail the country recommending mud baths he probably would not mind sponsoring phonograph records, so he got a window for Monsieur Beaucaire by giving a phonograph shop a list of "Love songs personally recommended by the Great Lover." They fell for it out in Stevens Point, Wis. Probably they would fall the same way in New York.

Won Big Daily Story With Puppy for Prize

A police dog puppy brought all sorts of free publicity for Rin-Tin-Tin and Find Your Man at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C.

The puppy was offered the child writing the best letter to the kid page of the Daily News about a dog he owned or knew. There were three cash consolations of $3, $2 and $1 and admission tickets for winners.

The stories ran better than half a column each the day before the opening and the run of the feature, and carried pictures of the prize dog, of Rin-Tin-Tin and scenes from the play. The contest was limited to children under sixteen.

The News is building circulation and was glad to tie into a theatre stunt, knowing that anything connected with the theatre would possess a greater appeal for the children than a straight paper stunt.

Good puppies cost a little money, but they will bring in many times the investment in free space.

Cutout Signs

R. J. Newton, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., has hit on something new in window displays. Instead of the usual lettered card, he drapes the window and then letters the drapery with cutout alphabets. Most of his display is also cutout and much of it in cartoon style, which is good stuff when you have a clever artist. Mr. Newton has.

Interested

More than 6,000 replies were received on a misspelled word contest in connection with a hook-up page on The Sea Hawk at the Olympia Theatre, New Haven. The prices were ten copies of the book, two boxes for the show, twenty-five pairs of seats and ten singles. We think it was an error of judgment to value a box of six seats second to a seventy-five cent book.

Tod Browning also used the circulating library idea, lending copies of the novel.

Gets Open Effect With a Plan Book

Most of the ready-made ads in the plan books carry a lot of text lettered on, because most managers want them that way. Many of the users are in small towns where typographical display is merely something you read about, and such managers welcome the cut which carries with it the display lettering. But most of these cuts can be cleared if other display is desired, and the Princess Theatre, Toledo, offers a nice example of such handling in the use of this cut for Pola Negri. The names of the supporting players have been left in, but the rest is routed to let in the type that is more easily read, and with very little work, and no cost for drawing, a nice display has been achieved. It's capital work and it is the usual style of the Princess.

Sea Hawk Cuts Are Very Good Sellers

Most of the cuts supplied by First National on The Sea Hawk carry the suggestion of dash and daring. The cut selected by the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, is not the best example we have seen, but it probably fitted the space better than others, and it certainly carries the suggestion of an interesting story. The added lines have been put in with type instead of being hand lettered, and they show to greater advantage. The only comment might be that "Second and last week" should have had a line to itself, the addition of "of the" kills down a part of the kick. Then the second line could have gone in a smaller face that would have let in the additional words. On a second week advertisement the fact that it is a holdover argues that it is an unusual story and the additional billing is not so important, particularly when the lines just below add that it is the "Greatest spectacle of amazing romance that the world has ever seen." It would have been even better had the lines been changed to read, "Second and last week of the greatest spectacle, etc."

A STORY—CUT

Then the second section would have gotten better than the twelve point it is given, and the whole would have had a stronger punch. The cut is reproduced not so much because these are fatal defects. Probably just as many tickets were sold and would have been sold by the amended display. The idea is not so much to find fault as to suggest how improvement could be made. The cut, the title and the "second week" do all the necessary selling.

Uses Press Dope to Back Himself

For The Sea Hawk J. Fred Osterstock used newspaper comment to tell his public that the picture was great. For Abraham Lincoln he added his own endorsement, but bolstered this opinion with excerpts from a number of newspapers. We do not believe that Mr. Osterstock needs to call in additional testimony. In a way we think this tends to weaken the force of his own statement. Pennsylvania must be worse than Missouri on the show-me stuff if this is necessary. However, we do not believe that it really is necessary. Mr. Osterstock merely underestimates the value of his own word. He is too modest. It would be better to make a single unsupported statement than to adduce proof. Then, if desired, a follow-up can be used, referring to the personal statement and adding that evidently the big critics are in agreement. We believe that even this would be unnecessary if Mr. Osterstock will only figure what his own word is worth. This is one of a series of special advance displays on Abraham Lincoln. It is additional to the regular house advertising and in advance of the house advertisement on Lincoln. Is is nicely set, and it will be noted that Mr. Osterstock has avoided too long a line by the very simple expedient of cutting in a margin. Generally the indentation runs both sides of the copy, but this form gives a more pronounced margin at the same space cost, and it reduces the width of the line to make it easier to read in that relatively small type. Typographically this is an excellent example of the open letter type. It runs about 12½ inches across two.

I am in good company with my most earnest endorsement of "ABRAHAM LINCOLN"
When I sign this personal endorsement of "ABRAHAM LINCOLN" which I am proud to present at the COLONIAL THEATRE during the week of OCTOBER 27, at our regular admission prices, I am only one of a host who have given this endorsement of every critic and the public wherever it has been shown—endorsements written in such high terms of praise that usually I would hesitate to use the superlative words lest you consider them exaggeration.
I am quoting here from just a few, in the many different cities, where "ABRAHAM LINCOLN" has been shown at INCREASED PRICES of ADMISSION to prove that this picture PLEASES EVERY PERSON THAT SEES IT.
The New York World calls it: "One of the most impressive picture plays which films have given us. A fine drama of inspiring and thrilling quality."
Washington Herald: "Gripping entertainment that possesses much humor, fresh romance, heroism, adventure and thrills, beyond number."
Philadelphia Public Ledger: "Has all the excitement of a film serial, only this time it appeals to be legitimate and worth while."
New York Times: "Scene after scene of this inspiring picture will linger long in the memory of those who see it."
Boston Advertiser: "Here we have a screen epic if there ever was one. Here we have something that may be spoken of in the same breath as THE BIRTH OF A NATION and FOOLISH WIVES. IT EVEN SURPASSES THAT WORK."
Washington Times: "This picture deserves to be the talk of the town. "ABRAHAM LINCOLN" has a grandeur and sense of the COLOSSAL that will COMPEL EVERYONE TO ADMIT NOT HAVING SEEN IT."
In there any wonder that I should grow enthusiastic WHEN EVERY CRITIC combines with the public in breaking records have been broken wherever "ABRAHAM LINCOLN" has been shown?

ticket idea the Strand Theatre, Lexington, Ky., tied the local dealer to the idea of taking a three sixes in which to advertise Manhattan and the fact that they would give a free ticket with each shirt sold. The store paid for the advertisement and the theatre supplied the tickets free. Not many men are going to rush off and buy a dozen shirts just to get free theatre tickets, so the pass investment was not heavy, yet the store profited because it did sell some extra shirts, and it sold other things to those who also bought shirts. It could well afford to spend the money for the space, just as the theatre could afford to donate passes, so both sides made a clean-up This is a larger space than the theatre's usual investment, which runs around a two fours, and the hook-in also brought a window display.

It would have been better to have used an 18 point upper and lower rather than twelve point all capitals, and there are a few lines too long for their height, but the general effect is good: better than usual, and should have made big business for the house. This was put over at 25 cents before noon, 35 and 50 on the afternoon and 50 and 75 in the evening, and much capital is made of the fact that the same picture was shown in New York at $2.20. The chief appeal, however, lies in the bigness of the ad, for this is one instance where a full page was worth its cost.

A Striking Design Matches the Title

This drawing from the First National plan book gives a good hook-up to the title, even though it suggests that the single wives are the gadabouts instead of the husbands. This looks more like a Paramount style advertisement than the usual First National, but it is the best type of design with which to sell this title. It plays up the fine clothes rather than the real lesson because with this type of play the patrons care more about clothes, and the lack of them, than they do about the moral of the story. They

It listens well, and they will flock in, but they would not be attracted by a plain drawing. The artist has caught the right atmosphere even though Miss Griffith was the one to stay home. The selling talk is better than usual, and though quite a little is offered, it is broken up by the natural introduction of the star names. These are not merely set in, but occur in the running story, and yet these names are so placed as to suggest two short paragraphs. This is an adaptation by the Starland Theatre, Anderson, Ind., which has turned out a notably sightly ad. It is a three thirteens.

Tense Thrilling Melodrama Combined with Thoroughly Amusing Comedy in Buck Jones Newest for Fox

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Buck Jones as the star and Hank Mann in a comedy role, Director Al Santell has made William Wallace Cook's story into a picture that is a decided novelty and which we believe will furnish enjoyable entertainment for the great bulk of picture fans.

In outline, the story is a vigorous western with many tense moments of melodrama and more than the usual amount of action, and could hold its own as an action thrill western, but in addition there is genuine comedy that even caused the hard-boiled bunch in the projection room to laugh a number of times.

Mr. Santell has shown considerable cleverness in the manner in which he handled this story. Without sacrificing its melodramatic punches he has not just introduced comedy relief, but has taken some of the most tense situations and suddenly commenced to burlesque the action, and in addition has introduced some straight comedy sequences. The two elements have been nicely balanced and each is clean cut. When he takes a melodramatic situation he plays it up for all it is worth and when he changes to comedy there is never any confusion or any doubt that he is handling it from a burlesque comedy angle. And just as abruptly he will introduce a punch right in the middle of the comedy.

Buck Jones is excellent in the heroic role and Wanda Hawley is thoroughly capable as the heroine with Ben Hendricks and David Kirby capably portraying villains. Most of the comedy is in the hands of Hank Mann, who plays a straight role as the chef, and it is about the best thing he has ever done. He is ably assisted by a pet monkey.

For straight punch melodrama, there is the opening sequences where the hero's pal is shot after being flogged and nearly kills the hero by mistake, and a big scene of a fire in a mine with the rescue of the girl by Buck, who holding her in one arm hangs on to the bottom of an elevator. There is a real thrill in this. The scenes where the cook tells a wild yarn about how he won a croix de guerre and the hero beats him at his own game by turning his own story against him, are guaranteed to make you laugh. Then there is melodrama and comedy combined in a fight between the hero and a gang of miners with the cook putting on the finishing touches with a loaded boot, and the fight between the hero and the villain, where they tumble out of the house, roll the whole length of a trestle into a mine building and bursting through the side, keep up the fight down over two sloping roofs to the ground.

With the exception of some dyed-in-the-wool melodrama fans who want their thrill melodrama straight, we believe that this picture will provide enjoyable entertainment of a novel kind for the majority of spectators.

"Secrets of the Night"

Exciting Murder Mystery Plus Good Comedy Makes Newest Universal-Jewel Excellent Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A story that starts out as if it is going to be exciting straight drama develops into an absorbing and nerve-tingling murder mystery, introduces a lot of comedy and then turns out to have been all a hoax, is the newest Universal-Jewel, "Secrets of the Night," based on a stage play by Max Marcin.

The treatment of this theme is certainly clever and novel. Just as you are getting interested in watching the attempt of the hero to keep the bank examiner from going over his books you are suddenly confronted with an unusually complicated murder mystery. The hero is supposedly killed, and so ingeniously has the groundwork of the plot been laid that suspicion points with about equal force in all directions, which causes the coroner to ask, "Is there anyone in this crowd that did not have a reason for killing Andrews?" and yet, Andrews is a likeable chap who gets your sympathy.

The result of all this is a succession of tense situations with nerve-tingling suspense, about every device imaginable having been introduced to confuse you as to the identity of the slayer and to first place and then divert suspicion, until you find yourself utterly at a loss to solve the mystery. Then you are surprised to find that the hero has not been slain at all, and when the matter is cleared up there is a bigger surprise in discovering that it was all a frame-up to divert the bank examiner who has given up his job and is only a real estate salesman.

Right in the midst of the tense murder mystery-melodrama comedy begins to crop out, furnished largely by a badly frightened negro butler and an eccentric girl, aided by the coroner, policeman and detective, who are none too clever, but the author has several other of the characters mixed up in the comedy before he gets through, even using the hero clad in a suit of armor. Much of this comedy business is straight farce, but it has at all times been kept in bounds and is in fact used to help keep up the mystery and thrill element.

James Kirkwood and Madge Bellamy are capably cast in the featured roles, and Rosemary Theby does well as one of the leading characters; in fact, the entire cast, which is a large one, give good performances.

"Secrets of the Night" is fast-moving, never giving time for your attention to wander; in fact, with the introduction of the "murder" the story becomes so absorbing that the comedy affords welcome relief to the nerves. Anyone who likes excitement with a good number of laughs thrown in will certainly find it in this picture and we believe that it will prove a big box office attraction.

Story

Robert Andrews, president of a bank, invites the bank examiner and several directors to his home for a house party in order to keep him from examining the books and discovering a big shortage. Andrews quarrels with young Hammond, who is in love with his ward, and also with Knowles, who is jealous of the friendship between Andrews and his wife. Andrews courts death as his insurance money will cover the shortage. A little later he is "killed" in Mrs. Knowles' room following a series of mysterious happenings. The coroner and police find that practically every one has a motive for wanting to get rid of him and suspicion points in several directions. Everything is in a turmoil until it is discovered that Andrews is still alive. Cornered, he explains it was all a frame-up to distract the bank examiner's attention from the shortage, and it develops that the bank examiner has given up his job and is now trying to sell real estate.

"Laughing at Danger"

Richard Talmadge Shows Great Improvement in Striking F. B. O. Thriller

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

This reviewer hasn't seen all of the Richard Talmadge pictures but at least he can say that "Laughing at Danger," distributed by F. B. O. is the best of those he has viewed. This stunt thriller has a pippin of a story, something not always found in Talmadge pictures, and is very highly and satisfyingly disturbing to the nervous system. It opens with definite characterization of the leading character, tinged with bits of effective humor, develops a real plot logically and then, with ever increasing suspense, moves on to a thrilling conclusion.

Undoubtedly there are a few rough spots in the continuity, and at times realism goes by the board, and occasionally some of the acting is bad. But the picture tells a real story, and when there is a real story to be told, whether in pictures or fiction, occasional lapses in acting or rhetoric, as the case may be, are not only pardonable but often hardly noticed, so strong is the interest in the ultimate denouement. Add to this fact the exceptional agility of Richard Talmadge, and the result is a picture that will hold the attention.

In the past Talmadge has specialized more as an athlete than as an actor. He has leaped over chairs and upset villains, quite ignoring, except for a rare gesture and set smile, any need for characterization. In "Laughing at Danger" he becomes more of an actor without sacrificing any of his attractiveness as a stunt artist. The whole effect of the picture is therefore strengthened.

The script is based on one of the most sensational news stories of the present day —the story of the death ray. With this for a background and the inevitable introduction of crooks who seek to steal the invention, ample opportunity was afforded for the devising of typical Talmadge stunts. These are all effective, especially the hand-to-hand fights and leap to safety at the end of the picture when naval guns are turned on the hero and villains in the desolate hut sheltering the death ray machine. If Talmadge's next story is as good as this one by Frank Howard Clark, he ought to show continued improvement as an actor. Incidentally, this was the picture he was making when seriously injured. That ought to help the exploitation.

Story

A love affair makes Alan Remington dissatisfied with life. Trying to lift his son out of despondency, his father devises various means of excitement. Crooks seek to steal a death ray machine which the elder Remington is sponsoring and circumstance involves Alan in the subsequent excitement. Thinking it is only a trick of his father's, he takes danger lightly. The inventor and daughter are captured and, with the machine, imprisoned in a hut on a lonely hill. Alan goes to the rescue. Naval vessels are warned that the desperadoes intend to blow them up with the death ray and turn their guns on the hut and destroy it. Alan leaps to safety in the nick of time.

"The Lost Chord"

First Whitman Bennett Production for Arrow One of Beautiful Sentiment Based on Famous Song

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

The famous song of the same title, which is known the world over and has become a musical classic because of its beautiful melody and sentiment, furnishes the idea around which the story of the Whitman Bennett production, "The Lost Chord," is based.

Like the song, this picture, which is being distributed on the independent market by Arrow Film Corporation, is one of touching sentiment. The technical details are in keeping with the story and the settings and surroundings are artistic and beautiful.

The story is one of disappointed love that plays upon the heartstrings. It is just at the moment when it seems that their great love will find fruition that the musician plays the wonderful chord, but his happiness is shattered by the sudden death of the woman. For years he seeks vainly to again find this "Lost Chord." Happiness again seems in his grasp when he wins the daughter of his dead sweetheart, but again fate intervenes. This time he sacrifices his own love that the girl may be happy when he finds she is really in love with his nephew.

The story is heart-interest melodrama in which pathos, suffering and sentiment is paramount and is filled with tugs at the heartstrings, and for the average patrons these elements will probably overbalance a lack of spontaneity and convincingness. In fact, the story is obviously built up with the sentimental idea always in view, and its audience value is centered on the appeal to the heart.

The cast is headed by David Powell, Alice Lake and Faire Binney, who give good performances, though there is at times a lack of naturalness in their work. Dagmar Go-dowsky as a vamp and Henry Sedley as the villainous husband give the kind of portrayals that make you cordially hate the characters because of the lack of human warmth or feeling.

"The Lost Chord" is a picture that caters to the sentimentally inclined, and as we believe that this class is well represented in the average audience it should prove a good attraction, particularly in the neighborhood houses. With its appeal to the emotions, women and girls especially should like it.

Story

Arnold Grahme, celebrated organist, returning from abroad finds that his sweetheart, Madeline, has married Count Zara, who treats her brutally and has an affair with his "cousin," Pauline. Zara, jealous of Arnold, provokes a quarrel and in a duel fought later in Italy is killed by Arnold. Pauline in the meantime has persuaded Zara to kidnap his little daughter, Pauline. Madeline goes to a convent, Arnold tries to persuade her to marry him, and finally, speaking to her through his music, she agrees, but falls dead. Arnold's nephew, Jack, quarrels with his chorus girl sweetheart and goes away. Arnold becomes interested in this girl because of her beautiful voice, falls in love with her and discovers she is Madeline's child. He proposes and is accepted, but the return of Jack reveals the fact that the young couple are in love with each other. Arnold sacrifices his own love that they may be happy, and while seeking solace at the organ the spirit of Madeline tells him "The Lost Chord" is the song of sacrifice the angels sing.

"Born Rich"

Adaptation by First National of Hughes Cornell's Novel Has Cast of Well Known Players

Reviewed by Tom Waller

While some books are easily adapted to the screen, others are not, often due to the fact that while the author can devote chapters to stressing delicate lines of demarcation the understanding of which is vital to the correct interpretation of various details and characters, the screen director's task is to accomplish the same result with but a few scenes and explanatory subtitles.

"Born Rich" belongs in the latter class, with the story hinging upon the delineation of several characters and the right appreciation of their motives. Some audiences will doubtless find the production highly entertaining, but it is our belief that the more critical patron may not consider that it measures up to the standard usually maintained by First National.

It deals with a social clique whose wealth makes life one long jazzy pastime. Leaders of this group are young Mr. and Mrs. Fairfax and efforts to show that they are intensely in love are not always convincing. When Mrs. Fairfax returns from France where her child was born she finds substantiation of current gossip in the suitcase of an attractive young woman in her boudoir. That the girl had merely changed her clothes there is not sufficiently emphasized and many fans may side with Mrs. Fairfax in the belief that her husband had been leading a double life during her absence.

The wife, to retaliate, affects a love affair with a youth in their set. Her numerous threats and attempts to elope and circumstances which tend to compromise the husband and his butterfly occupy the greater part of the production. Due to continued repetition much of the suspense is sacrificed for bewilderment which gives rise more than once to doubt whether the friendships, especially of the husband, are truly platonic.

Some may find good comedy in the precociousness of the four-year-old Fairfax child upon meeting his father during the period of estrangement.

Story

Leaving her palatial home and fast set of wealthy friends, Chadyeane goes to France where her baby is born. During her absence Frances makes such a strong play for Jimmy that Major Murphy writes a warning letter to Chad about her husband. Chad returns and misinterprets the meaning of a suitcase in her boudoir which Frances had inadvertently left there while changing her riding habit. Chad then affects a love affair with Jack, one of the crowd, ruling that married couples should travel on a 50-50 basis in all things. Many times Chad threatens to, and almost does, elope with Jack when her husband further compromises himself, mostly through inadvertences, with the butterfly, Frances. Magnin, Jimmy's associate, in love with Frances, financially ruins Fairfax when the latter in a drunken stupor gives him power of attorney. Believing that they are "broke," Jimmy suddenly undergoes a rejuvenation. He spanks his wife, dresses his impudent child in overalls and becomes generally aggressive. Major Murphy has saved Jimmy from bankruptcy but Mrs. Fairfax, under the impression that her husband is poor, forgives the suitcase incident and other similar incidents, abandons her affected love affair and everything winds up happily.

"Love's Wilderness"

Romance, Varied and Colorful Locations and Good Heart-Interest in Corinne Griffith's Latest

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There is a pleasing variety of locale in "Love's Wilderness," First National's newest production starring Corinne Griffith. Opening in a dreamy village on the banks of the lower Mississippi, the scene changes to a bleak, snow-bound farm in Canada and then shifts to a French penal colony on a tropical island.

The story is a colorful romance involving a girl reared by two strict aunts in ignorance of life. Her sweetheart, much older than she, goes away refusing to take seriously her claim that she is no longer a child, and she easily falls for a good-for-nothing who flatters her and calls her a beautiful woman. He deserts her and, believing him dead, she marries the other fellow; they all meet in the French colony, but all is straightened out when he is killed by a fellow convict.

The excellent and varied locales are a pleasing feature of this picture. Each one is technically well handled, especially the southern scene which appears to be the real article, with scenes of a dock, and a big steamer lazily plowing its way up the river. The snowstorm is good and the jungle scenes are convincingly depicted.

In addition there is an unusually pleasing atmosphere to the entire production, which brings about a strong sympathy for the heroine. Starting out as a colorful romance, moving at an easy-going tempo; good drama is introduced in the Canadian scenes, when word comes to the wife that her husband is drowned, just as she is about to give birth to a baby. This gives Miss Griffith the chance for a good display of emotion, and the manner in which she handles these scenes, including the death of the baby, arouses a lot of effective heart-interest. Plausibility is sacrificed in bringing the characters together on the French island, and melodrama comes to the fore in the actionful scenes which include the escape of the convicts during a severe storm, the rescue of the heroine by her former husband, their attempts to elude the guard and his death at the hands of another prisoner.

Miss Griffith is exceedingly attractive in the role of the heroine, which is finely suited to her and gives her good opportunities. Her emotional work is high class in the big scenes. Holmes Herbert gives a good performance as the hero, with Ian Keith convincing as the villainous ne'er-do-well.

"Love's Wilderness" is a picture that we believe will provide good entertainment for the average patron and with its romantic atmosphere will appeal especially to the feminine portion of your audiences.

Story

Linda Lou, reared in a small Louisiana town by her strict aunts loves David who refuses to consider her as grown up and still regards her as a child. David goes to the penal colony La Diable to do work for the French government and only occasionally wires to Linda Lou. In the meantime, Paul, a wanderer, returns home, flatters Linda Lou and finally marries her taking her to a bleak farm in Canada. Feeling the call of adventure he sends word he is dead and goes on an expedition with Moreau, which ends with their being sent to Diable under life imprisonment. David returns and marries Linda Lou and they go back to La Diable. During an escape of prisoners during a rainstorm, Paul finds Linda Lou who is lost. David finds them together and believes she still loves Paul but gets clemency for him on account of his aiding Linda Lou. Just as she has decided to leave, David brings word that Moreau has killed Paul, and David takes Linda Lou in his arms when she explains it was love for the baby that died and not for Paul that caused her to want to help him.

Several years ago Frank Norris wrote a powerful novel, "McTeague," depicting the terrible toll that an inordinate lust for gold exacts from human beings, and under the title of "Greed" it has been filmed by Erich Von Stroheim for Metro-Goldwyn.

"Compare the Product"

The only kind of pictures that are "best" are those which make the most money for you.

First National Pictures made more money, than any others for exhibitors this year, because they were better than any others.

At the beginning of the year we stated our case and rested, awaiting the box office verdict.

We've got that and are happy with the knowledge that the results proved we did not overestimate or underestimate.

But big as we made them in 1924—we're making them bigger for 1925.

"ON PERFORMANCE WE STAND"

We'll stay the best because we've got the best so—"COMPARE THE PRODUCT"—for your biggest year, before you commit yourself and set dates for your backbone service.

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES

Thirty-One First National Pictures for Release Feb. 1 to Aug. 31, Next Year

THE group of productions which First National Pictures has scheduled for release during the six months from February to August inclusive contains thirty-one pictures, ten of which will be made by First National Productions, Inc., and twenty-one by producers and producer-directors who have arranged to release through First National. The thirty pictures will be the biggest box office attractions that the company has ever distributed. All the cumulative experience of the past as to the sort of picture the public will patronize, has been called into play in the making of these pictures. Ability of the highest order in production, direction and action guarantee that the product will be up to the highest standard that the industry knows.

In the group of twenty-one productions from outside producers releasing through First National will be three pictures from Thomas H. Ince, two from Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc., two from Samuel Goldwyn and George Fitzmaurice, one from John M. Stahl, two from Edwin Carewe, one from J. K. McDonald, one from M. C. Levee, four from Joseph M. Schenck—two Norma Talmadge and two Constance Talmadge pictures, two from Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., two from Sawyer-Lubin, starring Barbara La Marr, two from Inspiration starring Richard Barthelmess.

Ince Productions

Of the three productions from Thomas H. Ince, the first will be "Enticement," from the new novel by Clive Arden, author of "Sinners in Heaven." The picture is now in work under the direction of George Archainbaud, with a cast embracing Mary Astor, Ian Keith, Clive Brook, Vera Lewis, Louise Dresser, Edgar Norton, Lillian Langdon, Maxine Elliott Hicks, George Bunny and Roland Bottomley. "Enticement" is a brilliant, highly-colored story of English society life with a fresh, untainted but daring young heroine in a unique triangle situation. The cast will be one of all-star proportions. The picture is thrillingly alive with romance and love, according to all advance information which First National has received from the studios.

The second Ince release will be "Playing With Souls," from the Countess de Chambrun's novel of that title. Mr. Ince has selected Mary Astor, Belle Bennett, Clive Brook, Jacqueline Logan, William Collier, Jr., and Dan Mason for leading roles. Ralph Ince will direct. "Playing With Souls" is an up-to-the-minute story of Paris and New York life, the heart of which centers in a father and son. There is a colorful love story which will give the leads excellent emotional opportunities.

The third Ince production will be from Peter B. Kyne's novel, "The Enchanted Hill."

Frank Lloyd will furnish two of the forthcoming First National releases. He has just completed photography on "Her Husband's Secret" from "Judgment," the story by May Edginton, author of "Secrets," recently published in the Saturday Evening Post. "Her Husband's Secret" has Miss Edginton's usual dramatic punch and heart appeal. It deals with the theme that no matter how far down a man may be he is never out until he is dead. The devoted father of the story finds his daughter hopelessly entangled by a smooth society crook. The strong heart interest of the drama centers on the father's successful efforts to extricate the girl from the perilous situation. J. H. Hawks adapted the story to the screen. In the cast are Antonio Moreno, Patsy Ruth Miller, David Torrence, Ruth Clifford, Phyllis Haver and Walter McGrail.

Mr. Lloyd will make another production, the title of which he is not yet ready to disclose.

Samuel Goldwyn and George Fitzmaurice will be represented by two pictures, "A Thief in Paradise" and May Edginton's new Saturday Evening Post serial, "World Without End," the title of which will likely be changed. This is a "triangle" story with new aspects. The action takes place in Mexico and in smart London society. "A Thief in Paradise" is taken from Leonard Merrick's novel, "The Worldlings" and has Doris Kenyon, Ronald Colman, Aileen Pringle, and Claude Gillingwater in the principal roles.

Stahl's Contribution

John M. Stahl will contribute one production to the group, a screen version of Ferenc Molnar's comedy, "Fashions for Men," which won success on the stage last season with O. P. Heggie in the featured role. Lewis Stone will have the leading part on the screen. This is a sex comedy-drama with an unusual twist. Peter owns a haberdashery and believes in everyone—even in his wife who elopes with one of his clerks and most of Peter's savings. Bankrupt Peter is made head of a cheese factory by his friend, the Count. Paula, his cashier, enters upon a flirtation with the Count, and is taken along, ostensibly because of her devotion to Peter. The Count and Paula, to get rid of Peter, advance him the amount stolen by his wife. Believing his clerk has paid back the stolen money, Peter reopens his haberdashery, only to have the clerk come back and restablish himself in the shop. Paula finds she loves Peter, abandons the Count, and drives out the clerk.

parent." The latter is a current English best-seller novel by Sir Philip Gibbs, a searching study of the younger generation in England after the war—hard-boiled, sophisticated, blase on the surface, but wholesome and shouldering the burdens that come to them when put to the test. "My Son" is the Martha Stanley play which has scored one of the Broadway successes of the current season. Nazimova will head the all-star cast with Ian Keith, William Collier, Jr., Hobart Bosworth and Pauline Garon in important roles.

J. K. McDonald will make one production for First National, the title and the nature of which is not ready for announcement.

M. C. Levee will contribute one picture to the list—"One Year to Live," the widely syndicated newspaper serial by John Hunter. Sixty leading newspapers throughout the country have been running this story and have thousands of letters from celebrities stating what they would do if they had but one year to live. There is a wide audience, ready-made, for this production, with a wealth of exploitation material to hand. The story is a thrilling and dramatic one dealing with stage life in Paris. The love story is one of unusual strength and gives ample acting opportunities. Irving Cummings will direct. The all-star cast includes Aileen Pringle, Antonio Moreno, Betty Blythe, Tully Marshall, Marc McDermott, Robert Edeson, and Marjorie Daw.

Norma Talmadge will be represented by two productions—"The Lady" and "Madame Pompadour," both of them to be classified and handled as specials. The former is a screen adaptation of Martin Brown's successful stage play in which Mary Nash scored one of her biggest successes. It is a story of mother love with a tremendous heart interest. It gives Miss Talmadge opportunity to play a role somewhat similar to that in "Secrets" in which she has been so popular. The story is altogether different but takes her from young girlhood through various episodes to old age when she refuses to make known her identity to her young soldier son, back from the great war, for fear her evil life will stand in the way of his happiness and his career. Frank Borzage is directing this Joseph M. Schenck production. Supporting Miss Talmadge are Wallace McDonald, Emily Fitzroy, George Hackathorne, Marc McDermott and Walter Long.

Norma as "Pompadour"

"Madame Pompadour," the second Norma Talmadge picture, is the outstanding musical comedy success of Europe during the past two seasons, rivalling "The Merry Widow" in popularity. Rudolph Shanger and Ernest Melisch are the authors of the book. It has just been produced on the New York stage with resounding success. Miss Talmadge will have an unusual and highly picturesque role in this production. Victor Heerman will direct.

Constance Talmadge will contribute two pictures to the group—"Learning to Love" and "The Man She Bought." The latter is from Pearl Doles Bell's novel. Sidney Franklin will direct it and Antonio Moreno will act opposite the star. The story will give Miss Talmadge another romantic comedy role and one that should rank with the best she has given her big and loyal following.

The other Constance Talmadge picture is "Learning to Love," photography on which is nearing completion by Director Sidney Franklin. The production will soon enter the editing process. It is a John Emerson and Anita Loos story which fits the saucy star like a glove. In the cast are Antonio Moreno, Emily Fitzroy, Johnny Harron, Ray Hallor, Alf Goulding, Wallace McDonald, Byron Munson, Edythe Chapman, Edgar Norton and Percy Williams.

Corinne Griffith will be represented by two pictures made by Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc. The first of these, preparations for which are about completed, is Zoe Akins' stage success, "Declasse," in which Ethel Barrymore scored one of her biggest hits. This is an English society drama, with scenes shifting to America. Robert G. Vignola will direct. Lady Helen Haden is divorced by her brutal husband because the American gambler and card cheat to whom she has written compromising letters, shows them to her husband when Lady Helen, having discovered him cheating, forces him to apologize to her husband. She drifts to New York and is followed by Rudolf Solomon who has long loved her in silence. Still loving the gambler, she refuses to marry Solomon, but on meeting the gambler, now reformed, and his bride, she rushes into the street and is run over by an automobile. Recovering, she marries the devoted Solomon, although considering herself "declasse," and begins a new and worthier life.

Following "Declasse" Miss Griffith will be seen in "The National Anthem," the play which J. Hartley Manners wrote for Laurette Taylor and in which she had a conspicuous success. This is the play which caused so much talk because of its indictment of our jazz-crazed younger generation. Its scenes shift from New York to Paris.

Sawyer-Lubin will present Barbara La Marr in two productions, only one of which, "Hail and Farewell," can be named at present. This is from William Hurlburt's popular play, in which Florence Reed found one of her best and most popular roles. The leading part should fit Miss LaMarr perfectly.

Richard Barthelmess will be represented by two Inspiration productions. The first of these, "New Toys," is from the stage play written by Oscar Hammerstein II and Milton Herbert Gropper in which Ernest Truex appeared last season. "New Toys" is a story of young married life and will give the star of "Classmates," "The Enchanted Cottage" and "Tol'able David," a fitting and delightful role. Mary Hay, who is Mrs. Barthelmess in private life, will be the leading woman. Other members of the cast are Catherine Wilson, Clifton Webb, Frances Conlon and Bijou Fernandez.

The second Barthelmess picture will be announced later.

There will be ten of First National's own productions in the half year's product.

One Colleen Moore picture will be released during the six months' period—"Sally," from Florenz Ziegfeld's musical comedy hit in which Marilyn Miller and Leon Errol scored such big hits. It will be handled as a special. Alfred E. Green will direct. Leon Errol will make his screen debut in this production in the role which he acted upon the stage. Lloyd Hughes, one of the best of the young leading men and coming screen star, will play opposite the dainty star. Other players engaged for "Sally" are Eva Novak, John T. Murray, Dan Mason and Louise Dresser. June Mathis is now preparing the continuity.

"The Far Cry," based upon Arthur Richman's successful play in which Margalo Gilmore acts the chief role will be one of First National's own productions. It is a story of an American flapper in Paris who is almost ruined by her association with decadent circles of the idle rich Americans fooling away their time in the French capital. There is a big heart appeal and sex interest in the drama which is brought to a happy conclusion by the girl's hard-working and sensible father who brings about her regeneration. It will afford the leading woman a very dramatic role.

A Harry Leon Wilson Story

"The Boss of Little Arcady" is a rip-roaring comedy of small-town life written by Harry Leon Wilson, author of "Ruggles of Red Gap," "Merton of the Movies" and other hilarious novels, many of which have enjoyed great success on the screen and on the stage.

"The Interpreter's House" is now in production under the direction of Lambert Hillyer and the supervision of Earl Hudson at the Biograph Studios in New York. Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon are featured members of the cast which includes Kate Bruce, Charles Lane, Paul Nicholson, Phyllis Haver, Theresa Maxwell Conover, George W. Howard, and Frazier Coulter. This Struthers Burt novel is one of the year's best-sellers and is a story of the after-war reactions of New York's smart set.

"One Way Street," from Beale Davis' new novel, is also in work at the Biograph Studios, with John Francis Dillon wielding the megaphone. Anna Q. Nilsson and Ben Lyon are featured members of the cast. The story concerns an American youth in the toils of a London vamp. It contains a new twist on the rejuvenation theme, with a good, wholesome love story. Its action takes place in London's smart society.

"The Eternal Lamps," a forthcoming magazine serial by Ferdinand Reyher, will feature Doris Kenyon in its cast. The story is a fascinating study of New York night life centering around a sophisticated upper class working girl who plays with fire but escapes the inevitable scars. By his title the author refers to the stars of truth and steadfastness as opposed to the glittering false lights of Broadway.

"The Lost World" Is Nearing Completion

After more than seven years work, the film version of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel "The Lost World," is now nearing completion. Earl Hudson hopes to okay the final scene within one to two months—depending on the screen conduct of the prehistoric dinosaurs brought to life for picture purposes in this photodrama.

Production progress was delayed a time owing to an injury to the leg of one mighty monster, reincarnated from the Jurassic Age of 10,000,000 years ago into the twentieth century. In the photoplay this giant reptile (bigger than twelve elephants and captured in South America) breaks loose in London, wrecks three-story buildings, throws thousands of people into panic and finally causes the collapse of London Bridge.

Watterson R. Rothacker started work on "The Lost World" more than seven years ago, with Willis H. O'Brien as shepherd of the dinosaur corral. Last spring he joined forces with First National for its completion.

Bessie Love, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes finished with their roles in the picture some weeks ago.

"Uriah's Son," from a short story recently published in the Red Book Magazine, written by Stephen Vincent Benet, one of the most promising of our younger short story writers and novelists. It is a strong modern story with a big surprise twist. It deals with a father and son problem and contains some big dramatic situations. Ben Lyon will probably have the featured role.

"Chickie," the serial by Elenore Meherin which has been running in the New York Journal and in many other of the Hearst publications throughout the country. It is a story of a Chicago stenographer who falls in love with her boss, a young lawyer waiting for a practice. After a year, mingling in circles where young women are very free with men, she gives herself to the young lawyer without marrying him. After a year they separate and he marries a wealthy girl. Chickie's child dies and she is accused of murdering it, but her innocence is proved. She refuses an offer of marriage proffered by a young farmer and starts on the path towards working out her own salvation.

"The Lost World"

"The Lost World," one of First National's specials, which it is making in association with Watterson R. Rothacker, directed by Harry O. Hoyt and supervised by Earl Hudson, is nearing completion and will be one of the new group of releases. It is based upon Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's famous romantic novel, and all indications point to its being one of the most astounding productions ever made. Its box office appeal should be unequalled because of its novelty. It tells of an expedition into the wilds of the upper Amazon, where prehistoric animals are found alive. In the cast are Bessie Love, Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery, Arthur Hoyt and Lloyd Hughes.

"United States Flavor," from the Saturday Evening Post story by R. G. Kirk, will be produced as a special under the supervision of Earl Hudson. Mr. Kirk has established himself as one of the most promising of our younger writers. His short stories dealing with the making of steel and the men engaged in that pursuit are regarded as the best ever written on that theme. "United States Flavor" will be an epic of the steel industry, plus an absorbing and intimate drama, with a fascinating love story. Doris Kenyon and Milton Sills will have the featured roles.

First National's Splendid Distribution Records for 1924 Set Rapid Pace

THE past year has been one of great achievement in the distribution department of First National Pictures, under the supervision of E. A. Eschmann, its head. The widely scattered field force has been welded into a team working solidly together with a new enthusiasm and perseverance through frequent conferences of district and branch managers through calling the branch managers, two at a time, to the home office in New York for two-week visits to acquaint them with office and production activities and through frequent trips to the field of the head of the department and his assistants.

The recently closed Eschmann Month sales contest, planned and carried through by Mr. Eschmann's home office assistants, Charles M. Steele, William J. Morgan, Stanley W. Hatch and A. W. Smith, Jr., was not only the biggest sales drive in the history of First National, but in the history of any company in the industry. It brought to a focus the zeal and determination of the leaders in the field and the individual salesmen to put First National's distribution department still further ahead of its competitors.

The enthusiasm engendered by this contest was due not alone to the loyalty of the sales force and its acknowledgment of the efficient and forward-looking leadership of Mr. Eschmann, but also to the quality of the pictures which First National gave them to sell. Without pictures of box office magnetism, made with the best ability that money and experience can furnish, the past year's record of achievement could not have been made.

Basing its confidence on the quality of pictures to be released during the next half-year, First National's distribution department looks for new records to be made. The sales policies on the new specials and the "Leader Group" of pictures have been explained in detail by Mr. Eschmann and his assistants to the district managers who were called to New York for a three-day sales conference the latter part of October. At that time they saw some of the new product screened and had the production details of the others fully outlined to them, in addition to familiarizing themselves with the new sales policies adopted.

The district managers, in turn, called conferences of their branch managers on November 15th and imparted to them the instructions

First National Production Activities Now in Full Blast in Eastern Studio

COMFORTABLY settled at last in its own studios, First National Pictures, Inc., has now started upon its much-discussed production operations in New York.

With Earl Hudson in charge of affairs, the organization has moved into the old Biograph Studios, which were entirely remodeled for the purpose and equipment added and brought up to the moment.

The transfer of activity from Hollywood was effected with unexpected smoothness and despatch. Within three weeks from arrival in New York filming was under way in the new centre.

Difficulties and impediments resulting from a complete removal were in this case escaped through the fact that the executive and technical organization built up by Hudson in the last two years accompanied him in moving practically intact.

The assignment of Herman H. Bruenner, formerly assistant to Production Manager Richard A. Rowland, as assistant production manager of the Hudson units, was of inestimable help in making a start in New York. Bruenner's long experience in New York film activities did much to smooth the way for the newcomers.

Marion Fairfax, one of the foremost figures in the literary phases of screen drama making, remains as editorial director, with the same large and able staff of scenario experts at her command. Milton Menasco, whose artistic creations have been a noteworthy feature of First National pictures, continues as art director. John Francis Dillon, who has directed a number of box-office magnets, also came East with Hudson.

In order more fully to sense what First National Pictures, Inc., aims to accomplish through maintaining its own studio, it may be profitable to look back in retrospect to the beginning of its brief but spectacular history.

Hudson Makes History

Less than two years ago Mr. Hudson, under the guidance of Mr. Rowland, started operations at the United Studios. With the producer's ability, the prolific resources of First National and the encouragement of the allied independent producers, the venture was a success from the start. The number of companies grew until, at the time of moving East, five companies were operating together.

During this period of less than two years, more than thirty plays were produced. Their distribution at the time made box-office history. One has only to call to mind such of Hudson's contributions to the First National program as "Flaming Youth," "Her Temporary Husband," "Lilies of the Field," "The Perfect Flapper," and his personally written and produced "Sundown."

Although schooled in the literary atmosphere of the writer, Hudson is one drama maker who never loses sight of the fact that the picture industry is built on a financial foundation. Screen plays, he reasons, must appeal to the widest public in order that the exhibitor shall get his just return—a matter which is ultimately of vital concern and profit to the producing organization. His inherent literary instinct, furthermore, aids him in striking a proportionate balance of artistry and literary values in pictures made under his supervision.

"Hudson-made pictures are not 'factory-made' pictures," First National points out. "Each succeeding picture is a separate dramatic entity, produced by the ablest technicians, acted by players who not only fit their parts to perfection, but whose personalities have the power of bringing the public into the theatre.

"This is well exemplified in the two companies which inaugurated the filming operations in the New York studios."

Sills-Kenyon Picture First

The first to get under way was "The Interpreter's House." For the leading roles Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon, both of whom hold starring contracts with First National, were selected to play together with co-featured rank. Lambert Hillyer, who directed "The Spoilers" and most of Wm. S. Hart's big successes, and more recently "Barbara Fritchie" and "Idle Tongues," was brought on to direct. In the sterling cast are Phyllis Haver, Paul Nicholson and Charles Lane, the last named a well-known Broadway stage actor who made an auspicious start in films with Lillian Gish in "The White Sister" and "Romola."

The following week work was started on "One Way Street," in which Ben Lyon, popular young leading man, and Anna Q. Nilsson are to be co-featured. John Francis Dillon, whose name as director has come to symbolize dollar-marks for exhibitors, is directing this feature. His success with "Flaming Youth," "Lilies of the Field," "The Perfect Flapper," and others bear out his reputation.

The near feature will see the release of four unusual dramatic features, the last series to be made by Hudson in Hollywood.

Among these is Colleen Moore's first starring play, "So Big," a special. This was adapted from Edna Ferber's novel, "So Big," one of the most widely read books of the last year. It deals with one of the big historic periods of recent America—the early growth of Chicago and its settlement by the Dutch "dirt farmers." It has a big "mother love" theme. The cast is the strongest and costliest ever assembled, a fact attested by such names as Ben Lyon, John Bowers, Wallace Beery, Jean Hersholt, Gladys Brockwell, Phyllis Haver, Ford Sterling, Dot Farley, Charlotte Merriam, Henry Hebert, Frankie Daro and Baby Dorothy Brock.

In this quartette is Doris Kenyon's first vehicle under her First National contract, "If I Marry Again," a moving drama woven around the son of one of San Francisco's richest families and the daughter of a woman whose name is linked with the city's most notorious night-life house. In the all-star cast with Miss Kenyon are Lloyd Hughes, Anna Q. Nilsson, Hobart Bosworth, Frank Mayo, and Myrtle Stedman. John Francis Dillon directed.

Another highly dramatic feature is "As Man Desires," in which Milton Sills and Viola Dana, two artists of exceptional box-office power, are co-featured, under Irving Cummings' direction.

"The Lost World"

The fourth is the piece de resistance—one of the most discussed and eagerly anticipated features yet conceived—"The Lost World," which was made in conjunction with Watterson R. Rothacker. For novelty and bigness of treatment this adaptation of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel has never been surpassed, it is said. It contains effects never before put upon the screen according to First National.

The program for the next six months has been decided by Messrs. Rowland and Hudson.

After the two features now in production in New York will come "The Eternal Lamps," which has a big, forceful dramatic theme. Doris Kenyon will have the leading role in an all-star cast.

Others to be made in an order yet to be determined includes "Uriah's Son," adapted from Stephen Vincent Benet's story which appeared in the Red Book magazine, and deals with the tense problem of father and son. Ben Lyon will head an all-star cast in this.

"Chickie," the story of the modern girl, written by Elenore Meherin, now appearing serially in big newspapers throughout the country.

"The Boss of Little Arcady," is an adaptation from Harry Leon Wilson's delightful comedy woven about a small-town drunk. In addition there will be a special with Milton Sills and another Doris Kenyon feature.

Topping all present projects, however, is Hudson's contemplated dramatization of the great steel industry of Pittsburgh, "United States Flavor," with Doris Kenyon and Milton Sills in the featured roles. The treatment was suggested by the Saturday Evening Post story by R. G. Kirk.

which they had received in New York. This was in ample time for the branch managers to familiarize their salesmen with the new plans well in advance of the sales campaign on the new product, so that everything is now set for an intensive, steady and long-continued selling of First National pictures which will mark another step in distribution achievement.

Mr. Eschmann has surrounded himself with a group of district managers who, in experience, in initiative and in loyalty are second to none. They have worked shoulder to shoulder with him during his first year as general manager of distribution for First National and are going over the top with him in solid phalanx to put the new group of pictures into more theatres than have ever before shown First National pictures.

Here is the roster of the District Managers—men who have made distribution history, and will make it again during the coming months:

Eastern District—Harry H. Buxbaum.
Central District—H. A. Bandy.
Mid-West District—R. C. Seery.
Southern District—W. E. Callaway.
Western District—Joseph F. Skirboll.
Mountain District—Harry T. Nolan.
Canadian District—Louis Bache.

These are the men who have helped to make "First National First" and who will help to keep it first. They will be ably assisted, as in the past, by as energetic and brilliant an array of branch managers and salesmen as can be found in the industry.

Goldwyn Production Plans

"World Without End" and "Judgment" to Follow "Thief in Paradise"

Plans for greatly increased production activity and the acquisition of important material have been announced by Samuel Goldwyn.

The success of "In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter" and George Fitzmaurice's "Tarnish" are in a large measure responsible for Goldwyn's production expansion, he declared in announcing his plans for the immediate future. Mr. Goldwyn's productions will be distributer by First National Pictures.

"World Without End," a new novel from the pen of May Edginton who wrote "Secrets," and "Judgment," was obtained from the galley proofs by Mr. Goldwyn for production by George Fitzmaurice following the director's current picture, "A Thief in Paradise," which is now nearing completion. "World Without End" will be published in book form simultaneously with the appearence of the Fitzmaurice picture.

Plans for a third "Potash and Perlmutter" are already under way. "Partners Again," the stage success by Montague Glass which ran for eighteen months in New York, has been obtained by Goldwyn and a director and cast will be selected in the near future.

"Stella Dallas," the novel by Olive Higgins Prouty which appeared serially in the American Magazine, rated as one of the best sellers of the season and syndicated in more than 70 newspapers, will go into production in the near future with a star and director to be selected at once. To this novel will go the distinction of being broadcast for the first time by radio in weekly installments by broadcasting stations in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These readings will start two months before the picture is released giving "Stella Dallas" many more millions of readers and hearers than any novel ever presented as a motion picture.

The Talmadge Pictures

"Madame Pompadour" for Norma; "The Man She Bought," for Constance

Joseph M. Schenck has obtained important story material for his two stars, Norma Talmadge and her sister, Constance, whose forthcoming pictures will be distributed by First National.

For Norma Talmadge, Martin Brown's play, "The Lady," in which Mary Nash achieved last season one of her biggest stage hits, was obtained and given to Frank Borzage to direct.

The second Norma Talmadge picture "Madame Pompadour," is altogether different from anything in which the star has been seen of late.

For Constance Talmadge's next two productions Mr. Schenck selected "Learning to Love" and "The Man She Bought." The former is by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Greed

rificing all of the finer things of life and sinking to the depths of degradation, he chose a commonplace woman in whom the greed for gold was exemplified, her husband, in whom the bad instincts of his father outweighed the better ones inherited from his mother, and a friend who turns against them. The story culminates in the murder of the woman by her husband, who escapes to a desert and ends with his being marooned without food or water, but with plenty of gold, handcuffed to the false friend whom he has killed.

Mr. Norris certainly painted a vivid picture and the truth and tremendous vigor of the story created a profound impression. In screening this novel Mr. Von Stroheim has not sought to soften the author's portrayal, but, if anything, by the incorporation of details regarding the intimacies of sex and other angles of life, has succeeded in enhancing the disagreeable side of the story. Because of the greater force that the eye exerts on the mind, impressions that on the printed page are interpreted according to the force of one's imagination appear as bold realities on the screen. There is no gainsaying the fact that Mr. Von Stroheim has succeeded in preserving the power of the theme and in registering the point of the story, but in his zeal he has incorporated touches that, while adding force or comedy relief, have been stressed to a point that goes beyond good taste. Incidents and details that in reading would be passed over lightly as only indices to character become offensive even to the point of vulgarity on the screen.

"Greed," which consumed many months in the making and a great outlay of money, fails to measure up to expectations. Despite its good points, it is deficient in the basic requirement for success; it does not entertain, for it leaves one with the impression in which a sordid theme, a morbid tone, the stressing of the unpleasant and a gruesome ending are dominant and outweigh the excellent acting, fine direction and undoubted power of the story.

As a consequence, in our opinion, "Greed" will appeal to only a small minority of the picture patrons of America.

Mr. Von Stroheim selected an excellent cast and directed them in such a manner that every one gives a striking performance. Gibson Gowland appears as McTigue, ZaSu Pitts as his gold-crazed wife and Jean Hersholt as the false friend.

Based on novel "McTeague" by Frank Norris.
Scenario by June Mathis and Eric Von Stroheim.
Directed by Eric Von Stroheim.
Length, 10,067 feet.

Story

McTeague, a miner with a conflicting nature, the heritage of a good mother and bad father, learns a smattering of dentistry from a strolling faker and opens an office in San Francisco. Unaccustomed to women he falls in love with Trina, the sweetheart of his friend Marcus who magnanimously gives her up. With many misgivings, Trina marries him and immediately learns she has won $500,000 in a lottery. Fear of extravagence makes her frugal and this trait gradually grows until she hates to part with even a cent for the necessities of life. In the meantime her love and passion for the money she has converted into gold and to which she is always adding by scrimping, grows until it is an obsession. McTeague, of dull mentality and slow to wrath stands for all this until finally he leaves her. She gets a job as a scrub-woman and he finally returns hungry and half-crazed demands money and being refused he kills her in the effort to get it. In the meantime he has been stopped from practising dentistry as he has no license. This was caused by his former friend Marcus who felt that in marrying Trina, McTeague cheated him of the $5,000. McTeague goes to Death Valley to escape the police. A possee starts after him, but Marcus is the only one to push on. Nearly dead of thirst he finds McTeague and water but an accidental shot punctures the canteen. They fight over the gold and McTeague kills Marcus but Marcus succeeds in handcuffing himself to McTeague, who finds that he is stranded in the desert without water and hand-cuffed to a dead man.

"The Air Hawk"

F. B. O. Western Depends For Chief Appeal on Stunt Aeroplane Flying

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Air Hawk" departs from the routine ways of the usual western picture by introducing a stunt air flyer as hero in the person of Al. Wilson, but otherwise resembles the actionful, melodramatic picture for which there is a steady demand. Where usually cowboys cavort on bucking bronchos, here Wilson puts his sky horse through its paces and produces some real thrills. Especially sensational is his leap from one 'plane to another.

The featuring of the aeroplane, while far from new to pictures, still has an element of novelty and enhances the audience power of what, without the stunt stuff, would be a rather ordinary production. The story deals with thefts of platinum from a mine and the apprehending of the thieves. Though apparently it was intended to conceal the identity of the flyer, weak direction and poor construction of story rob the vehicle of any mystery. It is only too obvious that the mining engineer and the masked flyer are one and the same person.

From the standpoint of acting, by far the best work in the picture is done by Virginia Brown Faire. The other players do not seem at ease in their roles and there is too much posing. Wilson as the flyer is much better than Wilson as the mining engineer and lover. But as we said above, the introduction of thrilling stunt flying should help audiences to overlook these technical faults.

Cast

Story

John Ames, superintendent of an Arizona platinum mine, cann discover the desperadoes who regularly steal from the mine. He and his daughter Edith suspect Robert MacLeod, who has offered to buy the mine and assume responsibility if Edith will marry him. She is in love with Al Parker, a mining engineer. Ames finds a secret passage the thieves have been using and is killed by them. MacLeod blames "The Air Hawk," a mysterious aviator, but Edith will not believe him because the aviator has befriended her on several occasions. MacLeod adbucts her in his 'plane; the Air Hawk follows and leaps from his 'plane into MacLeod's overcoming the villain. It develops that the Air Hawk and Parker are one—a secret agent of the government sent to ferret out the mystery of the platinum thefts.

"Her Marriage Vow"

Warner's Wholesome and Pleasing Story of Family Life Should Prove Good Box Office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on a stage play by Owen Davis, the Warner Brothers production, "Her Marriage Vow," marks the return to the screen of Beverly Bayne, who is featured along with Monte Blue. It is an intimate and interesting little story of married life and its trouble, absolutely clean, the kind that the whole family can see.

A wealthy girl chooses the poorer of two suitors. Several years later finds her the mother of two fine little kiddies, but the cares of housekeeping have begun to become irksome and this feeling is accentuated by the fact that her ambitious husband is inclined to make her play second fiddle to his business demands. Her thirst for pleasure gets her into a situation with her former suitor which, although she is innocent, causes estrangement, the love for their children however finally brings about a reconciliation.

It will be seen that the theme is based on the oft-used idea of a husband neglecting his wife for business and her finding solace elsewhere, but the story has been handled in such a way and with such realism in its little touches of home and family life that strong human interest is developed. There are a lot of situations that are true to life and will strike home to the average family who will see themselves mirrored to a certain extent on the screen. This has the effect of putting an extra big kick in the punch scenes where one of the kiddies nearly poisons the other by mistake and where the husband comes very near shooting his estranged wife.

There is good comedy and heart interest and the romantic side is never sugar-coated, and except for the fact that like so many themes of the type much of the story hinges on the not altogether convincing readiness of the husband to think evil of his wife and refuse to allow her to explain, the action is intensely human and realistic.

Monte Blue gives a convincing portrayal as the husband and Beverly Bayne does some good work as the wife although at times her work lacks realism through a tendency to overact. Margaret Livingston as a much married friend, Willard Louis as her newest husband and John Roche as the heroine's former suitor all do good work.

Coincidence tends to somewhat weaken certain situations and it hardly seems that the heroine would swallow her pride to the extent she does even for the sake of her children, however, these are minor points and do not overcome the fact that as a whole the picture is a realistic portrayal of life with a lot of good human touches and more than the usual amount of human interest.

The audiences during a week's showing at a suburban theatre where this picture was reviewed were distinctly favorable to the picture and it made a decidedly good impression at the box-office, and in our opinion it should duplicate this record in the majority of houses.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Paul Revere"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This issue of Universal's Hysterical History series is a good-natured burlesque of Paul Revere's famous ride and is especially timely due to the fact that this ride is used in two of the big feature productions of the year. The film follows the general lines of the familiar story but the events have been amusingly travestied. A mule is shown as being responsible for Paul taking his famous ride, by kicking him into a crowd when volunteers are called for. An owl's eyes shining in the dark causes him to start out a couple of hours before the British left. He encounters the two horsemen and gets rid of them, charging a couple of cannon and when one is fired at him, races ahead of the ball until he reaches a stone wall, ducking out of the way he goes through the hole in the wall made by the cannon ball. Returning home, he licks the villain, but is so sore after his long ride that he eats his meals off the mantelpiece. There are a number of good laughs in this number and it is one of the best of the series. It should especially please fans who like these Hysterical History subjects for it sticks closer to the original idea, that is, burlesquing history.—C. S. S.

"French Pastry"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Christie production, written by Keene Thompson, Bobby Vernon is called upon to keep constantly exercising his agile limbs, as the two reels mostly consist of love scenes with a French mademoiselle and escapes from German soldiers. The scene is a French village during the war period. Germans occupy it, capture Bobby and undertake to put him before a firing squad. He escapes once by engaging a German officer in argument, a second time by comedy luck. Thanks to Harold Beaudine's direction, the action is smooth and unfaltering. Most of the comedy lies in the gyrations of the players rather than in the situations, but these are effective in drawing laughs. The best gag is the argument over the choice of a wall for Bobby to lean against when he is about to be shot. This subject seemed to take well with the projection room audience and ought to thoroughly entertain most fans. It has pep, continuity and excellent backgrounds.—S. S.

"Just a Good Guy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Arthur Stone is the star of this two-reel Hal Roach comedy distributed through Pathe. The story concerns a good natured, but not overly intelligent chap who poses as a model for a mechanical man, and there is a mix-up when a party who seeks to secure the invention gets hold of Arthur who is posing as the dummy which has been broken. Stone does this part exceedingly well. There are a number of amusing situations and combined with Stone's clever portrayal of the dummy, it should prove of average entertainment value in the majority of theatres, even though the idea is not new.—C. Who's Hooligan (F. B. O.)

"Who's Hooligan?"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this eighth episode of "The Go-getters" by George Marion, Jr., the action centers around a steeplechase. George O'Hara, as Ted Adams, makes the crack that he'd certainly like to ride one of the horses, and Stanley Taylor, an expert horseman, calls his bluff in front of Georgie's film sweetie, Alberta Vaughn. Thereafter the hero industriously tries to avoid an assignment as jockey, because he never mounted a horse in his life and is afraid of them in the bargain. All efforts at escape fail and George goes through with it, winning the race. The comedy leading up to the denouement is well done and the steeplechase scenes are striking. The subject possesses average entertainment value.—S. S.

"The Border Maid"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

Edmund Cobb is starred in this two-reel Universal Western, and is seen in the role of a Mexican who to save the chap that he believes his sweetheart loves, takes him across the border, making it appear however that he is going to turn him over to a gang of smugglers. The gang is rounded up and it develops that the other fellow is the girl's half-brother, a revenue officer, so the hero wins the girl. There is plenty of action to this picture, with good riding and hard fighting and although the material follows along usual lines, it should prove satisfactory for Western fans. Edmund Cobb does good work and his support is entirely adequate.—C. S. S.

"The Royal Razz"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This Hal Roach comedy starring Charles Chase is one of the most amusing single-reelers of the series and in addition is particularly timely as it deals with the Christmas season fast approaching. It is chock full of pep and contains more laughs than many two-reelers. Chase is shown as going home in a trolley car and taking a Christmas tree, the havoc it plays with the passengers can well be imagined and the director has not overlooked a bet. There is a roar when another man tries to board the car with a tree and the conductor shoots him. Sounds a bit gruesome but it is all in fun and is a decidedly amusing situation. Arriving at home, Chase endeavors to come down the chimney dressed as Santa Claus, and the way he lands first in the furnace and then comes up through the vent in the floor is sure to bring laughs. Not content with these amusing scenes, the director keeps right on and gets more laughs out of a scene where Chase calls a doctor who comes still dressed as Santa and the two get into a scrap, ending with wifie hitting the wrong one. We are sure your audience will be immensely amused with this comedy, for it is a whiz.—C. S. S.

"The Family Row"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Buddy Messinger forsakes his role of a short-trousered kid in this Century Comedy and appears in long pants as a budding young man who with his older brother is courting two sisters. The older couple get married and Buddy and his girl proceed to play tricks that arouse their jealousy. There is much more of a plot to this number than usual, and although the opening and closing scenes are slapstick, the majority of the footage of two reels depends on farce comedy situations for its amusement value. The chief point is the fact that the stunt works so well that hubby is convinced his wife is a regular vamp when he sees four "youths," a fireman, a policeman and an iceman disappear into his home. Buddy takes the blame when hubby starts a roughhouse and all comes out O. K. when it develops that the four "youths" were masquerading girl friends and the others were calling on the cook. There are a number of amusing situations and the comedy should prove pleasing in the average theatre.—C. S. S.

"Broadcasting"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

This bit of Pen and Ink Vaudeville by Earl Hurd shows "Props" acting as broadcaster of a theatrical program, and the manager of the theatre listening in at his radio set, to check up on reception of the wave lengths. There is much by-play when "Madam Balogna" sings and "Fatima Omar" does her tricky, sinuous dance, giving the radio set the D. T.'s. The subject ends with "Props" discharged by the aerial route, showing him flying through the air on an electric wave. It has ordinary audience value.—S. S.

"A Movie-Mad Maid"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

This slapstick comedy produced by Fox pokes good natured fun at motion-picture making, burlesquing a lot of the activities of the studio staff especially in connection with stunts and action on location. Stout Babe London is cast as a girl whose mother is so anxious that she become a picture star that she forms her own company when Babe is turned down. Babe's inability to either get on or stay on a horse inspires the director to change the western story to a sea picture and passing a fire engine house also gives him new ideas for thrills. There are a number of gags and stunts mostly of a familiar nature, some trick stuff and considerably rough and tumble. The picture is of average amusement value as a slapstick comedy.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 51"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Another installment of the "Keep Fit" series appears in this issue of Pathe Review. Following the statement that the muscles conducive to long life are the muscles in the front of the body in the chest and abdomen, two exercises are recommended for keeping these in shape, one is a twisting motion of the trunk known as the "churn" and the other is one in which the body is twisted and each toe is alternately touched with the other hand. There is also a slap at the corsets the women formerly wore and praise for the present variety and a slap at the men today with their big paunches being the worst offenders. Another section shows how rice is harvested in Madagascar and the series dealing with American cities shows views of Providence, R. I., some of the scenes being in color. This is a representative number of the review and is interesting and instructive.—C. S. S.

"Mysteries of Old Chinatown"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Chinatown furnishes the background for this Paul Terry cartoon, and the action shows all sorts of mysterious appearances and disappearances. Instead of the familiar cat having the leading role, this time it is a mouse that chases his kidnapped sweetheart. Mr. Terry as usual gives vent to his wonderful imagination, a sedan chair changes into an auto then sprouts a tail and becomes an aeroplane. The mouse overtakes it by hitting a chinaman and climbing up on the stars that he sees, and then grabbing a trapese attached to a big bird. He melodramatically gets rid of the kidnappers and the plane plunges into a theatre where there is a ballet dance in progress. There are some good laughs and clever stunts in this number and it is well up to the average of the series.—C. S. S.

"Nature's Rouge"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This entire reel is devoted to scenes of the athletic activities of the girls in the celebrated Sargent School at Peterboro, N. H. and he makes the point that there is no need for the drugstore variety when outdoor exercise paints the cheeks. In addition he shows how healthy exercise and competition at sports increases happiness and makes one experience the joy of living. Certainly these girls appear to be having a wonderfully happy time with soccer, running, jumping, tumbling, rowing, pole-vaulting, swimming, javelin-throwing, shot-putting and in fact all of the vigorous sports of their male friends, and a hardy-healthy-looking lot they are. There is a lot of pep here and it is an enjoyable reel.—C. S. S.

Story

Carol Pelham turns down the wealthy idler, Ted Lowe, and marries a hard-working chap, Bob Hilton. For seven years their life is happy even though Carol is kept pretty well confined to her home taking care of it and her two little girls. A flightly friend, Estelle takes an apartment in the same building and Carol again meets Ted who starts to make love to her. Piqued at the fact that Bob leaves her alone to work at night causes her to attend a party in Estelle's apartment where she imbibes too freely. Bob catches Ted kissing her and putting a necklace on her while she sleeps after finding roses from Ted in his own apartment. Mistrusting her he casts her out and the court awards him the children, but he is lonely and continues to love Carol. Finally unable to stand it any longer, Carol steals into Bob's home and the children beg her to take them with her. A noise causes Bob to hear her and stealing out on a balcony he fires into the room. Carol is not hit, but faints, and when she revives, she and Bob become reconciled.

"Ten Days"

Gerson Production Introducing a New Star, Richard Holt, Offers Pleasing Light Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Described as a romantic thrill-comedy-drama, "Ten Days," the first of a series of productions introducing a new star, Richard Holt, which Gerson Pictures Corporation is distributing on the independent market, contains all of these elements.

The title refers to the period that a young rich chap was ostensibly spending in jail for speeding, complicated by a variety of minor offenses, while actually he was dragooned into service as a life guard and got mixed up in a mystery and found romance. The plot is the kind that is not intended to be taken seriously, with coincidence playing a prominent part and plausibility sacrificed to provide peppy and amusing entertainment.

The story centers in the romance of the chap serving the jail sentence, who falls in love with a mysterious woman and much to her disguest continues to save her from "perils" which, it develops, are publicity stunts to advertise her in a forthcoming show. His persistence, however, ends in a real romance, with everybody happy.

There is a strong farcical note to this picture, with good comedy situations, and some straight character comedy in the doings of the country sheriff. The different rescue scenes and the frame-ups of the publicity man provide opportunities for the introduction of melodrama and thrills and the romantic angle is pleasing.

Richard Holt, the new star, makes a good impression. He has a pleasing personality, is an athletic, clean-cut chap and is thoroughly capable in the thrill and action scenes. Hazel Keener is well cast as the girl, while Joseph Girard and Victor Potel give good performances.

"Ten Days" is fast-moving, with plenty of pep, thrills, romance, comedy and melodrama.

Story

Dick Van Buren following numerous escapades is arrested in a small seaside town for speeding. His father refuses to aid him and he is ordered to jail for ten days. The life guard quits and Dick is made to take his place. Soon, he sees a mysterious and beautiful woman attacked by ruffians, rescues her, and is berated for his trouble. However, he pulls other stunts to see her and she is more friendly. Finally just as a fake kidnapping is being staged he breaks jail and again rescues her. She confesses that she loves him and it develops that she is an actress in a show backed by Dick's father and the whole kidnapping is a publicity stunt. Dick's father realizes that he has lost a star but consents to the wedding when the ten day sentence is over.

Films in Color Available at Fair Laboratory Cost

MOTION pictures in color are at last available to all producers at a laboratory cost within reason. This announcement is made by Sering D. Wilson who with Royal W. Wetherald comprises the firm of Sering D. Wilson & Company, Inc., with offices at 25 West 43rd street, New York City. This company has taken over all production of color film under the process invented by Wm. V. D. Kelley, president of the Kelley Color Laboratories, Inc.

The Kelley process permits the taking of pictures in color at a laboratory cost of less than 15 per cent. over and above the laboratory cost of black and white film. This is due to the fact that color positives are printed on single-coated stock, whereas all color prints in use up to now have been obtained by the use of two emulsions. The color prints on single-coated stock obviate one of the impracticabilities which color pictures have faced, that of imperfect projection. The single-coated stock produced by the Kelley process guarantees even tone graduations of light and perfect registration of colors.

Mr. Wilson, in making this announcement, emphasized the fact that color motion picture photography is now available for all kinds of productions, commercial as well as for the theatre. A producer who wishes to use color motion pictures in certain episodes in his special black and white feature pictures, may do so at an expense that is within reason.

"Great scenic effects which put the punch in motion pictures of today will be brought out with striking effectiveness by the use of the Kelley process," said Mr. Wilson. "Producers of short-length features wherein beauty of composition means the direct appeal to the picture fan will find the new color process of great value, and those producers who have tried from time to time to show beautiful art work, nature views and scenics will enhance their box office value 100 per cent. by the use of our new single-coated process. By our agreement with Mr. Kelley, Sering D. Wilson & Company, Inc., takes over all production rights to his process, and we will make it available to producers who wish to add to the vividness and realism of their productions."

Mr. Wilson became interested in color film while exporting pictures. He sold successfully many of the Wm. V. D. Kelley productions in Europe, and this led to his investigation of various color processes and finally to his contract with Mr. Kelley.

Mr. Wilson came into the motion picture industry about three years ago while studying art in Paris. He became associated with the original Pathe Company in France and brought several foreign-made pictures to America. He then purchased the rights of American-made films and returned to Europe himself to sell them abroad. Upon his return from one of these trips he met Royal W. Wetherald on board ship, and by the time they docked in New York these two young men had decided upon a partnership.

They have just reorganized their company and have engaged as production manager Clayton B. Davis, recently with "Chronicles of America" and who was associated with J. Stuart Blackton in the production of his pictures made at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn, last year. Mr. Davis was casting director for Famous Players and spent two years abroad as supervising production manager of one of the great Vienna motion picture companies.

Director's Daughter in Pictures

Nellie Burt, daughter of William P. Burt, the director, is carving a niche for herself in the screen hall of fame, according to reports coming into the Pathe Home Office as a result of the releases of the series of "True Detective Stories." Miss Burt took the leading role in all four of the pictures, directed by her father. This was her first appearance on the screen. The "True Detective Stories" series were released in four pictures of two reels each under the title of "On Leave of Absence," "Out of the Storm," "The Girl and the Gangster" and "Bucking the Bucket Shop." Ross D. Whytock, former reporter for the New York Evening World, wrote the stories. Leslie Austin is the leading supporting member of the cast of "True Detective Stories."

Blackton's "System"

Is Enabled to Engage His Players For Exactly Stipulated Days

J. Stuart Blackton finished production work on "The Redeeming Sin," for Vitagraph, just twenty-four days after he started, and exactly in accordance with the schedule he prepared before taking the first "shot."

Mme. Nazimova, the star, concluded her work on her twenty-second day, according to schedule, and Lou Tellegen, engaged for nineteen days, packed up his makeup box on his 19th day. "Bill" Dunn was in harness for his allotted fourteen days, and Otis Harlan reported on each of twelve days, as had been arranged in the beginning. Carl Miller finished on time on his 15th day.

All these time arrangements were outlined long before production work began, and that no deviation whatever was made necessary is a testimony to the perfect system in effect at the Vitagraph studios. It is somewhat of a coincidence that no one character was needed during the entire twenty-four days occupied with production.

"The Redeeming Sin," is an adaptation of L. V. Jefferson's novel, "The Pearls of the Madonna."

Arthur Stone in Pathe Comedy

Arthur Stone started to work last week on a two-reel comedy for Pathe, as yet untitled. The story is that of the adventures of a house detective in a high-class hotel who is more ambitious than intellectual. The cast consists of Arthur Stone as the detective, Martha Sleeper as the telephone operator, Marjorie Whities as the vamp, Chris Frank as the villain and Jules Mendal as the hotel proprietor. The direction is being handled by Ralph Ceder, with Frank Young at the camera.

"Hot Water" Held Over

Harold Lloyd's latest Pathe production, "Hot Water," after a run of six weeks at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago, was held over for an additional week, according to announcements from the mid-western metropolis. This is an unusual record for a popular priced picture in the Chicago loop, but due to the unusual drawing power of the latest Lloyd picture it was decided by the management to hold it over for an additional week.

Ince Studios Working on First National Productions

SIGNALIZING the beginning of First National's new release schedule, which will embrace a cycle of important photoplays produced at the Thomas H. Ince studios under directors of the highest rank, work has been started on two special productions, two have already been shipped the exchanges, and production plans are being made for others.

In order to care for the large number of companies at work, a new stage 72 feet by 180, giving 52,000 square feet of additional space, was built at a total cost of $115,000. Ten bungalow dressing rooms also had to be added for the use of stars working in forthcoming First National releases. The new dressing rooms are handsomely equipped with built-in make-up tables, baths and every luxury a star could wish for.

Lavish sets are being erected for "Playing With Souls," a First National release from the novel by Countess De Chambrun. The cast includes Mary Astor, Belle Bennett, Clive Brook, Jacqueline Logan and "Buster" Collier. Ralph Ince will direct the production. A good deal of the story is laid in France, and the sets now being erected are for the sequence dealing with life in the gay French capital. No expense will be spared in making the setting true to life and elaborate to the extreme.

Camera work is in progress on the Thomas H. Ince production, "Enticement," from the popular novel of the same name by Clive Arden, author of "Sinners in Heaven." Mary Astor, one of the youngest of successful screen stars has been selected by a public voting contest for the role of Leonore Bewlay, the charming heroine of the story. Others in the cast include Ian Keith, Clive Brook and Lillian Langdon. Mr. Ince designated George Archainbaud to direct this picture.

"Idle Tongues," adapted from Joseph C. Lincoln's popular novel, "Dr. Nye," is the first picture to be released under the new Thomas H. Ince First National contract. This picture promises to be one of the outstanding box office attractions of the year, as the publishers claim one person in every ten in the United States has read the story. More than ten million readers followed the story when published in serial form in Pictorial Review and more than one million have read the book.

Percy Marmont plays the title role of Dr. Nye, with Doris Kenyon playing opposite him as Katherine Minot. Others in the cast include such excellent players as Claude Gillingwater, Lucille Ricksen, Malcolm MacGregor and David Torrence. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the scenario and Lambert Hillyer, now under contract with First National, directed the story under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

"The Enchanted Hill," by Peter B. Kyne, author of "Kindred of the Dust" and "Never the Twain Shall Meet," will be Thomas H. Ince's next production for First National release, following "Playing With Souls."

Valentino to Star in "Cobra"; "The Scarlet Power" Follows

THE first picture that Rudolph Valentino is to make in his series of independent productions for Ritz-Carlton Pictures will be "Cobra."

On the star's arrival on the West Coast he discovered that much of the research and preliminary work required for the elaborate Spanish-Moorish story he was planning still remained to be done, and rather than delay the commencement of actual shooting, he determined to start work immediately upon the film version of "Cobra," the smashing New York dramatic success of last season, which J. D. Williams, of the Ritz corporation, had purchased for his use some time ago.

In "Cobra" Valentino will find a role that will remind many of his performance in "The Sheik." It is the part that lifted Louis Calhern to fame overnight when he played it on the New York stage.

While this play is being screened, preparations for Valentino's previously announced production, "The Scarlet Power," will be pushed forward steadily, so that it may be begun immediately upon the completion of "Cobra."

To make "Cobra" Valentino will have to sacrifice the beard he has been growing, for his role in "The Scarlet Power," so that the public will never see the picturesque appendage that attracted so much newspaper attention, both in this country and in Europe. It is supposed, however, that when "Cobra" is completed another beard will be raised to meet the requirements of the Spanish piece.

J. D. Williams, president of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, who accompanied Valentino to the Coast, started back on the return journey Thursday. He reports a fine spirit of optimism in Hollywood producing circles. Hawley Turner is accompanying Mr. Williams on his trip East.

As previously announced, "Cobra" is to be distributed for Ritz by Paramount.

"Youth and Adventure"

At least a week will be devoted to stunt scenes by Dick Talmadge for his new F. B. O. thrill melodrama, "Youth and Adventure," now being produced in Hollywood under the supervision of Abe Carlos. James Horne is directing.

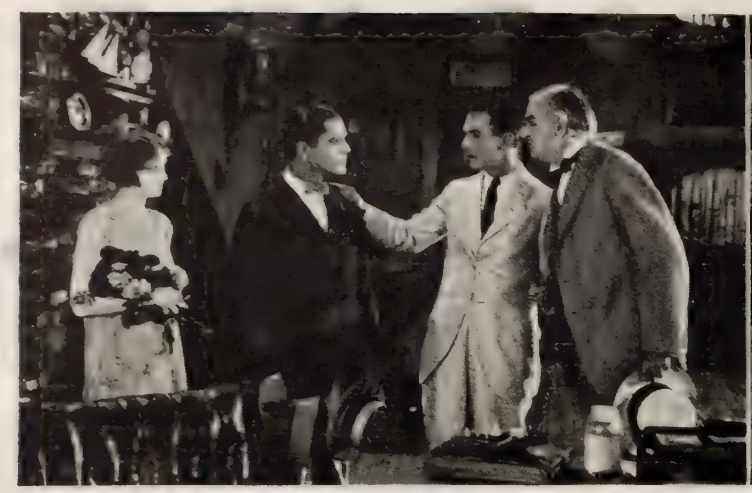
Fox Signs MacDonald

Veteran Actor Will Play Character Roles in Several Big Productions

As a result of his widely praised characterization of Corporal Casey in "The Iron Horse," J. Farrell MacDonald, has signed a long term contract with William Fox, it was announced this week at the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation. The veteran actor will play character roles in several new productions.

MacDonald is finishing work now in "Kings of the Turf," which is being made in Hollywood by John Ford, the man who directed "The Iron Horse." Following this part MacDonald will have an important character role in support of Shirley Mason in "The Scarlet Honeymoon," which will be directed by Alan Hale, one of the screen's best known "heavies."

Each Weiss Bros. Art-Class Exchange was given these oil paintings by Louis Weiss, head of the distributing organization.



First National's "Idle Tongues," with Doris Kenyon, Malcolm MacGregor, Percy Marmont and Claude Gillingswater.

Cinema Experts Are Shooting on New Vitagraph Production

DIRECTOR DAVID SMITH has engaged for the Vitagraph special, "Pampered Youth," the same photographers, who helped to make the same director's production, "Captain Blood," an artistic as well as dramatic success, and hopes to make it as pictorially beautiful as was the picturizaton of the Rafael Sabatini classic. These camera experts are Steve Smith, Jr., David H. Smith, Ted Reed and Elmer Fryer.

"Pampered Youth" is an adaptation of Booth Tarkington's novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons." It deals with a wealthy family in a small Middle Western town who take delight in flaunting their wealth before the community. The Ambersons lavish money on their homes, inside and out, and make for magnificence rather than good taste and harmony. The deft hands and clear minds of skilled photographers are needed to get the maximum of beauty from the various sets made for the picture.

The street scene had been dressed and all the players were in readiness for the camera, one day recently, when it was found necessary to have a negro stable boy to hold the spirited horse of old Major Amberson. Director Smith was looking gloomily at the ground, as if expecting a negro to spring suddenly into life from that source. And just then Otis Harlan walked past.

All that the director saw was a close-up of the fattest, creakiest, most sagged pair of feet imaginable, but that was enough. "That's the man I want—the man with those feet!" he exclaimed.

Harlan had just finished his day's work with another company on the same lot and was on his way home when his pedal extremities ran afoul of Mr. Smith's vision. Would he accommodate? He would be pleased to do so as soon as he could be outfitted and his face blackened. These details were arranged without delay—and Otis Harlan is to be seen in another Vitagraph special.

Cruze Finishes Picture

If you ask James Cruze, he'll tell you, "The Goose Hangs High." For the Paramount producer has just completed filming the production by that name with a cast of featured players including Constance Bennett, Myrtle Stedman, Esther Ralston, George Irving and Edward Peil, Jr. This was adapted for the screen by Walter Woods and Anthony Coldewey from the play by Lewis Beach.

"Married Flirts," a Metro-Goldwyn picture.

Rothacker Conferring

Distribution Plans for "The Lost World" Engages First National Experts

Watterson R. Rothacker is in New York conferring with E. A. Eschmann, First National's manager of distribution, and officials of the company regarding distribution plans for "The Lost World," adapted from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel.

Although this picture has been in course of production over seven years, it still is not finished. Earl Hudson, who is producing it for First National and Rothacker, expects that the final scenes will be shot by the middle of December.

The human actors, including Bessie Love, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes, finished their part of the picture some time ago under the direction of Harry O. Hoyt.

The prehistoric members of the cast, however, are still doing their stuff before the camera. Among the Jurassic Period monsters of 10,000,000 years ago, brought to life in this picture, are:

The dinosaurus, brontosaurus, pterodactyl, allosaurus, triceratops, tyrannosaurus, agathaumas, stegosaurus, diplodocus, morosaurus, iguanodon, samarasaurus and trachodon. Some of these reptilian giants are as big as fifteen elephants on the screen.

Marion Fairfax, who wrote the scenario, is making her headquarters at the First National studios in New York, where the picture is being edited.

Willis H. O'Brien, research and technical director, plans to come East following the completion of the picture, so as to be present at the New York opening.

Joins Associated Exhibitors

C. C. Ezell, a member of the Selznick executive forces since the organization of that company, has joined the Associated Exhibitors organization in the capacity of special representative.

"Her Market Value" Scheduled

One of the first of the Agnes Ayres starring pictures to be released by Producers Distributing Corporation on the coming 1925 program will be "Her Market Value" adapted from the New York and London stage success, "The Eleventh Commandment" by Francis Nordstrom.

"Her Market Value" is a Paul Powell production with a real all-star supporting cast that includes Taylor Holmes, Anders Randolph and Edward Earle.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Troy, N. Y., Showman Avoids a Panic by Quick Thinking

Rare presence of mind on the part of Benjamin Apple, owner of the American Theatre in Troy, N. Y., and members of his orchestra prevented what might have been not only a serious blaze one night last week but also a panic among the crowd that completely filled the house. Fire originating from an unknown origin completely destroyed the first two reels of "Secrets," which was being shown, entailing a loss to Mr. Apple of approximately $125. The fire was confined entirely to the projection room an occurred about 8 p. m. The first the crowd knew that anything had gone wrong was the sudden shutting off of the picture, many turning their heads toward the projection booth, from which tiny spurts of flame were coming through the portholes. This was later followed by smoke, causing a number to hurriedly leave their seats and start toward the exits.

Quickly realizing that a panic might easily occur, the orchestra struck up a lively jazz tune and succeeded in diverting the attention of the crowd from the projection room. Meanwhile, the ushers, also on their job, assured the uneasy ones that there was absolutely no cause for undue alarm. Those who had left their seats finally returned and after a considerable interval the picture was resumed. Mr. Apple telephoned to the Albany exchange of First National, which in turn telephoned to New York, with the result that the two first reels were supplied Mr. Apple in time for the next afternoon's show.

With at least 500 persons from the neighborhood attending his theatre each night during the week, never by chance missing a single picture, and with matinees drawing heavily, Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy is sitting pretty these days. As a fair sample of what Mr. Rosenthal is doing in the way of entertainment at 10 cents a person, last Saturday's program may be cited. On that occasion he gave "Messalina," "Wolves of the North," a Larry Semon comedy, Aesop's Fables and a news weekly, all for a dime. It goes without saying that Mr. Rosenthal played to capacity. His patronage is so regular as to cause him to remark the other day that if some of the 500 do not show up on an evening they are really missed. Going in and out of Mr. Rosenthal's theatre it's a case of "Hello, Jake," "Hello, John," or "Hello, Mary," just like one big family.

The Bardavon Theatre Corporation of Poughkeepsie, operating the Bardavon, Stratford and Liberty theatres in that city, recently lost its treasurer, Mr. Gurney, through death.

All the leading theatres in this section are planning to decorate their lobbies with garlands on the week before Christmas. The Strand group of houses is promising something unusually beautiful this year, while William Smalley, head of a chain of twelve theatres, while in Albany last week stated that he would use two small Christmas trees in front of each of his houses this year.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, manager of presentation at the Robbins theatres in Watertown, is in Key West, Fla., for a ten days' vacation. Dr. Wilson is an ardent fisherman, which explains why Key West was selected. Perhaps he will have a few stories of tarpon fishing when he returns.

Oscar Perrin certainly knew his business when it came to holding over "Classmates" for the second week at the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany. Even as late as Thursday on the second week the picture was still holding the crowds out and playing to capacity business. At Mr. Perrin's Leland Theatre "Secrets" went over big, with all three floors packed and the lines extending as far as Beaver street, nearly every night.

House records at the State Theatre in Schenectady went by the board last week when "The Sea Hawk," in the words of Manager William Shirley, "knocked them dead." The theatre is the largest one in this section of the state, but even at that could not accommodate the nightly crowds.

Louis Buettner of Cohoes, together with Ben Apple of Troy, was in town during the past week looking for quarters for the M. P. T. O. of New York State. It is quite likely that the state association will be housed over the Mark Strand Theatre, close to Film Row, and well suited in every way. It is expected that the furniture will arrive from New York within the next week or so.

Tom Thornton of the Orpheum in Saugerties had the time of his life the other night at a roast pig supper given by the Saugerties fire department. Mr. Thornton furnished the entertainment and was voted a prince of good fellows by all present. In addition to running his theatre, Mr. Thornton also sells automobiles and is a lawyer.

The Arbitration Board of the Film Board of Trade, at its meeting last week, passed a resolution of condolence on the recent death of Samuel Suckno of Albany. It is understood that Mr. Suckno's two theatres, the Albany and Regent, will be operated by members of his family. Many exhibitors who were in town last week attending the meeting of the state body called at the Suckno home and expressed their sympathy.

The Liberty Theatre, newest and largest of Corning's picture houses, built at a cost of $90,000, was wrecked by fire following a terrific explosion early on the morning of December 2. The loss is about $50,000. The interior of the house is a complete wreck. The theatre, recently purchased by Associated Theatres, Inc., of Rochester, from William Berinstein of Elmira, was taken over a few weeks ago by the Schine Brothers of Gloversville.

A stiff fight for business is assured between the Mark Strand Theatre of Albany and the two Perrin houses, the Leland and the Clinton Square. Walter Hays and Moe Mark of the Strand company spent two days in Albany last week, conferring with Manager Uly S. Hill in mapping out a campaign from January on. Announcement was made that the Strand company had purchased the entire group of Paramount pictures, as well as the First National group. Both of Mr. Perrin's houses have been doing exceptionally well this fall, especially the Leland, while the Clinton Square Theatre, only a block away from the Mark Strand, has been drawing big crowds that no doubt have cut into the receipts of other theatres.

Schine Brothers of Gloversville, with their fifty houses or more, announce that Vincent McCabe, former manager for Metro-Goldwyn in Albany, has entered their employ and will hereafter be located in Gloversville.

Although the Community Theatre in Catskill, with its 1,000 seats, cost about $125,000, M. E. Silberstein, its manager, never runs even the biggest features more than a single day. The house is paying extremely well on a daily change, and it seems that Mr. Silberstein has the right idea for Catskill.

Battle Over Name

Over in Saint Catharines, Ont., a Canadian neighbor of Buffalo, there is a nice battle on between two theatres.

Both have the same name and both insist on retaining it.

Both also claim they had it first.

Meanwhile, the folks in the town are having a lot of fun figuring out which house is which and which picture is being shown at which house, etc.

Good Times in Troy

There are plenty of five and ten dollar bills in circulation these days in Troy, seven out of ten persons purchasing tickets at one of the picture theatres in that city one night last week tendering five dollar bills to the cashier. According to exhibitors in that city, the prevalence of these bills indicates good times, plenty of work at the factories and excellent prospects for the months to come. Troy is a manufacturing city and, according to exhibitors there, whenever small change is tendered for tickets predictions of poor business invariably come true.

Connecticut

Yale University may purchase the site of the Rialto Theatre in New Haven and erect thereon a large theatre building containing several stores. The Rialto was destroyed by fire a few years ago when it was being operated by Alfred S. Black. The proposed theatre for Yale has been made possible through the gift of $1,000,000 by Edward H. Harkness. Negotiations have been under way for the sale of the property, New Haven interests and a New York concern reported being involved.

The Southington Theatre in Winsted, Conn., has been purchased from Albert Anders by Panora Brothers at a reported price of $25,000. J. E. Panora, one of the brothers, controls the Opera House in Winsted.

Plans are being made for a theatre to be erected on Elizabeth street in Derby.

A newly installed pipe organ was played for the first time at Poli's Palace Theatre in Hartford on Sunday, November 30. The Palace is playing week runs of the foremost Paramount and other photoplays. The organ will be played in conjunction with the theatre orchestra, which is directed by Osborne Putnam Stearns.

Vaudeville is being presented along with film features at three theatres in New Britain, the Lyceum, Palace and Capitol.

New Hampshire

Two of New Hampshire's live-wire exhibitors are F. H. Baldwin and E. L. Leighton. They operate the Park Theatre in East Jaffrey and 'tis said that Messrs. Baldwin and Leighton are showmen exhibitors through and through.

Albany, N. Y.

Nate Robbins and Barney Lumberg of Utica are back home from a short business trip to New York.

Twenty-five Boy Scouts of Troy served as ushers last Saturday and helped in handling the crowd that attended the second of the Junior Movies at the Troy Theatre, with "Black Beauty" as the attraction. These movies are now being held at frequent intervals in both Troy and Albany, and not only turning in hundreds of dollars but also furnishing good, wholesome entertainment and keeping the boys and girls off the streets on Saturday mornings. They have the endorsement and the support of the Mothers' Club.

Morte Weiss, owner of the Hudson Theatre in Watervliet, on the banks of the Hudson, located a boatman last week, borrowed a bell from the craft and used it in drawing attention to "The Covered Wagon" which he was playing at 15 and 25 cents admission. The Arbor Hill Theatre in Albany is playing the same picture this week at 10 and 15 cents.

The biggest week in the history of the American Theatre in Troy is the record made by "Secrets" during the past seven days. Mr. Apple had long lines in front of his house each night, while on Sunday the crowd was so large that it was necessary to summon a patrolman to keep order.

"Why is it that every time I hit the barber shop everyone in town is getting a hair cut?" remarked Oscar Perrin the other day as he sat fidgeting in a chair, waiting his turn. Between the two theatres, the Leland and the Clinton Square, Mr. Perrin is on the jump most of the time, but even at that a deal may be consummated almost any day now that will add another house to the chain. Mr. Perrin is already planning to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Leland Theatre next May. The mere fact that the anniversary comes in May doesn't bother Mr. Perrin much, for his business holds up no matter what time of the year.

Pickpockets removed a wallet containing $74 from the rear pocket of a man standing in the crowd in front of the Troy Theatre the other day but was nabbed. The fireman stationed at the house held the pickpocket while Assistant Manager Benjamin Stern went for a policeman.

His previous newspaper training standing him well in hand, Tony Veiller of the Lincoln Theatre in Troy is breaking away these days from the ordinary newspaper advertisement. In connection with the pre-release showing of "Argentine Love" last week, Mr. Veiller called attention to the fact that the star was also the star of "Sinners in Heaven," that it was directed by the same one who directed "Manhandled" and that its author also wrote "The Four Horsemen."

Futile Bargaining

The next time—that is, if there is to be a next time—that Ben Apple of the American Theatre in Troy and his friends, Walter Roberts of the Troy Theatre, Jake Rosenthal of the Rose and Charles McCarthy of the New Theatre in Hoosick Falls, take a taxi from Albany to Troy, someone other than Ben will probably do the dickering. The trouble lies in the fact that Mr. Apple weighs about 292 pounds.

The other day the four exhibitors were in Albany attending a meeting of the state association. The afternoon session lasted until nearly 6 p. m. and all four were anxious to get back to their theatres. Someone suggested a taxi. The idea appeared to be a good one and Mr. Apple started over to a nearby taxi stand, inquiring what it would cost to negotiate the eight miles to Troy. He was told that the trip would cost $3. This seemed too much and so Ben went from taxi stand to taxi stand, seven all told, unsuccessfully attempting to get a lower rate.

Finally one of the party, surveying Mr. Apply, remarked: "It's no wonder they want to charge us $3 after seeing you coming."

Massachusetts

Victor J. Morris, manager of Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theatre in Boston, has just completed fifteen years of service in that position. A surprise reception was given him by the employes of the Orpheum. Mr. Morris received congratulatory messages from Mr. Loew, M. Douglas Flattery, Nicholas Schenck and scores of other friends throughout the United States.

Mr. Morris is one of the oldest employes in point of service with Marcus Loew. He came to Boston from Elizabeth, N. J., where he was manager of one of the few theatres that Mr. Loew controlled at that time. At the reception for the managers, Joseph A. DiPesa, publicity representative for the Loew houses in Boston, was toastmaster, Eulogizing Mr. Morris for his efficiency, broadmindedness and generosity. Among the guests were Joseph H. Brennan, managing director of Loew's State Theatre; Frank Meagher, Samuel Messing, Marie Coleman, Emily White, Robert Spear, Gertrude Kelleher, George Scruton, John H. Devlin, Louis Levine, Archie Lloyd, Carl Levy, Edward Casey and James Monard.

Nathan Gordon's Capitol Theatre in the Allston section of Boston observed its second anniversary the week of December 1. "Captain Blood" was the film feature and there also were several stage features and a special musical program by the Capitol Symphony Orchestra, Hy Fine, conductor, and Francis J. Cronin, organist. Lawrence Bearg is the manager of the Capitol.

Alonzo Hemeley, for fourteen years employed by Fred E. Wright, manager of the Selwyn Theatre in Boston, died of pneumonia on November 20.

Harry Goldstein, manager of the Shawmut Theatre in Dorchester, had a "tough" job the other night. Harry was one of the judges who had to choose the most popular girl at the American Legion Post's dancing party.

The Boston American and the Boston Herald-Traveler have started a new advertising section for the neighborhood theatres in and about Boston. Under a heading, "Tonight's Programs in Your Neighborhood Theatres," appears the names of each section and under them the theatre names and programs. Reading notices are being given. A special low price prevails.

Buffalo Suburb Will Have $200,000 House After All

Application for a permit to build a $200,000 picture theatre and business block in Delaware avenue near the Landers road in Kenmore, N. Y., a suburb of Buffalo, has been filed with the village board, so it looks as though the town really means business. Henry J. Ebling is head of the corporation which proposes to erect the house on a community participation basis. It is reported that the Fitzer Brothers of Syracuse have offered to lease the house for $10,000 a year.

The Comerford Amusement Company is to build a new picture house in Waverly, N. Y. The theatre will seat 1,400 and cost $125,000. Option has been taken on a plot in Broad street in the Southern Tier town. Work will begin early in the new year. The company now holds leases on the Loomis and Amusu theatres in the same town.

Completed plans for the new State Theatre in Elmira have been placed in the hands of Charles Sterling, superintendent of buildings. Bids will be called for in a few days. Several changes which were made in the original plans have necessitated revision and resubmission. As now worked out the plans are considered suitable to meet requirements for a larger theatre than was at first planned. The architect is Leon H. Lempert of Rochester, who designed the Lafayette Square in Buffalo.

Plans are going ahead in fine shape for the big Movie Ball to be staged in Elmwood Music Hall by the members of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., on the evening of January 29. A large orchestra has been engaged and Chairman James Wallingford has arranged to have the hall gorgeously decorated.

Charlie Hayman, owner of the Strand and Cataract theatres in Niagara Falls, reports much interest in his popularity contest, the two winners of which will have a free trip to the fillum studios on the West Coast.

A new theatre is being built in East Aurora, N. Y. Elbert Hubbard, 2nd, son of the late Elbert Hubbard who founded the Roycrofters, is interested in the house. It will be on the site of the old Fillmore Theatre.

M. Shea believes that he will be ready to announce the successful bidders on his new house in a few weeks.

Walter Dion has been appointed inspector for the Film Board of Trade of Buffalo in its campaign to end film mutilation. Mr. Dion will visit the theatres in the territory and look over booths, projection equipment, etc. He is a professional projectionist of many years' experience.

John Stevens has resigned as assistant district manager for the Schine Theatrical Corporation in Western New York. Mr. Stevens is in Buffalo seeking a new connection.

Sidney C. Allen is planning a community theatre in Medina, N. Y., to cost $70,000. Sid now operates the Allen and Scenic theatres in Medina. He is one of the best known exhibitors in this neck of the timber.

Patrons arriving for the show at the Andrews Theatre in Salamanca, N. Y., the other night thought they were caught in a sudden storm, but it was just the water bursting through from the floor over the lobby following the breaking of the sprinkler system in the house. Some of the folks received a young sprinkling.

Yeggs breaking into the Stone Opera House in Binghamton, N. Y., the other night "souped" the safe and got away with a fat haul of 1,500 iron men. Dave Cohen, one of the owners of the house, believes the strong box crackers planned their stuff well in advance.

Maine

The Graphic Circuit Company of Maine, directed by Messrs. Epstern and Kurson, is seeking to lease Grange Hall in Skowhegan and present pictures there. The Graphic company has sixteen film theatres. For more than seven years the St. Ledger-Smith Company has had a monopoly by vote of the town, having the lease of the Opera House for pictures.

Cincinnati

The play-reviewing committee of the Cincinnati Better Pictures Council recommended and publicly endorsed the following pictures, all of which were shown in local first-run houses recently: "North of 36," "Forbidden Paradise," "The Gaiety Girl," "The Tenth Woman" and "The Siren of Seville."

Burglars broke into the offices of the Lincoln Theatre, Cincinnati, and although they tampered with the safe they were unable to open it. Desks and the operator's booth were broken into, but the only thing missing was an overcoat.

The Robbins Brothers, who own the Robbins Theatre at Warren, Ohio, have taken over the Dome Theatre at Youngstown. According to report, Warner Brothers, who originally hail from Youngstown, will be associated with the Robbins boys in the management of the house.

The Hyman interests in Huntington, W. Va., who up to the past year had the monopoly on the picture business in that city, are meeting with some strenuous opposition. A competitive house was built there about a year ago and now another, the Liberty, is about to open. The date of opening and the manager have not as yet been announced.

When Niles, Ohio, had a K. K. K. riot a few days ago all the theatres in the city closed for four days. This was not compulsory in so far as any official orders were concerned but was voluntary on the part of the respective managers, who figured that trouble could be avoided by keeping their theatres dark.

Manager John A. Schwalm of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is playing a special engagement of Bell's Hawaiians in addition to his regular program. This organization has played here quite a few times previously.

The Palace Theatre, Hamilton, under supervision of Managing Director Fred S. Meyer, recently gave a morning matinee of "North of 36" especially for children, at which the admission price was fixed at 10 cents.

Minnesota

Finkelstein & Ruben invaded Southern Minnesota this week when they added the State at Austin to their growing chain of picture houses. The purchase was made from W. D. Ousley, and J. F. Cubberly represented the Twin City firm in the negotiations.

Ed Chase, Fertile, Minn., exhibitor, will give Gary its first picture theatre. He has rented a store building at Gary and will show there three nights a week.

Sale of the Merrill Theatre at Flaxton, N. D., to L. E. Piercy was announced this week. The house was owned by M. C. Merrill.

A smallpox epidemic here has not affected theatre business seriously because health authorities have insisted on city-wide vaccination and the people have responded. Those vaccinated are still going to theatres and other public places.

A sneak thief obtained $10 from the desk of E. L. Peterson, Crystal Theatre, Renville, Minn., last Sunday.

Stern & Meyers Open Their New Marquette in Chicago

Stern & Meyers, operating the Marquette Theatre on West 63rd street, Chicago, opened their new Highway Theatre at 63rd and Western avenue last week to good business. The new house, seating 1,200, represents an outlay of $500,000 and is modern in every way. The equipment is the best to be had and a special feature has been made of projection, using low intensity lamps of 18 amperes, which gives a soft projection. The lobby of the house is done in gold and old rose and the foyer is tapestry lined. A clever scheme of ventilation is used to purify the air. While a stage and orchestra pit have been installed, for the present the Kimball double-touch organ will supply the music. Raymond Schafer has been appointed house manager. The opening attraction was "Welcome Stranger."

The new Midwest Circuit theatre at Joliet, Ill., is rapidly nearing completion and it is expected that the house will open in the late spring. It will seat 2,000.

Peter Pinkelman and Albert Cory have incorporated the Washington Square Theatre Company at Quincy, Ill., with a capital of $225,000 to operate the new Washington Square Theatre recently opened in that city. Negotiations are now in progress to lease the house to St. Louis interests and Joseph Desberger is in Quincy looking over the property for the interested parties.

Balaban & Katz in large newspaper copy say that they are the originators of the present specialized form of presentation with moving pictures in this territory, and eight years ago when they started it they made movie history. Where it formerly took only one or two men to make up a program now it requires a great staff of specialists to turn out the necessary programs. They say their producing organization is the largest in the theatrical world.

Harry Bobin and Hyman, Abraham, Aaron and Meyer Saperstein have organized the Garfield Amusement Corporation to own and operate the Garfield Theatre on West Madison street. This is the house they took over from Charley Schaefer recently.

Brown & Wirth of Wyoming, Ill., have opened the Palace Theatre. This takes the place of the Lyceum which was closed last July. Wyoming now has two picture theatres.

E. Eggleston of Peoria purchased the theatre at Toulon, Ill., from J. Kelley of that city and took possession last month.

Alger & Ramsey, whose purchase of Peck's Theatre at La Salle was recently announced, took over the house on December 1. This will extend their string to five theatres, the others being at Fairbury, Paxton, Urbana and Rantoul.

Frank Schaefer of the Crystal Theatre, plans to leave shortly for a seven weeks' vacation in Florida. He will be accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Jack Miller, business manager of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, received notice from the health department that twenty more theatres would be closed immediately unless they conformed to the ordinance. Mr. Miller notified the theatre owners to get busy and make the changes. The matter was also taken up at the meeting of the association last Friday and the health commissioner was commended for his efforts to clean up the houses.

Harry Yost is the new manager of the Olympic Theatre at Randolph and Clark streets. Mr. Yost was formerly with Fox and is well known in movie circles.

J. L. McCurdy, for the past few weeks handling publicity for "The Iron Horse" at the Woods Theatre, has returned to the Randolph Theatre as managing director after being away from the house since last spring. He succeeded Jean Belasco, who came here from Kansas City. The boys in the trade all extend their good wishes to Mac.

The ushers of the McVickers Theatre are engaged in a "Thank You" contest for a prize worth having. Any patron writing a letter to the management praising the boy, or speaking to the floor captain, gives the lad 100 points. As the boys all have neat badges with their names typed on, it is an easy matter to give the usher credit for his politeness.

E. H. Uhlhorn, owner of the Dickie and Curtis theatres at Downers Grove, is passing out the cigars as the stork brought a baby girl. Both mother and child are doing right well, the proud father tells the Film Row.

Will Herschberg, owner of the Schindler, Rainbow and Cameo theatres, has returned from a ten-day vacation to French Lick and is hustling after business these days.

Lem Martin has bought the equipment of the Scenic Theatre at Red Oak, Iowa, and will install it in a movie house he will open at Villisca.

McVickers Theatre had a big week the last seven days of November, as "North of 36" and the third dimension picture packed the house for the week.

Hopp's Fine Record

Joseph Hopp, veteran show and picture theatre man, assumed charge of the membership drive for the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners the early part of August.

During the three months just ended his work has resulted in trebling the Illinois League membership.

It is the general opinion in movie circles here that another three months will bring together in one body over 75 per cent. of Northern Illinois exhibitors.

Other states should emulate the Illinois example.

Lester Norris will build a theatre building and business block at St. Charles, Ill. Work has started.

The Lubliner & Trinz site for the new theatre at Lawrence and Campbell avenue, 58 by 125 feet, has been conveyed from H. Goldstein and L. Sellkowitz to L. Hula for an indicated $25,000. S. H. Rosenthal looked after the legal details of the transfer.

A 500-seat theatre is rapidly nearing completion in the east end of the Art Institute on Michigan avenue, which will be used for both pictures and legitimate attractions.

Raritan, Ill., with a population of 220, supports a picture theatre. Manager Edgar Churchill reports a good business.

The Roosevelt Theatre opened with "The Sainted Devil" last week and played to capacity.

Earl Johnson, popular Berwyn theatre man, who runs the Auditorium Theatre, installed a new Robert Morton organ, and to fittingly dedicate it last Monday night gave a venison steak dinner to 67 film salesmen and friends. The dedication ceremonies were a complete success. Everyone had a good time and voted Earl a first-rate host.

The Princess Theatre at Rock Island has been reopened by James A. Merrill.

Joseph Hopp, managing director of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, gives out the following list of exhibitors who joined the state organization last week: Wolf & Weber, Dreamland Theatre, Galena; J. E. Hartsough, Warren Theatre, Warren; Thomas J. Watson, Superba Theatre, Freeport; Harry Perceny, Polo Theatre, Polo; E. B. Ramsey, Central Theatre, Fairbury; E. B. Ramsey, Park Theatre, La Salle; E. E. Alger, Colonial Theatre, Urbana and Alger & Ramsey, Majestic Theatre, Paxton.

George Michaels, formerly of Plano, has negotiated the purchase of Stewart Reid's theatre at Galva.

Robbers who evidently remained in the theatre after the show cracked the safe of the Pershing Theatre, of which Stanley Lubliner is manager, and escaped with the Saturday and Sunday receipts of $2,000. The robbery was discovered at 2, a. m., when the janitor, Fred Ollrich, entered the auditorium to clean up. He found that the combination of the safe had been knocked off and the door forced open. A sledge hammer lay on the floor beside the safe.

The new picture theatre now going up at LaGrange, Ill., a suburb about twenty-eight miles west of Chicago, will be under the management of S. J. Gregory. The house is expected to open in about six months with a policy of pictures and vaudeville. It will seat 1,800 and a fine Bartola organ will be installed. Another Gregory house will soon be under way at Hammond, as a site has been secured on Homan avenue in that city, just south of the Partheon, the plans call for a 3,500-seat movie house. Other theatre houses will be added to the Gregory circuit in the suburban territory in the near future. Mr. Gregory and Ted Schlanger just returned from New York.

Milwaukee Experiences Week of Hot Theatre Competition

Gilda Gray. That name, blazoned forth in her home town for the first time since she became America's shimmy queen, proved so great an attraction at the Alhambra, downtown Milwaukee movie house, that every record established at the theatre in the last twenty years was shattered and the services of a cordon of half a dozen policemen were required at virtually every performance during the week beginning November 29. She has been retained for a second week.

Business estimated at $20,000 was the total for the week, in the face of the strongest competition of the season, including Baby Peggy in person and numerous outside attractions, but the only reason the Alhambra figure didn't reach $30,000 or even better is because the capacity of the house was too limited to hold the throngs that clamored for admission.

For the first time in the history of the showhouse—and its history is one of the oldest in the city—money was refunded to patrons unable to gain entrance. This occurred not once but every day upon which the shimmy queen appeared with her Petite Revue of six in conjunction with the showing of the film, "The Narrow Street." Seeking a chance to view the Milwaukee girl on her triumphal return to the city where she had danced a few years before as an obscure cabaret entertainer, hundreds rushed to the house as early as 5 p. m. each day, delaying their supper in an effort to get a seat before the greatest rush later in the evening.

Overflow crowds, disappointed at being unable to see Gilda, swarmed to other theatres and the result was the greatest week in downtown houses of the present season.

Anticipating Gilda's arrival, every downtown manager had fortified himself with the highest type of show obtainable. The combination of wonderful attractions at their own houses and inability to accommodate the unusual throngs at the Alhambra resulted in above average business generally instead of the slump that other exhibitors had feared.

Without a doubt the greatest competitor for Leo Landau's Alhambra was Baby Peggy, appearing in person in conjunction with her film, "Captain January," at Saxe's Strand. The Strand, managed by Stan Brown, is considerably smaller than the Alhambra, having approximately 1,200 seats as compared to an estimated 3,000 at the latter, but it did wonders during the entire week, the crowds being jammed to the doors for every evening show and filling the house during matinees in excellent fashion.

Gilda's success at the Alhambra resulted in that theatre taking the lead for the city for the first time since March, when the $2,000,000 Wisconsin was completed for the Saxe interests.

The Wisconsin, itself boasting a super bill in Barbara LaMarr's "Sandra" and its usual high-class stage presentation, drew well but broke no records like its next door neighbor, the Strand, or the Alhambra. However, the Wisconsin, with its 3,500 seats, is the largest house in the city and to break records there is not so easily accomplished after some of the wonderful weeks it has experienced.

As for the Palace Orpheum, attendance on the first two days of the week, Saturday and Sunday, was up to the usual high standard, but a slight drop was noted Monday, especially at the matinee. The headliners there were Marjorie Rambeau and Leo Carillo.

Competition during the week was not limited to permanent shows. On the second night of Gilda Gray's engagement J. Warren Kerrigan appeared at the Arcadia ballroom, while on other nights of the week Karsavina, famous Russian dancer, and Moriz Rosenthal, noted pianist, appeared at the Pabst. Karsavina pulled only a fair house, however.

The Garden, Landau's other downtown house, featured "The Snob" and did fairly well, while Ascher's Merrill drew fair crowds with Mary Philbin in "The Rose of Paris." John Freuler's Butterfly, second-run downtown house, took advantage of the general boom to show Harold Lloyd in "Girl Shy," which hung up an enviable mark in its first appearance at the Wisconsin.

Milwaukee's extreme north side boasts a new 1,000-seat picture house as a result of the opening on Thanksgiving Day of the $150,000 Hollywood, a theatre which brings to the outskirts the comforts and equipment of the downtown showhouses. The theatre, housed in a two-story building which also contains stores and apartments, is being operated by the Keystone Investment Company, in which Sam R. Pylet, O. L. Gellerup and A. E. Maas are interested. Mr. Pylet, a veteran in the motion picture business, is in active charge of the house as managing director.

Probably the most outstanding features of the theatre are the heating, ventilating and lighting systems. It is one of the few houses in this part of the country which is heated by the oil burner system, this innovation making for uniform distribution of heat and elimination of soot. The ventilating system, installed at a cost of more than $3,000, is of the washed air type, pure air being blown into the auditorium by huge fans as the foul air is drawn off by means of a suction fan.

Not a single light in the auditorium or on the stage is exposed to view, all of the 650 lamps being in coves. There is one large cove in the center of the ceiling, while the rest of the lights are distributed along the walls. The entire system on the stage and in the auditorium is operated by a series of buttons in the projection booth, by means of which changeable colors are obtained.

The exterior of the theatre is of red brick and of a modest design, with a well lighted canopy but no other electric sign. All of the seats in the auditorium are on one floor and are sectioned off by three aisles. They are equipped with leather cushions.

The projection room, installed under the direction of L. P. Langford of the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company, boasts two Motiograph De Luxe projection machines of the latest type, equipped with Morelite Reflector Arc lamps. There also is one Brenkert spotlight, as well as a Gilmore film cabinet. The room is 20 feet long and 11 feet wide. Its height is 8 feet.

The stage, while not exceptionally large, is equipped for presentations, a feature which Mr. Pylet has announced he will go in for as heavily as most downtown houses. The screen is of Gardiner velvet gold fibre.

Theatre men in the city, many of whom attended a pre-opening program at the house on Thanksgiving eve, are watching the theatre with keen interest in view of its peculiar location. Situated on the very edge of the city, it is at present in a sparsely settled neighborhood, but indications are that a few years will transform it into one of the busiest outskirt thoroughfares. To offset the disadvantage which may result from the fact that the neighborhood is not congested, theatre men point out that the house is the only one providing entertainment over a wide area and its patronage undoubtedly will draw heavily from Shorewood, exclusive Milwaukee suburb, which has no theatre of its own.

Repeated efforts have been made by exhibitors to invade Shorewood with a theatre, but these have been blocked because of an ordinance passed by the village. The Hollywood, however, is just a few minutes' ride by automobile from the fashionable suburb.

In addition to Shorewood patronage, the theatre also is expected to draw well from North Milwaukee, another of the city's heavily populated suburbs.

The policy of the house calls for a change of program Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday. Admission charges are 10 and 20 cents. In addition to high-class feature pictures, a diversified program will be presented consisting of selections by a six-piece orchestra, stage novelties and a short subject. For the opening the screen attraction was "The Silent Watcher." Other pictures booked for early showing include "Welcome Stranger," "The Lone Wolf," "Pagan Passions," "Madonna of the Streets," "Husbands and Lovers" and "Captain Blood."

The Keystone Investment Company during the early days of the motion picture controlled the Columbia Theatre at Walnut and Eleventh streets. Later it at one time had control of the Astor, the Murray and the Strand.

Skouras Brothers Planning $200,000 St. Louis Airdome

Skouras Brothers are having plans prepared by Preston J. Bradshaw, architect, for a $200,000 airdome and shop building to be erected on the site of the Lyric Skydome, Taylor avenue at Delmar boulevard. Entrance to the Airdome will be at the corner, with six shops on Delmar boulevard and five on Taylor avenue. Plans and specifications are being rushed so that construction can get under way within a few weeks. It is planned to have the structure ready in the spring. As is known, Skouras Brothers recently purchased the corner of Seventh and Locust as the site for a $4,000,000 theatre and office building. That theatre will be known as the Amb ssador.

John F. McDermott has purchased the southwest corner of Hodiamont and Gambleton avenues as a site for a theatre and office and store building. He purchased the ground from Mrs. Minnie Buckley through Alvin T. Dickens, real estate dealer. The lot measures 80 by 190 feet and the structure will be three stories high and of fireproof construction.

Practically all of the principal neighborhood theatres of St. Louis have already entered the city-wide contest to select a Queen of Love and Beauty to preside at the first annual mask ball to be given the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the St. Louis Film Board of Trade at Arcadia Dance Hall on the night of December 12. Under the plan each theatre will hold a special contest of its own for the purpose of selecting a girl to represent the theatre in the grand finale to be held at the ball. Popular applause will determine the final winner.

A remonstrance against the vacation of a strip of ground 24 feet wide and approximately 250 feet long at the southeast corner of Grand boulevard and Morgan street, which under a proposed city ordinance would be sold to the owners of the new St. Louis Theatre, now under construction, is being circulated by property owners in the immediate vicinity of the new theatre. The proposed widening of Morgan street east of Grand boulevard called for a 105-foot street at Grand boulevard. The awarding of the proposed strip to the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation, of which David Sommers is president and Sam Koplar vice-president, would have the effect of keeping Morgan street to 80 feet at Grand boulevard on both sides of that thoroughfare.

Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri Theatre, has formed an alliance with Santa Claus for the spreading of Good Cheer among the poor boys and girls of the city on Christmas Day. Santa, in co-operation with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, had just perfected plans for holding the twenty-fifth annual Christmas Festival for the poor of the city at St. Louis Coliseum on Christmas Day, when Stuart offered all boys and girls between the ages of 7 and 14 a big party at the Missouri Theatre on the morning after Christmas and to show "Peter Pan."

T. Vivitania, owner-manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Granite City, Ill., has had plans prepared for a new 1,500-seat theatre for that city. He also plans to conduct an airdome in conjunction with the new theatre.

J. W. Cotter has taken over the Fourth Street Theatre in Moberly, Mo.

L. L. Lewis of Walnut Ridge, Ark., has taken over the Palace Theatre, Covington, Ky.

Mrs. L. Brown has opened her new theatre in Brownsville, Tenn. The house accommodates 250 but will later be enlarged to take care of 750.

St. Louis' newest film combination can be seen talking it over most any day along Picture Row: Maurice Stahl and George Skouras of the Aubert and Chippewa theatres and Bessie Friedland and Joe Litvay of the Newstead and Ashland theatres.

Griffith's "America" will have its premiere St. Louis showing at the Grand Central, Capitol and West End Lyric theatres early in January.

Joe Desberger has taken over the Washington Square Theatre, Quincy, Ill., under a leasing arrangement with Pinkelman & Cory. Joe has had plenty of experience in all branches of the film and theatrical business and should put the big Quincy house over with a bang. Until recently he was manager of the Delmonte Theatre in St. Louis. Prior to that he managed several St. Louis exchanges. He has also had experience as an actor.

Earl A. Fort, well known Moberly, Mo., exhibitor, died during the past week. He had been sick but a short time. He operated the Rialto.

John Pratt of Fulton, Mo., passed through St. Louis en route home from Indianapolis, where he attended the funeral of his brother-in-law.

Billy Sohm is now the sole owner of the Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill. During the past week he purchased the interest of his partners, H. Nelson of the Star Theatre, Quincy, and John Swingler of St. Louis, Mo.

Michigan

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan held their first quarterly dinner at the Hotel Wolverine on Wednesday, December 3, and the guest of honor and principal speaker of the occasion was Mayor John Smith, recently elected. About 150 exhibitors gathered around the table and heard Mayor Smith state that he was back of the industry and against censorship. These meetings are to be held once every four months during the year and are to take place on the dates of regular monthly directors' sessions.

Henry S. Koppin is one of Detroit's busiest theatre builders. He has announced two new houses, one on Fenkell avenue between Petoskey and Quincy avenues and the other on Grand River avenue between Griggs and Birwood avenues. The latter house is in the center of a thickly populated district that has no amusement center.

Edward Reeves of Paw Paw has opened his new theatre in that city, the first attraction being "The Hottentot." It seats about 400 and is beautifully furnished.

The Courtesy Theatre on Dix avenue is in new hands and the new owners plan to expend about $50,000 in alterations, repairs and redecorations in making the house one of the prettiest on Detroit's west side.

Vernon Locey, who operates the Temple Theatre at Howell, is getting out each week a unique house organ called "Timely Topics." It is filled with interesting comment on attractions to play the Temple and is sent to patrons by mail free of charge. It carries a substantial amount of merchant advertising.

Edward C. Beatty, general manager of the W. S. Butterfield Circuit, is in New York and other eastern cities on a two weeks' business and pleasure trip.

The John H. Kunsky Theatres have decided to provide house programs for their patrons in the Adams, Capitol and Madison theatres. They have made arrangements for a 20-page program carrying advertising, giving the casts and other information on all current pictures. Howard O. Pierce, advertising director for the Kunsky theatres, is in charge of the feature.

Iowa

Mrs. Dilsaver is the new owner of the picture theatre at Garden Grove, Ia.

R. V. Evans and H. H. Prime have bought the Lyric Theatre at Boone, Ia.

Spokane Critic Replies

This department recently criticized a Spokane, Wash., dramatic critic for caustic reviews of motion pictures. Now we have received a letter from Margaret Bran, motion picture editor of the Spokesman-Review, in which she assumes that the article was aimed at her, denies that she is a "hydra-headed critic" and presents evidence to show that during September and October she criticized "seventeen of the twenty-six features exhibited at the three complaining theatres favorably." Comparing the reception of reviews by exhibitors and the public, she says: "An exhibitor invariably agrees with us when we pronounce his picture a good one; the public often does not." We wonder whether this is real or unconscious humor.

"Classmates" Breaks Records at San Francisco's Warfield

All records for theatre attendance in San Francisco were broken by the Warfield Theatre during the week of November 22, when a total of 86,674 persons visited this house in seven playing days, the attraction being Richard Barthelmess in "Classmates" and the 30th Infantry Band from the San Francisco Presidio. This theatre seats 2,668 and the normal program calls for five shows on Saturday and Sunday and four on other days. During this particular week there was the Thanksgiving holiday, giving it three days of five shows and four days of four shows, which figures out a possible perfect attendance of 82,708 persons. In reality, this theatre played to better than 100 per cent. attendance, for the figures show that in all thirty-one performances the theatre played to 3,966 more people than the house would hold with all seats filled at each de luxe performance.

Three years ago, when "The Four Horsemen" broke all records at the Curran Theatre by playing to 98,142 people, the engagement was stretched over a period of seven weeks during which ninety-eight performance were given in a house seating 1,700. A perfect attendance would have been 166,000, yet this run, registering a little more than 50 per cent. perfect, was considered a record. A comparison of the engagements brings to light the fact that there has been a great increase in the number of patrons in recent years and that theatres like the Warfield are today handling enormous crowds. Ideal weather conditions prevailed during the recent engagement and the holiday near the end of the week gave an added spurt of patronage. More than 3,000 children attended the show, most of these at the morning and noontime matinees.

Robert A. McNeil, president of the Golden State Theatre & Realty Corporation, San Francisco, recently announced the purchase of a site for a $150,000 picture house in the Crocker Amazon tract. Associated with him in the deal are W. G. Bailey, Mrs. Amelia Baines and the Excelsior Amusement Company, which conducts the Excelsior Theatre at Mission street and Ocean avenue. The property recently purchased is at Mission and Rolph streets and comprises a lot 75 by 125 feet in size. Plans are being drawn by Architect Mark T. Jorgensen for a theatre seating 1,000. The new house will be known as the Crocker Amazon Theatre and will be managed by William Moore.

One of the largest organs on the Pacific Coast is being installed in the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco and will be ready for use about the first of the year.

Several officials of West Coast Theatres, Inc., including M. Gore, Sol Lesser and Harry Arthur, paid the San Francisco office a visit recently and conferred with A. M. Bowles, general manager of the Northern California division.

Eugene L. Perry, for some time with the Greenfield Theatres, San Francisco, has been made manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal., to be opened shortly by Ackerman & Harris.

R. K. Covington, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Fresno, Cal., was a visitor at San Francisco the first of December to arrange film bookings. This house, owned by M. L. Markowitz, was recently remodeled and refurnished. Four changes of program are made each week.

The U. C. Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., has been closed for remodeling, redecorating and refurnishing and will open again December 20. The work will cost in the neighborhood of $75,000. Frank C. Burhans, recently appointed manager, has charge of the Berkeley Theatre, also operated under the direction of West Coast Theatres.

The engagement of Herbert Harris, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Harris of San Francisco, and Miss Lottie Loverich, daughter of Samuel Loverich, has been announced. Mr. Harris formerly operated the Century Theatre at Oakland and is now engaged in the amusement business in that city.

Film friends of A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., Northern California Division, recently tendered him a surprise party on the occasion of his tenth wedding anniversary.

Seattle

L. R. Stradley, who is building the Cheerio Theatre on Queen Anne Hill, Seattle, and W. L. Steel, owner of the Queen Anne Theatre, have consolidated and will operate as the S. & S. Amusement Company. Mr. Steel plans a new house on the Egyptian type, ground for which will be broken shortly. This will give three houses on Queen Anne. Two will be near each other, and the third about ten blocks removed in the high school district. Stradley's house is progressing nicely and has its probable opening date set for January 15. This company plans other houses in different locations. The Cheerio will be the largest individual community theatre in Seattle, seating over 700.

At an election of officers for the newly elected Arbitration Board H. A. Black, manager of Vitagraph, was named president. H. W. Bruen of the Ridgemont and Grey Goose theatres was re-elected treasurer.

Fred Walton is back from California and he looks like a million dollars. Among other activities, he visited picture theatres in San Francisco and Los Angeles, absorbing ideas for the Bellingham Theatres Company's new house which will be started shortly after the first of the year.

The Mission Theatre, Tacoma, in the South Yakima avenue district, has again changed hands. It was originally owned by Mr. Lyons. A. K. Boussad, recently arrived from Kansas City, Mo., where he was owner of the World in Motion Theatre, is the new owner, having purchased the house from Mr. Berglund. Mr. Boussad plans to remodel the front of his house.

Mrs. Lyons, who owns the Lyric Theatre in suburban Tacoma, has taken a woman partner.

Louis Goldsmith of the Society Theatre, Seattle, has returned from a trip to California. Louis drove down with Mr. Aaronson of Western Poster County and took his little 6-year-old daughter with him. The youngster proved to be "not a good sailor." Louis thinks it is Aaronson's car, and Aaronson doesn't say what he thinks!

Sam Mendelssohn, veteran film man, who has been associated with Frank Wade in the operation of the Victory Theatre, Anacortes, Wash., has resigned. Frank will manage the house alone.

Ground has been broken for E. G. (Dad) Abbott's new house in Sedro Woolley, Wash.

"Elimination of petty jealousy and the building up of a higher standard of moving picture entertainment" is the platform announced by John Hamrick, newly elected president of the M. P. T. O. of Washington. Mr. Hamrick is well known for his sincere efforts and courageous stand on principles which he believes to be right. He will make an able leader.

The Grand Theatre, Bellingham, is cleaning up on "Abraham Lincoln" with a fast campaign that has almost stolen the entire newspaper. H. C. Raleigh, Washington's exploitation ace, has recently joined Manager Fred Sliter's First National exchange in Seattle, and he has been in Bellingham conducting the campaign. The recently established "Sea Hawk" records have been splintered.

Friends in Need

C. A. Thompson, Pomeroy, Wash., theatre man, had friends when he needed them. He has been seriously ill from pernicious anaemia at a Walla Walla hospital. Twenty-eight friends volunteered their services for blood transfusions to save his life but only two out of the number were found to have blood that would blend with that of the sick man. These two at different times underwent the operation with such splendid results that Thompson's condition improved so rapidly it is thought a third transfusion will be unnecessary. He still has a waiting list of twenty-six friends ready to serve him should this become necessary.

Pittsburgh Suburban Houses Printing Gossipy Programs

Charles E. Smith, publicity director for Sam Haimovitz, proprietor of theatres in New Kensington and Braddock, is one of the latest to come out with a weekly house program, called "Movie Gossip," and which has met with instant popularity. Page size is 9x 12 inches and there are eight pages, plus cover. "Movie Gossip" contains interesting news and comments on the coming shows, pictures of the stars and scenes from film productions coming to the various theatres, as well as local news items. The advertising pays the printing bill and the advertisers feel that they are getting more than their money's worth because of the interest the people take in news about their picture entertainment.

The Columbia Theatre at Sharon recently celebrated a second anniversary week and added vaudeville acts to the regular film bill to help celebrate the event. The house was beautifully decorated and lady patrons were presented with flowers for souvenirs. J. C. Fisher manages the house.

George J. Reister will manage Harry Davis' newly acquired Schenley Theatre in the Oakland district, Pittsburgh. He formerly managed the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh, and more recently was connected with the Victoria Theatre, Altoona, in a similar capacity.

J. L. Bush of the Grand Theatre, Grafton, W. Va., has purchased a lot 40x139 feet adjoining the Grand in the heart of the business section, on which he will erect a theatre seating 900. The price was $20,000 and the new building will cost $100,000. Work will be commenced in the early spring.

George A. Huff expects to open his new theatre at Lock Haven about February 1. The new house will seat 500 and probably be named the Huff.

John Perino, owner of the Olympic at Arnold, has been on the sick list for the past two weeks but has now fully recovered.

John Dobbs of the Rialto Theatre, Wilson, is back on the job after a short hunting trip.

Pete Alderman, manager of the Centre Square Theatre, evidently is prospering. He has just acquired a classy Cleveland sedan.

C. M. McCloskey, who is remodeling his Strand Theatre at Morgantown, reports that the house will be ready for reopening about the first of the year.

Herbert Shaw, recently appointed manager of the Metropolitan Theatre at Morgantown, W. Va., was a recent Film Row visitor.

Lewis V. Hepinger, who operates the new Orpheum Theatre at Clarion, buried his brother at Bradford last week.

C. B. Pascoe, well known Somerset exhibitor, made a trip to Film Row the past week. He didn't come in his airplane, however, saying that that mode of travel is far more interesting in summer than in winter.

Congratulations are due Carl Maple on the second number of his "Barney's Blue Book," just off the press. This Point Marion exhibitor already finds the benefit of this method of publicity for his Barney's Theatre of that place, and his patrons are looking forward to the next issue of the newsy sheet.

M. Browar, owner of the Kenyon Theatre on the North Side, Pittsburgh, which has just been reopened after having undergone extensive alterations, used two columns, ten inches, in the Sunday Press on November 30 to say "Now Open."

Lewis V. Hepinger of the Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, is getting ready to issue a weekly movie paper in the interests of his house, at the suggestion of and with the help of Wm. N. Robson, exploitation representative for the local Paramount exchange.

Los Angeles

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California will hold a noonday banquet in the Palm Room of the Biltmore next week in honor of Louis Sagal, national treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, it was announced by Glen Harper, secretary of the local organization. All exhibitors in this vicinity have been invited to attend the gathering and meet Mr. Sagal, who is expected to give some interesting facts regarding the theatre owner as a factor in the industry. Entertainment will be provided by Hal Horne, managing director of the Criterion Theatre, and Harry Carroll and Loew's State Theatre.

Excavation will start immediately for a class A theatre building on Vermont avenue just south of Beverly boulevard, it is announced by the Chotiner Theatres, Inc., the organization which will erect the new amusement house. The theatre will be equipped with a stage for a vaudeville program in addition to first-run pictures. The building will be two stories high, with stores below and offices above.

Canada

Joseph M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, is elated over the fact that he has discovered a real art treasure, having unknowingly picked up a valuable painting right in Ottawa. Mr. Franklin bought an attractive oil painting at a private sale in the Canadian Capital a few days ago, securing it "for a song." He was struck by the rare beauty of the picture and eventually searched through a number of books of reference at the Carnegie Library in the hope of finding out something about the artist. Mr. Franklin was rewarded by learning that his purchase was a work of art, companion picture to a group which is owned by prominent and wealthy people of New York and Philadelphia.

The painting is "Sampling," by Erskine Nicol, a member of the Royal Academy and a famous Scottish artist. This picture was done in 1861 and paintings of the same year are owned by Mrs. A. T. Stewart of New York and W. H. Vanderbilt of New York. Nicol paintings are also owned by J. W. Bates of Philadelphia and by the Corcoran Gallery of Washington, D. C.

In the reorganization of the estate of the late Harry Brouse of Ottawa, the Alexandra Hotel, Ottawa, one of the large properties held by the theatre man, has been incorporated as a company under the laws of Ontario, with Finley McRae as hotel manager. Mr. McRae, who was formerly with Ernest Shipman and other directors, in a son-in-law of the late Mr. Brouse. Mr. Brouse was a director of Associated First National and owned the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa.

The unusual step has been taken by Manager Harry Dahn of the Regent Theatre, Toronto to close the Regent temporarily during the Christmas shopping season so that it can be reopened Christmas Day with a special engagement of "The Ten Commandments," a feature that had previously been presented as a road show in Toronto. The Regent closed December 1. It had presented only three features during the three fall months, th policy of the house being to give special productions extended runs at $1 top prices twice daily, with extensive prologues and other units. "The Sea Hawk" had a run of seven weeks and this was followed by "Monsieur Beaucaire" and "Secrets."

Indiana

A new picture theatre will be erected soon in Ft. Wayne, if negotiations which have been under way the last few days are carried out. The theatre will be located on Wayne street, just east of Calhoun, and will seat from 2,000 to 2,500. Although real estate men involved in the transactions have refused to discuss the matter in detail, it is reported that Geiger Brothers of Chicago, a theatre controlling organization, is back of the project. No estimates as to the cost of the building were obtainable but it was said the leases under negotiation involve a total of more than $30,000 a year.

Maurice Fox, manager of the American Theatre, Terre Haute, was in Indianapolis this week making final arrangements for the showing of the "Famous Forty" group of Paramount pictures at the American.

The showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum Theatre in Gary a few days ago was vigorously opposed by the City Inter-Racial Committee and the City Civic Propaganda Association.

The Liberty Theatre, Terre Haute, will be closed during the week of December 14, according to Ross Garver, manager of the Wabash Theatre Corporation, which operates the theatre. After being thoroughly remodeled and redecorated it will be reopened Christmas week, beginning Sunday, December 21. A new screen and other equipment will be installed.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

Associated Exhibitors

(Includes Selznick)

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY. (7 reels). Star cast. Played a week to good business. Cut terribly by censors. Audience appeal fine. All classes, city of 40,000. Admission 35-25. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY. (7 reels). Star cast. A picture that will fill your seats and will please about eighty per cent. Tone all right. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Residential class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

PRINCE OF A KING. Star, Dinky Dean. Not a bad little program picture. Would be very suitable for children's holiday matinee. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WOMAN TO WOMAN. (6,994 feet). Star, Betty Compson. If you want to give them a real "leg show" slip them this. Cecil De Mille outdone for elaborate scenes. But it's pretty "leggy." Tone doubtful. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, no one walked out. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

F. B. O.

BY DIVINE RIGHT. Star cast. Three days to very poor business. Weak audience appeal. General class, city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Just what everyone else says this is. A hummer; boost it for everything that you have as it will please. Tone good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal good. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FIGHTING SAP. (5,138 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Mighty good western but below the average Fred Thomson western. Too much hokum. Tone good. Audience appeal eighty per cent. All classes, city of 210,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7,002 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. They sure are liked here. Hope I get some more pictures they are in. Tom sure is good; he makes 'em laugh. This is a good comedy drama. Draws well; broke box office records in my four nights' playing. Admission 15-30; should have raised the admission but didn't. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Played Armistice Day free show for American Legion. Had full house for four shows. Everyone pleased. Silver King, the horse, is wonderful. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Andience appeal one hundred per cent. Business and farming class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

HIS FORGOTTEN WIFE. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Three days to good business. Picture liked. Audience appeal good. General class, city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. A very good comedy drama. Will go good especially in the smaller and medium sized towns. Tone all right. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Residential class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

ITCHING PALMS. Star cast. This will get by, but failed to make me any money, as the title does not draw. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal not much. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LIGHTS OUT. (6,938 feet). Star cast. Good mystery story, with lots of action. Pleased ninety per cent. Good condition and fine photography. Audience appeal good. Sunday, yes. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MESSALINA. (8,473 feet). Star cast. Very spectacular and appropriate of the old Roman days. Eight reels much too long and found it hard to sustain audience interest after the fifth reel. There is very attractive advertising matter on this and a whale of a trailer. Run it as a good program picture but do not advance prices. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal sixty-five per cent. Residential class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. A very good action picture. Will please most neighboring or suburban theatre trade. A little too much war stuff. This is old. Most audiences want action and comedy in this kind of a picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

STEPPING FAST. Star, Richard Talmadge. Quite good. Talmadge very good and draws well. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

THUNDERING HOOFS. Star, Fred Thomson. Good, but not his best. As a western star Thomson may have an equal but no superior. The horse, Silver King, adds materially to the production. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal very good. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

VANITY'S PRICE. (4,124 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. High class production; settings and costumes great. Should take well in most places, but will not make so much of a hit in the smaller towns. Seventy-five per cent of my audience liked it. Tone all right. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Residential class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

WOMAN WHO SINNED. (6,500 feet). Star, Mae Busch. This picture has a wonderful appeal to the women; buy it and boost it. It will make you money. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

First National

BOY OF MINE. (7 reels). Star, Ben Alexander. Here's a picture that has everything and should appeal to everyone. Cast typical, and really a wonderful picture. Much better than "Penrod and Sam." Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (240 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Here's one that is good, although old. Acting of Lewis Stone very good. Story will please everyone. Will go over anywhere, although a program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A very interesting story of the Texas oil fields, with Sills doing a fine bit of acting. Excellent. Boost it, boys. It will stand it.

Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal excellent. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GOLD FISH. (7,145 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Ran with election returns, so can't judge. Some said "silly" and I guess that covers it. My last one of hers. Tone fair. Probably suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

HUNTRESS. (6,236 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This picture is a little old but good program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Mixed class, town of 2,714. Admission 10-25-40. L. S. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

MAN OF ACTION. (5 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. A good comedy drama. Pleased better than his previous efforts, except "Hottentot." Has some clever comedy in it, although very light stuff. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Town and counytr class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (240 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

MAN OF ACTION. (5 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. A good comedy drama that ought to please any audience. Douglas MacLean is not known here. Pleased the few who saw it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

MARRIAGE CHEAT. (7 reels). Star, Leatrice Joy. Not as good as I expected it would be. Just about passable. It seems to drag terribly in spots. Sea storm scenes very good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. (6,137 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Constance Talmadge in a different role. Not so good. Poorest picture I ever saw her in, though she is good in any kind of picture. Tone good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

RIVER'S END. Star, Lewis Stone. A good picture. It is the northern type of picture that takes good in most any theatre. Lewis Stone is well liked here. Tone okay. Audience appeal fine. Farming class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. We played this picture to an enjoyable audience nine days at raised admission. This picture is without a doubt the greatest production ever produced from box office and from the audience standpoint. It absolutely pleased one hundred per cent. Regardless of strong opposition, we did more than hold our own. By all means every exhibitor should buy, book and play this wonderful production. It will not only make money for you but will add prestige to your house. J. O. Shotseth, Princess Theatre, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Since the Arkansas M. P. T. O. has a high enough opinion of Eli Whitney Collins to continue him as their president, Straight From the Shoulder cannot help but appreciate the weight of his opinion on any subject.

Mr. Collins has always been most kind in sending reports and also in giving his ideas on subjects of exhibitor interest.

You will welcome his ideas, this week, on Friend Martin's Trailer query.

And I will welcome YOUR opinion on that or any other exhibitor subject.

VAN.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. This is the greatest picture of its kind ever produced. Adapted from the novel by Sabatini. Directed by Frank Lloyd, with a super cast, makes it the biggest bet of the year, outside of "The Covered Wagon." The picture never drags like most costume plays. While this may be a clean-up in first-class audiences, it may be a decided flop for some exhibitors. Would not recommend all exhibitors to jump at the conclusion that it is a "world beater," for it is not. Only in the high-class audiences would it be advisable to raise admission prices. Cast includes Enid Bennett, Lloyd Hughes and Wallace Beery. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal good. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. The work of Norma Talmadge in this production is nothing short of marvelous. I think this is the best she has done since "Smilin' Through." A great picture for high-class audiences. Tone excellent. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal good. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This picture got them in for me on the drawing power of the star. The majority liked it very much, others thought it fair. It's a really wonderful picture and the star's splendid acting is recognized as the most outstanding feature of the picture. Business good. All classes, city of 91,000. Admission 40-50. Guy A. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 feet). Jacksonville, Florida.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Here's really a wonderful picture, although it is old. The acting and story fine. Everyone commented on same, although didn't bring any unusually large business. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (240 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. A very good picture but one reel too long. The cattle get too big a showing. Needs correct music to put it over. Won't please young folks and "flappers"; for "fans" with brains. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal okay. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WOMAN ON THE JURY. (7,331 feet). Star cast. This was a pippin. Cast big, story big, and audience declared it one of the best. Ran it as a special and it appealed to everybody. Tone good. Sunday, no. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Fox

AGAINST ALL ODDS. (4,980 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Three days to average business. Good picture. Good audience appeal. General class, city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

ARIZONA EXPRESS. (6,516 feet). Star cast. As usual, this one has the fast action, good story and well balanced cast. Our patrons went out talking about this one. Story of action, thrills and suspense that will get the business and bring them back for more. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre 475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

CAMEO KIRBY. (6,921 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A good picture of the Mississippi River days. John Gilbert as Cameo Kirby, a Mississippi River gambler, certainly is fine in this one. Tone very fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

HELL'S HOLE. (6 reels). Star, Buck Jones. A mighty good, thrilling melodrama with a surprise ending. Good comments. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Business and farming class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good picture but not up to the Mix standard. Not enough western in it for Mix, but our town likes Mix in anything. The little short fellow with Tom in this one was a knockout. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

PLUNDERER. (5,812 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Here is an excellent picture. Fox pictures have the action that our audiences want. Here is a good story, a well acted picture, with a good cast, well directed and suitable for any kind of patronage. Book it. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

THIS FREEDOM. (7,000 feet). Star, Fay Compton. Three days to very poor business despite the fact that Hutchinson wrote the story. Audience appeal poor. General class,

Friend Collins Talks About Trailers

"My Dear Van:—Thinking that the Trailer Service we are using might be attractive to some of those who are inquiring through your department, I will outline it, in the hope that the service will be useful to some one.

"We use from three to four pictures weekly in one house. Trailers on all of these features would, in our opinion, have a tendency to become monotonous. But, we play one 'big picture' every week; that is, one that we 'bear down' upon.

"National Screen Service has a Trailer Service that is some cheaper than the regular Trailers. It is a sort of an animated announcement that is both artistic and has the added attraction of 'motion.' We use this service, augmenting it with one of their 'Deluxe' trailers on the picture we are featuring for that week, thus eliminating slides on coming pictures entirely.

"All trailers, Deluxe and otherwise, are preceded by an 'opening,' reading 'The Grand Theatre Presents ——' and also conclude with an artistic closing announcement. It makes a most complete and dignified service, adding to the artistry of the presentation and at a cost that is negligible."—E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

VAGABOND TRAIL. (4,302 feet). Star, Charles Jones. This is one of the average Jones pictures. Jones always takes well with our patrons and draws well. A good picture with plenty of action will bring them in in any house and please. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal excellent. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

WESTERN LUCK. (5,020 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Well, they should put Buck back where he belongs, in western pictures. This one was better than some previous, but not as good as it should have been. Give him action. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeals, laboring class. Mixed class, town of 2,714. Admission 10-25-40. L. S. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

WOLF MAN. (5,145 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Lots of action crammed in one of the reels, pretty scenery and fine work of shooting the rapids, but otherwise not suitable to be shown anywhere. Condition of film good. Tone no good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal about ten per cent. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This one pleased the kids but the adults were not so pleased with it. There doesn't seem to be much plot to it and it drags awfully. The poorest Coogan picture yet. Jackie is fine, as usual, but the story is weak. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal excellent. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

FOOL'S AWAKENING. (5,763 feet). Star cast. Good business for three days. Audience appeal weak. General class, city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

HAPPINESS. (7,700 feet). Star cast. A good one of Metro's best. Pleased everybody. N. Russell, Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

HEART BANDIT. (4,900 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Oh! but she was good. Everybody is delighted with her in a role of this kind. A nice, peppy program picture. Good entertainment. Tone good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Business and farming class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

HEART BANDIT. (4,900 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A nice little picture for the smaller houses or those that change every day, as it will not last longer than one day. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal very little. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Marion Davies is fine in this one. A truly wonderful picture. Went over big here. Paid a big price and made some money. Book it and boost it. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

LONG LIVE THE KING. (9,364 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Pleased quite well. Really an elaborate production. Jackie's acting good, although picture is kind of drawn out and story not so good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

LONG LIVE THE KING. (9,364 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This was our first Coogan and we sure had good business. Everybody liked it; the kids ate it up. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

NAME THE MAN. (8 reels). Star cast. Did not draw well, considering the price we paid. Did not please over fifty per cent of our audience. Played two days to poor business. Almost a lemon for us. Tone good. Audience appeal just fair. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RED LIGHTS. (6,841 feet). Star cast. The first poor picture for some time; not worth while showing. Hal a full house of disguested patrons. Advertised it as a special show. Mixed patrons. Good attendance. Jerry Wertin, Wunter Theatre, Albany, Minnesota.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Many who had seen "The Covered Wagon" liked this the best of the two pictures. A really wonderful picture. Mob scenes wonderful. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (240 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

SHERLOCK JR. (4,605 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Pretty good comedy, but only about four full reels, which caused me to run a short show. Be sure to get an extra fill-in reel for rounding out your program on this show. Did not draw very good. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

SHERLOCK JR. (4,605 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Played this on a double program to only fair business. Picture not received well. All classes, city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star cast. Played a week to very good business. Picture well liked. Audience appeal, very good. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

THY NAME IS WOMAN. (9,987 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. One that will please about fifty per cent. Acting of Novarro and La Marr wonderful, but story not interesting and one does not keep interested only at times. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

UNDER THE RED ROBE. (12,000 feet). Star cast. Punk. Stay off this one. No good for any town. Don't know why they make such pictures. No one wants to see them. Don't book it at any price. Tone, none. Suitable for no time. No audience appeal. Town of 1,600. Admission 10-25. S. A. Hendrix, Princess Theatre (330 seats), Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

UNINVITED GUEST. (6,145 feet). Star cast. Nobody in the theatre knew this was partly in techni-color. But say did they sit up and take notice when the fishes darted around in their natural surroundings, and the colors were varied as the rainbows. Say, they just "ah'd and oh'd" when the jungle verdure was shown in full color. And the picture isn't all color by any means. There is a good story running all the way through it. Good attendance with a fairly good moral. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

UNSEEING EYES. (8,500 feet). Star, Senna Owen. A poor drawing card for us. We had very small attendance. The mountain scenes were very good and that is about all was good to the show. We had a very poor print from Metro-Goldwyn. I had to cut eighteen inches out of the title that was unfit for projection purposes. There were two misframes in the show and ten big punched letters and numbers in the various reels. We usually get a bum print sent to us from the Metro-Goldwyn outfit. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

UNDER THE RED ROBE. (12,000 feet). Star cast. A real lemon for us. Lots of money wasted to spoil a picture. This costume stuff is worthless to us. Had more people walk out on this one than any show we have screened for many days. Small towns could not run this picture for more than one day and pay house expenses. The big advertising campaign was the only thing that made this picture hold up in big houses. Little fellows lay off. It's big but poor entertainment, would class it under a program for drawing power. People don't come to our show to study ancient history they want amusement. I have had some good pictures with a few real lemons among them and the bigger the lemon the more sour juice it contains. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WHITE SISTER. (10,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. Twelve reels of good film with a fairly decent story. However, many didn't like the ending where the hero died and heroine proclaims that death doesn't exist. Had a good house and since it's a church story don't think it offended anyone except probably the K. K. K. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WHITE SISTER. (10,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. Beautiful photography and well made picture. Audience here like a picture a little more entertaining where some comedy occurs. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, good. Rural class town of 900. Admission 25-35. L. E. Smith, Town Hall Theatre (400 seats), Pittsford, Vermont.

WILD ORANGES. (7 reels). Star cast. Very good picture. Pleased ninety per cent. Town of 1,000. P. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

WOMEN WHO GIVE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. One of Metro-Goldwyn's few really good pictures. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,700. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,738 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased fairly well. Nobody raved over it. The last reel pulled it over. Paid more for this than his others, and picture not so good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. The best one Tom ever made. Had a big house and everyone in the place congratulated the management. Tone the best. Attendance excellent. All classes, town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

BORDER LEGION. Star, Antonio Moreno. Excellent feature: Zane Gray production. Fine action; good outdoor scenes; good directing. Excellent in every way. Tone good, Sunday, yes. Audience appeal 99 per cent. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BREAKING POINT. (5,788 feet). Star cast. A good picture. Loss of memory, man lives two lives and loves two women. Good attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

BREAKING POINT. (5,788 feet). Star, Matt Moore. A very good production which for some unknown reason, probably the title, failed to draw an average Saturday business. Although out of the ordinary run of pictures, it will please the majority. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star, Milton Sills. One more "Sheik" picture, ends much more artistically than "The Sheik." No one raved over it here. In all fair entertainment. Poor print. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farm and oil class town of 508. Admission 10-25. J. A. Herring, Playhouse Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star cast. This one drew better and gave more satisfaction than "To the Last Man." Many patrons expressed their approval, and none registered dissatisfaction, which places the stamp of one hundred per cent. to the good on this feature. Used slide, heralds, ones, and threes, and mailing list to draw better than average attendance at a slightly increased admission. Very nice print. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Good picture. Did a fair business. Pleased all who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. All classes town of 2,600. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This picture pleased majority. It is surely up to modern ideas of living but think that it is just a little off color for our coming generation to see. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Appeals to the young of today. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Stars, Leatrice Joy and Raymond Griffith. This is a dandy little comedy-drama that proved very popular here, evoking many a good laugh. Tone O. K. Good audience appeal. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star cast. Best Paramount we have played in months. Make no mistake, this is the real comedy drama. Am wondering how it happened to be sold as a program picture. Better than most specials. Pleased one hundred per cent and they are still talking about it. Population 6,000. Sunday, yes. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A very fine picture but Meighan over-rated for this town. Tone good. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. H. Lloyd, Colonial Theatre (400 seats), Post, Texas.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Played three days to increased admission. This show did the same thing for us that it has done for every other exhibitor. It stacked them in to the doors. It holds our house record. It is a real drawing card and there is no doubt about that. It will please almost everybody without an exception. The work of Ernest Torrence in this picture is excellent and I believe it is one of the reasons why the picture goes across so well. We used the regular music score with this show and helped to put across the show in that manner also. Tone good. A family picture. Excellent audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Some picture! Great drawing power if handled right. Can be sold at any price, still it's cheap. Good tone, Sunday yes. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. Pleased about eighty per cent. Lots of our patrons said "Pioneer Trail" had it beaten by far, others didn't think so. It could be cut short and helped. Drew well at fifty and seventy-five cents. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Country class town of 3,400. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. There is nothing more that can be said about this freak box office attraction unless I again state that Paramount gets it all especially where an exhibitor has a high overhead as some of us do. I did a capacity business on this picture and yet just managed to break even. Why is it that when they get a good one they don't give exhibitors a chance with them. Town of 5,000. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

COVERED WAGON. Star cast. This is without doubt one of the finest made. Turned them away Saturday after three days and matinee Saturday. Biggest business ever did. Broke all records this being only two day town. Boost it, you small towns. It's a small town winner. Tone, fine. Sunday, any day. Small town and country class town of 1,250. Admission 10-25, 10-35. Mrs. H. S. Record, Palace Theatre (308 seats), Cambridge, Illinois.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. Star, Mary Miles Minter. Another western; less the dragout rip snorting. Minter and Moore carry this off in good style. An A-1 program. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Very good audience appeal. Farm and oil class town of 508. Admission 10-25. J. A. Herring, Playhouse Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

CRUISE OF THE SPEEJACKS. (7 reels). A very good and interesting travel picture of a trip around the world on their honeymoon, in seven reels, can be run on two nights. First part in four reels, second three. Sunday, yes. Appeal to those who like travel pictures. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A fair picture taken from "Clark's Field." A story of "Dangerous Money." Fair attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,964 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A fair program picture and should be bought as such. Tone, not so good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. Very well for program uses; not big enough, and old at that. Tone fair. Sunday, questionable. Audience appeal, regular. Mixed classes, town of 2,714. Admission ten cents. L. S. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Fairly entertaining picture but nothing to get excited about. In other words, just so so. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal fair. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. I thought this was fine and had nearly as many the second night as on the first. Something out of the common with me. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Good business on this one. Everybody well pleased. Wish I could get one a month just about like it. Reminds you of the old Wallace Reid auto pictures. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. General class, town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This was sent to take the place of the one I had booked which didn't show up. A very good picture, though, and it pleased. Heard no unfavorable comments. Tone okay. Good attendance. All classes, town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,785 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good western. A picture with a good punch and one you do not need to be afraid to recommend to your patrons. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Believe this pleased much better than "Ne'er Do Well." A mighty good sea story, with exciting storm scenes and comedy incidents. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. I believe as everyone else did that this is Gloria's best picture to date. War scenes very fine and Gloria's acting exceptionally good. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (240 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Fine, very few better than this. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. Rural class town of 250. J. J. Halley, San Andres Theatre (110 seats), San Andreas, California.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria is improving with every picture she makes, this one is a real special and should please most any audience. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

ICEBOUND. (6,471 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Here is a real program picture. Has some real audience appeal. Will please anywhere. Wilson and Dix are always good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Rario Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,155 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very good picture for those that like society stuff with pretty settings. Gloria has quite a lot of admirers here. Fair tone. Sunday, it depends on your audience. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

JAVA HEAD. Star, Leatrice Joy. This picture failed to go over for us. Action too slow and dragging and Leatrice doesn't play such a convincing Chinese girl. She is capable of better interpretation than she gives in this picture. High and school class town of 500. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

KICK IN. (7,034 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. This picture pleased more than any feature I ever played. Is a great story and will please one hundred per cent in any town large or small. Tone, excellent. Audience appeal, the very best. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

LAW AND THE WOMAN. (6,461 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Fair one day picture. Watch your step. Paramount too high on small exhibitors. This product carries lot of drama and very small in action. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, so-so. Farm and oil class town of 508. Admission 10-25. J. A. Herring, Playhouse Theatre (249 seats), Strong, Arkansas.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. A good domestic drama that drew only ordinary business. Seemed to be well liked. Paramount assures good photography and that means much to the enjoyment of any picture. Did you ever sit with your eyes popping half out of your head trying to make up your mind what is happening in the picture? I have, but not when the picture is a Paramount. This is no exception. I class it as a very good program offering. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. Mighty good picture. Pleased our audience and brought good attendance. Tone will do. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Cotton class and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-35. P. A. Preddy, Elaine Theatre (374 seats), Sinton, Texas.

LIGHT THAT FAILED. (7,012 feet). Star, Percy Marmount. Entertaining picture from the novel. Pleased a small crowd. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-20-25-30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

LIGHT THAT FAILED. (7,012 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Had people out to this one that do not usually go to the movies, and they liked it, on account of having read the book. My business was only fair on account of having the first cold weather of the year. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Miss Negri's best. A pretty girl is wanted by everyone. Good attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Lately the hanging out of a Pola Negri poster has the same effect on my box office as a smallpox flag would have: so I am afraid I am prejudiced against her. But, so are my patrons. This, for me, is just another of those sordid foreign stories that are so unpopular here. After "Montmarte" and "Lily of the Dust" Pola Negri is dead so far as this town is concerned. In two days the picture took in $9.40 more than the film rental, short subjects not included. Audience appeal, none here. Draw all classes in small town, 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (450 seats), Graham, Texas.

Season 1924-1925—Thirty First-Run Pictures

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. A good picture even if it is a little old. I have run several of this star's pictures lately and find them all good wholesome entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-15-20-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

MEN. (6,564 feet). Star, Pola Negri. One of those things that is wrong with the movies. Not a small town picture. Tone, questionable. Sunday, questionable. Audience appeal, questionable. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-20-25-30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

MEN. (6,564 feet). Star, Pola Negri. The sensational Pola's most sensational picture. High powered drama made in America by a famous European director, Dimitre Buchowetski, is first American made picture for Paramount, written by himself. The picture is very pleasing, good execution and photography and well worth seeing, and being seen by your patrons. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. A story of Hollywood behind the scenes, and boy, it's funny, yes, the funniest thing Jimmie Cruze has ever made. But it has real pathos too. It possesses that "something" that grips you. The story is so real and human that it has succeeded on its own. In this production there is a real small town boy working as a clerk in a store, who prays that he may become a movie actor, and who finally goes to Hollywood, and what this boy goes through is the real story of what thousands of boys and girls go through with who go to the cinema city without knowing what is ahead of them. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. As usual, Glenn Hunter fails to draw and spoils the pulling power of this picture. He also fails to please those who see it. The story, however, is good. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star cast. Some women may like this but the men won't stay for them to see it all. It is a flop in the small town. Tone fair. No audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. H. Lloyd, Colonial Theatre (400 seats), Post, Texas.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. By using special musical score and an orchestra of real musicians we put it over. Grand show for a class that appreciates real class. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is a great picture, but why, oh, why didn't they make the right kind of paper with it? This is essentially a sea-faring picture and just the kind that my patrons "eat up," but there is not a semblance of a sea or vessel on any of the paper, so I had to make my own posters to let them know the type of picture it was. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. General class, town of 1,300. Admission 10-25. L. G. Tewksbury, Tewks Theatre (250 seats), Stonington, Maine.

Marion Davies in Metro-Goldwyn's "Janice Meredith."

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Here's one I want to report on. Rental more than other Zane Grey's and not near as good. Color was good, but story terrible and pleased only a few. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal fair. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star, Glenn Hunter. Unsatisfactory from a box office standpoint and it also failed to please. Am extremely regretful that I had to play it. Tone, rotten. Sunday, no. Poor attendance. College class town of 4,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

WOMAN PROOF. (7,657 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good but not as good as Meighan's previous productions. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 2,714. Admission 10-25-40. L. S. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Rather "dizzy," "mushy," "jazzy," thing that seemed to satisfy fairly well. Tone, questionable. Sunday, questionable. Fair audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,364. Admission 10-30. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Pathe

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a mighty fine comedy and sure a thriller. Print was in an awful shape. Reels two, three, four and six were all mixed up; required about five hours' work to get them in order. Must have been in a cyclone or train wreck. Don't think an operator could get them mixed up so bad. Tone good. Audience appeal fine. Farming class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

Preferred

APRIL SHOWERS. (6,350 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This is a light comedy drama; only took fair with our audiences. The picture is all right if you have something else with it to draw them in. Please about seventy-five per cent. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal only fair. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

APRIL SHOWERS. (6,350 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Nice little program picture. Pleased everybody. N. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

BREATH OF SCANDAL. (6,940 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A special that is a special and pleased all who saw it one hundred per cent. You can't go wrong on Preferred pictures. They are consistently good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Perfect audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

VIRGINIAN. (8,010 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. We were a little disappointed in this one. It is a good picture and drew good houses. However, our people expected too much of it. Seems to be a little overproduced. Action lags. Will go over in most houses, however. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

DRIVIN' FOOL. (5,800 feet). Star cast. Used this on a Saturday night with Bray cartoon, making very good program which pleased very well. R. K. Lottin, Strand Theatre, Valparaiso, Nebraska.

DRIVIN' FOOL. (5,800 feet). Star, Wally Van. Here is a fast action picture. A good one from start to finish. A slam bang auto race across continent. Something on the order of Wallace Reid pictures. Will keep your audiences in suspense all the way through. Book it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Jr., Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

GRIT. (5,800 feet). Star cast. Poorest picture I have shown in two years. Photography rotten. Don Wilcox, Colome Theatre, Colome, South Dakota.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. Gave this to the American Legion for Armistice Day benefit and they did very well and were tickled to death with the picture. Of course it copies "Safety Last" (in style, not price) and it's every bit as good if not better, especially from the standpoint that a girl pulls the stunts. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

LIGHTNING RIDER. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. This is the first one of the new Harry Carey's I have played and it pleased fairly well. J. L. Sedlak, Bee Theatre, Bee, Nebraska.

LIGHTNING RIDER. (6 reels). Star cast. For a small town drawing all classes it is hard to beat. Tone good. Great audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. H. Lloyd, Colonial Theatre (400 seats), Post, Texas.

NIGHT HAWK. (5,115 feet). Star cast. An-

For Release in January —Now Booking

other good Carey picture. If they like westerns they will rave over this one. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. H. Lloyd, Colonial Theatre (400 seats), Post, Texas.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Better than the average Carey. Suitable for downtown and neighborhood houses. Tone all right. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

SECOND FIDDLE. (5,810 feet). Star cast. Say, this was a dandy picture. Played with two-reel Heza Liar comedy, "The Dictator." You should have heard them holler. Everyone pleased. Film in good condition. Bought right, boys, you can boost this one and get good results. Plenty of action and plenty of laughs. Dad Emmert, Emmert Theatre, Alcester, South Dakota.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). Star cast. This picture is one of the finest educational pictures that I ever had in my house and as such took one of the finest flops of any picture that I ever had in my house. I gave this picture more exploitation, such as window cards, circus heralds, and had it recommended by the principals and the teachers in the local schools and surrounding villages and country schools, more newspaper advertising than what I gave to "The Covered Wagon," which was run a few weeks previously, and paid a higher rental, and did about one-third the gross business that I did with "The Covered Wagon." The comments on the picture by those who came to see it averaged up to the following remark: "It's a fine picture, but I did not care so much for it." As a patriotic picture it is without an equal that I know of, and United Artists capitalize your patriotism in the way they charge you for this picture. W. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wisconsin.

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. (9,351 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. They simply won't fall for all this costume stuff in the smaller cities and the quicker the powers that be realize this fact the quicker some of the big stars will get back in the good graces of "ye old public." Nice picture and Mary good, but did not draw with middle or lower classes. Lost a little dough on this. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Universal

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Good as a western. As a star Hoxie is somewhat above the average. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

GAIETY GIRL. Star, Mary Philbin. A nifty production, with a real little star. Sure to become a big star. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Family appeal. Family class town of 300,000. Admission 25-35. Jack H. Roth, Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A really good baseball entertainment for the men and boys but can't get the women in on sport subjects. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A very great picture. Chaney's work in this is wonderful. Could only get this for one night and did a very good business. The only fault with this is the length, it gets rather tiresome to an audience. Although it did not do the business the "Covered Wagon" did for me the first night it was a good drawing card. The print was around sixty per cent. Prices were thirty-five and twenty-five cents. I think this is a picture for a larger place than mine but if a fellow can get it at a reasonable price get it and go after it with plenty of advertising. It is a safe play. Strong audience appeal, in some places. All classes town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Carmel, Maine.

MILLION TO BURN. Star, Herbert Rawlinson. This is a good feature picture. Pleased all who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. O. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

More dependable tips mean more good bookings.
More good bookings mean a higher percentage of pleased patrons.
That's why I urge you:—
KEEP THE TIPS COMING!

RAMBLIN' KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. A good western with lots of thrills and good action. Keep "Hoot" in the class where he belongs and he'll draw them in. Book it, brother it's good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fine attendance. Farmers town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneider, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,000 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Put the S. R. O. sign early, for good clean action comedy you can't beat Hoot Gibson. The western flavor helped. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Big audience appeal. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SHOCK. (8,758 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Good for program picture where the audience isn't jazz-wild. Tone, good. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SIX FIFTY. Star cast. A fair picture. Don't promise too much on it. We just got it by with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair attendance. Farmers town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneider, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star cast. Very fine picture, well acted and makes a good special. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. Played a week to only fair business at fifty cents price. Not worth advancement as our regular price is thirty-five cents. Fair audience appeal. All classes city of 40,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

CLEAN HEART. (7,950 feet). Star cast. Small towns lay off with this one. Ran it for a special on account of heavy advance of publicity, and had to hide on the second show. Only a few patrons left to see the finish. Picture drags, and story over the people's heads. No audience appeal. Sunday, no. Admission 20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

LOYAL LIVES. (5,950 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A good picture not a special. Just a good program picture. Print just fair not good by all means. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. Farmers town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneider, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

MAN NEXT DOOR. (7 reels). Star, Alice Calhoun. A fine picture. Some wonderful settings and good directing. A few dark places in the film but not bad. Print in fair condition. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. Farmers town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneider, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH. (7,156 feet). Star cast. A very fine picture but got a rotten print on it, full of buckled up splices. Why don't they cut those out before they send them out. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fine attendance. Farmers town of 150. Admission 10-25. John Schneider, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). Star cast. Nothing to rave over. Just got across although picture is pretty old. Acting of Tully Marshall good. Business rotten on it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY AFTER DARK. (6,300 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Very good. Film classics have good stuff. Sunday, no. Town of 1,000. P. Russell, Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

HOW TO EDUCATE A WIFE. (6 reels). Star cast. This pulled a crowd on an off night, and everybody was pleased with it. Elinor Glyn's name pulled some I suppose and the title did the rest. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, excellent. Residential class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star, Johnny Hines. One of the peppiest comedy-dramas I have had for a long time. This picture will suit any type of audience, and they will enjoy every foot of it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Residential class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,200 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A strictly minus box-office flop. Plenty of posing. A little acting, no entertainment. Some walked out. I thought I heard a few snore. Tone, nothing. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, three per cent. Business and farming class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,200 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Eight reels is entirely too long. Makes love story drawn out. Good attraction for women. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Appeals to women. Family class city of 300,000. Admission 25-35-50. L. D. Balsly, Liberty Theatre (1,000 seats), Kansas City, Missouri.

THREE WOMEN. (8,200 feet). Star cast. Here is a very good picture. One that will please any audience. Plenty of humorous comedy situations. Here is one that actually takes with any audience. People went out talking about it. You can't go wrong in booking this one. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Neighborhood class city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

TIGER ROSE. (8,000 feet). Star, Lenore Ulric. Good. N. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

Comedies

AGGRAVATIN' KID. (Century Comedy). Star, Buddy Messinger. Moves fast and lots of fun. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Family audience appeal. Family class city of 300,000. Admission 25-35-50. L. D. Balsly, Liberty Theatre (1,000 seats), Kansas City, Missouri.

ALL STAR CAST. (Pathe-Paul Terry Cartoon). The people here are getting tired of these cartoon pictures but this one they liked if one can judge by their laughing. Sunday, yes. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CORNFED. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Better than the last Christie we had by a long shot. The antics of Vernon were received with hearty chuckles by everybody in our audience. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DIPPY DOO DADS. (Pathe). Not so good. Business and farming class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SPRING FEVER. (Fox). Very good. Business and farming class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

THERE HE GOES. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. You must hand it to Mermaid comedies for the slapstick stuff. This one had some brand new gags in it that brought us the laughs and that is what we wanted. Tone ,okay. Audience appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY THIS EVENING. (Pathe). Star, Ben Turpin. Some parts of this one sure does make them laugh. Everyone well satisfied, film in good condition, had the best Tuesday in a long time. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Serials

RUTH OF THE RANGE. (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. Good serial. It's got the kick in every foot. N. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

FIGHTING BLOOD. (F. B. O.) Pleased about seventy-five per cent. "Telephone" series very good also. N. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

PILGRIMS. (Pathe Yale University Press). This one especially good. All chronicles have been good and add to a theatre's prestige among the intellectual only. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, for the masses, no. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

WINNING HIS WAY. (Universal). Star, Jack Dempsey. One of the would be "Famous" "Fight and Win" pictures. Not near as good as F. B. O.'s "Fighting Blood." Dempsey is no actor. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. All classes city of 210,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

Miscellaneous

AFTER SIX DAYS. (Weiss Brothers). Star cast. Fine production. Complete story. Pleased everybody. Big attendance. N. Russell, Russell's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

BRIGHT LIGHTS OF BROADWAY. (Principal). Star, Doris Kenyon. Picture is good only a story that has been worked to death. A well acted and directed picture that should please most audiences. Did not take very well with us. Very poor attendance. Fair moral tone. Sunday, no. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

BROADWAY GOLD. (Truart). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. This is a high class production with an excellent cast, splendid sets and interiors, beautiful gowned women and an interesting plot. What more do you want? Get it. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

CHEROKEE STRIP. (State Right). Star cast. I believe that this picture did my house good, as there are things that happen in this picture according to history, and plenty of people never get a chance to see such, so I do not think that any exhibitor will make any mistake by playing same. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Mixed audience appeal. Mixed classes town of 2,714. Admission ten cents and up. T. L. Goolsby, Rex Theatre (460 seats), Brinkley, Arkansas.

DANGER AHEAD. (Phil Goldstone). Star, Richard Talmadge. (5,000 feet). Here's one that didn't cost much, and packed them in. Star very popular, and is a hard worker. Audience appeal, good. Pleased ninety per cent. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

DARING YOUTH. (Principal). Star, Norman Kerry. (5,975 feet). Very good picture. Had no kicks. What comments there were were favorable. Poor business but not the fault of the picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

GOOD BAD BOY. (Principal). Star cast. A very ordinary program picture. We used it on a Saturday night and pleased the youngsters. We have a lot of youngsters on Saturday nights. The print was in fine shape. Tone, good. Fair audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (Principal). Star, Pat O'Malley. An excellent production and one that follows the novel closer than anything I have ever seen. A special in every sense of the word and one that will draw and please one hundred per cent. Book it and boost it. You can't go too strong on it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, perfect. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

PAL OF MINE. (C. B. C.) Star, Irene Rich. A fair program show. The story is old stuff, but it was fairly well done. Irene Rich seems to be rather well liked in this town. The print was very dark on this one. Tone, good. Fair audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PALS IN BLUE. (State Right). Star, Tom Mix. Another poor attempt to resurrect an old bunch of two reelers that certainly fooled and disappointed. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, forty per cent. All classes city of 210,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RAINBOW RANGER. (Independent). Star, Pete Morrison. One of the few western subjects that holds the audience in spite of the lack of hair raising stunts. Plenty of good comedy. Good acting, and a good story. Book it. A good picture for Sunday for whoever uses western subjects on Sundays. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht Jr., Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

SMOKING TRAIL. (State Right). Star, Bill Patton. A good western with lots of pep and action. Went over fine. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, good. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TANGO CAVALIER. (State Right). Star, George Larkin. Lay off of this one. It is about the weakest western we have had in our house for some time. Very amateurish. George Larkin is the only character that seems to have had any experience before the camera. Lay off. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Poor audience appeal. Neighborhood class city of 77,000. Admission 10-20. William Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

TWISTED TRAILS. (State Right). Star, Tom Mix. Three days to poor business. Don't play this one. Very bad. Poor audience appeal. General class city of 40,000. C. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

Lasky Tells Changes in the Producing Schedule

BEFORE departing on a hurried trip to Hollywood, where he will personally supervise the final editing of the Paramount picture, "Peter Pan," Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, this week announced changes in the Paramount production schedule and gave some additional information regarding pictures now in work.

"Having practically completed one of the greatest programs in the history of Paramount, the production department is now well on its way into the production of the Second Famous Forty," said Mr. Lasky. "Every picture in the Famous Forty except one, Thomas Meighan's 'Coming Through,' has been finished, and of the Second Famous Forty we have finished seven, 'The Devil's Cargo,' 'Forty Winks,' 'Top of the World,' 'The Swan,' 'Contraband,' 'The Goose Hangs High' and 'Code of the West.'

"I am going to Hollywood," said Mr. Lasky, "to be in at the final editing of 'Peter Pan.' We already have seen three reels of this picture and we are all so enthusiastic over what Mr. Brenon has accomplished that we feel that here we have one of the greatest pictures that the screen has yet produced.

"Reports indicate that we have another marvelous production in 'The Devil's Cargo,' which Victor Fleming has been producing with a cast including Wallace Beery, Claire Adams, Pauline Starke and William Collier, Jr.

"The title of 'Lord Chumley,' directed by Frank Urson and Paul Iribe, featuring Viola Dana, Theodore Roberts and Raymond Griffith, has been changed to 'Forty Winks.'

"In the last week we have made some changes in our production schedule. Bebe Daniels will be starred in a picture entitled 'The Manicure Girl,' written by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. This picture will replace 'The Gate Opens.' We made the change because 'The Manicure Girl' is a much stronger story and more suitable to Miss Daniels' type.

"Replacing the picture tentatively titled 'Adam's Daughter,' will be 'The Moonflower,' which Zoe Akins adapted from 'The Hungarian,' and in which Elsie Ferguson starred on the legitimate stage in New York. Betty Compson will be starred.

"Arthur Train is writing an original story for Thomas Meighan which will follow 'Coming Through,' which Mr. Meighan is now making in Birmingham, Alabama.

"'The Spaniard,' the widely read English novel, will go into production at once under the direction of Raoul Walsh. Ricardo Cortez and Jetta Goudal will be featured. Mr. Walsh by the way, has just completed his first picture with us, 'East of Suez,' starring Pola Negri.

"Last week I saw 'The Swan' in its rough form and I am firmly convinced that in this picture we will have one of the great successes of the winter season. Frances Howard in title role will prove a revelation. We are signing her to a long term contract.

"I have seen some of 'Madame Sans-Gene,' the picture Gloria Swanson is making in Paris. Allan Dwan is in Paris and will shortly start work on the exterior scenes of Miss Swanson's next production, 'The Coast of Folly.'

"Reports indicate that in 'The Golden Bed' Cecil B. De Mille has one of the greatest pictures he has ever made.

"William De Mille's next production, 'Men and Women,' will be made at the Long Island studio. Mr. De Mille has finished editing his latest picture, 'Locked Doors,' by Clara Beranger, and will start on 'Men and Women' shortly after the holidays.

"In Los Angeles I expect to confer with Zane Grey, whose story, 'The Thundering Herd,' is about to go into production under the direction of William Howard. In this picture, Jack Holt and Lois Wilson will be seen in leading roles."

"Parisian Nights"

"Parisian Nights," second Gothic production being made at the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood by Al Santell, is from an original by Emile Forst, adapted to the screen by Frederick Kennedy Myton, and has to do with the romance of an American society girl studying art in the French capital. She finds her model and true love in an Apache leader, played by Lou Tellegen. Others in the cast are Elaine Hammerstein, Renee Adoree, Gaston Glass and William Dillon.

Plans for Walsh

I. E. Chadwick Completing Arrangements for Star Now Under Long Term Contract

Production plans starring George Walsh recently signed on a long contract by Chadwick Pictures Corporation are now being actively considered by I. E. Chadwick, president of the organization, who returned from the coast this week from Hollywood, where he witnessed the closing shots on the new Semon feature comedy, "The Wizard of Oz."

As was announced at the time of the signing of the contract, Mr. Walsh will appear in a series of Chadwick feature productions and in a chapter-play, dealing with an important and dramatic subject.

While no indications of next season's product were given at the Chadwick offices, this week it is understood that Mr. Chadwick is planning an increased number of productions next season in which nationally prominent directors, stars and players, as well as famous books and plays will be featured. Mr. Walsh and Lionel Barrymore are two stars who will hold leading places.

Cast of "The Parasite"

Lilyan Tashman and Dorothy Dwan were added this week to the cast of "The Parasite," now being directed by Gasnier as a Preferred Picture for release by B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc. The cast includes Owen Moore, Madge Bellamy, Bryant Washburn, Mary Carr and Bruce Guerin.

Scenes from Warner Bros. production of Edith Wharton's "Age of Innocence," with Beverly Bayne and Elliot Dexter.

Approved by Tarkington

Ben Alexander Will Play Boy Role in Vitagraph's "Pampered Youth"

Booth Tarkington has let it be known that he is well pleased with the selection of Ben Alexander to play the role of the youngster, George Minafer, in "Pampered Youth," David Smith's picturization for Vitagraph of Mr. Tarkington's prize-winner, "The Magnificent Ambersons."

Young Alexander proved his ability to impersonate the red-blooded American boy as described by the Indiana writer when "Penrod" was produced. In the title role he scored a triumph. That the novelist considers him a "find" is evidenced by this passage in a letter from him:

"I never believed it would be possible to find a real interpreter of the American boy of my stories. Being a real boy, and at the same time having obtained that training which is necessary for young boys to have in order to do movie or spoken drama, is obviously a different background to possess. But Ben upsets my theory. He has been able to stay a true American boy, 'regular fellow,' and yet accomplish things in a dramatic way. The answer must be that Ben is a natural actor."

"The Triflers"

The first print of "The Triflers," recently completed by Gasnier for B. P. Schulberg, was received in New York this week by J. B. Bachmann, general manager of distribution.

Ten Selznick Features Go To Film Booking Offices

FOLLOWING the announcement made last week of the distribution by Film Booking Offices of the comedy product made for Standard Cinema Corporation, word comes from Harry M. Berman, sales manager of F. B. O., that the distributing company has taken over ten features made for Selznick, in addition to several short subjects.

Included in this list of ten features are "The Common Law," based on the famous novel by Robert Chambers, starring Corinne Griffith, with Conway Tearle, Elliott Dexter, Hobart Bosworth, Bryant Washburn, Doris May, Harry Myers, Miss Du Pont, Phyllis Haver, Wally Van and Dagmar Godowsky, in support. The picture was directed by George Archainbaud, under the supervision of Myron Selznick.

Next is another of the super-special Selznick pictures, "Rupert of Hentzau," Sir Anthony Hope's celebrated romance, with the following all-celebrity cast: Elaine Hammerstein, Bert Lytell, Adolph Menjou, Lew Cody, Claire Windsor, Hobart Bosworth, Bryant Washburn, Marjorie Daw, Mitchell Lewis, Elmo Lincoln and Irving Cummings. "Rupert of Hentzau" is a Victor Heerman Production, made under the supervision of Myron Selznick.

Another Victor Heerman production to be distributed by F. B. O. is "Modern Matrimony," starring Owen Moore, with a cast including Alice Lake, Mayme Kelso, Frank Campeau, Kate Lester, Victor Potel and Snitz Edwards.

"Flapper Wives" is a Jane Murfin and Lawrence Trimble production, based on the play by Jane Murfin, author of "Lilac Time" and "Smilin' Through." The players include May Allison, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Vera Reynolds, Edward Horton, Harry Mestayer, William V. Mong and The Greatest Dog on the Screen. The film was directed by Jane Murfin and Justin McCloskey, and made at the studios of the late Thomas H. Ince, at Culver City.

No. 5 on this list is "Pawned," a J. Parker Read production, starring Tom Moore, with Edith Roberts, Charles Gerard, James Barrows, Josef Swickard and Mabel Van Buren in support. "Pawned" was written by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man," and directed by Irwin Willat.

"Quicksands" is next on the list. This is a Howard Hawkes production, directed by Jack Conway, with Helene Shadwick and Richard Dix heading a cast that includes Alan Hale, Noah Beery, J. Farrell MacDonald, Tom Wilson, Dick Sutherland, George Cooper, Hardee Kirkland and Lo uKing. "Quicksands" comes from the American Releasing Corporation.

"The Woman He Loved," a J. L. Frothingham Production written by William V. Mong and directed by Edward Sloman, is another American Releasing Corporation product. The cast includes William V. Mong, Marcia Manon, Edward Sutherland, Charles K. French, Mary Wynn and Lucille Ward.

"Good Men and Bad," American Releasing Corporation product, is an F. W. Kraemer production, with Martin Sais, Merrill McCormick and Steve Carr in the leads, and was directed by Merrill McCormick.

"A Son of the Desert" and "Shattered Idols" round out the product from the American Releasing Corporation. "A Son of the Desert" was written and directed by William Merrill McCormick and features Marin Sais, William M. McCormick and Robert Burns.

"Shattered Idols" is a J. L. Frothingham production from the novel by I. A. R. Wylie. Marguerite de la Motte and William V. Mong head the cast, with Frankie Lee, Ethel Grey Terry, Alfred Allen, Louise Lovely, Harvey Clark, Josephine Crowell, Robert Littlefield, Mary Wynn and George Periolat in support. Edward Sloman directed.

In addition to the four series of short subjects which F. B. O. will distribute, details of which have been announced, the following short subjects have been added to the F. B. O. program, it is announced by Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Film Booking Offices.

"Newspaper Fun," consisting of 52 subjects 300 feet long, containing 15 jokes culled from the press of United States newspapers. These will be released one a week. Thirteen have been released through Selznick exchanges, and F. B. O. will distribute the remaining 39.

"Bray Heeza-A-Liar" Series: 13 single-reel animated cartoons. Twelve have already been released by Selznick, and F. B. O. will distribute the 13th.

A Soul's Awakening

Messrs. Cranfield and Clarke announce that they have completed cutting a film starring Flora le Breton, called "A Soul's Awakening." It deals with the underworld of London, and Miss le Breton, who is rapidly coming to the front, gives an excellent portrayal.

Making a Hit Abroad

Pickford, Chaplin and Fairbanks Enjoying High Favor in Paris

Three big American stars are just about dominating the motion picture screens of Paris this season, according to a Paris dispatch to United Artists Corporation. Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad" completed its third month at the Marivaux Theatre with the end of its run not in sight, and during November, Brussels, Geneva, Marseilles, Bordeau and Stockholm, while December first-runs are in progress in Prague, Christiana, Copenhagen, Barcelona, Rome and Helsingfors. In Paris Mary Pickford's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" has set in for a season of friendly rivalry at the Aubert Theatre, with record-breaking attendance in its opening weeks.

Charles Chaplin's drama, "A Woman of Paris," is having its general release in Paris, and playing fourteen theatres day and date repeated its pre-release success of last spring at the Aubert Theatre.

Warners Buy Two Novels

Purchase of "The Pleasure Buyers" by Arthur Somers Roche, and "The Prince of Sinners" by E. Phillips Oppenheim, is announced this week by Warner Bros. as part of their new Screen Classics to be made for the 1925-26 season. "The Pleasure Buyers," by Mr. Roche, has been running serially in the Cosmopolitan magazine since August. MacMillan & Co. will bring it out in book form. "The Pleasure Buyers" is a high speed drama with an element of mystery and the scenes are laid in Palm Beach, among the rich idlers of the winter season. "The Prince of Sinners" is one of Oppenheim's stories of English social and political intrigue with a divided love interest and plenty of action. In this country it was published serially, in book form and through newspaper syndicates.

Billy Bevan's New Comedy

The Sennett All-Star group, under the direction of Del Lord, began shooting this week on a two-reeler. Billy Bevan, Natalie Kingston, J. J. Richardson, Thelma Parr and Kewpie Morgan are the featured players.

Pathe News Will Celebrate Its Thirteenth Anniversary

PATHE announces this week that starting with the issues of the Pathe News for December 27th the number of the issue will again start at number one. This marks the thirteenth year of the existence of this picture-news-gathering agency.

For the last ten years the Pathe News has made every effort to cover all the big news events that have occurred throughout the entire world. It has not been possible to cover them all, but a splendid average has been established by this organization. Wars, revolutions, politics, accidents, social and local events have been registered by the Pathe News cameras. Millions of feet of film have been "shot" in gathering this picture data. During the life of the Pathe News it is estimated that more than one and one quarter-million feet of film have been exhibited to the public. Millions of feet of film sent in has not been used because of the restricted footage of the average news reel.

Officials of the Pathe News estimate that more than three million feet of film was taken of the World War. Of this amount only about fifty thousand feet reached the theatres. The remainder of this unpublished film is stored in vaults and constitutes one of the leading historical records of the war.

Starting thirteen years ago, Pathe News has released 1244 editions. At the beginning, it was known as the Pathe Weekly, and remained as such until nine years ago. It was then changed to Pathe News and released as a semi-weekly service, as it is today. Since it has been a semi-weekly, 936 different issues have been released.

At the present day Pathe News has over fourteen hundred corresponding cameramen in the field. There is not a news event of any importance that can escape them. In many instances local news events are run in a particular locality when the story involved is not of national importance.

Four Preferred Pictures Released Within A Month

EXHIBITORS will be able to secure play dates on four new Preferred Pictures by January 15, J. G. Bachman, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, has announced.

On December 15 the Schulberg-Preferred exchanges released Gasnier's production, "The Triflers," a screen version of Frederick Orin Bartlett's novel. In the featured roles are Mae Busch, Frank Mayo, Elliott Dexter, Walter Hiers, Eve Novak, Lee Moran, Dorothy Revier and Lloyd Whitlock.

On January 1 the widely heralded Schulberg special, "Capital Punishment," will be available for first runs. This production has just been completed on the coast and is now being cut and edited. Twelve prominent players are featured: Clara Bow, George Hackathorne, Elliott Dexter, Margaret Livingston, Robert Ellis, Mary Carr, Edith Yorke, Eddie Phillips, Alec B. Francis, Joseph Kilgour, Wade Boteler and George Nichols. James P. Hogan acted as director.

"Free to Love," now being made by Frank O'Connor, will be released on January 10. Clara Bow, Raymond McKee, Francis Feeny, Hallam Cooney, Winter Hall and Charles Mailes comprise the cast.

January 15 will be the date upon which first showings of "The Parasite" can be had. Gasnier is now working toward completing this with an all-star cast that includes Owen Moore, Madge Bellamy, Bryant Washburn, Mary Carr, Bruce Guerin, Lilyan Tashman and Dorothy Dwan.

B. P. Schulberg is now supervising three production units on the coast, where Gasnier, James P. Hogan and Frank O'Connor are directing the Preferred program. With "The Breath of Scandal" and "White Man" already being exhibited and the above productions on the way for immediate release, these directors will continue work on the remaining ten pictures, which will be delivered at regular intervals between January 15 and June 1.

"Baree" as Newspaper Serial

James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Baree, Son of Kazan" is now being serialized by leading newspapers throughout the country. The story is to appear in thirty-four instalments of two columns each, each illustrated with line drawings from the picture, which is to be produced for Vitagraph by David Smith. Besides mats and proofs, Vitagraph also furnishes to the newspapers twenty-four sheets, with the name of the paper and the publication dates showing on the center.

January a Banner Month For Film Booking Offices

JANUARY, 1925, will be a banner month for Film Booking Offices, with five features and five short subjects scheduled for release.

"Youth and Adventure," the fourth Richard Talmadge picture, heads the list. In this production the intrepid Talmadge is called upon to perform more thrilling stunts and hairbreadth escapes than ever before. Eva Novak is Mr. Talmadge's leading lady. The cast includes Joe Girard, Joe Harrington and Stanhope Wheatcroft. James Horne directed.

"Parisian Nights," second Gothic-special, is next on the list. The story deals with romance and adventure in the upper and lower stratas of Paris, with the climax occurring in a battle between rival Apache factions. Scenic features of the production will be the sewers of Paris, in which the lovers seek refuge. Elaine Hammerstein, Lou Tellegan and Renee Adoree head the cast. Alfred Santell directed. "Parisian Nights" is set for January 11th release.

The same day will see the release of "Midnight Molly," third Evelyn Brent-Gothic for F. B. O. In this production Miss Brent portrays the dual role of a society woman and a thief. Lloyd Ingraham directed, and the cast, besides Miss Brent, includes Bruce Gordon, John Gough and John Miljan.

The third Fred Thomson production, as yet untitled, is set for January 18th release. Ann May will be Mr. Thomson's leading woman, and the rest of the cast will be announced shortly. Al Rogell wielded the megaphone.

January 25 is set as the release date of the third of the "Texas Ranger" series, starring Bob Custer. Reeves Eason will direct the production.

The fifth Stan Laurel comedy, produced by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema Corporation for F. B. O. release, as yet untitled, will be shown on January 1.

This will be followed on January 4 by "Playing With Fire," No. 9 of "The Go-Getters" series, co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara. Beatrice Van is writing No. 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the series, and William Curran directing.

"Little Red Riding Hood," a Dinky Doodle Cartoon, will be released on January 12. This short subject was written and directed by Walter Lantz and produced by the Standard Cinema Corporation.

The fifth Jimmy Aubrey Comedy, as yet untitled, produced by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema Corporation, is set for January 15 release.

"The Sleeping Cutie" is the intriguing title of No. 10 of F. B. O.'s "The Go-Getters," co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara, set for January 18. Story by Beatrice Van and direction by William Curran.

Five Units at Work

Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, reports from Hollywood that there are five units at work at his company's studios. Al Herman is directing a picture featuring Hilliard Karr and Billy Engle. The Century Follies Girls will be featured. William Watson is directing Wanda Wiley in "You Little Devil," with Al Alt as her leading man.

Edward I. Luddy is directing Edna Marion and Arthur Lake in "Rich Ideas." Jess Robbins is directing a new unit with Eddie Gordon as the star, in a picture called "Cleaning Up." Larry Richardson and Beth Darlington are in the cast. Charles Lamont is directing "Camping Out." In the cast are Bessie Welsh, Les Bates, Hilliard Karr and Tony Hayes. The Century Follies Girls will have a prominent part.

Sally Long Goes to Hollywood

A chance to appear in motion pictures has taken Sally Long, of "Kid Boots," New York stage success, to Hollywood. Miss Long, whose stage debut was fostered by Florenz Ziegfeld, attracted the attention of H. M. Warner. As a result she is soon to be seen at the Warner Bros. West Coast studio when a forthcoming production starts its shooting schedule.

Fox News Makes Strides In the Foreign Fields

A SUMMARY of the foreign editions of Fox News today offers a striking illustration of the expansion and growth of this six-year old news picture service. So rapidly is the demand for the news films growing that the day is not distant when all civilized countries will be blanketed with it just as they are with the product of Fox Film Corporation.

Fox News Reel, in its American and foreign editions, is reaching between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 people in all parts of the world each week, and this great figure is becoming greater as new editions are added.

First there is the Canadian edition, the nearest relative of the American national edition, prepared for the Canadian public. Pictures of the more important Canadian news events of each week are combined with the pictures of the most important American and world events, with the result that the Canadian edition is in a class of its own in point of particular appeal to the public it serves.

In the Australian edition of Fox News are placed the outstanding news pictures of England, Canada, other British possessions, the United States and other parts of the world. Because of its length—which is greater than any other foreign edition—the Australian edition represents an interesting experiment; and if results mean anything, the public enjoys longer news reels, because the lengthy Australian edition, is one of the most popular entertainment units distributed in that part of the world.

Two editions of Fox News are sent to the Far East—the Japanese and the Philippines. The Japanese edition in little more than a year has made remarkable strides. The Philippine edition is little more than an infant but great promise is held for it.

The senior foreign editions in Latin America are the Argentine and Brazil editions, with the Cuban edition only slightly their junior. Mexico is the newest edition among our southern neighbors.

Throughout Europe, Fox News is becoming more strongly represented every month. The Holland edition is the oldest and has paved the way for the others. With its army of cameramen scattered all over the world Fox News gathers a vast amount of exclusive and universally interesting picture material—which enables the service to compile weekly in the form of a news reel a symposium of news events just as interesting to Europe as to North and South America. With such a stock of material to draw upon, it is only natural that such editions as Fox News in England and Spain should be acclaimed by the public of these countries These two editions are meeting with great public favor. The infant Fox News in Europe is the Scandinavian edition.

"The Boomerang"

Early Release by Schulberg-Preferred Exchanges of Belasco Production

David Belasco's production, "The Boomerang," leading in importance all the other stories on B. P. Schulberg's list of Preferred Pictures for this year, will soon be started and will be released as a special production early in 1925.

Gasnier has been selected to direct the feature and Clara Bow has been named for the leading feminine role.

Actual camera work is scheduled to start January 1, when Gasnier will have completed his current production, "The Parasite." "The Boomerang" comes to the screen with a wealth of writing talent, its play version being the work of Wichell Smith and Victor Mapes.

A spirited comedy drama, "The Boomerang," passed six hundred consecutive performances on Broadway, was presented by road companies for three subsequent seasons, and has been a stock favorite for the last five years.

D. W. Griffith's New Picture Wins New York Reviewers

WITH the premiere run of D. W. Griffith's new film, "Isn't Life Wonderful" at the Rivoli Theatre in New York City, a flood of favorable criticism was loosened that surpasses any reception given by the press to any recent Griffith picture. Griffith is hailed by the metropolitan newspapers as a wizard of a new technique as powerful as revealed in any of his melodramatic successes, although his method is revolutionary as compared with his former handling of screen situations.

In perhaps the warmest praise ever given a film by the New York World, Quinn Martin wrote of this United Artists Corporations release: "Innovation tramps the screen at the Rivoli. The new film play by Mr. Griffith dares to be intelligent. This in itself is sufficient. And still its leading woman gives one of the finest performances I have ever seen in pictures. It may be the very best."

Mordaunt Hall, in the New York Times: "Through countless deft and effective touches in this simple yet deeply stirring narrative Mr. Griffith again proves himself a brilliant director."

Louella O. Parsons, in the New York American: "David Wark Griffith, who blazed the trail ten years ago and gave the world the first significant historical drama, has again pioneered the way and given us the most truthful delineation of characters in 'Isn't Life Wonderful' that I have ever seen on the screen."

Harriette Underhill, in the New York Herald-Tribune: "The story is so simple and still vastly thrilling and exciting."

Mildred Spain, in the Daily News: "Griffith, in making 'Isn't Life Wonderful' has done a remarkable thing by presenting an entirely new treatment of screen drama. It is the very best picture that has come from his hands—and when we say that we have said about everything."

Dorothy Herzog, in the Daily Mirror: "The new Griffith picture is a gem of screen realism. There is no recurrence to camera trickery for effects. It develops smoothly, grippingly, beautifully."

Rose Pelswick, in the New York Evening Journal: "Picture fans will breathe a prayer of thanks to Mr. Griffith. Cynics will brush away their tears, and feel as they did before they lost their illusions and their hair. Because it isn't a story. It's life."

Stars Signed for Banner's Fourth "Lady Of The Night"

FOLLOWING advices from the Coast, early this week, George H. Davis and Samuel J. Briskin, directing heads of Banner Productions, Inc., announced that John Bowers and Marguerite de la Motte had been selected to head the cast in the featured roles in "Lady Of The Night," Banners' next attraction to be made in the East.

Both of these popular stars are now engaged in production work on the Coast, but immediately after the conclusion of their present engagements they will leave Los Angeles for New York, in order to be here at latest by Christmas week, as the Banner officials plan to begin studio work on "Lady Of The Night," fourth and last of the Banner Big Four series, not later than December 22.

"Lady Of The Night" is the second Banner feature in which John Bowers has starred, so that he is no stranger to the audiences showing Banner attractions, among whom he is a prime favorite. His previous picture on the Banner release list was "Empty Hearts," produced by Ben Verschleiser on the West Coast, and his splendid work in that feature resulted in his present engagement by the Banner officials.

The story of "Lady Of The Night" is from the pen of William B. Laub, who has also written the screen adaptation. It is said to be a powerful melodrama with a society setting that affords the fullest opportunity for unusual scenic effects and also for those comedy touches that are always welcomed by picture audiences.

The production will be made at the Whitman Bennett studios, in Yonkers, N. Y., and is expected to be ready for release early in 1925. George Terwilliger, the veteran director, who is responsible for many screen successes, will handle the megaphone.

As You Like It

It takes a lot of sand to announce, seriously, that Douglas MacLean's "Never Say Die" has played an engagement at the Gravel Theatre, Good Land, Indiana.

The mad wags will probably take that anything but seriously, but a fact's a fact, and if they want to make any dirt out of the fact it'll have to be on their own hands.

"Swan" Production Finished

Dimitri Buchowetzki has brought to a close the filming Ferenc Molnar's "The Swan," with Adolphe Menjou, Ricardo Cortez, Frances Howard and Clare Eames in the principal parts. Other players are Helen Lee Worthing, Ida Waterman, Helen Lindroth, Arthur Donaldson, General Lodijensky, Mikhal Vavitch of the "Chauve Souris," several prominent Russian players, and two young boys, Joseph Depew and George Walcott.

Nearing Completion

Buster Keaton is progressing toward the completion of his new comedy, "Seven Chances," the stage success by Roi Cooper Megrue adapted to the screen by Jean Havez, Joe Mitchell and Clyde Bruckman. The setting of this comedy is Wall Street. Ruth Dwyer plays opposite Keaton, while T. Roy Barnes and Snitz Edwards are prominently featured.

Elfelt Views "Under Fire"

Returns to New York Immediately After Showing of General King Film

Clifford S. Elfelt executed a "Finnegan" last week when "he walked right in, turned around, and walked right out again."

The young executive of the Independent film producing and distributing concern that bears his name was spending a few days in New York, when he received word that the first picture of his General Charles King series of "frontier days" productions was completed, and he crossed the continent to Los Angeles to view it before prints were shipped.

"I was well repaid for my visit," explained Elfelt, "as I now feel confident that we have a real winner in the King Stories, that Albert I. Smith is producing for us. The picture I viewed, 'Under Fire,' featuring William (Bill) Patton, is one of the fastest action productions I have looked at in many a day and it presages a new era in the production field of the independents."

"Galloping Hoofs" Announced For Release Christmas Week

THE week of December 21st marks the release of Pathe's latest serial "Galloping Hoofs," co-starring Allene Ray and Johnnie Walker. The picture is billed as a George B. Seitz production and presents an excellent cast in a fast moving story written by Frank Leon Smith.

The story is a race track melodrama in which a race horse, "Goldblaze," is one of the prominent figures. In addition to being released as a serial in ten chapters it will also be released as a feature. The principal members of the cast in the support of Miss Ray and Johnnie Walker are J. Barney Sherry, Ernest Hilliard, Armand Cortez, William Nally, George Nardelli and Albert Rocardi.

The two comedies released for the week of December 21st were produced by Hal Roach. The first is a two-reeler featuring Arthur Stone under the title of "Just A Good Guy." The production was directed by Hampton Del Ruth. The story concerns a young inventor with a leaning towards heavy finance in the real estate field.

Next on the list of Pathe releases for the week is the one-reel Hal Roach comedy, "The Royal Razz," featuring Charley Chase. Many of the main comedy situations in this production are laid in a crowded street car with Chase trying to reach home with a large Christmas tree.

Pathe Review No. 51 carries an interesting installment of the "Keep Fit" series. This is the fourth and to date they have proven themselves popular with both the exhibitor and the patron. The other two subjects of the Review are scenes of the city of Providence in Pathe-color and "Agriculture A La Mode." The latter are interesting views of the innovations made by the rice growers of Madagascar.

Aesop's Film Fables, the animated film cartoon for the week, uses "Mysteries of Old Chinatown" for its comedy subject matter. "Topics of the Day" is also scheduled for release.

Independent Moves

The Independent production units which have been working for the past year out in the Hollywood Studios, are now scheduled to finish their work in the old Grand-Ascher Studios which Independent has rented. The move was unexpected but the opportunity to secure it presented itself at this time when the necessity for larger quarters was being felt.

However, the new studios are to serve only as a temporary lodging place since Independent intends to start building its own studios in the immediate future. There is no doubt, however, that the entire product of the year 1925-1926, comprising fifty-two features and as many one-reel films, will be shot at the Grand Studios, where it is figured that there is sufficient accommodation for the several units which the accomplishment of this program will require.

"Chu-Chin-Chow" Release Scheduled For January 5

JANUARY 5 has been set by Metro-Goldwyn as the national release date of "Chu-Chin-Chow," Herbert Wilcox's big spectacular thriller which has Betty Blythe in a featured role of the screen version of the Oscar Asche and Frederic Norton stage success.

The film was recently given a pre-release showing at Loew's Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C., and proved a sensational "draw" at the big first-run house. On the strength of "Chu-Chin-Chow's" success in Washington, Metro-Goldwyn expects the big special to do a clean-up when it is released after the first of the year. Washington has seen many dramatic successes get their first showing there, but this was the first time that a motion picture had the distinction of a capital opening.

"Chu-Chin-Chow" is said to have everything to assure a tremendous box-office success for the Wilcox-made picture. It is based on one of the most famous stage spectacles in theatrical history, and is known from one end of the country to the other. The story is a thrilling melodrama in an unusual background of old Bagdad. It has its origin in the Arabian Nights tale of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves.

The Wilcox people spent a fortune in producing "Chu-Chin-Chow," with the result that the settings are among the most beautiful and massive that the picture business has been treated to. Betty Blythe plays an exotic character, a slave dancing girl.

Ben Turpin Starts Work

Ben Turpin started a comedy last week at the Mack Sennett Studios, in which politics and politicians are the butt of his hokum. The direction of the new Ben Turpin picture, which is yet untitled, will be handled by Lloyd Bacon. Turpin will be supported by a cast headed by Madeline Hurlock, the comedy vamp, Andy Clyde and Blanche Payson.

New Two-Reel Series

Following the current "Go-Getters" series, co-starring George O'Hara and Alberta Vaughn, F. B. O., B. P. Fineman announces, will produce another two-reel series of featurettes. The cast will embrace all the F. B. O. favorites who have appeared in the recent two-reel subjects.

Schulberg Acquires Rights To Wallace Irwin's Novel

FORECASTING the quality of Preferred Pictures to be produced next season by B. P. Schulberg, J. G. Bachmann, vice-president of Schulberg Productions, announced this week the acquisition of the screen rights to "Lew Tyler's Wives," by Wallace Irwin.

This is the first of a series of purchases which Mr. Bachmann will make in lining up his program for next year. His intention is to continue the Preferred policy of securing big properties that have strong advertising value for exhibitors to capitalize.

"Lew Tyler's Wives" has been the object of a spirited bidding from scenario editors since its publication a year ago in Pictorial Review. Through the pages of this periodical it reached a reading public of three million people for four months. When it was brought out in book form by Putnam it stood at the head of the Publishers' Association reports as the best seller for a long period. Numerous editions have been exhausted.

Relative to the purchase of "Lew Tyler's Wives," Mr. Bachmann said: "This will be one of several special Schulberg Productions to be made from the biggest material obtainable. Wallace Irwin is more than just an important name—he is an author who writes real picture values into his books, as will be attested by our production of 'Lew Tyler's Wives' and by his story, 'The Golden Bed,' which Cecil de Mille is now making.

"We will be ready in the near future to follow up this announcement with others of equal importance. We are negotiating now for several great properties that will be good news for the independent field."

Rin-Tin-Tin on World Tour Following Success in Films

WHILE it was generally agreed among exhibitors of the United States that "Where the North Begins," with Rin-Tin-Tin, was one of the biggest money makers ever turned out of a studio, it has remained for foreign exhibitors not only to confirm that statement, but to go further in several instances and state to Warner Bros. that it is the very biggest money maker they ever have played.

Word was received from Gus Schlesinger, now in Europe, that in Germany, Rin-Tin-Tin in "Where the North Begins," is absolutely the best money maker of any picture now playing there, and this goes also for several places in England, France and Spain.

Exhibitors in Australia, the Scandinavian countries and the Far East, have also written to the New York office telling of the wonderful success of the picture, and asking when more may be expected.

Because of this great personal exhibitor interest, Warner Bros. have decided to send Rin-Tin-Tin on a trip around the world following the completion of his present picture, "Tracked in the Snow Country," now in production. Warner Bros.'s New York office is now making booking arrangements for the dog and Lee Duncan, his trainer, to sail shortly after the first of the year. The first stop will probably be Australia, where five weeks time in vaudeville will be played.

It is planned to send the dog on the vaudeville circuits of the various countries, and at the same time have him appear in houses where his pictures are playing. The trip will be completed in time to start next year's pictures early in the summer, and in the meantime the dog will have pretty well covered the foreign territory.

This decision by Warner Bros. was based on foreign demands and upon the fact that Rin-Tin-Tin was a big success on the trip he took over the Orpheum Circuit last year.

Start Third Year

Broadway and Mirthquake Comedies Continue Their Eventful Career

Arrow Pictures Corporation has been successfully handling two-reel comedies for many years. The new program of Broadway and Mirthquake comedies constitutes the third series for each brand.

The new Broadways will continue to star Billy West, supported by Ethlyn Gibson. Not only does Billy West star in the Broadway comedies, but is practically the owner of the producing company which is making them.

With the new series of Mirthquakes, Arrow decided to substitute for the single-star type of comedy an entire star cast comedy, featuring a number of the very best comedy stars, including Bobby Ray, Glen Cavender and Max Ascher, believing that this would make an even more successful type of what is known as the "slapstick" brand of comedy.

Four Broadways and four Mirthquakes of the new series are now finished.

New Arrow Special

"Lena Rivers," second of the Whitman Bennett Special Productions for Arrow Pictures Corporation, following "The Lost Chord," is well under way. This is an original screen version of "Lena Rivers," the popular novel from the pen of Mary J. Holmes.

The strong dramatic story of this book has been portrayed under the personal direction of Whitman Bennett by an exceptional cast composed of Gladys Hulette, Earl Williams, Doris Rankin, Edna Murphy, Marcia Harris, Frank Andrews, Wm. P. Hayes, Irma Harrison, Gregory Blackton and Johnny Wallace.

Broadway Play Bought

"Strange Bedfellows," Barry Connors' Broadway play, produced last summer by Carl D. Reed and running until a few weeks ago, was bought this week by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for pictures. The stage comedy is considered one of the best picture properties of the season, and has been bid for by leading companies. It opened at the Henry Miller Theatre.

"HOT WATER" IN N. Y. CAMEO

Harold Lloyd's newest comedy, "Hot Water," is booked in B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre, New York City, for an indefinite run. "Girl Shy" ran ten weeks in this house.

Stars of "Friendly Enemies" Plan Personal Appearances

THAT "Friendly Enemies" starring the famous team of stage celebrities, Joe Weber and Lew Fields, will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation as a big special attraction, is indicated by the announcement from the distributors that the production will be given its world premiere in one of the big legitimate theatres on Broadway, New York, and will be showed in the larger cities, accompanied by its twin stars on an extended tour of personal appearances.

It is planned to make the New York premiere of "Friendly Enemies" upon the occasion of the diamond jubilee of Weber and Fields, next March, at which time the famous team will celebrate the fiftieth year of their dramatic affiliation and the presentation of the picture on that occasion with the twin stars appearing in person will be particularly opportune and appropriate.

The present vaudeville tour of Weber and Fields closes December 6, at Dallas, Texas, and they went immediately to Los Angeles, where A. H. Sebastian is now making preparations for the production of the picture.

The film rights for "Friendly Enemies" were purchased by A. H. Sebastian on his last visit to New York. The play was produced by Al Woods with Louis Mann and the late Barney Bernard in the star roles that will be filled by Weber and Fields on the screen. Anthony Paul Kelly has made the screen adaptation and negotiations are now in progress for the services of one of the best known directors and a popular leading lady.

Praise Vitagraph Picture

Los Angeles Critics Laud Halperin Production, "Greater Than Marriage"

Greater Than Marriage," Victor Hugo Halperin's adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "Joan Thursday," which Vitagraph is distributing as one of its big current specials, has just had its Western premiere at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, where it was acclaimed by all the critics.

The Los Angeles Examiner said in the course of its review: "Lou Tellegen's portrayal of the husband is accurate and true to life. Dagmar Godowsky portrays the role of an actress who has found success because she is the favorite of a wealthy man. Her registration is sure and gets a response."

The Express said: "Lou Tellegen handles the injured spouse role capably. Marjorie Daw is pretty as the stellar wife, and Dagmar Godowsky handles her role of gold-digger admirably. Raymond Bloomer is most interesting, and Peggy Kelly and William Riccardi inject lightening bits of comedy. The direction is marked by a number of particularly well-handled incidents."

The Herald said: "In making the various characters touch elbows, Mr. Vance has created drama flavored with the alluring back-stage atmosphere and the home life and adventures of the idle rich. He has injected a delicious vein of comedy, a thrill or two, a fist fight, and a tender love story that plays upon the heart strings, in addition to keeping alive until the last a conflict between a career and home in the life of a woman."

Renamed "The Clash"

Edward Laemmle's picture of human nature, with Percy Marmont and Alma Rubens in the featured roles, adapted from Clarence Budington Kelland's popular novel, "Miracle," now running in the Ladies' Home Journal, will reach the screen as "The Clash," has been definitely decided by executives at the Universal Home Office.

Franchise Holders Eager For "Warners", Says Morris

AFTER interviewing a number of franchise holders, who dropped into New York in the last ten days, hearing from others by letter, and calling personally on several others, Sam Morris, of Warner Bros., stated this week that the Warner Bros. product had never had a better showing than at present, and that all of the exhibitors who are now booking the Screen Classics were beginning to inquire about next season's program.

Among the franchise holders in New York since last week were William Shapiro, who has the New England territory; Oscar Oldknow, of Atlanta; Edwin Silverman, of Chicago and Indianapolis; Lou Berman, of Philadelphia and Washington; Arthur Cohen, of Canada; and Harry Charnas, who controls Warner product in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Detroit.

All of them called on Mr. Morris, and expressed satisfaction with business in general and talked over expectations for next year. Without an exception they stated that the outlook for bigger business in their respective territories the coming season was excellent. Especially in the Middle West, where the farmers have had a good year and are expecting a still bigger one, are the exhibitors looking forward to a clean-up. With the political situation settled, the farmers happy, and general manufacturing conditions improved, they told Mr. Morris there is no reason why with the proper kind of pictures, exhibitors all over the country should not look forward to a banner year.

Warner Bros., they were assured, would continue the policy of best books and plays, and a complete announcement of next year's Screen Classic will be ready soon after the first of the year.

Art Souvenir Program for "Captain Blood" in London

FOR the British premiere of Vitagraph's "Captain Blood," at the Palace Theatre, London, a particularly artistic 12-page souvenir program, in colors, was issued. This contained, besides photographs of the leading characters, in costume, and illustrations of scenes from the production, portraits of Rafael Sabatini, author of "Captain Blood," Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and David Smith, the producer.

An interesting feature also was the reproduction, in fac-simile, of the following letter of appreciation, from Mr. Sabatini to Vitagraph:

"I congratulate you very warmly upon your film adaptation of my novel, 'Captain Blood,' and I congratulate myself still more warmly upon having been afforded so splendid a translation to the screen.

"Whilst all may enjoy the result, few can realize the difficulties overcome to achieve it.

"The scenarist has done his work with courage and skill, cutting boldly into the plot, so as to lay bare at the very outset its dramatic elements, whilst the producer has supplied real talent, intuition and enormous labor to give to the vital movement of the story a life and actuality which render the film a very faithful mirror of the period in which my tale is set.

"The work of Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Paige need no praise from me, but I may record my personal delight in it."

Steiner Productions Sold Along Most Unique Lines

WILLIAM ("BILL") STEINER, head of William Steiner Production, in No. 220 West 42nd street, New York City, has hit upon a novel idea in selling his pictures. The pictures must sell themselves.

"When selling my product to the exchange man, I just show my goods and listen," Mr. Steiner says. "If the exchange man likes my pictures, he tells me; I give him my price, show him the line of accessories that go with the productions, and if he is satisfied, he signs on the dotted line. I never try to force sales. My pictures must sell themselves. The exchange men know box office values. Therefore, my producing units make every effort to produce pictures of commercial value to the exchange man who has to cater to managers who want good films at moderate price, first runs, instead of booking commercial junk. Because I am able to sell my product at moderate prices, by no means does it indicate that the pictures I offer are poorly made and cheaply cast. I don't have to try and convince exchange men regarding this fact, all they have to do is to look at the names of my stars and supporting casts."

Prominent Names In Cast

Then he added:

"For instance, in the Edith Thornton production 'On Probation,' the supporting cast includes Robert Ellis, Joseph Kilgour, Winfred Lucus, Helen Lynch, Charles Cruze, Eddie Phillips, Lincoln Stedman, and other well known artists of box office value. On reading the names of the cast, it is easy to get the exchange man to view the film. He realizes that he is looking at a magnificent production, settings equal to anything he has ever seen in that line; the story value he finds equal, and in many cases far superior to the so-called Super feature.

"When he realizes he can buy at a 'live-and-let-live' price, there's no argument, no dickering, be it in America or anywhere in the entire world.

"My work is hard, my hours long, but it has always been so, and I would not have it otherwise if I could. I'm so used to the old routine, and to my customers all over the world with whom I have come in personal contact, that I can't change now.

Made Trip to Europe

"I've made, in one year, two European trips and three from coast to coast in this country. I spend many weeks in California in consultation with the production units, and I always know a long way ahead just what the film subjects are to be. Consequently, when I call on an exchange man, I can keep him truthfully informed as to what he is to expect in future releases, as well as showing current releases for approval. So I am not like the fellow who can see a hundred orders for goods a long way off, but who can't see one order close enough to bring in. I go—show—and get! I don't find much trouble in 'getting,' for reasons I've already explained. The travel is hard at times, but what's worth getting is worth working for.

"It's a fine big Bully world after all, and for the great privilege of being allowed to live in it, no one should find fault with hard work!"

Margaret Morris, former Universal serial star, plays lead in "The Angelus," directed by Arthur Maude. Miss Morris was signed up for the entire series of twelve pictures being made by Mr. Maude.

WILLIAM STEINER

Cutting "The Rag Man"

Word has been wired from Jack Coogan, Sr., to the effect that the cutting and titling of the new Jackie Coogan picture, "The Rag Man," written especially for the boy star by Willard Mack, is nearly completed. Metro-Goldwyn has set it for release the last week in January. Eddie Cline directed under the personal supervision of Jack Coogan, Sr. Robert Edeson, Max Davidson, Lydia Yeamans Titus and William Conklin are in the cast.

"Fashions for Men"

John Stahl is about ready to start photography on his next Louis B. Mayer production for First National release, "Fashions for Men," from Molnar's comedy, in which O. P. Heggie played the lead on the stage. Lewis Stone will have the role of the shopkeeper, which Mr. Heggie played in New York. Norma Shearer will be the leading woman, and Percy Marmont will have an important part.

Miss Corbin in Cast

Virginia Lee Corbin, little Blonde ingenue in Mrs. Wallace Reid's production, "Broken Laws," will shortly appear in another Film Booking Offices attraction. Miss Corbin plays the ingenue role opposite Al Wilson, aviation stunt star, in his second Van Pelt F. B. O. production, "The Cloud Rider," now in production, with Bruce Mitchell directing. Another member of the cast is Helen Ferguson.

Rin-Tin-Tin's Next Picture

Warner Bros. have started casting for "Trapped In the Snow Country," the next picture the firm will make with Rin-Tin-Tin. June Marlowe has been assigned to play the lead, and Mitchell Lewis will play one of the French-Canadian roles that made him so popular. David Butler has also been engaged for an important role.

Cody Signed for Five Years

Upon the expiration of his five-year contract with Independent Pictures Corporation, Bill Cody, western star being featured in a series of eight westerns, will start on a five-year contract which he has just signed with Jesse J. Goldburg, president of the producing company.

"THE SAGEBRUSH LADY," A D'ALLESANDRO PRODUCTION

With Eileen Sedgwick, Barney Furey, Eddie Barry, Billy Steele, Joe Ricksen and Helen Taylor, first of a series of 12 westerns.

Oakland's "Movie Week"

The exhibitors of Oakland, Cal., have got together for a "Greater Movie Week," in an effort to attract attention to motion pictures, and to encourage a greater attendance at the theatre. The week of December 10 has been selected for the program, and Warner Brothers will contribute a large share to the festivities. These include a pageant, parade and movie ball at the Civic Auditorium, at which many stars will be present. Warner Brothers will send Willard Louis, John Patrick, Beverly Bayne, Dorothy Devore, Louise Fazenda, Monte Blue and Marie Prevost.

A Volume to Cherish

John B. Rock, general manager of Vitagraph, received from London last week a copy of Rafael Sabatini's "Captain Blood," with an inscription on the fly-leaf in the author's own hand. The inscription read:

> To John B. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, whose producers so sincerely and magnificently translated this romance to the screen. In appreciation and gratitude.
> "RAFAEL SABATINI,
> "London, Nov. 5, 1924."

Big Cast for "Street Singer"

John Gorman, noted director now in the east where he will direct "The Street Singer" for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, is slowly gathering together a brilliant cast for this production. In the list is said to be two players who are stars of the first magnitude and known from coast to coast.

Being Heavily Booked

Reports received by Abe Stern, vice-president of Century Comedies, show heavy increases in bookings all over the country. The Rialto, Des Moines first-run house, has booked the entire schedule of Century comedies. The Mystic Theatre, Pilcher, Okla., has booked forty-five Centuries for three months. The Newsho Theatre, Witumka, Okla., has booked twelve Centuries for the month of December.

"The Cloud Rider"

Bruce Mitchell has completed "The Cloud Rider," the second Al Wilson aviation stunt melodrama produced by Van Pelt-Wilson Production for Film Booking offices. In the cast are Virginia Lee Corbin, Helen Ferguson, Melbourne MacDowell and Harry Van Meter.

Twelve Westerns Promised By D'Allesandro Company

CLEAN, wholesome pictures with a maximum of entertainment value, designed to win the approval of the regular motion picture fan and to be marketed on a fair-price basis, those will be the chief features of twelve D'Allesandro productions for which F. D. Hutter is in New York City arranging distribution. The president and manager of D'Allesandro Productions of Hollywood brought with him a print of "The Sagebrush Lady" and is expecting within a few days a print of "Into the Web." Both are five-reel westerns.

There always is a ready market for westerns possessing a good story and red-blooded action, and this series of twelve D'Allesandro pictures will have, in addition to real plots and real action, very capable acting. Eileen Sedgwick, who is known to many thousands of fans, is featured. The leading man is Barney Furey, the comedian Eddie Barry and the character man Billy Steele. Joe Ricksen and Helen Haylor, sister of Estelle Taylor, also are in the cast.

Associated with Mr. Hutter in D'Allesandro Productions is Ted Henderson, secretary and treasurer. He recently was married to Miss Elsie Wunch of Wausau, Wisc. and now is on his honeymoon, production having been suspended until the first of the year, which will see Mr. Hunter's return.

The production of westerns is no novelty to Mr. Hutter, whose "Smoking Trails" and "A Game Fighter" have acquired a reputation as excellent audience pictures. Three of this latest series have been completed; the two named above and "Nobody's Girl." This last western has been slightly delayed by an accident to the cutter.

"Love and Glory" Released

Universal announces the release this week of "Love and Glory," a Jewel production directed by Rupert Julian, the man who made "Merry Go Round."

Irene Rich Coming East

Irene Rich is coming East. She has her Christmas shopping to do; will consult with the Warner Brothers concerning two stories (one of which will be selected for her next picture) and she will attend the world premiere of "A Lost Lady."

Film Points Lesson

Prominent Leader of D. A. R. Writes Appreciatively of "Three Women"

In answer to captious censorship which here and there has pointed a questioning finger at "Three Women," the screen classic directed by Ernst Lubitsch, Warner Bros. herewith make public a letter written to the West Coast Theatres in whose houses the picture played, by a woman whose business it is to investigate the moral effect of pictures on the community. The letter follows:

"The West Coast Theatres.

"Los Angeles, California.

"Dear Sirs: I've attended your lovely showing 'Three Women.' The West Coast Theatres certainly did more than their part. The setting and picture effect of the Virgin Island was one of the most beautiful things it has been our pleasure to see. I shall always remember that. The acting in 'Three Women' was good and THE PICTURE HAS A LESSON.

"Very truly yours,

"MRS. FREDERICK W. SMITH,

"National Vice Chairman of Better Films,

"Daughters of the American Revolution."

Planning New Productions

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, now on the coast, is making preparations for the production of two more pictures to be part of the famous series he is now releasing on the independent market—the Chadwick 9. They will be productions of "The Romance of an Actress" by Langdon McCormack, famous author of "The Storm," and "Sunshine of Paradise Alley" by Denman Thompson, author of "The Old Homestead."

Cast for "Recompense"

John Roche has been assigned to play one of the important roles in "Recompense," which is now being cast at Warner Bros. West Coast studio. Others engaged so far include George Siegman, Charles Stevens and William C. Davidson. This is the novel by Robert Keable, a sequel to his "Simon Called Peter."

Lucille Ricksen, Doris Kenyon and Malcolm MacGregor in First National's "Idle Tongues."

"Dante's Inferno" Given Big Welcome at Cleveland Show

CLEVELAND is another one of the big cities which is giving the William Fox screen version of "Dante's Inferno" a hearty welcome. Opening at the Circle Theatre there on November 16, it is now in its third week of big business and may probably hold over for another week. While the Circle is situated a considerable distance from the center of the city—really a residential house according to film classification—it has been drawing from a wide radius due to the heavy advertising campaign and advance exploitation used by Manager Mickey Printz.

The lobby display at the Circle is credited as one of the main factors in arousing advance and current interest in the "Inferno." It is an exact duplication of the pictorial and lighting scheme used at the Central Theatre in New York where the picture is now closing after nine weeks of record-breaking business. Eleven framed scene paintings, 40 by 60 and 50 by 80 in dimensions, are being used together with a huge lighted cut-out especially built and painted for the engagement.

This cut-out display is built from the floor up against a center partition dividing the entrance doors to the theatre auditorium. It is a papier mache and canvas rocky cliff effect ending in a crater. At the top of this crater is perched a gigantic red devil with outspread bat wings and wielding a glowing pitchfork. Reaching up out of the crater toward the satanic figure are the arms and hands of the "lost souls." With ribbons and crepe paper and plenty of red light a vivid and animated fiery scene is achieved, the ribbons and paper moving in the breeze of hidden electric fans simulating a perfect blaze effect. The front entrance to the lobby and around the box-office is also built up to represent the lower regions.

Besides large advertising space used in the regular Cleveland dailies before and during the run of the picture, copy was also packed in the Italian and German publications.

Hogan Directing

James P. Hogan, who made box-office history with "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" is directing "Capital Punishment" for B. P. Schulberg.

Two Chaplin Pictures on the Way

Which Will Be First?

ALTHOUGH it is not generally known just how intense the rivalry is between the two famous Chaplin brothers, Charlie and Syd, over their new starring productions, yet it has practically narrowed down to a race to see whose picture will reach the public first.

Charlie Chaplin's new Alaskan comedy has been in production for many months but it is expected to be ready for the screen early in the new year, while Syd's "Charley's Aunt," the film being made from the famous old English farce comedy, is now scheduled for release the early part of February.

It is interesting to note that Syd Chaplin has been getting on the screen lately much more often than his famous brother. The latter has always taken his own time to complete a production, and Syd, in friendly rivalry with Charlie will soon be out in his third picture since Charlie himself has appeared in one.

The two coming Chaplin pictures of course will be vastly different. Nothing is ever known by the public, of course, about Charlie's pictures until they finally reach the screen. They are invariably from original stories devised by the comedian, and the titles and the plots are seldom if ever publicized before release.

"Charley's Aunt," on the other hand, is from a play which has been on the boards for thirty-three years and has been seen by millions of people. In filming it, Al Christie, and his staff are keeping practically all of the material of the original farce intact, adding only the extraneous funny business which Syd Chaplin and the director and staff have developed as production goes along.

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

More Film Butchery

From W. C. Budge, Projectionist Comedy Theatre, Jamaica, N. Y., comes the accompanying example of film BUTCHERY. It was cut from the fifth reel of "The Spider and The Rose." There was a similar one in every reel end, though the others only took up two frames.

Brother Budge suggests several possible methods for treating with this abuse, but none of them are what I would call possible of application—that is to say none of them would work with satisfactory results. One suggestion is the formation of a club of men upon whom dependence could be placed to detect and report the man guilty of film mutilation. He remarks that of course the club would have to be a large one in order to get results, and the exchanges would have to help out in the matter too.

One Trouble

One trouble is that the exchanges don't "help out." They could stop the abuse if they, as a whole, really cared to. Another is that I have about all the work I care to shoulder, without taking up such a correspondence burden as a "club" of that kind would entail. The suggestion was well meant, but impracticable of application, for the reasons named as well as for others.

There are two means by which the matter might be dealt with. One is, as I have time, time, time and again pointed out, for the exchanges to make a REAL inspection of film, recording all unnecessary damage thereto, every time it is returned from a theatre, ASSESSING DAMAGE OF THIS SORT AGAINST THE THEATRE. The other is for exchanges to report deliberate film mutilation by a projectionist to the union, and if the man is found guilty of doing deliberate damage to films entrusted to his care, then the union to suspend him for a first offense and expel him for a second.

Yes, film punching, CHOPPING and scratching, and all forms of deliberate mutilation COULD be stopped all right, but neither the exchange, except in isolated instances, or the union takes any adequate action in the matter, so there you are.

Question No. 176—Suppose your employer proposed installing a plaster screen, using the wall of the building as its base. Tell us what your idea would be as to its construction and finish. Retire to the depths of your closet and do a little thinking before you tackle this one. It involves more than one thing.

Question No. 177—Suppose your theatre has a stage and it is used, either daily or occasionally, for vaudeville. There is, of course, a fly loft. Would you consider it feasible to use a plaster screen in, say, "one" or "two," and if so how would you make it? Note: This does NOT mean that I either do or do not consider the thing feasible. The question is asked to see what YOU will say about it.

Question No. 178—Suppose you have a plaster screen which is dirty. How would you proceed to clean it?

Question No. 179—What increases the reflecting power of paint?

Question No. 180—Tell us how YOU would mix paint to coat your screen.

Wonderful Offers

James B. Lambert, Projectionist Glebe Collegiate Institute, Ottawa, Ontario, who appears to be a pretty nifty young man, writes:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am a new reader of your department, which I like best of all the good departments in the Moving Picture World. In November 29 issue I saw where our friend Anderson wanted to know about schools of projection.

I wrote one of those "schools" some while back. In reply I received a lot of particulars. They said that after I had paid the registration fee they would, in time, send me a whole projector and film to practice with. They also advised that after I had monkeyed with it for some months I could then get a job as "Operator" in some theatre. Probably they work it the same way you described to Mr. Anderson.

Gosh all hemlock! They'll send a whole projector. I w-o-n-d-e-r if it would be a Powers Six B? AND a reel of film. Gosh! Also I wonder if AFTER the full fee was paid they would send a toy projector and "reel" of film? I am reminded of the time about fifty years ago, when my aunt Rosie found an advertisement reading something like this: "Wonderful discovery. Sure death to bedbugs. No liquid or powder. Success absolutely guaranteed if directions are followed. Price 50 cents."

Aunt Rosie sent the fifty cents. In return she received two small blocks of wood, with the directions, which read: "Catch bug, place same between blocks and apply pressure." And that was that. The terms of the advertisement were absolutely made good. A toy projector and a reel of film ten feet long—well, maybe that is'nt it, but sending a real projector and thousand feet of film, why we all know how likely that stunt is to be pulled off. Congratulate yourself that you were smart enough to refuse to fall for so obviously raw a deal.

New York Men Attention!

The projectionists of Greater New York City are now faced with a proposition of whether they stand for right and honorable dealing, or graft and politics. There are plenty of high grade, decent projectionists in Greater New York City to once and for all slay the hydra-headed monster UNION POLITICS and GRAFT. It is up to those men to do it, and do it effectively, too. WHAT WILL THE ANSWER BE?

It is to Laugh

A projectionist whose name and location I had, maybe, better not divulge, wrote city officials in various places, asking for information concerning the licensing of projectionists. Among them was Albany. The answer received he hands to me, with the comment that it gave him a laugh anyhow, and will probably offer me some amusement.

The brother winds up his letter with:

I would appreciate any personal information you can give me on the subject, as a few of the projectionists here are trying to put over a license law, and do it right.

I would suggest that you communicate with G. P. Barber, Chief Theatre Inspector, Department of Labor, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, for information. I have mailed the book of laws covering British Columbia license to you already. The Massachusetts' State Police might help too, but after all, I think the information contained in pages 883 to 890, inclusive, of the Bluebook is the best that can be had anywhere.

The Albany official who answered was James J. Keith, Commissioner of Public Safety.

Bluebook School—Answers 147-151

Note: Sommermeyer sent correct replies to all last week's questions, but his letter slipped off the pile and was not found until the whole thing was at friend printer's. Apologies!

Question No. 147—Explain why bottom of picture is wider than the top when there is a downward angle to projection.

Daniel Constantino, Easton, Pa.; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Karl H. Sommermeyer, Marietta, Minn.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J. and L. R. Johnson, Philadelphia, Pa., all did well on this one. The reply of Bennewitz, however, has the virtues of briefness and clearness. Here it is:

Where there is a downward angle of projection and the screen is set perpendicular (Surprising how you all missed that latter point.—Ed.) the bottom of the screen image will be wider than its top. This is due to the fact that the light beam, as a whole, has a certain definite spread per each foot of projection distance, and under the conditions named, its lower portion must travel further to reach the screen than its upper portions.

The spread of the light beam per foot of projection distance depends upon two factors, viz: the projection distance and the size of the picture. Of course since the bottom of the beam travels further than the top, it will spread more, hence the bottom of the picture will be wider than the top. The difference between the width of top and bottom of picture depends upon the projection angle and the distance of projection.

Question No. 148—Tell us just how you would calculate the exact amount of distortion (keystone effect) any given distance of projection would produce. Assuming a projection distance of 120 feet, and a vertical distance of 24 feet between lens and center of screen, just what would the effect be?

I looked at one or two of them pretty hard, but I believe all the above are entitled to be named as having answered correctly, plus George L. Carmichael, Portland, Me., and John B. Morton, Chicago.

Again, however, I think Bennewitz wins out for publication. He says:

The answer to this question is illustrated in the accompanying drawing, in which I have assumed dimensions in accordance with those dictated in the question, AND a 16 foot picture. A B is the screen tilted perpendicular to the axis of projection. A C shows it set perpendicular. C B measures 2 feet and six inches. The projection angle is 11 degrees, 32 minutes and 20 seconds. The light beam has a spread of (picture width, in inches divided by projection distance, in feet) 1.6 inches per foot of projection distance for the width, and a spread of (picture height, in inches, divided by projection distance, in feet) 1.2 inches per foot of projection distance for the height.

With the screen set perpendicular (A C) we would have a picture (assuming the projection distance named to be from TOP of screen to lens) sixteen feet wide at the top and (2.5 feet x 1.6 inches) sixteen feet plus four inches equals 16 feet four inches at the bottom.

This condition would increase the height of the screen image by three inches, so that the total height would be 12 feet three inches. The distortion would increase the height of all objects in the picture by a trifle more than two per cent.

I think you will all heartily agree that this could not be very much improved upon. Also WHAT DO YOU THINK THE EFFECT WOULD BE ON THE MIND OF THE EMPLOYER if he asked his projectionist what the distortion effect would be in a new theatre he was erecting, if he (the projectionist) laid the matter before him thus clearly? Do YOU think it would tend to automatically increase his respect for the projectionist and to enhance his value in his eyes? Think it over, I don't mean by this that Mr. Employer would fall on the neck of the man, kiss him and hand him the theatre, or even an addition to his salary. BUT I do mean that accurate knowledge of one's business, no matter in what line, adds dignity to the man himself and automatically raises him in the respect of his employer. The employer may not be anxious to pay him more money, true. Most men want to get things of the greatest possible value for the least possible money, BUT when it comes to a showdown he is VERY much more likely to dig up more money for the man whom he respects, and who he knows understands his business and is able to and does apply knowledge to his work, than to one whom he either knows or suspects has but little real knowledge. Also it is easier and in every way better for a union to get increased pay for men of real knowledge and ability.

That is the one BIG reason for this "school"—to show you how much there is to learn, and to give you the knowledge in understandable form. Some think I am doing all this just to "sell Bluebooks." They are totally unable to understand any one doing anything of any kind whatever without a money-making object in view. Probably the "school" has sold some Bluebooks. I don't know, nor do I much care, EXCEPT that I do want you all to have Bluebooks FOR YOUR OWN BENEFIT AND THE BENEFIT OF THE PROFESSION. Is it impossible for some of you to assimilate that FACT? Of course I make a small royalty on each book sold. I have to live, but whether you believe it or not, the placing of a book in your hands means FAR more to me than the trifling sum of money involved. I know YOU will be aided, and through you the profession which I want and expect to see recognized as a profession by the industry before I finally "check in," and go my way where I will cease to trouble you.

Well, that's a lleh of—a sermon to sneak in on you, but the real fellers will understand, and the others—don't count.

Question No. 149—Why is the projection angle not a safe guide to the amount of distortion produced, and what is the safest guide?

Constantino, Sommermeyer, Fell, Hanover, Carmichael and Bennewitz all did very well on this one. Hanover says:

The projection angle in itself is not an altogether safe guide, because of the fact that the spread of the light beam per foot varies with different projection distances, therefore with a projection distance of, say 150 feet and a projection distance of eighty feet, projection angle being the same in both cases, the resultant distortion would be quite dissimilar. Projection angle remaining the same, keystone effect and distortion of everything in the screen image increases as the projection distance is decreased, or conversely the distortion decreases as the projection distance is made greater.

Question No. 150—What effect has projection distance on distortion, height of lens above the screen remaining the same?

This question is answered in the reply to question 149.

Question No. 151—In just what proportion does increase in projection angle increase height of picture, and therefore, distortion?

Bennewitz, Hanover, Constantino, Morton and Carmichael all got by, but all but Bennewitz merely quote the data on page 257 of the Bluebook. That is correct enough, but I really prefer the answer of brother Bennewitz, who says:

I would say the amount of increase in the height of the picture, and therefore the distortion thereof and therein is in direct proportion to the size of the picture, the projection distance and the projection angle.

He then makes this comment: Examine drawing H, figure 73, page 254 of Bluebook and you will see it is not correctly drawn. Figure 73 shows the screen set at right angles to the axis of projection; then B C shows it perpendicular, so that keystone and distortion is produced. In both cases the projection distance to top of screen is the same. H shows outline of picture (solid lines) when screen is at position B C, but dotted lines does not show correct outline for screen at position B D.

Correct, brother Bennewitz, BUT that H drawing was merely meant to show the idea. However, the top lines might just as well have been made right as wrong, and I will see that the drawing is rectified in the next printing. Shows that you looked at it understandingly, else you would not have found the flaw.

"Not So Good"

I have sample of a film splice from James A. Hart, Chief Projectionist Rex Theatre, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, who says:

I believe I can make a better splice than those now used in film. As you know, splices if not properly made will have a tendency to cause the screen image to jump. By making splices similar to the one enclosed, all tendency to jump would be eliminated. Will you pass this along for discussion in the department, expressing your own views as to the correctness of this idea.

The splice is made the same as any ordinary splice, except that it runs diagonally across one frame. In theory it works perfectly, BUT I am sorry to have to tell brother Hart that this particular thing was tried out long ago and discarded. It has several disadvantages, among which are the fact that if the advance end of the splice came loose, as if often would in practice, there would be a tendency set up to split the film. Another objection is that such a splice uses up more film when there is a break, or is likely to. A third difficulty is that if such a splice be made very stiff—as they often would be in practice—the jump of the screen image would be multiplied by several, instead of reduced.

I am sorry, brother Hart, but this time I'm afraid you have made a flivver. Never mind that, though, I do it a lotta times myself!

Change-Over Signal

Harry Dobson, Projectionist Palace Theatre, Toronto, Ontario, hands us the following change-over cue sheets, which are made out from each show. It is the ONLY CORRECT CHANGE-OVER SIGNAL. It is the way the real projectionist does it:

Show: "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."
Reels 1-2, As soldiers rush out of gateway toward camera.
Reels 3-4, First scene after C. U. of three men.
Reels 5-6, At title "You are watched, Jennie, so—" etc.
Reels 7-8, As woman kneels at Dorothy Vernon's feet.
Reels 9-10, Title, THE END

Evidently Dobson doubles up reels and "C. U." stands for close up.

Show: Pathe News. Change at title: "THE END."
"Tootsy Wootsy." Change at title: "THE END."
"Lily of the Dust."
Reels 1-2, As army officer leaves the room, where girl is standing.
Reels 3-4, As woman leans against door of room, after two officers have entered.
Reels 5-6, Fade-out of closeup of woman at table with two men.
Reel 7, At title: "THE END."
Show: Pathe Review, at title: "THE END."
"Life in Volenden," at Capitol title.
"The Lion and Souse," at title: "THE END."
"Little Robinson Crusoe."
Reels 1-2, Close up of Jackie Coogan looking at case of beans.
Reels 3-4, When Jackie Coogan reaches in man's pocket.
Reels 5-6, At title "The END."

Now, gentlemen, it is no tremendous task to make a cue sheet such as this. You are a projectionist, not a lounge lizard, and should be willing to attend to the duties of your profession, of which this certainly is one. In large theatres, where there is a previewing of the films, the cue sheet may be made up then. Where this is not done, all you have to do is to make out the skeleton form, like this:

Show—News Reel, change at.....
Educational Film, fade at.....
Scenic, fade at.....
Feature.
Reels 1-2, change at.....
Reels 3-4, change at.....
Reels 5-6, change at.....

and then open your upper magazine door (Terrible, I know, according to the inspector, but do it) just before the end of the reel, watching for the reel and watching the action AT the reel end, jotting it down on the blank lines immediately afterward.

"To much trouble?" Well, I will admit the punch IS easier, BUT if that's your stripe you have really missed your calling in life. You certainly should have been a railway crossing watchman, though I suppose if you were you would try to get the company to hire a boy to raise and lower the gates for you.

Honestly, now, what is YOUR opinion of the man who will riddle valuable film with holes just because he is too d*a*m*n*e*d LAZY to make out a cue sheet as per the foregoing???

Read and Ponder

Mr. Hal Hodes, Branch Manager New York Exchange for Educational Films, Inc., arises from his seat in the front pew to remark:

Friend Richardson: I appreciate the manner in which you treated the letter I sent to Mr. Powell, concerning the diamond shape change-over punch marks. (You mean the diamond shape jack knife marks, don't you? —Ed.) I have yet to find the first projectionist who will admit causing damage to film. There is every reason to believe that my inspection department is efficient. I hold my girls down to thirty reels per day in the matter of inspection. (There we shall have a debate when you get done talking, and my turn comes.—Ed.) Occasionally there is an inspector whose work does not measure up. It usually requires but one week to discover this, and she is then promptly replaced.

Problems

When I realized the evil of, and the damage caused by the unnecessary punch marks, I conceived the idea of eliminating them, but soon found that if I did this I would have to order new endings for every one of my prints. It appears that the projectionist (ALL of him) does not consider the marks of those (ALL of them) who ran the films before him to be at all reliable, so that usually he limbers up his l'il punch and adds a few to the previous collection. Examine films which have passed through the hands of a dozen projectionists, and you will find approximately a dozen different marks, ranging through the gaumut of big punch marks, medium punch marks, little punch marks, marks apparently made by scratching the emulsion with (A) a nail, (B) a knife, (C) a chisel, (D) a garden rake, (E) by rubbing the film against a brick wall. Marks made by cutting holes with a jackknife. Marks consisting of gummed lables, big, little and medium. Marks made by insulating tape, marks made by—oh, well, what's the use? You've seen them all, I make me no doubt.

Comedy

And right here the comedy enters, because the man who gets the film about at that stage complains (usually after adding HIS line of marks) that the end of the film is so mutilated that the action on the screen consists mainly of a dance of the holes.

One would suppose New York City territory ought to be about the best there is, because surely if good projection is found anywhere it should be here, yet the damage from punch marks is often little less than wierd.

Recently I turned over to Harry Mackler, president of the projectionists' local union of New York City, I believe, an example of a five-sprocket-hole splice which came back from a theatre downtown. Incidentally this classic in the way of a splice came close on the heels of a damaged film claim I recently instituted against this theatre. Evidence was produced by the exhibitor to prove that the operator (Operator is GOOD.—Ed.) had been with him for many years, and was one of the best and most careful in the territory. THE FIVE-HOLE SPLICE COULD NOT HAVE BEEN IN THE FILMS WHEN HE RECEIVED THEM, BECAUSE THAT SPLICE WOULD NOT GO THROUGH ANY PROJECTOR, therefore he could NOT have used the films with it in—and he certainly used the films, else he would have had no show.

Here's a Wallop!

The thought has often occurred to me that THERE IS A SINGULAR LACK OF PROFESSIONAL PRIDE IN THE RANKS OF MOTION PICTURE PROJECTIONISTS. A mechanic is always proud of his skill, and when given half a chance will EXPRESS THAT PRIDE IN THE MANNER IN WHICH HE TURNS OUT HIS WORK, in the care he bestows upon the tools of his trade, etcetera.

As an exchange manager, my experience with projectionists has been that they spend most of their leisure hours, NOT in study calculated to perfect them in their profession, but rather by devising alibis tending to prove that no damage to film could ever, under any circumstances, have been done to film by THEM, but that the employes of the film exchanges are lying awake nights in an effort to devise means of mutilating films in order that they may harass the projectionist!

Golly!

Golly! I guess that'll hold us for a minute, allrighty right! I have given the letter of friend Hodes space because it is well to hear the "other" side occasionally; also because they have the RIGHT to be heard. Moreover, because there is much truth in what Hodes says, though it does not apply to the projectionist, but to the "Operator," who by his own claim, being merely the operator of a machine, cares little or nothing for such matters of damage to film, provided it manages to get through HIS projector without actually stopping the show.

As to the thirty reels a day—well, friend Hodes, I don't believe the girl lives who can carefully inspect and competently repair thirty thousand feet of film a day, making a really competent record of damage found, so that all damage may be traced and kept track of. I have been an exchange manager (For Carl Laemmle, Memphis, Tennessee) and I forbade any inspector in any way hurrying inspection and repair. I held fifteen reels a day, or at most twenty, to be all an inspector could handle and do perfect work.

I paid inspectors eighteen dollars a week—that was about fifteen years ago—and found my inspection cost about twenty-two cents per reel, BUT the film was always in as nearly perfect physical condition as its age permitted. There was a complete and exact record of every particle of damage found, so that I very soon knew exactly where damage WAS done, and when it kept coming I would send the projectionist a letter, setting forth the record of each bit of damage. The record told what reel it was in, what the date was, exactly what the nature and amount of the damage was, and the letter told the projectionist that unless the films were taken better care of the damage would in future be charged to the theatre. Results were usually forthcoming.

Worth .22 Per Reel?

Was it worth twenty-two cents a reel? Well, I'll tell the wide world it WAS. But to do all this and do it WELL required about half an hour, on the average, to the reel.

As to the five-hole splice—I don't know what Local 306 did about it, but I do know that it should have called the good "brother" up on the carpet and read him the riot act good and plenty. I hold it to be the duty of a union to co-operate with exchanges, reasonably, in such matters as this, disciplining members for failure to do good work.

LATER: I send friend Hodes a carbon of the foregoing, because I hardly felt I had the right to publish it without his consent. I have his reply, and while it will make this article very long, still the matter is well worth the space. He says, in part:

Ali True

* * * I like to think that those who mutilate film are not projectionists, but just plain, ordinary machine "operators," or machine attendants.

Here is one point on which I must set you straight. Our records show that we average only 16 to 25 bookings per print. If what other exchange branch managers tell me is true, then these exchanges run each print from 50 to 75 bookings. I do not permit a print to go out once the sprocket holes are weakened, which frequently happens very early in its life. (Due to too heavy gate and

Film Damage!

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The accompanying photographs are the second installment of those supplied by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. They were prepared under the direction of Earl J. Dennison. Study them. They should have great value in bringing home to YOU the possibilities for great damage to the films intrusted to your care.

MY COMMENTS: Look at Plate No. 4 well, my good brother. It shows the final results of excessive gate tension, against which this department and my handbooks have been preaching for more than TWELVE YEARS. Times without number I have warned you of the evil of this thing, and the tremendous damage it does. Now, thanks to friend Dennison and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is literally rubbed under your combined noses.

THOUSANDS UPON THOUSANDS OF FEET OF FILM ARE THUS DAMAGED EVERY DAY. The only place in this country and Canada, so far as I have information, where excessive projection speed is prohibited is in Denver, Colorado. There the law makers have very wisely made any speed of projection in excess of 85 feet of film per minute illegal.

Elsewhere there is no limit, and since the projector manufacturers well know that projectionists are often ordered to jam film through at as high a rate of speed as 125 feet per minute, those projectors who have no gate tension adjustment—all of them except one—necessarily have the gate tension set at the factory to take care of any speed up to the possible limit. And thus ALL film sprocket holes are subjected to excess strain, the effect of which is made worse where sprockets are badly worn, hooked or undercut.

If you have a projector with tension adjustment, when did YOU examine and test it last? Have YOU tested the tension on YOUR projectors lately by speeding up, when no audience is present, until the picture begins to move up on the screen—evidence that "over-shooting has just begun? IF NOT, THEN WHY NOT???

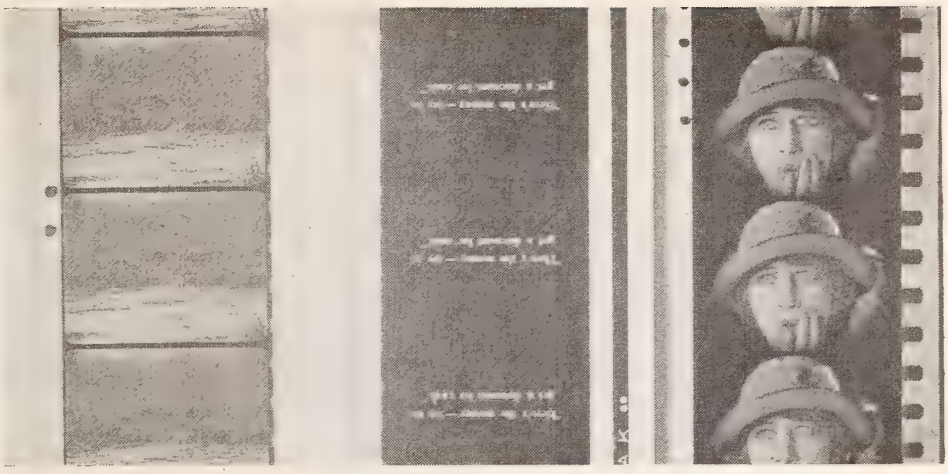

PLATE NO. 3

(By Mr. Dennison.) Other examples showing corner fractures due to the same cause as those shown in Plate No. 2 published and discussed last week.

PLATE NO. 4

(By Mr. Dennison.) This photograph illustrates the manner in which corner fractures, such as are shown in plates numbered 2 and 3, soon break through to the edge of the film, thus making it totally unfit for further use. Film having corner fractures as per Plates 2 and 3 is said to be in No. 2 condition. Film such as that shown in Plate 4 is said to be in No. 3 condition, which is the stage finally reached by film in No. 2 condition, if the film is kept in service.

Read and Ponder

take-up tension, worn sprockets and excessive projection speed.—Ed.)

The Right Attitude

MY ATTITUDE IS THAT THE EXHIBITOR IS PAYING ME GOOD, LAWFUL U. S. CURRENCY, OR ITS EQUIVALENT FOR THE FILMS, THEREFORE HE IS ENTITLED TO RECEIVE THEM IN THE BEST POSSIBLE CONDITION. If you or I, Richardson, entered a grocery and bought a dozen strictly fresh eggs, WE WOULD BE ENTITLED TO ONE FULL DOZEN STRICTLY FRESH EGGS. AND WOULD BE FULLY ENTITLED TO MAKE ONE WHALE OF A HOWL DID WE FIND TWO OR THREE OF THOSE EGGS "NOT SO GOOD," OR EVEN JUST MERELY IN FAIR CONDITION.

The condition of my prints do not require the expenditure of the time you had your inspectors devote to the films in the exchange of which you were manager. I have watched the work of my inspection department very carefully, and can show you, any time you drop in (which I will do very soon.—Ed.), that it is quite possible for my girls to thoroughly inspect and repair an average of 30 reels per day.

You may be interested to know that I "broke in" to the business as an "operator," way back in 1904—those wonderful days when out at Coney Island we thought nothing of starting the daily GRIND at ten A. M. and keep hand cranking 'er right along until far into the night, after the last stray nickel had departed from the Coney "Bowery." Eighteen hours? Sure! That was just a fair average—and the motor was our good right arrum, too, by heck!

It is also a fact that Joe Hornstein, now head of the Howell Cine Equipment Company, broke in under me, as did Lou Epstein, who has been projectionist, for Fox, on Broadway, for many years, and Pop Carlin, who has been a member of L. U. 306 for, lo, these many years.

It probably is due to these experiences that I have always felt a keen interest in good projection, and the thing which hurts is that so relatively few of the men take the keen interest in their work which men in other callings in life display.

All True

I will close this matter for the present by saying that while what friend Hodes has said is just about ALL true, still, with notable exceptions, exchange managers are largely, if not wholly, to blame for the shameful abuses practiced on film, a considerable percentage of which is done right smack dab in some of the exchanges themselves. I have stood in an exchange in New York City and watched employes unpacking film and literally pitching the reels to a table three or four feet away. That is an extreme case, yes, but often and often and often I have found exchange "inspectors" inspecting (??????) film by rewinding it at literally top speed, on a rewinder the elements of which were very badly out of line, using reels in a disgraceful condition.

However, two wrongs do NOT make a right, and I am not defending either the projectionist or operator (especially not the former) for abusing films. My compliments to Manager Hodes. If only we had one like him in ALL exchanges, our film troubles soon would cease.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

More and more are your audiences coming to appreciate photographic quality on the screen. It is one of the factors that count in making your bookings box office successes.

Eastman Positive Film takes care of this requisite—it carries quality through to the screen.

JUST A YEAR AGO

we said that 1924 would be a period of pronounced evil, or marked improvement, for the industry. There could be no standstill. Either there would be a decided return to Real Diversified Entertainment, or Producers' Ego, in the form of overlong, padded features, was going to work incalculable harm to our business.

We are thankful that it has been a year of great good. Showmen have returned to the first principle of motion picture success—variety of entertainment. And this is almost as marked in their advertising as in their presentation.

The influence of Educational Pictures on the Whole Diversified Program has been greater than ever before. We have made our biggest contribution to Motion Pictures, and we are happy over the result.

The year ahead is going to be the biggest in the screen's history.

"LOCKED DOORS"

EVERY night at New York's pleasure resorts you see rich, elderly men with richly dressed young women companions.

Sometimes the man of wealth marries his young protegee. What happens then?

Is the girl-wife content with her loveless marriage for the sake of ease and luxury? Is the husband content to go on lavishing his wealth upon the wife who will not love him? What happens when a young man comes and falls in love with the young wife—and she with him?

It is this situation, packed with dramatic punch and box office appeal, that WILLIAM DE MILLE develops in his new Paramount picture, "LOCKED DOORS." Betty Compson has the role of the young wife, and Robert Edeson is the husband. Theodore Von Eltz, a brilliant new leading man, is the third person in this absorbing matrimonial triangle. And here is wonderful news!—the picture marks the return to the screen of good old Theodore Roberts, smoking his cigar and playing a part similar to "Grumpy." Story and screen play are the work of Clara Beranger.

We honestly believe that "LOCKED DOORS" is the surest-fire box office picture WILLIAM DE MILLE has ever offered you. Produced on the usual careful and luxurious DE MILLE scale, it tells its interesting story in such clean and downright human style, and with such a wealth of excellent acting, that audiences will eat it up! Betty Compson was never so alluring. Theodore Roberts was never so lovingly laughable.

People will thank you for giving them "LOCKED DOORS."

With one engagement of "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" the profits from this production paid for a Southern exhibitor's theatre.

Rex P. Barrett, of the Cozy Theatre, Columbia, Mo., says that the fourth time he played the picture, "for three days we had to hang out the well-known 'Standing Room Only' sign."

In a mid-west state capital this season, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" played at the first run house to a bigger gross for the week than any other big special of the year.

There's Such a Thing As

No. 414—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Lae

I DON'T WANT ANY BLOOD MONEY. I NEVER HAVE believed, and never will believe, in squeezing the very last dollar out of you whenever I sell you a picture.

EVERYBODY IN THE BUSINESS KNOWS THAT THE live-and-let-live policy is the very basis of the Universal structure. I will admit this policy is not altogether too popular with some producers. In fact I have been called several different kinds of names for holding prices down. That rolls off of me as water rolls off a duck's back.

THE TROUBLE WITH THE MOVING PICTURE BUSIness—or anyhow, one of its great troubles—is the fact that there are too many men in it who are too darned smart. They always out-smart themselves in the long run, but sometimes they have a pretty long run before they smart themselves out of their jobs.

I HAVE HEARD OF ONE SALES MANAGER WHO PURposely oversold his customers this season so he could make adjustments with the exhibitors' own money. His theory is that it makes the exhibitor feel so good to get some of his own money back as an adjustment that he thinks the producer is a pretty fair-minded fellow.

THAT MAY BE PRETTY SMART FOR ONE SEASON but it's too darned smart for my appetite. I'm gambling my whole business on the belief that some day every exhibitor will realize that any producer who out-smarts him is too darned smart to do business with. It's a long, long pull because many exhibitors seem to love to be humbugged—but some day they'll wake up with a bang and a headache.

Being Too Darned Smart

mmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

I DON'T WANT ANY SMART ALECKS SELLING PICtures for Universal. In one of my letters of advice and instruction to Universal salesmen, I said:—

> "I don't want any contract that is not equitable. I don't want any contract that has any trick clauses in it.
>
> "I don't want any business transaction between any exhibitor and any Universal salesman which can possibly bring worry, fear or suspicion into the exhibitor's mind.
> "There is not a single exhibitor in the world who will fail to give you white treatment for white treatment. There is not one who will take undue advantage of the fact that I have instructed you to keep our record white."

A FAIR DEAL IS ONE WHICH WORKS BOTH WAYS. For the same reasons that I don't try to gouge exhibitors, no exhibitor should consider it smart to gouge Universal. We don't raise our prices in order to make adjustments later on. A live-and-let-live basis should benefit the Universal as well as its customers. It should work both ways. Some of the theatre booking combines are giving Universal a terrific squeezing, hammering our already low prices below cost.

IS IT SMART? ISN'T IT TOO DARNED SMART? What do you think of it, man to man? And if you are in a booking combine, will you do something about it after you have thought it over?

The Mystery of

No. 415—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Lae

PROFESSOR DANNENBERG, WHO WRITES SYNCOpated editorials for the Film Daily, put his finger on something the other day. He touched one of the vital spots in the moving picture business—the great What-is-it of the business, in fact.

I REFER TO THE WHAT-IS-IT THAT MAKES A PICture please an audience.

HE QUOTED A MIGHTY INTELLIGENT EXHIBITOR out in Michigan who has been running such pictures as The Covered Wagon, Monsieur Beaucaire, The Sea Hawk, Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall, America, Sundown, Merton of the Movies, Feet of Clay and Secrets.

"BY MISTAKE" THIS EXHIBITOR BOOKED "K-THE Unknown". Then he said to Professor Dannenberg, "Will you believe me, literally dozens of people coming out, stopped to comment that 'K-The Unknown' was the best picture we had had this fall—more than have commented on any one of the others."

AND NEXT THE EXHIBITOR SAID TO PROFESSOR Dannenberg, "You know it isn't the best. So do I, but there must be a reason for this sort of comment in a house that has built up the clientele the above pictures necessarily would build up".

YES, THERE MUST BE A REASON. THERE MUST BE a What-is-it.

the "What-is-it"!

mmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

LET ME SO SOLVE THE MYSTERY OF THE WHAT-IS-it, here and now. Let me tell this wide awake showman something which every smart showman ought to know by this time, bless his heart.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES ARE SHOWMANSHIP pictures. That's all. It's as simple as that. Long, long ago we discovered that there's no box office money in high-hat stuff.

THE GREAT WHAT-IS-IT OF ANY PICTURE IS ITS human appeal. We look for that element before we buy a story. And we hang onto that human appeal and pack more of it into every picture. The millions of movie fans who support you and me are not dumb-bells. Neither are they highbrows. They are simply two-legged human beings who don't give a continental damn about any entertainment unless it contains those elements which give the old heart a tug now and then or squeeze a tear or two from the eye or force a grin along the front of the face.

NOW AND THEN YOU'LL BE STAMPEDED INTO BUYing pictures which sound big for one reason or another, but when you want real showmanship—the great What-is-it of the entertainment art—you'll come to headquarters for it!

YES, THERE MUST BE A REASON WHY UNIVERSAL pictures hit the fans right smack in the heart. There must be a reason and there is. It's the great What-is-it and Universal pictures are full of it.

Odds and Ends

THE big fellow and the little fellow. They present a problem to the Film Boards of the country. And in the amount of success with which individual boards meet the problem you can often gauge the general success that their work has attained.

Here's the problem: When the arbitration rules began to operate we doubt if there was a territory where the small town exhibitor didn't say, "Oh, yes, those rules are fine for us fellows, but I'll bet they won't make the big key city first runs live up to them. Wait until they get into a scrap with one of the big fellows and you'll see how much strength those Film Boards have."

It was a natural feeling, and it made the early stages of arbitration difficult. There was no way of meeting such suspicions except through actions.

Well, at this writing, as far as those territories are concerned in which we have been able to make personal observations, the suspicions are on the way to being completely squelched. Film boards have acquired sufficient confidence in their own strength—they may have had it at the beginning—to lay down the same law for the big fellow and the little chap.

We happened in one city just at the time one of the biggest theatre men in the territory was being presented with the sad news that he would have to pay close to two thousand dollars on a contract he was seeking to forget. We know nothing of the merits of the case, but the action is going to greatly strengthen arbitration in that territory. A lot of little fellows who have been skeptical are going to say:

"Gosh, they are willing to go after the big man too, aren't they?"

WE attended a film board meeting in another city and heard upwards of an hour of discussion and sympathy on the case of a small man who probably never should pay more than fifteen dollars a day. The exhibitor had overbought, and over-paid, and was in a bad hole. And a score of hard-boiled exchange men were working out ways and means of lifting the load.

It's good to hear and see those things.

We doubt if any first run man in the territory could have received as much time, and we know it would not have been given with the same sincere sympathy.

* * *

FILM boards have their problems. To the best of our knowledge, they face one now in trying to abandon entirely the practice of allocating dates as a means of clearing the tangle when an exhibitor has over-bought.

It has been said, and correctly, that the practice of allocating dates was necessary and helpful when the arbitration procedure was started, because there was then a heritage from the past.

It has been added, and also correctly, that if uniform contracts and ethical standards mean anything, allocation by the film boards should no longer be necessary. In theory, the exhibitor should know by this time that when he contracts for pictures he will have to pay or play eventually.

But the theory doesn't jibe with the practice. Exchangemen and salesmen will still sell exhibitors, knowing that they are loading them with more pictures than there are playing dates; theatre men will still sign contracts, sometimes to help a friendly salesman, sometimes to check the opposition, without full realization that the name on the dotted line means something.

So we say, it is a good thing to do away with the allocation of product. As long as it exists there is a temptation to the manager who shuts his eyes to the future he is creating.

Nor is that all. Independents have complained that allocation by film boards works to their injury. "The big companies load the exhibitor up to the breaking point with contracts," they say. "Then the inevitable arrives and they take the exhibitor's affairs in hand. Dates are set on all the product for which the exhibitor has contracted. And what is the result? We independents are automatically out of the town for months and months to come.

"Do away with allocation," they conclude. "And let every company stand on its own selling strength and the merit of its product. Then the independent will have a chance."

How Exhibitors Would Write Press Sheets!

By Tom Waller

Your idea of a press sheet—Of what should it consist?
Advance reviews of picture—Do You believe in them?
Why? How many in press sheet?

REVIEWS and advance reviews are favored by all but seven of the representative film theatre managers, advertising and publicity men, 315 of whom received the Principal Pictures Corporation questionnaire.

A press sheet should be a service medium and as such should be void of verbosity. It should not include over four pages which should be gotten out in a regular newspaper style. Each story should have a concrete basis and no matter how good this is it should not be overworked with irrelevant details.

The answers to the above questions which form the subject for the fourth and last article of the series on press books, obtained from the data in the Principal questionnaire, are so complete and clear as to best convey what is needed in this respect. Any attempt on our part to give anything but the most general resume would result in duplication. In each answer there is a valuable nugget of information to the producer and distributor. We would therefore suggest that you read every answer as published exclusively in this issue of Moving Picture World with care.

This article on "How Exhibitors Would Write Press Sheets!" concludes the series published exclusively in four consecutive issues of Moving Picture World, and based upon over 30 vital questions, on the press sheet situation, submitted to 315 of America's leading film theatre managers, advertising and publicity men by Principal Pictures Corporation. So great has the nation-wide interest of exhibitors been aroused in this campaign to improve press sheets that many prominent showmen not only answered in detail all of the queries, but took the trouble to sit down and submit additional data.

The Principal questionnaire has aroused such interest among the nation's film theatre men that several of them not only replied in detail to all of the thirty-five queries but took the trouble to sit down and write a synopsis of their own on their version of a model press sheet. These are of such interest that we are including several of them in this story. Following them are the answers to the questions above with the name and address of each man rendering an opinion.

Nat. L. Royster of the Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama, has this to say about service mediums:

"I use the press books from several different firms, some good and some bad. Most of the press books carry too much 'hokum' about the stars likes and dislikes, and not enough meat about what the picture is about. I think that a press book should contain articles about the star, story and author mainly. Not mere piffle about how the star can swim, kiss and dive, but meaty stories, stories with some sense to them.

"I think that the majority of the press books should carry enough advance stories to last, say, one week before the picture is to play, and then a story for every day during the run of the picture, on a weeks run. I now have a press book before me which only has five stories in the book. A press book should tell in bold type what length the picture is when it is released, numbered in feet. Not two out of ten do that. I think that those boys who design the display ads for press books are over-anxious in displaying the title of the picture into the scene in the ad. In other words, they let the title run across the picture of a man and woman in the ad, so that when we want to take the man and woman out of the ad to decorate an ad, there is a part of the title in the cut.

"A press book should also carry a continuity sheet, catch lines and above all, as much exploitation material as possible. We publicity men can originate much ourselves, but the boys who are in touch with the progress of the picture when it is made, have a better chance to give valuable aid to theatre men.

"Unless some star in the picture has really appeared in a worth-while production ahead of the one in question, no mention should be made of that star's former productions, because if that star's work in other productions were not successful, then it hurts the star to say that they appeared in 'so-and-so.'

"I wish I had time to go into detail about how I would prepare a press book, but if you find that my ideas will be of further aid to you, I shall be glad to co-operate.

"Having worked in every branch of the industry from studio to usher, and having produced many shows of a different nature, I feel that I am better prepared to speak than many of the boys who only know just the newspaper angle."

What press sheets mean to E. M. Berg of the D. F. R. Enterprises, Wichita Falls, Texas, as told in his own language, is as follows:

"Of course the press sheets are a great help to the publicity men, some better than others. Without a press book of some kind one would be like a ship with a rudder. For having never seen the pictures he would naturally know nothing about them. All press books contain enough to give a person something on which to work.

"I consider First National and Paramount the best because they usually have a wide range of stories and advertising layouts. In my opinion they too could be improved some. The improvement I think could be mainly in the stories.

"My idea of a good press sheet is one with a goodly number of stories that combine a description of the story, the star and production. I don't mean by description of story to give the synopsis of it, but describe it generally in an attractive way.

"One or two long articles are sufficient. It should have one or two short articles written around the personality of the star.

"It should by all means contain a list of advertising phrases of catchlines. A few paragraphs pertaining to the general production that can be used as fillers for paper program, etc. I also like a copy of a personal letter to patrons generally describing production, star, etc., for mailing list. I find too many worthless stories written about the individuality of the directors, their personality, likes and dislikes, etc. I find that the public does not care for this poppy-cock; they are interested only in the picture and players, and the star particularly. With very few exceptions this playing up of ordinary directors, camera men, film editors and the like is a pure waste of time and space.

"For example ask one hundred patrons who directed a certain picture, possibly one or two per cent. could tell you, but they could all tell you who the star was. Of course it is natural for the people who made the picture to want their credits, and we admit that they are as essential as the players, but the public doesn't care about them and they are the ones that count.

"Velvet Hammer" Unknown to Exhibitor Critics

"Regarding the advertising layouts. I think that the most valuable are the two column from 4 to 8 inches. Large ads. are good but too expensive. One good big lay-out is sufficient. I find that the most valuable layouts are the First National and Paramount two column two inch ads. They can be run often and are well designed, and can't be lost in any paper. I prefer an ad like this to any single column ad. I also like the layouts of First National best, I think that only the title and illustration should be hand drawn, or if the entire ad is drawn, designed in such a way that the title and illustration can be cut away from the balance of the text matter so that you can set to suit your particular needs. I think that press matter should be printed only on one side of the paper whether in newspaper form or book, as when clipping an article or illustration you usually mar something on the opposite side that you want, necessitating having two or more press books."

The significance of press sheets to Earle F. Dorsey, Loew's Palace and Columbia, Washington, D. C.:

"The providing of feature stories for motion picture publicity is simplicity itself and should cause no difficulty provided such sheets are edited by men who have acquainted themselves with the editorial demands of the great rank and file of newspaper editors. Too many press sheets are edited for towns like What Cheer, Iowa, others are edited apparently with only New York and Chicago in mind.

"The real fine work comes in providing exhibitors with ads that can be used without placing the theatre in hock for advertising bills. Most cities of the type of Washington, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, New Orleans, Kansas City, Baltimore and the like, have advertising rates for amusements that run from twenty-five cents to one dollar an agate line. An ad that runs one hundred and fifty lines by three columns wide will cost $450 per paper, with usually two good papers in each town. Imagine trying to meet such bills, yet press book editors seem as a rule, oblivious to this fact.

"One of the greatest evils, and one could write a book of solid, constructive criticism along this line, seems to be due to the fact that the advertising art department has no hand in the taking of "stills" and that such a staff is expected to get results with such photographic accidents as happen to be included in a set taken by a man who never framed an art layout in his life. The art of close-up "still" photography is also another lost art, whole sets of stills coming through sometimes taken the horizontal way of the film and lopping off legs and arms indiscriminately.

"I happen to have before me a press book intended for exhibitors and press agents, only, issued by Vitagraph, on "Captain Blood." It is expensively bound in red cover, with a highly expensive four color scene pasted on the front and everything done inside to make it the most expensive thing in the world. Yet the part intended for the use of the public was not basically good. Paramount spends thousands selling the picture to the exhibitor in four color booklets and yet its ad service, once without a rival in the world, has steadily declined until today it is seriously threatened by several rivals. Metro probably has the worst ad layouts in the universe. The use of halftone is practically unknown and the line effects are laid on, apparently with a whitewash brush. Yet this condition has prevailed for six years or more without the slightest improvement. Some of the ads are actually repulsive, rather than business-getters, and type would be immensely superior to their use.

"All in all, the advantages of the press book, taken by and large, are nearly always outweighed four to one by their disadvantages. It seems so strange, too, when one considers the perfectly simple remedy for the trouble at about one half the cost that is being required to get out the inferior article. I'd love to have a chance to frame one just to get an idea of who's sanding the machinery from the inside for I cannot believe that the men who write them are really as dumb as their work would seem to indicate."

Eller Metzger of the Strand Theatre, Creston, Iowa, gives the following version of what kind of service the press sheet should render:

"Tell the length of picture (for exhibitor's information). Tell why this picture is worth walking a few blocks to see. Tell in concise readers the particularly good features of story, cast, production, direction, photography, etc. Readers should be written in a good "newsy" style by one of sufficient intelligence to appreciate that the public can spot a press agent's hokum yarn as quick as they spot three sheet out in front.

Advance reviews—from four to six of them—in plain English and dealing with facts but building up suspense and arousing curiosity which provokes the fan to pay the admission and see the picture. That is what the vast majority of America's live-wire showmen want. Read their names and then turn a careful eye over their comments.

"Press sheet should contain music cues. Should give a variety of display ads (complete) for use of exhibitors who cannot frame a good ad. Some press sheets show nothing but display cut, but it takes a little selling talk along with cut to make an ad effective.

"Press sheet should give cast, with brief sketch on principals at least, or better still on all of cast. Press sheet should give a few good ideas for exploitation that are practical. Many are not practical for smaller towns owing to cost. Some are a joke in any town. Don't waste paper and ink telling about star hurting her little foot when making this one, or the size of her shoe, her favorite game is dominos, she never drinks tea with her meals and all the rest of the trash that is too frequent. Print on one side of the paper only, as many exhibitors clip both ads and story material. (Some make such changes as they see fit, others just clip the whole thing and hand it in). Forget about how many nails the six hundred carpenters used unless you have a "Hunchback," or something very massive. The public hates statistics in any form. The big thing in any press sheet is to provide exhibitor with stuff that will enable him to sell the public, and that means you must know what points appeal to the public. Use these points with a little tact so your reader won't realize this ad or reader is intended solely to separate him from the price of admission.

"Lay off of any statements that can be construed as sex appeal for this loses an exhibitor two dollars every time it makes him a dollar. Show the photos and paper on production. Supply a variety of catch lines that vary in length, most of them are too brief.

"In designing ad cuts don't get them too light. It takes black ink to make contrast on white paper, and contrast is what makes an ad of moderate size dominate a page. Have mats on every cut, and quote the prices of cuts and paper."

This is the general opinion of Thomas H. Fernil, Bishops-Cass Theatres, Denver:

"If the cost were not too prohibitive I would recommend a press sheet of say four pages, designed something as follows:

"One page devoted largely to display ads, slides, paper and exploitation suggestions including tie-ups which have a direct and not remote connection with the picture. Nine tieups out of ten in my opinion are useless.

"One page with conservative stories for what might be called metropolitan papers. Stories to be sophisticated, yet readable and newsy.

"One page with flashy stuff for medium sized towns which cannot afford dramatic editors.

"One page, still louder and very simple, for small towns.

"These suggestions may not appeal to you, but it seems to me very difficult to create a press sheet of any even standard which would be of equal use to all papers. I vote for a highly specialized press sheet."

The following questions are answered in their respective order by the following theatre men:

Your idea of a press sheet—Of what should it consist?

Advance reviews of picture—Do you believe in them?

Why? How many in press sheet?

W. A. Woolfall, Peoples Theatre, Butte, Montana: "Something that will give you ideas to work on—Yes and have short and snappy—People don't care about reading long ones and we have more of a chance getting them in papers if they are short—I should judge about six for advance and during showing."

J. S. Phillips, Rialto Theatre, Forth Worth, Texas: "Just a little on theme, personal work and merit of production—Very good, but except Sunday advance. Cost fifty cents per line—Blank—Four."

E. D. Turner, Imperial Theatre, Asheville, North Carolina: "Duplicate Paramount—Blank—Blank—Blank."

Barry Burke, Palace Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas: "Blank—Yes, and no. It should not tell too much regarding the story of the picture—Blank—Blank."

A. S. Wieder, Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "Good reading, decent ads that can be used at all times—Blank—To arouse interest if proper angle is struck in story—About six."

Exhibitor in Role of Press Book Author

Ralph Thomas Kettering, Jones Linick and Schaefer, Chicago, Illinois: "One or two interviews, dozens of shorts—Not in my territory—It is necessary to write reviews in a style used by the individual paper—None necessary."

Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou, Liberty Theatres, Greenville, South Carolina: "Present ones seem to please—Yes—For preparation advance advertising—Blank."

B. Aronson, Raleigh, North Carolina: "Advance stories, etc.—Yes—Think they help—About six."

Harry W. Crull: "Timely news matter if possible—Yes if concisely written—Because all of the photoplay magazines are carrying reviews—Blank."

John A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio: "Reviews, pre-reviews, exploitation stunts, plenty of good readers, length of feature, and very good prepared ads—Yes—People read them on account of the full report on show—Four or Five."

N. Schechts, Cincinnati, Ohio: "Advance stories, special cast stories, no superlatives—No—Conflict with general view of local cities—Blank."

D. J. O'Brien, Mirror Theatre, Manchester, New Hampshire: "Pathe as sample—To some extent. Not too long—Many people are interested with what pictures are coming—One good advance."

Ludy Bosten, Palace and Amusu Theatres, Muscatine, Iowa: "More real exploitation ideas—Yes—Save so much time to the exhibitors—Blank."

H. Laence, Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, New York: "Reproductions of all mats and a few type ads for ideas—No—There never was a poor picture made according to press book reviews—Short synopsis for advance work."

M. L. Overman, Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Illinois: "Good cuts 1, 2, 3, and 4 column made so they can be chopped up to get any possible type and size of ad—Yes. As long as the advance reviews are not confined to telling about the director, scenario writer, etc. We want dope about the picture we are to play—Stuff the people want to read. Our patrons don't care who made the picture as long as it is good. Too many credit lines have spoiled more "paper" cuts and press matter than any other one item—At least a dozen advance stories all of different length."

Raymond B. Jones, Southern Enterprises, Dallas, Texas: "Seat selling ads, live copy, news stories about four hundred words, program shorts, trailer copy, accessories, general information—Advance reviews can be used rarely except on the Saturday or Sunday spread in the paper. They are valuable for that purpose—An advance review on the picture telling story, etc., is good because the newspapers demand it in Dallas at least—There should be at least three good advance stories in the sheet."

Ben T. Hall, Elmira, New York: "Boiled down truthful reviews and short resumes—Should be short in order to get editors to accept—Blank—Blank."

J. Victor Wilson, Robbins Theatrical Enterprises, Watertown, New York: "Short stories pertaining to the picture—No synopsis of the real story should be published in advance—Because telling the stroy in advance lessens the interest in the picture—There should be a great variety of advance stories concerning the picture in a press sheet. There are always a number of angles in a picture that can be used and are not."

William H. Bauch, General Press Representative of Lytle Theatres: "Advance stories three or four reviews, any features, advertising, all sizes—Yes—Because it saves writing them here—Blank."

D. J. Shea, Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass.: "Blank—Yes, to incite interest and desire, not pondering to personal conceit—Blank—Blank."

David P. Perkins: "Good small advertisements that combine white space and can be used so they can be expanded if needed, advance readers, 'news' accessory sales material—Yes, the majority of editors still refuse to cover a "movie" production and unless they have a prepared review the picture will be ignored—At least three."

W. A. Clark, Palace Theatre Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio: "Stories not too long, dealing with phases and happenings that occurred during the production. People like to read such little side lights and papers also like to point them—Here in Cincinnati the newspapers have their own reviewers and all reviews are carried the day after showing. Can't see how anyone could believe in an advance review—Blank."

Verbosity is one of the evils in most press sheets, according to the concensus of opinion of the men who handle the finished product. Read what many of them have to reply in answer to that question: "Your idea of a press sheet—Of what should it consist?"

E. M. Berg, D. F. R. Enterprises, Wichita Falls, Texas: "Stories of the picture, a few of the players, large variety hand drawn ads., reviews, etc. In our case we like advance reviews of the picture, as our papers have no critics. We of course can correct if not suitable; should be a least two or three worded differently but of course all of the same general trend—Blank—Blank."

T. H. F., Bishops-Cass Theatres, Denver: "Blank—Not for larger towns—Critics do their own reviewing—Blank—Blank."

Sayre, Greater Theatres, Seattle, Washington: "Same as First National material—Yes—It gives an exhibitor a line of stuff to use in various forms in his own newspapers—Immaterial."

Russell L. Brown, Eugene Greater Theatres Co., Eugene, Oregon: "From presentation box in upper left, congenially worded banner head, complete cast and synopsis, a single and double publicity illustration, usually best ad and mat, clean cut advance stories all of first page. The most data with least effort, review, poster illustrations—Not if they tell too much plot, work to climax and break—The climax should not be given away, though the advance story can lead up to it so cleverly one will create a desire to see. Believe people want some hint as to general plot—One good one better than a dozen poor, let's say seven, but try different high spots for leaders."

Harry Castle, Palace Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "Good pictures of the featured players, catchy lines—Blank—Blank—Blank."

Milton D. Crandall, Rowland & Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa.: "Short, snappy stories and mats of various sizes—No—Too long, all pictures are 'greatest'—Blank—Blank."

Nat L. Royster, Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama: "Ads that can be used—No—Because editors prefer not to carry advance reviews—Blank."

E. C. Beatty, Butterfield Circuit, Detroit, Michigan: "Display advertisements in all sizes from one column, one inch on up to full page or half page mats. Copy with some kick in it and not the same thing for every picture just reversed—At least one, intelligently written, concise and not maudlin—To either use in make-up advertisement, display or run in news column—One or two."

Eller Metzger, Strand and Willard Theatre, Creston, Iowa: "Material compiled with intelligence to enable exhibitors to sell a picture they may never have seen—Yes. Need them to create interest before showing—They start word-of-mouth publicity—Blank."

L. W. Brophy, Yale Theatre, Muskogee, Oklahoma: "Just about what any of the big producers are putting out—Yes if Harrison's gives them—It gives me an idea what to expect—Blank."

Charles M. Pincus, Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, California: "Plenty of short stories, good ad copy, big town tie-ups. Lay off sales talks—Yes—Because most are good for early editions and probably come in handy for small town exhibitors—Four or five."

G. E. Brown, Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, North Carolina: "Advance stories, reviews, cuts, cast, synopsis, cheap paper, miscellaneous—Yes, if written in past tense—Necessary and convenient—Three enough."

Earle F. Dorsey, Loew's Palace and Columbia Theatres, Washington, D. C.: "Blank—Yes—Largely because they avoid and make unnecessary rushed and consequently poor reviewing by press agents or others—Not less than five, preferably from four hundred to six hundred words."

Reeves Espy, Skouras Brothers, St. Louis, Missouri: "Good examples of copy, suggestions that are different plus high class reproductions of cuts or just illustrations that can be used in laying out copy—Blank—Blank—Blank."

H. J. Campbell, Majestic Theatre, Hartford, Connecticut: "Reader stories, cuts, ad cuts, exploitation ideas, but not wild theories—No never use them. Prefer to have newspapers, reviews, pictures—On its own merits. Press book reviews do not, as a rule, ring true. They bear earmarks of having been written before picture is seen—Blank."

W. H. Youngblood, Majestic and Edisonia Theatres, Johnson City, Tennessee: "Enough of the story to wet the theatregoers appetite, a little concerning the star's role and short reviews of the picture—Yes—Four—Four."

R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa: "Blank—Not much use in small towns—Weekly papers only—Blank."

Sell 60,000 Tickets On a Second Run Through New Exploitation

Finkelstein & Ruben Disregard Earlier Run. Use More and Better Stunts and Get More Money.

By F. W. Burke

"THE COVERED WAGON" rolled along to the tune of 60,000 paid admissions during a three weeks second run in Minneapolis because the publicity department of Finkelstein & Ruben disregarded the first run and went after record breaking business.

A year elapsed between the first and second showings of the picture and when it was booked for the Garrick last August most everyone had forgotten the first run at the Metropolitan, legitimate theatre.

The story of the success of the second run is one of publicity achievements, extensive advance billing, and determination on the part of the publicists to set up new attendance records.

Real "circus billing" was the opening gun of "The Covered Wagon" campaign. It started two weeks in advance and included the "papering" of ten suburban towns.

Many twenty-four sheets, six sheets and one sheets were used by the Finkelstein & Ruben advertising men and when they completed their posting everyone was aware of the coming of the picture.

The Finkelstein & Ruben publicity department scored heaviest in exploiting this picture when they framed real human interest stories which reached the front pages of Minneapolis papers.

First came the story of the 102-year-old Minneapolis woman who relived pioneer days when she witnessed a private screening of "The Covered Wagon."

Mrs. Elizabeth Murphy, who came to the Northwest 62 years ago in a prairie schooner, sat in the living room at the home of her daughter and witnessed the private screening. Then she gave out an interview to waiting reporters.

Best of all exploitation stunts which brought columns of free publicity was the little boy who rode into town on a bicycle to herald the coming of his parents in a covered wagon.

Little Joe Brown, who told the police he was 9 years old, was the bicyclist. He was picked up by a patrolman when found riding about the loop late at night and was lodged with the police matron.

Joe did his turn early in the publicity scheme. He was interviewed by police reporters the night he was brought to headquarters and shyly told them the story of his exploits.

The boy told reporters that his parents were enroute from North Dakota to their old home back in New York and that they were making the trip in a covered wagon. He said it was his duty to ride ahead on a bicycle and arrange for camping places.

It was two days before the truth of the story came out. During those two days the boy remained in the custody of the police and was the subject of many human interest yarns in the newspapers.

Later he was released to a man and woman who rode into the city in a Covered wagon. They said they were his parents and verified his story. Later it developed that the story was a hoax.

Last came the story of Thomas Barlow Walker, pioneer Northwest lumberman and one of the country's richest men, who viewed "The Covered Wagon" at the New Garrick and then reminiscently told newspaper men how his father made the trip west many years before.

"There is nothing in the world that beats a news story when it comes to exploiting a picture," Eddie Gallinagh, press agent for Finkelstein & Ruben. "Our luck in reaching the news columns did much in extending the run of 'The Covered Wagon.'"

The story of the three weeks run of "The Sea Hawk" in Minneapolis is another story of publicity achievements. It showed to 50,000 persons and had originally been booked for a two weeks run.

Ten thousand cheap little black and white buttons bearing a skull and cross bones was the hit of the Sea Hawk campaign.

It was the desire of the F. & R. publicists to reach the children during "The Sea Hawk" campaign and they struck up the idea of issuing the buttons.

School children wore them to school, to their community stores and to downtown Minneapolis. Everyone began talking about them and then started inquiring. The children responded by telling grown-ups that the buttons advertised the picture and that they were given away by the Garrick managements.

Two hundred canvas banners for store awnings were also placed during "The Sea Hawk" campaign and in addition much paper, including 3,000 one sheets, were posted.

"The Sea Hawk" flew high and "The Covered Wagon" rolled along in Minneapolis because the exhibitors were alive to the publicity and exploitation possibilities.

Quimby No Longer Fears Extended Runs

W. W. QUIMBY, of Bellingham, Wash., is a real old timer in the business. His experience has all been in his home town of Bellingham, in which he opened his first motion picture theatre in 1910, showing a three-reel program with a daily change, or 21 reels a week. He was quite content with this arrangement until the exchanges tried to make him take four reels daily, and he balked over the rental for twenty-eight reels a week. In those days things were pretty much in the hands of the Pacific Film Co. (Grombacher and Bailey) and the old United Film Co.

Mr. Quimby, unwilling to stand for the raise, went to the United and contracted for four reels of film four times a week. It was with considerable trepidation that he extended his runs to two days, with one odd day change. To his surprise he took in as much money as he had with the daily change. People seemed to like the idea of getting a chance to see a picture a neighbor had told them about, on the following day.

Shortly afterwards, Mr. Quimby took on a second house in addition to the Bellingham. He tried four changes here also, but again his film rentals mounted above the profitable point. He took a deep breath and plunged to two changes a week! Still he got away with it. This was three years later. It was borne in on this exhibitor that if he had pictures big enough, he could hold them and still do business at the box office.

After operating the Bellingham for five years Mr. Quimby bought out the old Edison, renaming it the Liberty. During the War he added the Star, to his string. About three years ago, Mr. Quimby and his competitors, E. H. Sothern and Fred Walton, got together and decided that it would be better to run their business on a co-operative rather than a competitive basis. They formed the Bellingham Theatres, Inc., and have functioned splendidly ever since the consolidation.

However, according to Mr. Quimby, who still runs a split week change in the majority of the company's houses, Bellingham is not a large enough town to stand a run over one week, except in very rare instances. It is necessary for the exhibitor to gamble on the drawing power of his attraction at the time he books the picture, else booking arrangements prohibit the extension of the run for several days, if the picture proves a knockout. Where a picture is booked for a long run, of course an additional effort is made to put it over. This naturally adds to the general overhead.

There is also this to consider. That patrons learn to count on your regular change dates, and many who would come on the first day of the new picture, would be annoyed to find the same picture on the program. It promotes somewhat the idea of a fast and loose program arrangement. Your average patron is a creature of habit.

This live firm no longer feels the hesitation over an extended run that troubled Mr. Quimby in the early days. They try to so regulate their buying, to take care and give plenty of time to a big picture, and in the main their judgment on these is justified.

New Blood Needed in Picture Industry; Harry Rapf Offers Young Men a Chance

By Sumner Smith

TRANSITIONS go on almost daily in the motion picture industry, gradually forcing out the oldtime producers, directors, actors and scenarist, admitting the modern school of authors and playwrights, college boys with weird, sparkling ideas which mature heads may revamp into something worth while, newspaper men with their knowledge of human nature and their insistence on realism, even men in the more prosaic walks of life who possess the all-esential quality of imagination. There is a departure from hackneyed themes and hackneyed treatment of themes, once considered the surest method from a box-office standpoint. The motion picture now must have behind it imaginative brains, that touch of inspiration which, focussed on a cold strip of celluloid, makes people laugh and cry and dream. So new blood is needed and the young man has his chance.

These are the views of Harry Rapf, a power on the production end of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood. They have been voiced before, but casually; never, it seems, quite so clearly and sincerely as by Mr. Rapf last week. He is in New York City on the trail of ideas, inspecting stories and plays and talking with authors, playwrights and newspaper men, and he says that some of the men he is meeting will be offered a chance to receive motion picture instruction "on the lot" and will be depended on for new ideas when they have mastered basic technique.

Metro-Goldwyn, he says, is earnestly seeking to advance the standards of the motion picture. Fifty program features will be produced next year and four big specials, one of which will be "A Message to Garcia." This does not mark an increase in output. Rather than produce more pictures Metro-Goldwyn will center its efforts on quality. As it has no outside producers, all of its pictures being made under one roof, this may be brought about through the skilled supervision of Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg and Mr. Rapf, the production heads.

One of the first steps in this direction is the signing of Josef von Sternberg, who made "The Salvation Hunters," a $5,000 feature hailed by Charlie Chaplin as "the finest ever produced," and about which a controversy is now raging. Mary Pickford will make one picture under von Sternberg's direction, it is announced, then he will go on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot until Mary exercises her privilege to "borrow" him for one more feature.

HARRY RAPF

"The motion picture industry must have new blood," Mr. Rapf said. "We now have many young men studying on the lot to ultimately become directors, scenarists and so forth, and we want more of them—witty college boys, writers, newspaper men. I hope to find several here in New York. Furthermore, I want good stories and plays. The industry must get away from hackneyed themes and treatment, and Metro-Goldwyn will give its writers every encouragement and pay them well. They will do plot action for us without having to bother about fine phraseology. They will give us the originality which is so great a need of the screen."

"Will you specialize more on characterization to give the plot action realism?" the writer asked. "There ought to be strong characters as well as a good plot, otherwise realism will suffer."

The question developed perhaps the most interesting talk on story technique that the writer has heard. Mr. Rapf agreed as to the utmost necessity for characterization, pointing out instances where pictures with slight plots have delighted by means of their unique characters. He pointed out the need of incident in developing a character—the showing of some revealing trait during the course of the story rather than an unconvincing explanation in subtitles. The brave man displays bravery in an extraordinary situation, stamping him definitely as courageous; he is not convincingly brave simply because he wins a fist fight and a subtitle extols his victory.

"The need of new blood is apparent," Mr. Rapf continued. "As an instance, the radio is faced with identically the same problem. Radio programs to many people are becoming something of a bore because of their similarity. The picture business is purely one of entertainment. We must not sermonize. People want to forget their troubles.

"Mr. Mayer, Mr. Thalberg and I are insistent on that. We always are studying the field. watching the different stars and directors, picking up a bit of knowledge here and unlearning a bit there; listening to the advice of the exhibitor, for he knows what the public wants.

"Mr. Thalberg and I cut and supervise each picture that leaves the Metro studios. It is as nearly right as we can make it before it goes out. If retakes are needed, we order them. Just as plays are rewritten after an unsuccessful try-out in, say, Atlantic City, so we have revamped films. Why not, since the investment in a motion picture is so much greater than that in a play?"

Ideas!

Gathered Along Broadway By W. Stephen Bush

[Editor's Note—It is the purpose of this new department to make a brief record of new ideas in presentation on Broadway. Every new angle in presentation which seems to meet the approval of the audience will be set down and described. No doubt other showmen in other cities are helping their box offices with original ideas. Every theatre owner is invited to send reports of interesting and successful new ideas to the Moving Picture World, when full credit will, of course, be given.]

THE output of new ideas or even clever ideas that may not have been brand new has been rather light on Broadway this week.

The Capitol Theatre had a program in which pictures played a decidedly subordinate part. The only pictorial unit outside of the feature was the Capitol News; the rest of the program consisted of musical and dancing numbers. The big item was "The Mikado" in tabloid form, consisting of eight musical numbers and the finale of the first act. It was by no means a new experiment at the Capitol, for last season Roxy experimented quite successfully with the same popular type of musical entertainment. For this department the innovation at the Capitol has only a theoretic interest, for I doubt whether any other house in the country enjoys the facilities of the Capitol for putting opera on its stage.

Speaking of Capitol atmosphere, so much commented upon by visiting theatre owners from other parts of the country, one contributing cause for the creation of this atmosphere might be mentioned here. A rule has been established in the Capitol that all persons arriving during the overture or the rendition of a solo or important musical number must sit down in the last ten rows until that particular part of the program is finished. The rule is enforced with tact and courtesy, but with unfailing strictness. Patrons obey it cheerfully. As a result the prestige of the house is maintained and a lot of annoyance is saved to the patrons sitting further down the aisles. It may also be noticed that the orchestra works better and with more spirit because of this rule. In other houses it would seem as if the overture merely served the purpose of drowning out the conversation and rushing about of patrons trying to locate desirable seats.

AT the Piccadilly the light and snappy form of entertainment provided by Director Ochs continues to please the crowds. Short musical numbers, never longer than five minutes, have made a hit here. This house is the only one specializing in specialties at the organ, which is in charge of the leader of the orchestra. The prologue to the feature, "The Tornado," was cleverly conceived and quite short. Two soloists, a mezzo soprano and baritone, dressed in the respective costumes of the hero and heroine in the play, sang a duet, "I'll Forget You," and were much applauded. The background of the prologue had an appropriate setting of big trees and wood cutters' cabins. There was a longer weekly, which was split into two parts. Evidently that arrangement was intended to make up for the usual short subjects, conspicuous this week by their absence.

AT the Rivoli the feature of the week, a Thomas Meighan picture called "Tongues of Flame," is aided somewhat by a prologue a little bit above the average and by a well conceived musical score. It is well to make a note of this here because the feature can stand all the aids and props it can get. The prologue had a fine background: the star-lit heavens. An Indian in the full regalia of his tribe is discovered standing in front of his tepee at the left, while at the right, at first hidden by the morning mists, is an Indian maiden. They sing a duet, "Pale Moon" (soprano and baritone), and at the opening of the second verse the mists hiding the girl are dispelled. This makes a pretty effect. The prologue was applauded. The same musical number was then used in the opening of the musical score for the feature. Other striking descriptive numbers for the feature were "Indian Misterioso," "Battle Agitato," "The Furious Mob," "Indian Planet."

AT the Strand a varied program was offered, but it was quite independent of the feature as far as music and dancing were concerned. The one unit which brought good applause was described on the program as "The Serenaders." The setting for this number was strikingly fine and artistic, representing a corner in an old Spanish Inn, with the soloists, Madeline MacGuigan and Evetett Clark, in Spanish costume. The former rendered a solo, "Hegre Kati," by Hubay, the latter a tenor song, "I Pitched My Lonely Caravan," by Coates. What seemed to please the audience was the change from the routine duet. A quartette presented a somewhat unusual thing as only the singers' heads were visible, the rest of their bodies being painted on a frame specially constructed for the purpose. They appeared in three numbers appropriately staged as bathers, then riding in an automobile, and finally sailing on a yacht. The numbers were described as "In the Good Old Summertime," "Ray and His Chevrolet," "Moonlight Bay." The prettiest shot in the weekly, commanding great attention and probably the best shown on Broadway this week, was a scene taken from the Pathe News Reel, showing views and scenes of Ostia, the ancient harbor of Rome, taken from an aeroplane.

ATTENTION has been called by a reader to the simple but well conceived prologue to "Greed" at the Cosmopolitan Theatre. Behind a thin curtain in a flood of light appears a long, slow-moving arm above a pile of diggings. The hand nervously and frequently opens and closes over the heap of stones, fingering some of them, discarding others. It vanishes suddenly and the feature is on.

"Too Many Cows on Broadway"

I quote this as the comment of more than one patron of the motion picture houses on Broadway. As a matter of fact, several thousand cows have been giving a continuous performance, beginning with the Piccadilly and continuing with the Rivoli and Rialto, "Sundown," and "North of 36." This week the Strand offers more cows as the main part of its scenic and weekly. As the music in every case is about the same "Western Allegro" or some theme built around it, the element of variety in the motion picture entertainments on Broadway has been somewhat neglected. The crowds in almost all the houses have been small, which of course is nothing new at this time of the year. It is possible that too many cows may have had its effect on the attendance. It has been observed on more than one occasion that when the principal attractions showed outstanding points of resemblances there followed a falling off in the patronage. The fact is that the one theatre which kept away from this orgy of cows had the best audiences.

Yuletide Greetings from Will Hays

"With a proper feeling of gratification for what has been accomplished during the year now drawing to a close, but with a much greater feeling of gratitude to the public which has made our accomplishments possible by its encouragement and support, the motion picture industry looks forward hopefully to the beginning of another year of opportunity to serve that public.

"During the twelve months now ending more really fine motion pictures have been produced and exhibited than ever before in the history of this form of entertainment. Of that fact we are proud. The success of 1924, however, is but the urge for larger accomplishment in 1925.

"To all the men and women of the industry who have given their sincerest efforts to this great service of providing the public with its most popular form of entertainment, I offer my thanks and my most genuine good wishes that their Christmas may be happy and their New Year one of attainment and the rewards that attainment brings."

Wants Information

A financial institution in New York City is endeavoring to locate a Miss Helen Sinnett, a middle west girl, who has recently appeared as an extra and in small parts in motion picture productions. This institution has information regarding an inheritance for the young lady. If any casting director, executive or other person in the industry has knowledge of her whereabouts, this publication would appreciate their communicating with us, giving us the information, or in having Miss Sinnett call at this office.

Herald Loses Suit

A dispatch to Moving Picture World this week from Chicago contains the following news: "An action brought by the Quigley Publishing Company, representing the Exhibitors' Herald, against the Celebrated Players Film Corporation for an alleged claim of $265 resulted in Judge George of the Municipal Court deciding in favor of the Celebrated Players."

Two Projectionists Burned to Death

Fire which destroyed the Thompson Brothers Theatre at Wilson, Okla., December 9, burned to death J. T. Horton and H. A. Edmonston, operators, who were sleeping in an upper room, and who were suffocated and roasted to death before they could be rescued. The theatre was a total loss.

On December 1 a fire which swept the business section of Sullivan, Ill., practically destroyed the Jefferson Theatre, among other structures. The total loss was placed at $60,000.

Novel Question Box

Milwaukee Exhibitors "Post" Queries; Discussed During Meeting

A. L. Gutenberg, president of the Milwaukee branch of the M. P. T. O., will refuse to be a candidate for re-election, he has announced on the eve of the annual meeting scheduled for the first week in January.

Gutenberg's retirement after a year at the helm is prompted by his desire to give as many members of the organization as possible a chance to act as president.

The Milwaukee unit, which has been meeting each Friday, hereafter will hold its sessions on Monday afternoons instead, according to Mr. Gutenberg. The change results from the fact that Monday is also the meeting date of the Film Board of Trade and with exchange men attending those sessions it is impossible for exhibitors to transact business on Monday, so they have decided to utilize the day for the meetings.

An innovation proving popular at meetings of the exhibitors is a question box into which members are dropping questions they wish discussed before the organization. The plan was tried for the first time in Milwaukee during the last meeting of the state branch.

Country Store Trouble

Haverhill, Mass., Will Make Test Case of Charge Against Louis Close

Louis Close, owner and manager of the Star Theatre in Haverhill, Mass., appeared in district court on December 13 charged with operating a lottery in connection with a Country Store night. The charge was based upon the manner in which groceries and turkeys were distributed at Thanksgiving time.

After hearing the complaint against Manager Close, the presiding justice withheld his decision for an opportunity to study the law governing lotteries. The attention of the police was called to the Star's method of awarding the prizes. It is said that the Haverhill officials intend to make a test case of the incident.

A Country Store in E. M. Loew's Strand Theatre in Gloucester ran afoul of the law in some way, so Manager Shehay put a spotlight on the stage and awarded the prizes by turning the spotlight upon various persons in the audience as a means of designating them as the winners.

Big Film Export

U. S. Ships 18,971,602 Feet During October; Most to England

A total of 18,971,602 feet of positive film, with a value of $609,279, was reported from the United States during the month of October, it is shown by export figures compiled in the Department of Commerce. Of this, 3,650,814 feet, valued at $117,810, was shipped to England, other countries taking more than a million feet being Canada, 2,073,440 feet, valued at $77,819; France, 1,542,314 feet, valued at $34,636; and Argentina, 1,257,706 feet, valued at $49,135.

Exports of negative films during October totaled 710,018 feet, valued at $127,991, of which 377,608 feet, with a value of $92,049, went to England; and shipments of unexposed film amounted to 6,128,427 feet, valued at $118,298, of which Japan took 2,689,900 feet, valued at $56,151.

Coming and Going

Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures Corporation, and his bride, who was Miss Helen Shaw, left for the Coast this week to spend the holiday season with Mr. and Mrs. Sol Lesser.

Lillian and Dorothy Gish returned to New York this week after a trip to Hollywood to attend the Coast premiere of "Romola."

Sydney R. Kent, general manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned this week on the Majestic after having spent the last month in London, Paris and Berlin.

Harry David, special personal representative for Mack Sennett, arrived in New York last week on a business tour of the country.

Arthur Kelley, second vice-president of United Artists Corporation and representative of Charles Chaplin's interests in this organization, sailed for London on December 17.

Madeline Hurlock, Mack Sennett screen "vamp," arrived in New York December 14 for a one-week stay, en route to her home in Maryland for the holidays.

Word has been received from the West Coast that Mrs. Catherine Sennett, mother of Mack Sennett, has arrived in Los Angeles on her annual visit. Mrs. Sennett's home is in Danville, Quebec, but she spends the winters with her son.

Godfrey Tearle, featured with Jetta Goudal in "Salome of the Tenements," under the direction of Sidney Olcott, will sail Wednesday, the 17th, for England so that he can spend his holidays at home.

Europe will be a mecca for Cecil B. De Mille and large party after the first of the year. DeMille is making this his first vacation since the filming of "The Ten Commandments." The party will spend ten weeks in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Venice and Nice. They will leave Los Angeles the last of December and will sail from New York on the George Washington on January 10.

Richard A. Rowland and Sam Katz returned from overseas this week on the S.S. Majestic.

Frank Green, who has been representing the International Film Congress here, left for London late last week.

Harry Brandt, prominent Brooklyn exhibitor, returned from a trip to Europe early this week.

Nicholas Schenck was in Chicago from New York this week.

J. G. Wainwright sailed early this week for England. He announced intentions of making two pictures upon his return.

Lillian Rich is expected to arrive in New York from Hollywood early next week.

Bobby Agnew sailed for Europe this week on a vacation.

Lester F. Scott, Jr., is in New York, stopping at the Astor Hotel.

Samuel Goldwyn left on December 17 for Europe.

After an extended stay on the Western Coast, Samuel Sax, head of Lumas Film Corporation, distributors of Gotham Productions, has returned to New York. On his return east Sax stopped off at the key cities and announces he closed up a number of territorial deals for Gotham Productions.

Publicity and Original Stories Primary, Rapf Tells A. M. P. A.

THE idea that a good picture sells itself received a very definite setback and the power of publicity was advanced several notches when Harry Rapf, one of Metro-Goldwyn's producing executives, addressed the membership of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at the regular weekly meeting held in New York, Dec. 11. Also, the original story for the screen came in for its innings once again.

"No picture, no matter how good," said Rapf, "can sell itself. First, you publicity men have got to tell the public and the exhibitor that you've got a good picture. The salesman can't sell what the exhibitor doesn't want. You've got to tell the exhibitor what he wants; likewise, you must tell the public. Then the selling takes care of itself."

Mr. Rapf said that publicity takes a back seat to nothing in the motion picture industry. He said he ranked it of first importance, being "more essential even than all the actors and all the sets."

"I have my publicity department in on every scenario meeting so that the men will be familiar with the whole story and plan of production and be able to capitalize every possible angle," he said.

As to the production of stories in motion pictures, Rapf said: "The motion picture is too glib to become the second hand receipt of the brain. And with the present penchant of producers for buying published books and produced stage plays for screen production that is what it has become. Books and plays were never really intended for the screen. The screen has been only a secondary consideration so far as most authors and playwriters are concerned. And a great many well known authors want to hand the screen a gold brick. They think, as one of them who came in to see me the other day does, that it is only necessary to put in a train wreck, a blizzard, a tornado, a flood, a few fights and a murder or two to sell a story to a motion picture producer. We're dead wrong in buying just books and plays, and it is only a question of time when very little of that sort of buying will be indulged in. I know it has been said before, but a trained corps of men and women writing directly for the screen, recruited largely from the ranks of newspaper and publicity men, will surely supply the motion picture with needed material in the future."

Mr. Rapf said that during his present stay in New York he has purchased ten original stories. "I haven't bought one play since I've been here and I've seen them all," he said significantly, adding that he would purchase an idea or a story from anyone, regardless of his obscurity, provided that the idea or story was good and fitted in with his production plans.

Another interesting speaker at the A. M. P. A. meeting was Peter Carney, advertising manager for the Winchester Arms Company, who related the success his department had enjoyed in working out tieups with the various motion picture companies, the results being of mutual benefit to all concerned.

James Loughborough acted as barker of the day, introducing the two speakers, and A. M. Botsford, A. M. P. A. President, presided in the chair.

"Chappie" McFarland Dies on Texas Golf Course

Charles A. McFarland, forty-two years old, manager for the Southern Enterprises in Houston, Texas, and one of the outstanding men in southwestern theatrical circles, dropped dead while playing golf Sunday afternoon, December 14, on a Houston golf course. "Chappie" McFarland, as he was known with the Interstate Amusement Company in Fort Worth, managed the first vaudeville theatre in Houston in 1906. Later he managed the New Majestic Theatre in Houston and then joined Southern Enterprises. He was formerly a big league pitcher, earning his soubriquet because he was the Beau Brummel of the National League.

METRO-GOLDWYN NAMES FIRST REPRESENTATIVE FOR AUSTRALIA

The first personal representative of the Metro-Goldwyn interests in Australia and New Zealand since the Metro and Goldwyn companies consolidated will be N. Bernard Freeman. This announcement was made this week by Arthur Loew, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn in charge of the Foreign Department. Freeman, for the last two years, has been assistant general manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, the Australasian company affiliated with Paramount.

Oklahoma M.P.T.O. Holds Annual Convention; Good Financial Shape

THE motion picture owners of Oklahoma held their annual convention in Oklahoma City this week and elected A. B. Momand, Shawnee, president. Other officers elected were F. B. Pickrel, vice president, Ponca City; L. W. Brophy, secretary, Muskogee, Robert D. Hutchinson, treasurer, Oklahoma City and Foster McSwain, Ada, F. A. Jackson, Jr., Pawhuska, Morris Loewenstein, Oklahoma City and J. H. Moulder, Sapulpa, directors.

Col. H. A. Cole, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, Hon. J. J. Strickland, Secretary of State of Texas and S. G. Howell, editor of the Motion Picture Journal of Texas, delivered addresses.

Strickland made a plea against the exhibition of unclean or salacious films, and also said that the censoring of pictures would easily be defeated when the people understood the situation.

Col. Cole made a plea for a well-organized association sufficiently financed to maintain an office in Oklahoma City to carry on trade relations and advertise the aims and development of the picture trade.

A resolution was adopted requiring exhibitors to pay as dues 1½ cents per capita, based upon the population of their cities. A resolution was also adopted against non-theatrical performances.

A resolution was passed requiring a minimum of 30 per cent. of receipts to be paid to theatre managers when permitting their theatres to be used for the production of home plays. A weekly bulletin was also authorized.

All of the representatives present paid in their per capita assessments in cash, and it was voted that it was the best and most enthusiastic convention ever heretofore held in Oklahoma.

An excellent dinner was served Tuesday evening and the convention closed Wednesday.

Wants State Arbitration

New Jersey Seeks Own Board; Special Delegation to See Will Hays

At a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey held in Trenton, N. J., recently a special committee composed of R. F. Woodhull, chairman; Messrs. Rosenblatt, Rosenthal and Juskowitz was designated to confer with Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., with a view to providing the State of New Jersey with a board of arbitration to handle cases within the state requiring adjudication. President Seider was authorized to engage counsel and a stenographer to represent members of their organization before the arbitration board.

The committee in charge of the dinner to be tendered to R. F. Woodhull, former state president, at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, February 21, next, reported that the Police, Firemen's and Letter Carriers' bands will play at the ball to be held in conjunction with the banquet.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Messrs. Hildinger, Keegan and the Mercer County theatre owners for their hospitality. The next meeting will be held in Paterson, January 15, when Peter Adams and the Passaic County theatre owners will act as hosts.

Nation-Wide Sunday Opening Fight to Finish Being Waged by Exhibitors

By Tom Waller

STATES and cities throughout the Union where Sunday shows are a matter of primary importance are experiencing the impetus of one of the strongest crusades for a ruling on this subject yet waged by exhibitor units. In many instances state-wide precedents are sought by theatre men who are now busily drafting bills to be presented during the first of the year when the majority of these legislative bodies are open for new business when convening for another term. New men in office are also eagerly looked upon by theatre owners to aid in the individual crusades for Sunday opening.

These conditions are gleaned from a flood of reports on this vital subject reaching Moving Picture World this week from its correspondents in numerous territories where the Sunday proposition has been agitated by showmen for years.

The spirit of each dispatch is that such theatre units, many of which have met with defeat in the past, are out to win this time and are re-enforcing the bulwarks of their previous experience so as to make them as nearly invulnerable as is humanly possible.

Leaders of the theatre owners group in New Jersey are especially optimistic. A wide open Sunday for the theatres there is more promising than ever in view of the recent action of grand juries in two counties urging that the Sunday opening matter be adjudicated by the State and not by local option as now prevails.

Preliminary plans for definite legislative action in this respect were made by the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey at its latest rotary meeting in Trenton. There the board was the guest of the Mercer County showmen.

Charles Hildinger, vice-president of the M. P. T. O., N. J., and chairman of the legislative committee, made an extensive report on the work of his committee up to the present time, and called for a full meeting of this committee to be held December 18, for the purpose of drawing up final plans for the legislative campaign.

In Seneca Falls, N. Y., the Sunday proposition was put to the people in the form of a referendum. The major portion of the citizenry there voted for it and so after a local fight of years the theatre owners in that town have finally won one of the toughest battles which they have ever encountered.

The same success was met by theatre owners in Bushnell. Illinois, and as the result building in that town has already increased.

In Windsor, Ontario, Canada, a campaign is now under way for a "wide open city."

The legislature of Rhode Island at its opening convention will be immediately confronted with a demand for a state-wide ruling on the subject by the state organization of exhibitors.

Indianapolis also wants a definite decision on Sunday opening.

The details of this series of individual crusades for Sunday opening are included in messages to Moving Picture World from its correspondents which are as follows:

SENECA FALLS, N. Y.—Sunday motion pictures will be legal here after necessary procedure of the village board of trustees is completed in passing a village ordinance and properly advertising this for two weeks. This is a result of the popular referendum at the election the other day, when the issue was carried by a majority of 298. Voting was light in every district, only approximately 25 per cent. of the population balloting on the proposition. With a population of 4,172 over 21 years of age, only 1868 voted on the issue. Village President A. S. Hughes stated that a special meeting of the village board will be called when the vote will be canvassed and a village ordinance passed, allowing the presentation of motion pictures on the first day of each week in the afternoon and evening.

BUSHNELL, ILL.—This town until recently had no Sunday show. Then people voted on the question. S. E. Pirtle during the campaign promised to build a new theatre if Sunday opening won. It did and Mr. Pirtle last week started work on a new 600-seat house, which is to be completed March 1.

WINDSOR, CANADA.—Alderman Albert W. Strong has launched a campaign in Windsor, Ontario, for a "wide open Sunday," advocating the breaking away from old-time restrictions because of "unfavorable amusements" now indulged in by the young people.

"A wide-open city on Sundays is not harmful to anyone if properly supervised," declared Alderman Strong in introducing his subject before the Windsor City Council on December 12. He suggested that the various recreations be allowed on Sundays between the hours of 2 p. m. and 10:30 p. m. Windsor is a busy industrial city opposite the City of Detroit, Mich.

FITCHBURG, MASS.—Sunday motion pictures in Fitchburg are banned so long as Mayor John B. Fellows holds the position of chief executive of that city. When a delegation of Fitchburg theatre managers called upon the mayor to confer with him in regard to the Sunday show project they were told by Mr. Fellows that picture shows would conflict with services in the churches and that he would not authorize them.

Mayor Fellows, however, has not long to occupy that office as Joseph H. Delaney was elected mayor in the recent city election. He will assume office on January 1. What his attitude is concerning the presentation of motion pictures on Sundays is not known at this time.

Among the owners of theatres in Fitchburg are Famous Players and E. M. Loew.

RHODE ISLAND.—One of the first bills to be introduced into the new state legislature, which will convene on January 1, will be a measure providing for the right of theatrical managers to present shows on Sunday. At present only concerts and benefit performances are permitted. The exhibitors are carrying on a campaign for the purpose of stressing the Sunday show appeal. The Victory Theatre in Providence two weeks ago Sunday presented a program made up of six acts of vaudeville of residents of the city and some films and a collection was taken up for a Christmas fund. At the Emery Brothers' Majestic a Sunday show of pictures only was presented and here a collection was taken up for the Spanish War Veterans. It is the aim of the exhibitors to create a public demand through these Sunday benefit shows for regular performances on the Sabbath.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Among the proposed legislative measures discussed at a meeting in Indianapolis this week of Republican members of the senate and house of representatives in the approaching session of the state general assembly was the censorship and Sunday regulation bill, which is to be introduced by Senator Earl Payne, of Bloomington. Sponsors of the bill reported that a number of ministerial associations in the state have promised to get behind the bill when it is formally presented. A number of the visiting legislators expressed the belief that there is no need for such legislation and said they stand ready and willing to vigorously oppose. F. Harold Van Orman, of Evansville, who led the fight against censorship and Sunday regulation in previous sessions, has been elected Lieutenant Governor and by virtue of his office is presiding officer of the senate. He is in a position to assign the bill to any committee he desires.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Petitions bearing the signatures of citizens in nine towns in Kansas, Colorado and North Dakota, protesting against the enactment of a Sunday closing law for the District of Columbia, were introduced in the Senate last week by Senators Phipps of Colorado, Frazier of North Dakota, and Curtis and Capper of Kansas.

Several hundred signatures appeared on the petitions, which were submitted from the towns of Christian, Juhl, Bowesmont and Cakes, North Dakota; Denver, Erie and Golden, Colorado; and Towanda and Bazine, Kansas. They are aimed chiefly at the Jones bill which would close all places of amusement in Washington on Sunday.

Canon Chase and officials of the Lord's Day Alliance last week visited the office of Senator Jones of Washington, author of the bill, urging him to endeavor to secure a passage of the measure during the present session. Senator Jones is a member of the District of Columbia Committee, in which the bill is now pending for consideration.

Latest Activities in Theatre Building Epidemic in Chicago

DISPATCHES from Moving Picture World's Chicago correspondent reveal this week the latest happenings in theatre building activities in the Windy City.

Real estate bonds to the value of $1,250,000 are being offered on the new Ure Theatre and office building that is to be erected on Howard Avenue, Chicago, the house having been leased to Balaban & Katz for twenty-five years at a rental paying $2,225,000 for the period, after paying all operating, maintenance, repair and replacement expenses, according to George M. Forman and Company, who have charge of the flotation of the issue. Another bond issue of interest to the film folks is the $750,000 issue placed last week on the Garrick Theatre building on West Randolph Street. The theatre is leased for twenty-four years longer at a rental of $75,000 a year, which is eight years longer than the bond issue will run for.

A loan of $300,000 has been made for the construction of the 2,000-seat movie and vaudeville house to go up at Lawrence and Harding Avenue, Chicago, and the work will go ahead for early completion of the house, which will cost in excess of $500,000. Henry A. Schwartz sold the lot on which the house is going up to the theatre corporation for $80,000.

Harry L. Lubliner, Joseph Trinz and Leo Spitz have organized the Tower Theatre Company with a capital of $50,000 to handle the erection of the new Tower Theatre the Lubliner & Trinz circuit will build on the South Side, marking their first house in that part of Chicago.

I. S. Reis, L. L. McDonough and G. H. Bennett have organized the International Company, Inc, to put on presentations and other attractions for the movies The firm has a capital of $10,000.

HENRY NELSON RECUPERATES

Henry P. Nelson, secretary of the New Jersey M. P. T. O., is recovering from a long siege of illness. Mr. Nelson has been ill for more than seven weeks and was thought to be convalescing when he suffered a relapse. Nelson expects to be up and about before the holidays. He is one of the most active members of the state body.

WASHINGTON M. P. T. O. PLANS DISTRICT MEETINGS

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington are planning three district meetings in various parts of the state in the near future. This policy is adopted in appreciation of the fact that exhibitors in these districts find it both inconvenient and expensive to make frequent visits to Seattle where the association headquarters are maintained. The first meeting will be held some time this month in Spokane.

After Professor Freud

Sam Goldwyn Sails; Seeks Psychoanalyst's Signature

Samuel Goldwyn left for Europe this week to negotiate for the services of Professor Freud, the noted psychoanalyst, in connection with future productions.

While in Europe Mr. Goldwyn will make a survey of production, distribution and presentation conditions in England, France and Germany, and will make a special trip to Austria to confer with Professor Freud to induce this genius who founded the modern love science of psychoanalysis to come here and give American producers the benefit of his discoveries.

Basing his belief on the tremendous power and influence exerted by Professor Freud in the expressions of present-day fiction and literature, Mr. Goldwyn feels he will render a distinct pioneer service to the picture profession by bringing this European master mind direct to the studios, as he did in the past by bringing noted authors into contact with the production staff.

"I believe American pictures can be made more penetrating, truer and more absorbing with the valued assistance of this love specialist," said Mr. Goldwyn.

Milwaukee's Curiosity Aroused Over Landau Quitting Big Job

LEO A. LANDAU, for years a power in downtown exhibitor circles, has thrown a bombshell into Milwaukee's film colony with the announcement of his resignation as director of the Garden and Alhambra Theatres to take effect January 1.

His successor, it has been announced, will be O. J. Wooden, who already has resigned as manager of the Milwaukee branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to take the new post. Wooden in turn has been succeeded by G. S. Smith, formerly of the Winnipeg office.

No sooner had word of Landau's resignation been spread than rumors by the dozen filled the air, most of them bringing instant denials however.

One of the most persistent rumors dealt with talk of the houses being leased to the Saxe chain, which already has 23 houses in the state, and which, through the $2,000,000 Wisconsin and Strand Theatres, offers the only real competition to the places Landau has managed for the Uihleins.

However, all the principals involved have strenuously denied this and if there is anything to this rumor no one has been found who can give it verification.

Just what Mr. Landau intends to do has not been revealed, but certain it is that he plans to remain in the theatrical business as he indicated in a formal statement to the press which reads as follows:

"With reference to rumors concerning my administration of the Garden and Alhambra Theatres, I am severing my connection with the same on January 1. There is and has been no friction of any kind and both theatres have my best wishes for the future. I am not at liberty at present to divulge my future plans except to say that I will continue in the theatrical business."

Resignation of Mr. Landau was particularly surprising in view of the fact that the last two weeks have seen the greatest business the Alhambra has ever enjoyed in its long history, this being due mainly to the personal appearance of Gilda Gray.

Lively District Session

Exhibitors of Nebraska and Western Iowa Meet in Onawa

A district meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Nebraska and Western Iowa, was held at Onawa, Ia., November 25. C. E. Williams of Omaha, president of the association, called the meeting. Exhibitors of that immediate territory or zone attended in good numbers. Music tax and arbitration board matters were discussed at length.

The Onawa Commercial club tendered a banquet to those present. This was a delightful entertainment feature of the meeting. These district meetings will in the future be called more frequently, it was decided, as much benefit to the exhibitors results.

Each exhibitor present became a member of the association. Those present were H. W. Kerr, Little Sioux, Ia.; B. H. Skow, Soldeir, Ia.; A. L. Lafretz, Ute, Ia.; C. F. Drefke, Denison, Ia.; Peter Krauth, Denison, Ia.; C. W. Schmidt, Ida Grove, Ia.; J. D. Warnock, Battle Creek, Ia.; W. A. Bowker, Onawa, Ia.; L. J. Sherwood, Moorhead, Ia.; S. C. Harsh, Mapleton, Ia.; C. D. Bell, Moorhead, Ia.; W. C. Whiting, Whiting, Ia.

Billboard War

War on billboards has been opened in Milwaukee and as a result they may be abolished by official action of the common council. An ordinance, said to be the most drastic in the country, is being drafted by the city attorney at the request of an alderman who will introduce it in the council.

Anti-Censorship Campaign

New York Exhibitors Busily Drafting Bill for Repeal of Odious Law

No time is being lost by W. W. Farley of Albany, chairman of the legislative committee recently named to draft a bill calling for the repeal of censorship in New York state. Mr. Farley said a day or two ago that he had secured copies of similar bills introduced last year and the new bill would probably be identical with the Walker bill of the last session. Mr. Farley has already taken up the matter with Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the T. O. C. C., asking his advice as to the campaign which will be waged.

Sam Moross, Secretary of the T. O. C. C. when asked what suggestion O'Reilly had made said that the reply by the chairman of the Manhattan organization was but a matter of form and that the campaign plans would have to be discussed with Walter Hays, newly elected chairman of the state organization, before a public announcement would be made.

According to J. H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y. and a member of the legislative committee of that body, the exhibitors will also have a bill introduced providing for the repeal of the measure prohibiting the admission of children when unaccompanied which law has caused much trouble for exhibitors throughout the state. A very important bill will soon be introduced in Washington of particular interest to exhibitors, declares Mr. Michael, the provisions of which soon will be announced. Representative Clarence MacGregor of Buffalo will introduce this bill.

Albany Zone Session

In order that all exhibitors in the Albany zone of the M. P. T. O. of New York state extending north to the Canadian line and west as far as Syracuse, south of Binghamton, may have a better opportunity of understanding the work to be done by the new Albany Zone committee, a meeting to which all exhibitors are to be invited will be held in Albany on January 6. This was settled at the first meeting of the Zone committee held in Albany last week and at which the recently named officers presided. It is expected that the coming meeting will be largely attended and will be one of the feature events of the year from a motion picture standpoint. At the coming meeting there will be outlined the plan which is now being formulated for the campaign to be waged in the hopes of doing away with censorship in New York state.

Samuel Suckno, of Albany, owner of four theatres in that city, who died recently in the Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York City, left an estate of approximately $121,000. This consists of about $118,000 in real property, but which, however, is mortgaged to the extent of $47,000. Personal property amounted to $50,000. Letters of administration were issued this week to Mrs. Suckno. The estate will be divided among Mr. Suckno's widow and five children. At the time of his death he was operating the Albany and Regent theatres, downtown houses, and he had leased his two residential houses to other parties.

F. P. Canadian Corp. Heads Pay $60,000 for Slice of National Hockey League

A startling development has taken place in Toronto, Ontario, in the purchase by representatives of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation of the Toronto club franchise in the National Hockey League, the big professional ice hockey circuit comprising the leading cities of Eastern Canada and Boston, Mass., for $60,000. The deal was consummated on December 10. The purchase was made by President J. P. Bickle and Managing Director N. L. Nathanson, of the Canadian Famous Players, the transaction marking the entry of the noted theatrical men of Canada into professional sport.

For some years the Toronto Hockey Club, whose team is known as the "St. Patricks," has been under the management of Charles L. Querrie, who is also the manager of the Palace Theatre, Toronto, an attractive new house operated by Famous Players. It is announced that Mr. Querrie will retain his interest in the Toronto hockey franchise and will be the managing director of the club under the new ownership.

Famous Players will also secure the Arena Gardens, Limited, Toronto, the large sport palace in which the hockey club plays its home games, it is announced. It is the intention of the corporation to secure special attractions for the Arena Gardens for periods of the year other than the hockey season, these including features that are now booked into Massey Music Hall.

State Unit Will Safeguard Detroit Members from Bombers

ALARMED by the many daring and effective robberies and holdups of Detroit theaters and theater managers, together with a theater bombing outrage that occurred last week, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan are taking active measures to protect their membership against the depredations.

Last week two theaters were bombed and one was forced to close for six days as a result of the ill-smelling explosives. This practice of bombing houses where non-union projectionists work also has been assuming alarming proportions of late and the exhibitor association intends to combine its campaign to wipe out both evils.

The Savoy on Chene street and the Olympic on Michigan avenue were the two theaters that were bombed. Neither theater realized any material damage, but the loss may be figured in the number of days each sacrificed before the places could be made fit for the public. Police have arrested several suspects and exhibitors have secured detectives to hunt down the guilty ones.

Film matters in Detroit were further enlivened by a fire which broke out in the Film Building, a seven story structure that houses all the exchanges in the city. The sprinkler system in the building worked perfectly and the loss was confined to water soaked advertising matter. However, all employes in the building were so alarmed that a wild scramble was made for the exits. No injuries were recorded outside that of the operator of the projection machine in whose booth the blaze started. He was so badly burned that he was taken to the hospital. The fire was caused by a jam up of film in the machine.

As a result of the fire it is likely that the police department will require all screening rooms in the building to provide certain fire fighting apparatus especially designed to combat film fires.

Buys "Quo Vadis"

Rowland, While in Italy, Purchased Latest Version for First National

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., announced upon his return Monday from six weeks spent in Europe, that he had obtained the American and Australian rights to the new and elaborate film version of Sienkiewicz's great novel "Quo Vadis," which the Unione Cinematographica Italiana has just completed with Emil Jannings in the featured role.

Mr. Rowland was accompanied on his trip by Sam Katz, a member of the executive committee of First National and of Balaban & Katz, Chicago exhibitors. They purchased the new version of "Quo Vadis" while in Italy and brought a negative back with them.

The big Italian producing company has been at work on "Quo Vadis" for the past two years. It is in twelve reels and has been made on a most elaborate scale, much bigger in every respect than the original version, which was the first motion picture ever shown in a legitimate theatre in America at regular theatre prices. It was shown in 1912 at the Astor Theatre, New York, at the $2 top scale of admission.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS REEL EDITOR BADLY HURT

M. D. Clofine, editor of the International News Reel, was struck and severely injured by an automobile in New York City last Sunday night, December 14. For many hours his life hung in the balance. He now is thought to be out of danger, although he is still confined to the Knickerbocker Hospital.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Special Speed Spook Car in South is Responsible for Many Return Bookings

RECENTLY we published the first decent photograph we have been able to get on the special car designed for ballyhoo work on The Speed Spook. Most photographs have been overrun by the crowds until the car was practically hidden. They had to take the car out into the suburbs and shoot quick before they could get a photograph showing the car itself.

That picture was of the original Buick built by C. C. Burr for the exploitation around the New York district. On this page we give photographs of a second car, built by A. E. Hanger, of the Palace Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., with the co-operation of Jack K. Adams, of the Home State Film Company. It was built in a local garage.

It not only brought business to the house, following a record breaker the week before, but it was brought back for a return engagement because it was found that the interest created by the car spread after the run of the production. The picture was brought back to capitalize this later developed interest with excellent financial results. The car is now working through that territory and repeating its rebook stunt.

Many Adventures

The car was completed on the Saturday before the opening and was taken out for a road trial on Sunday morning. It went dead as soon as it came out of the garage and had to be towed to get a start, because it was not possible to start the motor by cranking.

It ran all right on the trip out, and created no end of excitement, but it got even more notice when they started to turn it around to head back to town. It went dead again and had to be towed in with the gears locked.

Monday morning it was taken out by the house advertising manager and ten minutes later it had rammed a street car. It had Hanger scared each time the telephone rang for fear a more serious accident would be the message brought over the wire, but the day ended without further incident.

Its Master's Voice

To play safe the mechanic who had built the car was then engaged as driver, and there was no more trouble. As the car is ste red by a periscope and the mechanism must be handled in very cramped space, only an experienced man should be permitted to drive.

After that the car behaved and, like its original, it got into the movies through a special picture made by the Pathe local cameraman. The excuse for breaking into the Pathe News was that it was a part of the local Safety First drive. It was, but the drive had been organized by the house as part of the exploitation scheme, and the section of the film was pomptly amputated by the local exchange.

This film followed a simple scenario in which the car drove the owner to the State capitol. It was told to return home and come back at a stated time. On the way home it raced with a motorcycle cop, was forced to the curb and the hidden driver uncovered.

The only accident to be blamed on the car was a head-on collision between two other drivers who were so interested in the car that they failed to see each other. They met on the widest street in town, but they came to a smash. Mr. Hange writes that but for the fact that the stunt was worked in the last week of the Presidential campaign he would have made the front page every day. As it was he had to take second or even third page to give right of way to Coolidge and Davis.

Mr. Hanger also worked a clever business luncheon scheme. There are the usual clubs in Little Rock, and as each of these held a luncheon meeting a man dressed as the spook would be driven up in the car, enter the hall and make an address.

As the stunt can be worked without the use of the trick car, the speech is given here for the benefit of others. It runs:

"I am the spook of a speeder sent back to roam the earth for evermore as a warning to reckless drivers. I am sentenced to spend a week in Little Rock. There are no automobiles where I was sent. Had I observed the traffic ordinances I might be eating lunch like you instead of picking cinders out of my teeth.

"I tried to beat a train to a crossing and that's why I am what I am now. I didn't believe in signs or signals. I spent lots of time and a geat deal of money with Judge Lewis. He did his best to break up my bad habits but he couldn't do it.

A C. C. Burr Release

THREE SHOTS OF THE SPEED SPOOK NUMBER FROM THE PALACE THEATHE, LITTLE ROCK

The larger picture shows the car as it stood in the lobby of the theatre after an adventurous career on the streets. Below, on the left, is the car with the fake hood lifted, showing how the actual mechanism is concealed. On the right is the car with the house staff dressed as they were during the run of the picture. A similar dress was used by a speaker at the business lunches.

"I cut corners, I wouldn't signal, I hogged the middle of the road, I exceeded the speed limit, I wouldn't let anybody, not even the fire department, pass me, and now look what I am.

"I passed street cars that were standing still, I passed up traffic cop's signals, and raced with the motorcycle squad, and see what it got me.

"Now take a tip from one who knows, take your time and save a fine, drive slow and enjoy the scenery, come to a dead stop before crossing the railroad crossing, observe the Golden Rule and treat the other fellow like you want him to treat you, be thoughtful of other motorists and pedestians, don't run over anything just for the fun of it, and you'll live long and prosper.

"See you at the Palace Theatre any night this week. Good-bye."

As these visits were unheralded, they made a surprise feature that the clubs appreciated.

Putting about $400 into the stunt, Mr. Hanger is getting some of it back on rentals of the car to other managers, and he figures that he got the money back on his own engagements, so the rentals are all velvet.

Went to the Devil

Red rubber balloons which inflate to form a fat little devil were used by Tod Browning to advertise the Fox production of The Inferno at the Olympia Theatre, New Haven.

We don't know whether these are an exchange accessory or whether Tod rustled them for himself, but anyhow they are good.

He made them better by permitting an evening newspaper to make the distribution, which not only ensured a careful handling but gave him the front page mention for a full week. They were given in exchange for a coupon cut from the newspaper, and none were given to children not accompanied by a parent or guardian. This ensured advertising to the adults while it still pleased the children. The supply was limited to one thousand.

Taking Time by the forelock, the Kansas City Star began in the middle of November to tell that it would show Peter Pan at Convention Hall December 27 as a treat to the children. That means six weeks hard plugging for the general run of the picture, too.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

WITH the Rudolph Valentino picture, "A Sainted Devil," running one hour and fifteen minutes, the Mark Strand Topical Review, requiring eight minutes, and a Grantland Rice Sport Pictorial, running nine minutes, there was only twenty minutes left for musical numbers in order to hold the show down to the usual two hours. As it was, the show ran actually two hours and two minutes, being broken up by five incidents, including the Valentino film.

The overture chosen to fit in with the atmosphere of the feature was Rossini's "Barber of Seville." This was staged and lighted as follows: gold draw curtains were closed across the small production stage and upon these were thrown four arch spots, two of which were orange and two light blue. Covering these colors from the dome were two orange Mestrum floods of 160 ampere, which also sovered the musicians. There were two overhead entrance spots coming down on the orchestra. Cove lights were green and foots of large stage were blue. This overture took eight minutes.

In between this overture and the atmospheric prologue was the Mark Strand Topical Review, which has become quite a feature through the especially chosen scenes and the accurately scored music.

The atmospheric prologue was programmed as "Pan Americano" and was in special full stage setting, designed and executed by P. Dodd Ackermann. This set showed a setpiece South American garden wall with engrilled gates in the center. On the two gateposts were electric lanterns, with magneta shades. The background was a neutral blue drop, used as a transparency for sky effect, showing several stars. This back drop was lighted from the front by deep blue open box lamps which were hidden behind the garden walls. A leg drop of mango trees was about five feet in front of the back drop, falling just behind the wall. Lighting on the set was subdued, the foots and the spots from the side being orange and straw. At opening eight female dancers, a mezzo soprano, a baritone and a tango team were seen grouped across the set. The first number, following orchestral introduction, was "Petenares," a dance by the ballet, led by the premiere danseuse. Following this was the mezo soprano, centre stage under a white spot, sang "Habanera" (Bizet). Then came "El Chocolo" by a tango team, after which the number closed with the baritone singing "Remember Me," which is the song theme of the picture. With the last note a scrim closed across the stage and the first scene of "A Sainted Devil" was thrown upon it.

The costumes in this prologue were secured from Famous Players and were advertised as the originals used in making the picture.

The above named musical numbers, including the music with Topical Review, were broadcast Tuesday night of the week, direct from the stage as the first portion of the weekly radio program. The second part was broadcast from the studio adjoining the stage, running for an additional hour and a half.

Triple Play

Most exploiteers are content with a co-op page now and then, but Ernest Geyer, a Paramounteer, got three in one week, in one town and for the same theatre, which happens to be the Palace Theatre, Tallageda, Ala.

There were pages for Men, Her Love Story and The Covered Wagon, and the stunt was kept alive through the telephone number gag. Each of the merchant ads on each of the three days carried telephone numbers. If you found your own number in a merchant space you went to his store and drew a pair of seats. Getting them into the stores was what made the merchants willing to repeat.

Thomas G. Coleman pulled a niftie on Secrets. He was playing America at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., with Secrets two weeks away. After each showing of the Griffith picture he flashed this slide:

"If you want us to buy Norma Talmadge's Secrets to be shown on the same admission prices as prevail on America, please confirm now by your applause."

It cost nothing to clap hands, but all the applauders felt in duty bound to patronize Secrets since they had told Coleman to go to it. It was a neat bit of psychology, for it raised the average about 400 per cent.

TWO UNUSUALLY GOOD DISPLAYS ON THE SEA HAWK FROM THE NATIONAL THEATRE, RICHMOND

The window on the right is that of the Methodist Publishing Co., which handled the book. Note how the title is spelled out on the ships across the top of the window. The other suggests that if you open an account with the Federal Trust Company you will not be a galley slave for life. Both were designed and carried out by Harry L. Royster, of the National.

THAT'S MORRISON GUARDING THE LEFT FRONT TIRE

He wasn't afraid anyone would steal it, but thought it might help the pictorial effect. The truck was perambulated for "Without Warning," the wireless Story Without a Name. The first ten to identify her got free tickets. The rest bought in.

Masked Radio Girl Helps Radio Story

Charlie Morrison, of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, figured that a guessing contest might help Paramount's nameless radio story, since named Without Warning, so he put a mask on a girl, loaded her onto a truck with a radio outfit and offered ten tickets for the first ten identifications.

As he borrowed the truck and the radio set, all it cost him was $5 to the girl for two days' work, and as he came within a hundred dollars of the record, he felt that he could stand that extra expense. Just to make borrowing still more profitable, Morrison persuaded the store loaning the set that it could profit from the ballyhoo by announcing that it had loaned the outfit, so that gave him a nice window where a lot of people could see it.

Morrison had the picture on percentage, so George Eshenfelder, a Paramounteer, came in to help along, not that we ever knew Morrison to stand in much need of assistance. He's pretty well able to look after the exploitation by himself.

Getting so close to the record with a picture that does not class as better than program is doing something.

Pennies for Lincoln

Bronze portraits of Lincoln were used to advertise First National's Abraham Lincoln when it came to the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa.

The bronzes were now Lincoln pennies, supplied by a local savings institution, the Northern Trust Company.

The bank contributed 19,000 pennies and the theatre printed up that many cards and saw to the distribution. The card carried a thrift message attributed to Lincoln and then hooked into the showing at the Hamilton.

As Hallowe'en came during the run, a special performance was given at 9.30 with three $10 prizes for the best impersonation of Lincoln and for the best fancy and comic costume. It served to get the crowd in off the street, where it had been watching the parade which forms a part of the local celebration.

A Clever Idea

Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Forth Worth, Texas, has a new idea. In his lobby there is a string of 38 lights. Gould got shoe boxes of uniform size, painted them to match the walls, cut out a letter on the front of each, backed this with colored tissue and fastened them into place with rubber bands. The only cost is for paint and tissue paper, and it looks as well as far more expensive interchangable signs. He used it first for Merton of the Movies, and cuts new letters when he needs to change the sign, changing the colors for the attractions to get the suggestion of newness.

Clock Face Design Is Creamer's Idea

John W. Creamer, of the Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Mo., used the clock face for Griffith's America, with "Every minute of America represents a thrill." He moved this out into the yard, where he could get a better light for photography, but it was the centre-piece in the lobby during the run of the picture, and he packed this up with extra written slides and personal letters.

A United Artists Release

CREAMER'S CLOCK

The clock is made of a single piece of compo board, with the base light green with yellow lettering. A flasher lamp is set into the "twelve," but shows only as a speck on the photograph. The hands are immobile. It would be better if the hands could be moved, if only the minute hand, if both involve too much gear, but even the flasher got attention.

The clock idea is not new, but it is good for almost any picture with a bunch of thrills.

Getting the most out of Mae Murray in Circe the Enchantress, the Tower Theatre, St. Paul, tied her to shoes, hosiery, hats, cosmetics, phonograph records and jazz band instruments. No wonder they did better than average.

JOSEPH CONWAY'S IDEA OF A COVERED WAGON

Mr. Conway runs the Cedar Theatre, Philadelphia, but a brother manager had the picture first and he let him have the idea of a pony team. This got more attention than would have been given a straight horse team.

The Reason Why

Recently we commented on a poor ad run on The Sea Hawk by Milt Crandall, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh. Milt writes that he knows better than to mix colors on a title, but that this was the prize winner in a local art contest and he had to run it to keep faith with the participating school.

A Fox Release

HITCHING THE IRON HORSE TO A CHICAGO BANK

The Union Trust was founded about the time shown in the big Fox special and this fact was stressed to get a display window and cutouts, old-time photographs, stills and a card telling the story of the bank's rise.

Traveled His Ad

The big Texas football classic was between the University of Texas, in Austin, and the Southern Methodist University, in Dallas. The game was played in Dallas.

Realizing that a large number of people would go from Austin to see the game, E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, arranged for a banner to be displayed in the intermission, announcing The Fast Set and adding that pictures of the game would be shown on the screen in Austin. He figures that he reached about 4,000 residents of Austin.

He also bannered the stadium at Austin where the students who were unable to go to Dallas gathered to watch the returns, and he caught a crowd of about 5,000 there.

To make it complete, the local team was invited to attend the opening to see the pictures made of the game, and this clinched the rest of the crowd.

Set His Signals

All signals were set for a turn-in at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, on The Signal Tower. The Jacksonville Terminal uses the same signaling apparatus as is used on the road on which the Universal picture was made, and because of his friendship with the railroad people, Morrison was told to help himself from the store house.

He did. He got about a dozen signals and all he had to pay was for the trucking and the services of one of the railroad men who came and hooked them up to the house current. He even borrowed a track bicycle and a couple of lengths of track to set it on.

The minstrels were in town, and that is almost as bad as a revival meeting, but Morrison got a couple of hundred dollars over the average and spend less than $20.

Uses Rosin Paper

Russell F. Brown, of the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Ore., uses rosin paper instead of compo board for many of his displays, particularly for the ceiling drapes and wall screns. This costs less and gives just as good an effect.

On The Sea Hawk, for example, he used a valance effect, five feet deep across the thirty-foot lobby. This went across the front of the space. In back were three drops one each in purple, gold and turquoise metallic paint, with a cyke enclosing the entire lobby space. The sides were embellished with cutouts from the sizes while in the centre was the ship from the 24-sheet, mounted on rosin paper and stiffened with lath. It was very effective and helped pull an unusually good business.

Sobler Endorses Postcard Plugs

One of the best stunts for putting over The Sea Hawk at the Lincoln Square Theatre, Decatur, Ill., was the postcard idea.

The opening day of the picture postcards were distributed to the patrons bearing this text: "Just saw The Sea Hawk. It's a marvelous picture. Be sure to see it at the Lincoln Square. I know you'll enjoy it."

A slide requested the patrons to address the card to some friend and sign their own name. At the conclusion of the performance the ushers received the cards and they were hustled over to the postoffice to make the first delivery the following morning. It boomed the Monday business.

One thousand cards were handed out and more than 600 of them were turned in for mailing. We think that this average could be bettered if a table with pens and ink were provided in the lobby.

The stunt was worked by Al Sobler, who is now publicity director for Balaban Katz' Midwest Theatres, of which the Lincoln Square is one of the links in the chain.

TWO SHOTS OF THE EXPLOITATION STUNTS ON THE NAVIGATOR FROM LOEW'S MONTREAL

The lobby ship is a compo board structure, which shows the same from either side. It will be seen that it flies the British flag at the stem. The other picture shows the house staff dressed to live up to the picture. Just by way of sticking to local color the one sheet tells that this "has all other comedies lashed to the mast." The two stunts combined with others served to put Buster Keaton over to a business that matched his first name.

WHAT'S A DEEP SEA DIVER DOING SO FAR INLAND?

Part of the ballyhoo devised by Albert Kauffman, an M.-G. exploiteer, on The Navigator at Fox's Washington Theatre, Detroit. We are afraid that Kauffman rang in a lake diver, but anyhow it was an effective stunt and got the money.

Second Box Office Is Lobby Attractor

Because he needs his second box office only on Saturdays and Sundays, Joseph H. Hanley, of the Kingsway Theatre, Brooklyn, uses the extra through the week as a show window.

Using cutouts from the lithographs, he frames up a scenic model, the backings being painted by his staff artist. He sends in a couple of samples that will not reproduce clearly, but which show his general scheme.

One, for The Alaskan, shows a snowscape with the sun sinking back of the ice-clad peaks in the distance. In front is a bit of open water, with a snowy foreground. The water has been cut away and replaced with green tissue, lighted from behind, while a red light back of the sun gives the proper glow to the sunset sky. Three figures off to the left regard the dominant figure of Meighan in the centre. A sign beside him tells of the coming of the picture. For In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter he has contrived a mountainous background against which are set a number of convincing looking doll houses. Mawruss grinds the camera on Betty Blythe while Abe does the directing. Here the advertisement is shown on a toy delivery wagon.

This style of show greatly enhances the value of the appeal over the usual lithographs, and using the box office for display through the week brings the need for it on the big days.

Thinks Windows Are Best Exploitation

Telling of a couple of his recent stunts, W. M. Beadell, of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., says that he gets best results from window hook-ups, but only where the windows are of the right sort. Unless they are really good displays in the higher class stores, they mean little to the box office. Properly done they help not only the theatre but the store.

He sends a small sticker used to tie Chesterfield cigarettes to Lew Cody in Husbands and Lovers. They are about 1½ by 2 inches, and are in red on white. He pasted every package of Chesterfields in the stocks of the twelve local tobacconists who co-operated. The text ran: "See Lew Cody in Husbands and Lovers at the Madison. Nov. 16-17-18. Lew Cody smokes Chesterfield cigarettes."

It's a simple enough stunt, but the local jobber told Mr. Beadell that they never before sold so many Chesterfields in one week.

Mr. Beadell sends in the photograph of a very tasteful window he got for Manhattan shirts and Dix in the Paramount of the same title. This shows a framed color picture of the star, two stills, one regular window card and one hand painted announcement. About half the window is given to a display of the shirts with hats and topcoats on the sides. There is nothing gaudy about the display. It all carries the suggestion of quality; which is why Mr. Beadell likes the better class stores. He got only nine windows on Manhattan, but they served to give him the business.

Came Easy

Five thousand samples of face powder distributed in Des Moines got fourteen windows in downtown stores and six in the residential district for Mae Murray in Circe the Enchantress. The stunt was almost automatic in its operation, and it helped the run at the Strand.

Got the Board

Out at the ball park in Augusta, Ga., is a large billboard reading "The Augusta Board of Commerce Welcomes you." All summer this carried an advertisement for a tobacco company.

With the arrival of the football season J. L. Shields, Assistant Manager of the Modjeska Theatre, arranged to post his 24-sheets there.

The tobacco company made a fuss, but the Board of Commerce ruled that the tobacco people had the board only for the baseball season.

Governor Helped

Showing the print of The Navigator to the Governor of North Carolina in his private office was the big noise of the run of the Keaton comedy at the Alamo Theatre, Raleigh. Not all exhibitors can have governors, but if your town is too small to have a State official, try it on the Mayor, even if you have to ask him to come to the theatre.

Varying the lifesaver stunt, these were distributed by a man instead of by girls. Dressed in an eccentric costume, with large shoes, he perambulated the streets making the distribution.

AN AUSTRALIAN LOBBY ON IF WINTER COMES

How the Paramount Theatre, Melbourne, dressed the front for the Fox picture. This was backed by wintry displays in the store windows. It's getting hot "down under" these December days and the snow lobby works as well then as it does here.

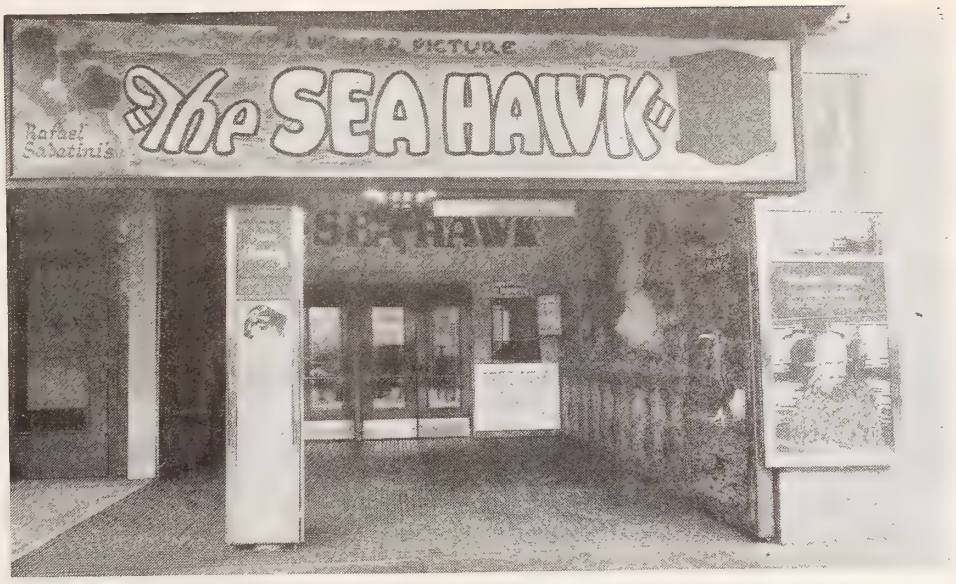
Tied The Sea Hawk to Money Transport

It would not seem that The Sea Hawk lends itself to a hook-in to modern banking methods, but Howard O. Pierce, of the Adams Theatre, Detroit, figured that it could be done, and he got a nice cooperation with The Central Savings Bank.

The window showed the piratical craft with a card reading: "In the days of The Sea Hawk money was transferred by slow and dangerous methods. Now millions of dollars are transferred daily, secretly and quickly. This bank has every modern facility for the handling of money." There was a moral value to the bank hook up that would not accrue from a book or department stor.e

The lobby carried two banners and a wall painting, the latter with a painted balustrade to break the foreground. It was not costly nor even very elaborate, but it was neat and effective.

The girl ushers were dressed as pirates and the prologue was the inn scene devised for the original presentation in New York.



A First National Release

THE NEAT LOBBY OF THE ADAMS THEATRE, DETROIT

Devised by Howard O. Pierce for The Sea Hawk. Note how a ballustrade is painted in on the side wall to break the foreground of waves. It is nothing very elaborate, but it gives a better effect than some of the more costly stunts.

Transformed Lobby Was Very Shipshape

One of the best ship lobbies on The Sea Hawk is sent in by the Majestic Theatre, Seattle. Beyond the side wall paintings this involves little work, and at a pinch blue paper, touched up for waves and provided with cutout ships will serve the purpose almost as well as this elaborate painting.

Some time since we showed a banner in which the trunks of the trees were dropped to the lobby through a careful connection. It would seem that the same thing could be done in a lobby of this type, particularly in inland towns where capstans are not easily borrowed.

Then the sail can be made the banner, lettered if desired, and the mast run up behind this. Ship lanterns can be built of compoboard with isinglass windows of the proper color, and the marine lobby is easily within the reach of the inland cities, and will be even more of a novelty in towns where even rowboats are scarce.

Some managers argue that a really big picture does not need special exploitation, but in most places it will be found that exploitation given the really big picture yields a better return than money spent in an effort to put over a moderate offering. Evidently the Majestic found this to be true for the "second week" strippers are very much in evidence.

Tagged Along

Out in Glen Cove, L. I., the Republicans felt so good about the way the election went that they decided to hold a parade in celebration, the Monday after election day.

Everything from autos to pushmobiles went into the line and among these present was a float from the Glen Theatre with Indians and Continental troops, while boys went alongside and passed out throwaways on America, which was opening the following week. The rental of the costumes was not large, the committee liked the idea of the float, and the people came to the show. Everybody happy, including Manager Harry Hedger.

Hid His Passes

Hallowe'en parties generally cut into business in Sumter, S. C., but Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, was not going to quit without a fight.

He had Little Robinson Crusoe, so just before school let out the teachers announced that he had hidden some passes in the vicinity of the school and the youngsters spent the rest of the afternoon finding them.

He went out into the country for autumn leaves, and put Japanese lanterns in these branches. There was a pumpkin-headed witch stirring her evil brew over a red electric fire, and he got better than normal business in spite of the many parties.

The capstan and mast are the only lobby obstructions at the Majestic Theatre, and yet the transformation has been made very complete. It would work well if you moved the mast to the front line and ran that into the sail instead of a sky piece.

Rebooked Griffith for Hallowe'en Show

Getting up a special show for Halloween, the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, very appropriately booked in Griffith's One Exciting Night for the film attraction. This followed the regular performance and was intended to counteract the opposition of the numerous private parties. The special advertisement was very appropriately framed, and it probably not only brought a good business for the midnight show, but brought many of the people to the last regular performance, as well.

FOR HALLOWEEN

Makes Big Display with Small Cuts

Taking rather more than five eights on Bread, the American Theatre, Evansville, Ind., uses a layout of portrait cuts instead of a scene design, and uses them as much for punctuation as for display. The display is looked after by that big type title, and the selling is done on three separate appeals, two of them above the title and one to the right of the central portrait. The halftones are not particularly good nor are they noticeably poor. They are merely indifferent, but they serve their purpose in breaking up the space, and apparently this is all they are used for, though they do serve to emphasize the cast. The house has made an excellent selection of copy, and while the space looks a little black, it is readable and not unsightly. This last might be forgiven for the sake of the emphasis the heaviness gives. It is a simple display, but it carries the suggestion of strength that implies a strong story. There is no reaching after effect with typographical tricks, but it gets the message over with emphasis as few advertisements do.

Southern Theatre Likes Store Stunt

Eldrick Fisher, who does the exploitation for the Strand Theatre, Lexington, Ky., writes that he finds it advantageous to distribute his heralds through the grocery stores and that this is particularly good where the distributed piece possesses some novelty. Sometimes he uses the straight herald, but he also employs the Paramount postcard reproductions of the 24-sheets, locally printed flashes and for Her Love Story the heart cutouts supplied by Hennegan. A pair of passes is all that the grocer wants, and he gets a direct distribution. This is a good stunt in sections where most of the residents superintend their own kitchens, but in some instances this would not get the paper to the right hands. The Strand also has an arrangement for the regular posting of an 11x14 card with an 8x10 still on each attraction at most of the soda fountains. The cut shows a novelty advertisement for The Forbidden Paradise in the shape of a reproduced letter from Mr. Lasky's personal secretary telling what a good picture Lubitsch had made with Negri. Apparently, the Strand got this before it came into New York, and we think this letter carried weight and helped to sell one of the cleverest productions of the Famous Forty. For Merton of the Movies there was a two-piece item, about 5x8, the first sheet showing Merton and Sara in a plan book cut with "The first part of the script used by James Cruze while filming, etc." The second sheet has the first three scenes of the story. We think that Mr. Fisher wrote this script himself. Certainly Cruze never worked from it. It's all right, for the readers know no better and it did get their interest because it was something new to them. Where time permits, it will be better to get the transcript of the actual script, and this is always easy if the request is made in time. A laundry insert was used for Yolanda. This was not a shirt board, but merely a circular. Blotters were used for Wages of Virtue, a thousand being distributed through the business district. Possibly Mr. Fisher has not formulated his theory in words, but it's another case of change of pace. He tries to be as different as possible, and that is really what sells the product.

ably an expert opinion. It's the best picture ever made. Mr. Kadow offers it. He does not try to add to what Martin has already said. He merely tells you that he is going to show it. He adds a couple more comments, which fill in the space without carrying great conviction. Then he really sells it with the statement that it played in Milwaukee for two weeks at $2 and then came back for five weeks at popular prices. That's sales argument. It's not a one-man opinion but facts that were backed up by the admission money of the thousands who supported the return. Mr. Kadow has rung the bell twice in successive shots. And he throws in a rule-work idea that alone is of real importance. Even with poor copy this would still be an interesting display.

Prize Display Not So Notable

Twice a year the advertising department of the Sandusky (Ohio), Daily Register selects from accumulated examples the best trade and theatrical advertising displays. For the Fall session, the award for the best motion picture display went to the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, for this three twelves on Sundown, taken from the Toledo Blade. Just how this decision was arrived at is not told, but we have seen numerous examples in the Toledo papers that, in our estimation, are much better than this rather crowded space. We believe that the title should be well displayed, that the descriptive matter should invite the eye and then the main figure in an attractor cut should be characteristic. Here the title is only fairly well displayed, but they do avoid the reverse by supplying a benday ground, but the two banks of eight point descriptive matter could be advantageously traded for fewer lines of ten point, and there is nothing in the cut to back up the statement that this is a production out of the ordinary. There is nothing in a bucking broncho to suggest an epic story. That would fit any of the stories put out by any one of four or five western stars. If we did not know that Sundown is a story of a real tragedy of the west, we would be inclined to class this with the average Tom Mix or Fred Thomson. "The Early Bird"

Johnny Hines' Newest is Filled With Pep and Laughter and Should Prove Big Box-Office Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under C. C. Burr's guiding hand there has been established for Johnny Hines a definite and distinctive type of entertainment, built with the box-office always in view, in which the predominating idea is to amuse with clean peppy comedy and bright subtitles, all worked into an interesting human interest romance and with thrills thrown in for good measure.

"The Early Bird," Johnny's latest starring vehicle continues along these lines, and judging by the reception accorded it at a special showing at the Hotel Astor, New York, should duplicate the success of his previous productions.

"The Early Bird" is an excellent audience picture and certainly looks like a big box-office winner. First and foremost is its comedy, and it is a whiz along these lines; not merely smiles, but real laughs are sprinkled thickly throughout its length, gags follow one another with astonishing rapidity and the great majority are not only new but the kind that register with a bang. In addition, Ralph Spence has furnished a set of titles that are about as clever and amusing as any we have ever seen and there is a real punch in nearly everyone of them, so between situations, gags and titles, you are kept in an uproar most of the time.

All of this comedy has been injected into a pleasing little romance between Johnny as an independent milk wagon driver and an heiress whom he believes to be a house maid. There is a melodramatic twist to the story involving rascality on the part of a rival company and the climax is a regular old-fashioned thriller, with the girl in an unconscious condition on a moving belt conveyor which is rapidly approaching a big knife arrangement that descends periodically to cut blocks of ice. The hero after fighting the villain on a floor flooded with milk rushes in and rescues her in the nick of time. Just a new twist to a familiar melodramatic device, but it registers as a real thriller just the same.

Johnny is his usual thoroughly amusing self in this picture and with his own inimitable style of putting over a comedy situation he scores heavily. His supporting cast is entirely satisfactory. Sigrid Holmquist is attractive as the girl, Edmund Breese who has appeared in several of Johnny's other pictures is fine as a broken-down actor, Flora Finch does good work in a bit, and Wyndham Standing and Bradley Barker effectively take care of the villainy.

Even though the story is slight and its development not entirely plausible, it serves admirably its purpose in furnishing a framework on which to build up the many entertaining qualities found in this production.

We believe that "The Early Bird" will score heavily with the majority of picture patrons for it is thoroughly entertaining and amusing with an unusual number of good hearty laughs, combined with romance, thrills and human interest in a fast-moving production.

Story

Jimmy Burke, independent milk man changes clothes with a wealthy young chap who wants to put pep into a party, and at the same time, Jean Blair the hostess dresses as a maid. Jimmy takes a shine to her and invites her to a ride in his wagon and she accepts. Fairchild, manager of the milk trust of which Jean is president, is pulling crooked business, and Jimmy gets on to him. Jimmy organizes the independent men and they make him president. Fairchild plans to buy him out. Jimmy learns that the supposed maid is Jean, and believes she was making fun of him. Jean discovers Fairchild's crookedness and discharges him. She also gets wind of his plan to poison the independent's supply and sends a message to Jimmy who goes out and destroys the early deliveries. She goes to the plant and Fairchild's aide locks her in the refrigerating room. Jimmy arrives on the scene, fights the villain, and rescues Jean just as she is about to be killed by a machine used for cutting the ice. After this everything points to wedding bells for Jimmy and Jean.

"Idle Tongues"

Percy Marmont Scores in Remarkably Appealing First National Picture of Small Town Folks

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Idle Tongues" is a very human picturization of one of the famous Joseph C. Lincoln novel of Cape Cod life, "Dr. Nye." Largely due to the sensitive characterization of Percy Marmont it develops great heart interest and should prove particularly attractive to most audiences. As directed by Lambert Hillyer for Thomas H. Ince, it is a smoothly-running story with excellent backgrounds, of a kindly physician made an outcast by small town folks because he has spent five years in prison for the theft of money.

Percy Marmont in this picture again maintains his reputation for the delicate touches that characterize the good actor. Dr. Nye's lovable disposition is, by his work, made vivid, and so the value of the plot, which is technically strong, is enormously enhanced. We think that the author will want to see Marmont in other picturizations of his stories.

The point stressed is the propensity of small town folks for gossip. Emphasizing this is the characterization of a nervous, talkative woman by Vivia Ogden. She is simply immense. Men and women alike will roar at her. Doris Kenyon has a conventional role as the doctor's sweetheart, and given little opportunity to do more than pose, injects a great deal of sincerity and warmth into her work. Claude Gillingwater is striking as the scheming banker, and Lucille Ricksen and Malcolm McGregor charming as the juvenile lovers. David Torrence also has a good part.

We would be willing to wager hard-earned cash that this First National picture will delight. It has a good story, deft characterization, much human interest and very laughable comedy. Book it.

Story

Dr. Nye returns to Ostable after spending five years in prison for the theft of church funds. Daniel Copeland, brother of the doctor's dead wife Fanny, wants to install a municipal water system but is opposed by Cyrenus Stone, his arch enemy. The townspeople turn against Dr. Nye except Katherine Minot, who loves him. Typhoid fever breaks out and Dr. Nye believes pond water piped by Copeland responsible for it. He accuses Copeland and is mobbed by the townspeople. He calls on Copeland and discloses how he went to prison to save his dead wife's reputation, as she was the real thief. Copeland is overcome to learn that his daughter stole the church money. Katherine overhears the conversation and additional details how Dr. Nye's wife schemed to win him away from her. Copeland has previously opposed the marriage of his daughter Faith to Tom, son of his arch enemy. Dr. Nye forces him to approve it, and himself finds happiness in marriage with Katherine.

"Battling Bunyan"

Associated Exhibitors Offers Wesley Barry In Human Interest Picture That Should be a Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

The problem of finding a suitable story for a fellow who has grown a little too mature for kid parts and is not quite ready for grown-up ones, appears to have been solved in "Battling Bunyan" a Crown Production which is being distributed by Associated Exhibitors.

Wesley Barry is the chap in person and in this picture he has a role for which he is ideal and which could not have fitted him better had it been written especially for him.

As a struggling chap who take all kinds of rebuffs, withstands ridicule and kidding by appearing as a prize fighter when he knows he cannot fight, and finally takes a terrific beating from a much larger fighter to secure money with which to buy an interest in a garage and help win the girl, Wesley shows to good advantage and gives a fine performance.

The development of this story involves a tremendous amount of heart interest and wonderful sympathy is built up for the lad. There are excellent comedy touches and an unusual amount of pathos. The big scene is a prize fight with the champion, the terrific beating that he takes may seem a bit too brutal for the squeamish, but his gameness certainly gets you and fills you with an intense admiration for the character, which Wesley makes very real, and when an insult to the girl causes him to fight like a tiger and finally lick the fighter in a personal quarrel you feel exceptional sympathy for the chap.

Wesley in his acting, introduces a deeper note than heretofore and also proves to be an excellent comedian, his fine work overshadows his famous freckles. His support is excellent, with Frank Campeau as a fight manager and Molly Malone as the girl. Paul Hurst has finely directed this picture.

Because of its tremendous human interest and play on the heart strings, we feel sure that the majority of patrons are going to like "Battling Bunyan" and that it will prove a good box office attraction.

Story

Bunyan, a young chap who has gained a lot of experience in the school of hard knocks, has a small position in a garage. The lightweight champion fighter comes in and flirts with Bunyan's girl Molly and Bunyan tries to fight him. Canby, the local fight promoter gets the idea of signing Bunyan up for fights to give his patrons a laugh, billing him as Red Aiken Bunyan, and it works. Bunyan knows he is a clown but the money helps to buy a partnership in the garage. Finally the champion returns and again starts after Molly. The fight is to be a frame-up and Bunyan agrees at $200 a round. He takes a terrific beating and tries to stay out five but only lasts four. Mollie, thoroughly won over by his gameness, tries to see Bunyan, but the champion intercepts her and tries to attack her when she repulses him. Bunyan, jumps on him and finally beats him. Canby gives him the full thousand and he buys the partnership and then marries Molly.

"The Mine With The Iron Door"

Principal Presents Another Harold Bell Wright Story That Should Prove a Box-Office Success

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Principal Pictures Corporation has transferred to the screen "The Mine with the Iron Door," another Harold Bell Wright novel which proved one of the "best sellers." Filmed with the active co-operation of the author, on the actual locations called for in the story that is, in the mountains near Tucson, Arizona, it bears the stamp of authenticity and it is fair to assume that this production will enjoy popularity commensurate with the big success of the novel.

"The Mine with the Iron Door" is based on a picturesque legend concerning a lost mine formerly worked by the Dominican priests but the existence of which is now known only to the Indians. Around this has been built a story of the outdoors that is quite different from the average one of this type.

The characters are a girl kidnapped at infancy and raised by two kindly and humorous prospectors, a fugitive from justice erroneously convicted of a crime, an educated Indian who hates the white race, a doctor broken in health who seeks to help his fellow men, a bandit leader and his gang and a slovenly ne'er do well.

Sam Wood, who has many successes to his credit, has capably directed this picture and with the assistance of such well-known players as Pat O'Malley, Dorothy Mackaill, Robert Frazer, Charles Murray, Bert Woodruff, Mary Carr, Creighton Hale, Mitchell Lewis, Raymond Hatton and William Collier Jr., these widely divergent characters have been well developed.

The romantic angle is pleasing, the scenery striking, and there is an unusual angle in the playing up of contrasting attitude of mind of the Indian and the white man. There are good touches of humor, a melodramatic climax that comes as a surprise, and a corking good thrill in a fight with knives between the Indian and the bandit.

While the action is not always entirely plausible or convincing, coincidences has been rather heavily used in bringing about the desired ending, and we are of the opinion that this picture which is now 7,800 feet in length could be considerably shortened, nevertheless, it contains all the elements which made the novel popular and we believe it is a production that will appeal to the rank and file of picture patrons and prove a good box-office attraction.

Story

Hill and Grave, aged prospectors, find a little girl in the hut of a bandit Sonora Jack and take her away but are unable to locate her parents. When she grows to womanhood, Hugh Edwards appears on the scene and they fall in love with each other. Natachee, an educated Indian, learns that Edward is an escaped convict, convicted for embezzling funds. Edwards saves his life and in return Natachee shows him the mine with the iron door, filled with gold. Just then Sonora Jack returns and unable to find the mine, kidnaps Marta to hold her for ransom. Hugh and Natchee overtake him and kill him rescuing Marta. Papers prove that Marta is the daughter of the man for whom Hugh was sent to prison and he has since died confessing his guilt. Hugh and Marta finds happiness in their love for each other.

"Tongues of Flame"

American Indians as They Are Today Furnish Unusual Background for Thomas Meighan's Newest

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Indians furnish the background for Thomas Meighan's newest Paramount picture, "Tongues of Flame," based on a novel by Peter Clark McFarlane. However, they are not the familiar Indians of romantic western stories, with their picturesque costumes, but the modern Indians, without glamour, as they appear on their reservations clad in the nondescript clothes of the present day. Despite this, the fact that a number of real Indians are used adds color to the production, and an unusual atmosphere.

As a lawyer who is friendly to the Indians and goes through difficulties in their behalf, fighting a powerful financier who seeks to gain control of the reservations because he has discovered oil, Meighan has a thoroughly congenial and forceful role, and there is a pleasing romantic angle in his love for the little half Indian-half Spanish girl who has aided him.

There are a couple of forceful situations in the earlier reels and the story moves at a good pace after the climatic sequences get under way; but for the most part it seems rather slow moving and deliberate, with a lack of action.

The significance of the title lies in the fact that when the courts decide the town belongs to the Indians the maddened populace sets fire to it rather than turn it over to them. This gives opportunities for effective fire scenes, but this situation seems rather a stretch of plausibility. As compared with the Indians, most of the white persons in this picture certainly appear at a decided disadvantage, and this may not be sympathetically received by some patrons.

Altogether, while "Tongues of Flame" is interesting and has several good points and will probably satisfy Thomas Meighan fans, we do not believe that as general entertainment it is up to the standard of the majority of his pictures.

The supporting cast is high class. Bessie Love is excellent as the little Indian girl and is made up so that she looks the part. Burton Churchill is forceful as the financier and Eileen Percy is attractive as his daughter.

Length, 6,763 feet.

Story

Boland, who has been the prime mover in establishing the thriving city of Edgewater on land formerly belonging to the Siwash Indians, desires to obtain their reservation, they put it up to their friend Harrington, a lawyer who recruited a company of Indians for service in the war. Boland makes such a seemingly generous offer that Harrington persuades them to sign, being aided by a girl Lahleet. Just as the papers are signed, Lahleet learns there is oil on the reservation, and Harrington stops the sale on the ground of fraud. Boland, angry, throws Harrington in jail charging him with theft of money. Hornblower, claims the whole town belongs to the Indians and the courts sustain his claim. The populace, led by agitators, burn the town rather than have it fall into the hands of the Indians. Harrington, released from jail, gathers the Indian together, arms them and takes possession of the town. When the people calm down he gives it back to them, as the Indians are satisfied with their reservation. Harrington finds happiness with Lahleet, who has helped him.

"The Last Man on Earth"

William Fox Offers Fantastic Novelty in Story of World Filled With Women and Only One Man

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Exhibitors who are looking for a novelty will find it in the William Fox production "The Last Man on Earth." It is a fantastic tale of a strange disease which strikes the earth in 1940 killing off all the males over fourteen. Only one escapes, a young chap who became a hermit because of disappointed love. Discovered ten years later, he is brought back unwillingly into a world run entirely by women, and becomes not only a curiosity but a problem. How they fight over him and he upsets all plans by marrying his former sweetheart, thus saving the race anyway, furnishes the story.

There is a clever idea behind this story and fine opportunities for burlesque in showing women engaged in occupations now monopolized by the men, and we think more advantage might have been taken of this angle. While it is handled in a general way, the only definite character of this kind are a street sweeper, a couple of soldiers, some women gangsters, women senators and a woman president. There is no shortage of women, however, for the streets and public places are filled with them clad in costumes suggestive of musical comedy, there are a lot of quite short trousers and many decorated with lace and other gee-gaws.

An amusing sequence shows the "capture" of the last man by the gangsters and his fear of one who wants to make love to him, and another where a bunch of flappers get him intoxicated. The climax is a ring fight in the senate between two women senators. This fight has been burlesqued and is quite amusing.

With opportunities to be quite risque, there is nothing at all objectionable in the handling of this story. There are quite a lot of situations that will bring smiles, and, on the whole, the absurdity of the thing is amusing, but somehow, there do not seem to be many situations that are particularly hilarious. It is all straight comedy and there is no slapstick. Novelty is the main angle of audience appeal.

The cast is good. Earle Foxe, who proved himself a good comedian in the Van Bibber series, does excellent work, and contributes a good characterization of a man afraid of a woman-run world, and his support is entirely satisfactory.

Length, 6,637 feet.

Story

Elmer Smith proposes to Hattie his childhood sweetheart and she turns him down. He jumps in his plane determined to go where there are no women. A strange disease develops that kills all the males over fourteen years old. Gertie, a gangster, fleeing from the police finds herself in a forest and discovers Elmer she brings him back and the government buys him for $10,000,000 as he is the last man on earth. Then arises the problem of what to do with him. Two lazy senators engage in a prize fight, the winner to claim him as a husband. Hattie attends the fight and Elmer sees her. Then it is all off as he rushes to Hattie, keeping the others at bay. They marry and a year later, twins are born.

"The Mad Whirl"

May McAvoy and Jack Mulhall in Theatric Universal Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Taken from a Richard Washburn Childs story in the Saturday Evening Post, "The Mad Whirl" originally contained many of the popular ingredients of a box-office success except sustained action. Now it appears as a story of homely virtue triumphing over red-eyed jazz. It has a fine cast, the necessary romance, lavish settings. But this Universal picture's highly moral atmosphere and very theatric backgrounds convey an impression of artificiality, and this must have been felt by the players, who, though among the best on the screen, are at times guilty of some bad work. Too much frosting on any cake spoils it, and here the cook spread it on too thickly.

Frederick and Fanny Hatton adapted "The Mad Whirl," so it was expected to be a clever fast-moving comedy drama. It had all the essentials of one. But after a false start—it begins for all the world like a serio-comic vehicle—the picture switches into drama, with exceptional demands upon the players' tear ducts. Action is wanting, scenes of jazz parties taking its place. The story becomes detailed characterization of a male member of the fast set and the simple daughter of a reformed saloonkeeper; then introduces a moral and insistently stresses it; then, having very thoroughly proved the youth a black sheep, hastily absolves him in the concluding scenes.

May McAvoy succeeds in doing better work than any other member of the cast. Jack Mulhall is sufficiently unlikeable as the jazz devotee and later unreal as repentant. Myrtle Stedman and Alec Francis are given little to do and do it.

It must be admitted that there are audiences which will take the picture very seriously, as it contains many of the time-honored stunts for appealing to those whose imaginations see truth and virtue as clothed in homespun, and vice in sheerest silk.

"The Triflers"

Schulberg Offers Amusing and Entertaining Production With Frank Mayo and Mae Busch as Leads

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

For his newest Preferred Picture, B. P. Schulberg is offering "The Triflers," which is based on an original story by Frederick Orin Bartlett and directed by Gasnier, with a cast of well-known players, including Mae Busch, Elliott Dexter, Frank Mayo, Walter Hiers, Eva Novak and Lloyd Whitlock.

The opening to the story is bright and clever, with the heroine calling her sixteen suitors together and giving them all the gate. These sequences will get a lot of smiles. Two do not take their dismissal lightly, one turns out to be a melodramatic villain and the other feels his disappointment so keenly he confines himself so to microscopic work that he goes blind. Then there is the hero who looks on love lightly and of course realizes its worth in the end.

The significance of the title lies in the fact that while the heroine characterizes her admirers as triflers, she and the hero trifle with love even to the extent of a marriage in which it does not figure, and they learn the lesson of bitter experience before the happy ending.

The early part of the story is somewhat sophisticated comedy, and just after the wedding, when both slip away following a few embarrassing moments in the bedroom and end by sleeping away from each other in bathtubs, there is an amusing farce comedy note, somewhat risque but never offensive. From then on the picture shows the growth of real love and doubt of the affection of the other, and each is brought to repent trifling with love.

Some of the situations are not altogether plausible, especially where the blinded suitor regains his sight through sacrifice, but there is effective heart interest if not a great amount of sympathy for the triflers developed, and the ending is more unusual than convincing, the melodramatic touch seeming rather uncalled for.

The cast is good, Mae Busch doing especially fine work, and Frank Mayo runs her a close second. Elliott Dexter is effective as the blind suitor and Lloyd Whitlock is a polished villain.

Altogether, we believe the average spectator will find "The Triflers" entertaining and amusing.

Length, 6,626 feet.

Story

After inheriting great wealth, Marjorie is besieged by suitors but she gives them all the cold shoulder. For one, Peter, she feels pity and a touch of seriousness. One friend, Monte, refuses to run after her and treats affairs with women lightly. In California they meet and as Teddy, one of the suitors refuses to accept no, Monte saves Marjorie from an unpleasant situation and withoutlove they marry for their mutual protection. Monte still treats her casually and she falls desperately in love with him. Marjorie again meets Peter who has become blind and he mistakes her pity for love, while Monte gets the same impression and decides to go away. Marjorie and Peter finally declare their love for each other, but Teddy, jealous shoots them. The wounds are slight and in the hospital in twin beds, they feel they have atoned for being triflers with love, and face the future confidently.

"Troubles of a Bride"

Amusing Comedy and Melodramatic Thrills Make William Fox Production Average Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With a subtitle that explains that this picture is built to afford amusement and thrills, William Fox is offering a Thomas Buckingham production "The Troubles of a Bride."

The picture has the advantage of brevity, being less than five thousand feet long and the action moves forward at a snappy pace, there are a number of amusing situations especially in the earlier part, while the latter reels contain thrill after thrill, and the production also starts off with a thrill.

Obviously, it is a picture that is not intended to be taken seriously and quite a lot of the situations are rather implausible and far-fetched, with at times a suggestion of burlesque. Director Buckingham who also collaborated on the story, had a free hand to string together the thrills and he gets in some good, if familiar ones. Once things begin to hum, with the kidnapping of the bride, there is a well handled series of thrills including a fight and finally the falling of a train through an open draw-bridge of course the hero rescuing the heroine in the nick of time.

Alan Hale, in a rather unusual type of heavy role has really the principal part, and gives a good performance, while the romantic roles are satisfactorily handled by Robert Agnew and Mildred June. Charles Conklin introduced good comedy as a negro servant.

We believe that Mr. Buckingham has accomplished what he set out to do, that is, to make an entertainment picture for the large class of patrons who like thrill melodrama and clean comedy. The melodrama predominates and the comedy is bright, with a good snap to it. The romantic angle is pleasing and there is a surprising touch at the end, which may, however, prove a bit confusing. Altogether it should prove a picture of average entertainment value for the majority.

Story

Escaping from the police, the Baron, a clever crook, learns that Col. Patterson plans to remodel his house to surprise his daughter Mildred who is about to marry Robert Wallace. Impersonating the architect he gains an entree and finds the money supposed to be hidden in the house, but also determines to marry Mildred. He arranges a plot with her to kidnap her just before the wedding to test Robert's love as she has seen him kissing a vamp. The scheme works, but the Baron soon discloses his real purpose and attacks her. Robert comes to the rescue and there is a wild ride on a runaway train with Robert chasing it in a locomotive and rescuing Mildred just as the train is about to plunge into the river. Mildred is satisfied and accepts the Baron's explanation when, realizing he is beaten he declares it was all a part of the plan.

"Barriers Burned Away"

Adaptation of Novel Built Around Great Chicago Fire Proves Unusually Good Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Around the great fire that practically destroyed the City of Chicago in 1871 the Rev. E. P. Roe wrote a romantic and colorful novel and transferred to the screen as an Associated Exhibitors production we believe that it will prove a thoroughly enjoyable attraction for the fans today.

In the first place, here is a story that deals with one of the most striking episodes in our national life and one with which nearly everyone is familiar. From a picture standpoint this great fire affords excellent opportunity for effective thrills, and these have been taken advantage of.

In addition, there is a picturesque and colorful story which has been excellently directed by W. S. Van Dyke, with a wealth of detail and capably portrayed by a well-selected cast who appear to have entered into their work with enthusiasm.

The picture deals with a different period and is based on a novel that exhibits a psychology quite different from the books of the present day. But don't let this disturb you, for it is interesting to note the great difference in costumes, habits, mode of living, etc., that has taken place in so comparatively a short time. The old horse cars, the gas-lighted streets, the small buildings, old-fashioned bicycles and, above all, the quaint clothing of the people are all picturesque and pleasing and brings back vividly our national life of another day.

The story is of an exceedingly romantic type, centering around the love of an artist, who became a porter to locate a stolen painting, and the daughter of his wealthy employer. The title refers to the great fire as well as to their great love which eventually burned away all barriers. An interesting feature is the introduction of characters whose names have become known nation-wide, such as the Randolphs, Marshall Field, Pinkerton and McCormick.

An excellent entertainment angle is the origin of the fire, vouched for by historical records. The details leading up to the milking at midnight of Mrs. O'Leary's cow, which, resenting this disturbance, kicked over a lamp, setting fire to the hay, are all pictured.

Frank Mayo as the hero, Mabel Bellin as the heroine, Wanda Hawley as her chum, Tom Santschi as a politician, Harry Morey as the crooked store manager, Mrs. Craig as Mrs. O'Leary, J. P. Lockney as her husband and William V. Mong as his pal, along with many others, all give fine performances.

With its fascinating picturization of life in one of our big cities just two generations ago, a good human interest story, unusual excellence of detail, flashes of humor, a pleasing romance and thrilling fire scenes, we believe that "Barriers Burned Away" offers something distinctly out of the ordinary that will prove excellent entertainment for the majority.

"The Rubber Neck"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The Spat family scores good entertainment in "The Rubber Neck." The first reel is full of laughs and the second boasts as many thrills. The Spats are visitors in Hollywood. They join a throng in a sight-seeing bus. The female of the party has a cat which she wishes upon the male members. They keep shifting the pussy around until the others are in an uproar. One of the Hal Roach "Our Gang" youngsters sets off a string of firecrackers and in the turmoil which follows the Spats find themselves alone on the road. It happens that they are near an aeronautical school. They take an unexpected ride in a balloon when the ground rope breaks. From here on are some real thrills. The huge bag careens in an altitude far above a city. The anchor is cast over the side and catches an automobile, carrying it well up into the air before the machine breaks loose. The anchor is cast again. This time it catches in the root of a tree. The Spats are halfway down the rope when it slips and they all descend into a sand pile.—T. W.

"Bull and Sand"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Mack Sennett comedy, "Bull and Sand" is one of the funniest which that producer has turned out in quite some time. It contains a lot of humorous angles and some good inspirations for thrills. The cast includes: Sid Smith, Madeline Hurlock, Vernon Dent, Andy Clyde, John J. Richardson and Tiny Ward. The comedy is more or less a burlesque on bulls, bull fighters and bull throwers. In some places there is a lot of bull and in others not so much. How a chauffeur wins the heart of his employer, a princess, is achieved principally in his being able to throw an "actual" bull over a fence. But after doing this the mechanic engenders the ill grace of her Royal Majesty and is ordered to be shot. A bull breaks down his cell and he and another condemned man appropriate an extra bull's hide and proceed to play bull. The would-be bull jumps on the back of a horse and the princess jumps on the back of the would-be bull and all ride away to happiness.—T. W.

"Present Arms"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a clever bit about a housemaid in love with her mistress's son, an aviator. Wanda Wiley has the lead. He falls out of a plane and through the chimney into the house. She fails to vamp him and he goes off with an auto full of beauties. This is about to fall over a cliff when Wanda, on horseback, rescues him. The next day while on duty at the fort he learns that his mother is ill. Wanda substitutes in uniform for him on guard duty. When a spy steals radio plans she pursues on a motorcycle and regains them. The boy gets the credit and realizes the girl's worth. She accepts his suit. This is a peppy comedy with good situations and acting. Particularly good are the scenes where Wanda in uniform does picket duty.—S. S.

"The Invaders"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

For "The Invaders" Grantland Rice has put together scenes from the recent international contests in polo, yachting, horse racing and tennis. This also includes several good "shots" of American battleships. As depicted by the titling the idea is to show that during times of peace we are still "friendly enemies," with our brethren from overseas coming to American soil to compete for a dominating position in the world of sports. The thought is a good one and the pictures as presented are entertaining. —T. W.

"Zoo's Who's Who"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

This "Gem of the Screen" shows various animals familiar to visitors to zoological parks in this country, and has them do their stunts to the accompaniment of interesting subtitles. These subtitles purport to interpret the animals' opinions of human folks and add greatly to the picturesqueness of the magazine. The rhinoceros remarks that beauty is only skin-deep, swans comment on the awkwardness of man and the tigress bares her teeth while expressing a great desire to meet man at close quarters. The protography is excellent and the subject well edited.—S. S.

"Lovemania"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Al St. John wrote and stars in this Tuxedo Comedy and it is thoroughly entertaining from the word go. Married to Doris Deane, he gets a letter from his uncle saying that he will inherit a million dollars if he is still single. Instead of simply posing as unmarried, St. John and John Sinclair, his best man, decide to win George Davis' (Uncle George) sympathy for marriage. St. John poses as insane, his wife becomes his nurse, a friend is the keeper and the best man is the doctor. Uncle George is told that St. John's inability to marry because of the coming inheritance has driven him mad. Each time that love is mentioned St. John raises the roof. Then Uncle George capitulates and is told St. John has been married. The million dollar check is handed over. A stranger appears and takes "Uncle George" away, revealing the fact that he isn't Uncle George, but a lunatic escaped from a nearby asylum. There is a lot of good fun in this subject and it ought to please most audiences. It is lively and well acted and the story has surprises.—S. S.

"Heebie Jeebies"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Jimmy Aubrey is starred in this Joe Rock Production directed by Percy Pembroke. It opens with the hero trying to find a place to sleep and narrowly escaping being eaten by a lion. He finally uses a parachute for bed covering and it rises with him and takes him to a cannibal island. His only chance to escape becoming cannibal steak is to wed the princess. She is pictorially displeasing and he has already fallen in love with the chieftain's favorite. By good luck rather than ingenuity he escapes an untimely end, assumes leadership of the tribe and weds the cannibal maiden he loves. Years later we see him as the father of an extensive family. This subject ought to please slapstick fans.—S. S.

"Down on the Farm"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Paul Terry exploits some more novel pen manoeuvers in "Down on the Farm." He shows that Mrs. Duck carries an umbrella to catch the rain and provide a swimming pool for her young. Mr. Mouse as the insignia on Mr. Cat's car serves as a window cleaner when it rains. The ring in the pig's tail furnishes an excellent spring for Mr. Mouse to spring upon said bacon's back. These are only a few of the laugh getters in this "bird" of a cartoon.—T. W.

"The Mad Rush"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance appear in this Cameo Comedy directed by Albert Ray and photographed by Dwight Warren. It opens with scenes of a slumberer being awakened by a trick alarm clock and taking his bath. Then our hero goes to the Automat for breakfast, and the rest of the comedy deals with his effort to get food and then obtain a chair. Miss Vance has little to do, Bowes being in the limelight most of the time.—S. S.

Many Testimonials Praising "Iron Horse" Received by Fox

AN interesting sidelight in connection with "The Iron Horse," Fox Film Corporation epic photoplay around the transcontinental pioneers, now in the fifth month of a successful New York run at the Lyric Theatre, is the number of unsolicited testimonials, from men in all ranks of life, to be received by William Fox, president of the producing company, commenting on the general excellence of the picture.

The effect of this great American Odyssey, as one writer called it, on all who see it seems to be so impressive that they cannot allow the opportunity to congratulate the man who was responsible for it to pass.

From governors of states, railroad presidents, labor leaders, down to the average man on the street, these testimonials flow in as the picture continues its already sensational run.

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York is one of the high public officials who could not resist the temptation to congratulate Mr. Fox. In a letter to the producer he says:

"A number of state officials saw 'The Iron Horse' with me. It was the unanimous opinion of everybody present that it was not only amusing and interesting, but it was highly instructive. We were all of one mind that it should be a great success."

Howard Chandler Christy, one of America's foremost artists, after seeing the instructive and inspiring film wrote Mr. Fox in this wise:

"Last night we saw 'The Iron Horse' and this is to congratulate you and to thank you for a most entertaining and exciting evening. Not only is it a splendid artistic production, full of interest and action and humor—it is the kind of thing every youngster and grown up in this country should see—to stimulate their minds in the making of this great nation of ours.

"A picture of this kind stimulates healthy imaginations and forms real character. One comes away from the theatre feeling that the evening has been gloriously spent and that the history of our country is unlimited in the picturesque—the heroic and romantic.

"We are all indebted to the producer of such a real picture."

Senator Thomas F. Walsh of Montana, the man who guided the recent Democratic National Convention throughout its sessions in New York as chairman, is another of the high public men who wrote Mr. Fox after he visited the Lyric Theatre. He said:

"Permit me to express more formally the very great pleasure I experienced at seeing on the screen 'The Iron Horse' a highly meritorious and instructive picture. Curiously enough, I have just been reading the brief mention in Haworth of the epochal incident your picture so impressively presents, so I can affirm the historical accuracy of the general theme.

"On behalf of the people of my state, many of whom had a part in the great enterprise, I thank you for bringing this to the attention of the Nation, their contribution to its greatness and its glory."

Another man to go out of his way to congratulate Mr. Fox for the stupendous production was Arthur Brisbane, most widely read editorial writer in the world. After seeing the presentation at the Lyric Theatre he led off his noted editorial column "Today" with the following remarks:

"A moving picture such as 'The Iron Horse,' just produced by William Fox, showing the building of the first railroad across this continent, will do more to 'Americanize' foreigners than any number of dreary sermons on the Constitution and '100 per cent. Americanism.'

"To see Lincoln walking in the White House corridors, to see live bison actually pursued by live Indians, and men laying the Union Pacific tracks under the fire of bows and arrows, is real education."

George W. Eastman, founder and head of the gigantic Eastman Kodak Co. of Rochester, also endorsed the John Ford production. In a letter to Mr. Fox he declares:

"I had the pleasure of witnessing the screening of 'The Iron Horse,' and I congratulate the Fox Film Corporation on the production of such a magnificent picture. For thrilling interest and beauty of photography it stands at the very top."

Producers Distributing Corporation Announces January to July Program

THAT adaptations of well-known stage plays and the novels of popular authors will predominate the releases of Producers' Distributing Corporation during the coming season is disclosed in the official announcement made this week by John C. Flynn, vice-president of the Distributing Company.

The new program covers the period between February 2nd and July 15th and contains two big feature comedies from Al. Christie; two Renaud Hoffman productions; one feature starring Florence Vidor; one special starring Priscilla Dean; three productions starring Agnes Ayres; one special starring Weber and Fields, and four artistic Westerns starring Harry Carey.

Heading the schedule for release on February 2nd is the Al. Christie feature, "Charley's Aunt," adapted from the internationally famous stage farce and starring Syd Chaplin supported by an all-star cast.

The play of the same name from which this feature was adapted has been running almost continually throughout the English-speaking world for the last thirty-three years. The picture is now nearing completion at the Christie studio under the direction of Scott Sidney.

Star Cast For Agnes Ayres

The first of the Agnes Ayres' subjects will be "Her Market Value," to be released on February 9th. This is a Paul Powell production adapted from the celebrated New York and London stage success, "The Eleventh Commandment" by Frances Nordstrom. It is a society drama founded on the theory that where a woman is concerned all friendship between men ceases. Director Powell has surrounded Agnes Ayres with an all-star cast that includes Taylor Holmes, Anders Randolph, Edward Earle and Hedda Hopper.

Florence Vidor in "The Girl of Gold" will be released on February 16th. This is an adaptation of the well-known story by Cleveland Moffett and Alice Chapin. The story in its motif is a modern "King Midas" drama dealing with society life and stressing the blighting influences of the craze for wealth. This production has been completed under the direction of John Ince with such well-known headliners in the supporting cast as Malcolm MacGregor, Alan Roscoe, Charles French, Bessie Eyton and Claire Du Brey.

CO-STARS IN "FRIENDLY ENEMIES"

The first of the new Renaud Hoffman productions, "On The Threshold," will be released on February 23d. This is the adaptation from the story by Wilbur Hall which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, the story of an itinerant preacher who arrives in a little village at the moment that a wealthy old man is on the threshold of death, and young lovers are on the threshold of a new life while enemies are at work to deprive them of happiness. Hoffman has surrounded this story with a cast that includes Gladys Hulette, Henry B. Walthall, Sam de Grasse, Robert Gordon, Chas. Sellon, Margaret Seddon and Willis Marks, who registered a decided hit in the Renaud Hoffman production, "Not One to Spare."

The first of the new Harry Carey series of Westerns, "Beyond the Border," will be released on March 2nd. It is an adaptation from the story published under the title of "When Smith Meets Smith." It will be directed by Tom Forman under the personal supervision of Hunt Stromberg.

The Hunt Stromberg special production "The Crimson Runner" starring Priscilla Dean will also be released on March 2nd and will present the star in the role of an Austrian Countess, who finding herself impoverished by the war assumes the role of a feminine "Robin Hood" and proceeds to steal from the near rich in order to maintain the aristocratic standing of herself and her nobly bred associates. In addition to being a stirring melodrama of the typical, fast-moving, Priscilla Dean type it presents a remarkable exposition of the reversed social order now existing in the Austrian Capital. The story was written especially for Priscilla Dean by Harvey Gates, whose knowledge of conditions in the Austrian Empire was evidenced in his successful story, "The Merry-Go-Round." This feature is now in production under the direction of Tom Forman with Ward Crane, Alan Hale and Mitchell Lewis in the supporting cast.

The Frank Woods production, "Beauty and the Bad Man," adapted from Peter B. Kyne's popular story, "Cornflower Cassie," will be released on March 9th. It will be produced at the Peninsula Studios under the direction

FIGHTING SAP. (5,138 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Only a fair western, in my estimation, and without Fred Thomson and Silver King (especially the latter) would have resembled something the cat brought in. The story is positively nonsensical in its direction and the supporting cast about the poorest ever shown in pictures. The western followers thought this a wonderful picture, while the better class held their noses. So there you are. But I don't know where we are going to stand on the next five of the series; I hope they have a better story value than this, for Thomson and Silver King are deserving of better treatment, and with better stories, good direction and a cast that can act Thomson will be a dangerous rival for the honors so long held by Tom and Buck and Hoot. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Appeals to western fans only. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. About on a par with this star's pictures. The only fault I find with these Thomson's is too much of a hero on part of the star, but Silver King, his horse, is certainly the most intelligent horse on the screen today. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. In this Fred and Silver King do their best to make a successful five-reeler out of material for only a two-reel western. The first three reels are terribly slow. Some of the comedy attempted in the early reels is burlesque rather than comedy. This is a type of picture in which burlesque seems inappropriate. Rural and small town class, town of 400. Admission thirty cents. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred and the horse great. The material, etc., nothing to rave about. Tone okay. Sunday, hardly. Good audience appeal. Rural and small town class, town of 400. Admission thirty cents. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats) Kinsman, Ohio.

First National

BAD MAN. (6,404 feet). Star, Holbrook Blinn. I have seen many unfavorable and lukewarm reports on this subject, but I want to rise up and remark that I (and the majority of our patrons) considered this to be an especially good program picture, with a wealth of subtle comedy that puts the picture over. Of course, an audience of illiterates would not understand what it is all about. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeals to better class. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. This was a good, clean and interesting program. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (200 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

BOY OF MINE. (7 reels). Star, Ben Alexander. One of those censor-proof, very good little human dramas that should pack a house but doesn't. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-15-20-25-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats). Mapleton, Iowa.

HER REPUTATION. (7 reels). Star, May McAvoy. This picture did not draw for us. However, personally we liked it very well. This star has no drawing power here. Tone okay. Very good audience appeal. Agricultural class, town of 1,255. Admission 10-20. Cannon and Trescott, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Elsberry, Missouri.

Index this Week

In this issue of Moving Picture World runs the Straight From the Shoulder Index to Reports for the six months' period from the beginning of July to the end of December.

PRESERVE THIS INDEX. CONSULT IT TO LOCATE ALL TIPS ON A GIVEN PICTURE.

LOVE MASTER. (6,779 feet). Star, Strongheart. Extra good. This picture is in a class by itself. The work of the dog is wonderful. It pleases one hundred per cent. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD. (6,500 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Very good comedy feature, well liked. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Business and farming class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Here is one that my patrons liked better than "Flaming Youth," and it drew as well. Had many compliments on this picture and none on "Flaming Youth." They were expecting too much on "Flaming Youth." This one will please any audience. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Both good pictures and liked by those that came out, but could not get a crowd. Impossible to get big crowds these days on anything. All classes of white only. Admission 10-20-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. I was agreeably surprised at this one. Some panned it but I call it good. Had quite a few compliments on it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TROUBLE. (4,800 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is a delightful Coogan comedy. Our people liked it very much. Drew a nice crowd under adverse conditions. Tone good. Audience appeal exceptionally good. Agricultural class, town of 1,255. Admission 10-20. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Elsberry, Missouri.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star, John Bowers. This picture broke all records. I don't know where they come from, but it surely drew them in and pleased them afterward. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star, Lewis Stone. Don't be backward in boosting this picture. It will stand up and please them one hundred per cent. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Fox

WHEN ODDS ARE EVEN. (4,284 feet). Star, William Russell. Too impossible a story, but since it had some action the fans liked it fairly well. I heard no kicks from anyone. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal very little. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ALIAS THE NIGHT WIND. (4,145 feet). Star, William Russell. A fair picture (program) that just about broke even at the box office. Tone fair. Ordinary audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

ALIAS THE NIGHT WIND. (4,145 feet). Star, William Russell. Good picture but print cut short. All classes of white only. Admission 10-20-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

BIG DAN. (5,834 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Only fair. Jones doesn't seem to draw them in here like Mix. He has been in too many "boiled shirt" pictures lately. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Town class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

Season 1924-1925— Thirty First-Run Pictures

BIG DAN. (5,834 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Buck did not draw in this picture, but those who saw it said it was fine. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

CAMEO KIRBY. (6,921 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Good. As usual, John Gilbert is good. Fox specials have held up well for me. Story of the old South. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

CUPID'S FIREMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good picture of this type, but our patrons want Buck in the westerns such as he made two or three years ago. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

CIRCUS COWBOY. (6,400 feet). Star, Charles Buck Jones. A dandy good picture; many fine comments from patrons on this Jones picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes of white only. Admission 10-20-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good. Lincoln J. Carter story. Action from the first foot of the first reel to the end. It pleased the majority. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR. Star cast. Good drama. Wonderful acting by Walthall. Business light. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

FRIENDLY HUSBAND. (5 reels). Star, Lupino Lane. Very good five-reel comedy. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

GUNFIGHTER. (5 reels). Star, William Farnum. A good feud story that pleased about seventy per cent. Farnum does not draw for us as he used to. Tone fair. Poor audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

IF WINTER COMES. (12 reels). Star, Percy Marmont. Twelve reels is too long for a slow-moving story like this. Our audience was tired by the time it was half over. This is a very good picture for those who really appreciate fine acting, but it will not appeal to all classes. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and miners, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

JUST OFF BROADWAY. (6,555 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Pretty good. Gilbert is always good. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

LONE STAR RANGER. (5,259 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Just as all others have said. One of his best. Great drawing power. Good story. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Perfect audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

Metro-Goldwyn

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star cast. A good one. We thought it better than usual. The title hurt business on account of people thinking it was a sheik picture. All classes, town of 1,800. Admission 15-20, 15-25. J. Neal Lanigan, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. I call this one a first-class picture. As usual, I got the school kids behind me on this one and they packed the house. In some parts the photography is rather dark but give it all the juice you have got and put it through. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal fine. Family and student class, city of 80,000. Admission 10-20. George W. Pettingill, Jr., Mirror Lake Theatre (1,000 seats), St. Petersburg, Florida.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This is an action picture that will delight your Saturday night audience. Ernest Torrence's work in this picture is a very good piece of acting. Tone fair. Good audience appeal. Agricultural class, town of 1,255. Admission 10-20. Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Elsberry, Missouri.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6,500 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A nice little program picture. No western, although western settings. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. The rating on this picture would be about ten per cent if everybody thought as little of it as our patrons did. Sunday, yes. No audience appeal. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Good acting but bum plot and plumb silly. Print cut short; did not please here. Tone not much. Sunday, no. Audience appeal not much. All classes of white only. Admission 10-20-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10 reels). Star cast. One of the best. Will please anywhere. Our town just completed a "White Way," so everyone wanted to see the picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 1,800. Admission 15-20, 15-25. J. Neal Lanigan, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

Paramount

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This will please all. Real attendance on this, as on all of the Meighan pictures. Tone good. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 1,800. Admission 15-20, 15-25. J. Neal Lanigan, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Coming like the wind across the borderland to the heart of the land of thrills. Millions will see this picture because it's made as only Zane Grey and Paramount can make them. In the cast, Antonio, Chadwick and Rockliffe Fellowes. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. The best picture and the best acting Bebe Daniels has ever done. The title is not quite appropriate and the picture not a big drawing card, but it will entertain the movie fans and they'll like Bebe Daniels. They enjoyed it here. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Family and good class, city of 55,000. Admission thirty cents. Frank Vesley, National Theatre (936 seats), Stockton, California.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good story, fine acting, but somehow did not pull at the box office, nearly as well as other Meighan pictures. The picture is worth seeing anywhere. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (8 reels). Star cast. Good picture which pleased those looking for action. Some did not care for the sword fighting. Good attendance. All classes, town of 1,800. Admission 15-20, 15-25. J. Neal Lanigan, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. Very fine picture that failed to draw. Paramount posters are very bad for a small town. They are all the same. The picture is all that Paramount claims for it, but it's no money maker. Town class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Wonderful picture of its type. It will draw them in and make money for you. My patrons were divided on the colored photography. Run it. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (6,700 feet) Star, Betty Compson. Did not see this myself, but comments were favorable. Tone fair. Sunday, questionable. General audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

Pathe

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Seemed to please everyone who saw it. Did a big business first night but fell down second night on account of bad weather. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Farming class, town of 360. Admission 10-25. E. L. Delano, Electric Theatre (225 seats), Agra, Kansas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN. (7,000 feet). Star, Irene Rich. This picture was well liked here and drew better than the average house, and several said it was good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

United Artists

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. (9,232 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. A very good picture but will not make much money for small town. Pleased about fifty per cent. Farming class, town of 360. Admission 10-25. E. L. Delano, Electric Theatre (225 seats), Agra, Kansas.

Universal

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is a big picture that did not go well for me. Film was in terrible condition, causing patrons to become restless. Tone good. Sunday, yes. No audience appeal. Farming class, town of 360. Admission 10-25. E. L. Delano, Electric Theatre (225 seats), Agra, Kansas.

MEN IN THE RAW. (4,313 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A very poor story. Hoxie cannot gain friends in this type of picture. Tone ordinary. Sunday, no. Scarcely any audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

RAMBLIN' KID. (6,395 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Hoot's best. Tone good. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

RAMBLIN' KID. (6,395 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This picture held up well and myself and patrons were satisfied. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Here's one that pleased them all. We did not make much money, but no fault of the picture. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

RED WARNING. (4,750 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A good story of the cattle country that my people liked fine. Hoxie made new friends when we played this one. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

RIDERS UP. (4,904 feet). Star, Creighton Hale. A fairly interesting horse racing story which will go over as a part of a double feature program but which is rather weak to stand alone. Contains some good comedy and some fine racing scenes. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Vitagraph

PIONEER TRAILS. (6,920 feet). Star cast. An unusually good picture of pioneer days. At program prices it pleased. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Warner Bros.

LOVERS' LANE. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A beautiful, artistic bit of fluff that will appeal to the intelligent audience but miss fire with the others. A delicate romance, done with a master touch, especially as to photography. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LUCRETIA LOMBARD. (7,520 feet). Star, Monte Blue. This picture pleased ninety per cent. The picture is good but the title don't draw the people. Sunday, yes. Mixed class city of 10,000. Admission 10-30. P. Russell, Russell Theatre (500 seats), Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

Straight from the Shoulder Index

July to December, Inclusive

This Index gives dates of issues of Moving Picture World in which reports have appeared on the pictures listed. Features are grouped alphabetically under company headings. The footage given by companies on release of picture appears immediately after the title of the picture; wherever this information is omitted it is because footage is unavailable.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Some Sidelights on Yankee Exhibitors

By H. S. MARION

Meet Harry A. Cohen, president of the Connecticut M. P. T. O. and owner of the West End Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. He is a wonderful chap and has one of the best paying theatres in the state. Why? Because he is always on the job. He conducts Country Store Nights as efficiently as any man I have ever known, giving real prizes and making the announcements himself. His genial personality has brought him hundreds of friends and his selection of programs is ace-high, so that the West End has a mighty lucrative business. Incidentally, Harry isn't always thinking about how much profit he can make on Country Store Nights, but making certain that patrons aren't disappointed with the gifts. People are quick to sense that sort of spirit.

Among the men I'm always happy to meet in Bridgeport is Manager "Mac" McCarthy of Poli's Theatre. He rarely smiles but is mighty likeable. "Mac" is strictly business when motion pictures are mentioned, has made a big success of Poli's and is considered one of "S. Z.'s" best managers. Incidentally, "Mac" smiled several times one week recently and immediately friends began inquiring the reason why. It developed that "The Navigator" was packing 'em in. That's a good publicity yarn, but they do say as how it's true in this instance.

"Mac," we've said, doesn't smile much. Manager M. L. Saunders of Poli's Palace Theatre, Bridgeport, must have written that oldtime song, "Smiles," for he certainly exemplifies it. He smiles generously, probably even before breakfast. And while smiling he puts over one after another of original exploitation stunts that rate him with the best in point of efficiency. No wonder that Mr. Poli has two houses in Bridgeport.

M. J. Culhane of the Shelton Theatre, Shelton, Conn., can give a lot of exhibitors pointers on expert showmanship and persistence in the fact of stiff obstacles. He had a hard row to hoe when he opened the Shelton, but his experience in the theatrical business and his determination finally qualify him as the proprietor of one of the best little houses, and most successful, in Connecticut. M. J. is an oldtime showman, having held many positions as manager and in olden days also owned his own company and traveled Connecticut and Massachusetts. That was before motion pictures came into being. He is a great booster for our own Epes Winthrop Sargent's exploitation department in the World, terming it one of the most important aids of an exhibitor.

W. A. Moore has the only picture theatre in Seymour, Conn. When he took it over he was the only optimistic person in town about the project, for always before it had been a lemon. Now there aren't enough seats to take care of the crowds and he probably will build a larger house.

It is barely possible that S. Z. Poli may some day fire R. F. Caldwell, manager of Poli's Theatre in Waterbury, Conn., but if he does, why R. F. will be like the Irishman in the story. Pat had worked thirty-seven years for a railroad. One night he told Maggie he'd lost his job. "Sure," she said, "didn't I tell you it wouldn't be steady?" Caldwell has been with Poli many years but is just as enthusiastic over his work now as when he began. The front of the house is his special hobby, though there is nothing he can't and won't do to make it a success.

Andrew Pentine, owner and manager of the Carroll Theatre, Waterbury, has recently installed a $10,000 organ and made extensive alterations. He is strong for street exploitation and is making a wonderful success of his Amateur Nights.

The pilot of the Rialto Theatre, Waterbury, is Frank Quinlan. He's up against strong opposition but keeps his house crowded by appealing to a definite class, attracting them by circusing the front of the house in a really attractive way. Young and enthusiastic, he's always on the job and always on a still hunt for original ideas.

As for one W. C. McNaughton, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waterbury, erstwhile of New Haven, he can out-chin me in remembering the old days. Mac and I had a grand gabfest. He used to manage different burlesque shows and was advance man for some of the biggest shows that traveled the country. We tried remembering old friends' names and Mac won by thirty-six. He likes Waterbury and the picture business. I Wonder what would happen if somebody opened the door of his office some day and called out, "Fifteen minutes before overture!"

Had an interesting chat with Manager I. W. Millard of the Garden Theatre, Waterbury, and was delighted to know that his business is great. He has done many a novel thing to improve business and never seems to miss the bullseye. I always enjoy visiting Waterbury exhibitors, and Mr. Millard is typical of their hospitality and good fellowship. He is sold on the Current and Advance Film Releases department in the World.

When Jack Delaney, manager of the Palace Theatre, Torrington, Conn., and I get together it means reminiscences. About twenty-five years ago, when I was manager for "Big Bill" Steiner, Jack and I took picture shows through Connecticut. They were called Steiner's Imperial Moving Pictures. Jack and I talked about the old days when Ada Jones was the feature, and we showed two two-reel features and a comedy. They were pretty poor stuff but they got the money.

The Wilkinson is the newest house in Wallingford, Conn., and is managed by George Wilkinson and owned by his father. Possessing 1,400 seats, it is thoroughly modern and plays all first-runs. There is an adequate stage for big productions. Though Manager George gets all the business in town, he is strong for "Selling the Picture to the Public" and utilizes exploitation at every opportunity.

Christmas Cheer has come to many a theatre owner because he has followed the dependable tips in Straight From the Shoulder Reports—he knows he will have a good show to show to a good crowd.

A Word to the Wise

Perhaps few people are so intimately acquainted with New England exhibitors as H. S. Marion, traveling representative of Moving Picture World. In the first place, he is an old-timer in the theatrical business and knows thousands of showmen and stage folk; secondly, he is constantly on the move and making new friends . On this page the editor of this department takes pleasure in presenting Mr. Marion's impressions of exhibitors met on his last Connecticut trip. Massachusetts exhibitors will be described next week.

The volume of New England news thus presented ought to be a reminder to theatre owners that it is impossible for this department to adequately "cover" exhibitor activities everywhere without exhibitor co-operation. Let's hear from each one of you personally. Just as the nation is founded on the home, so is the motion picture industry funded on the picture theatre, and the accomplishments and disappointments of each one of you exhibitors are of the highest importance and greatest interest to producer, distributor, trade magazine editor and theatre owner alike.—S. Lothian 24 Years Manager of the Colonial in Boston

Edward Harold Crosby, dramatic editor of the Boston Post, is responsible for the following item, which appeared in his department, "Under the Spotlight," on December 14: "Thomas B. Lothian, general manager of the Park, Tremont, Hollis and Colonial theatres, Boston, was in a reminiscent mood the other evening and remarked that next Friday evening, December 19, would be the twenty-fourth anniversary of the opening of the Colonial and that he assumed managerial control on that occasion. It did not seem so long ago and Mr. Lothian has changed but little in personal appearance. Indeed, one would almost imagine he had grown younger from an incident which took place while I was sitting there. There was a large radio machine in the office and there came over the air an Irish jig. Mr. Lothian was standing near the instrument and began to keep time to the music with his feet. And then and there he executed a miniature clog dance as clever as any I had ever seen on the stage. He answered my look of surprise by stating that in his boyhood days he had danced in public, and that his late father, Napier Lothian, was a ballet master prior to taking charge of the old Boston Theatre Orchestra."

The new Philbin Theatre in Clinton has joined the ranks of those film houses in the Bay State, which are finding Amateur nights a profitable attraction. The list of houses playing amateur nights is growing steadily. This, in conjunction with the frequent appearance of song pluggers with their illustrated slides, makes exhibitors recall the days when illustrated songs and amateur nights got their start.

The general offices of the Gordon Olympia Theatres, Inc., of which Nathan Gordon is president, have been moved from 142 Berkeley street to 333 Washington street, Boston. Commodious quarters have been fitted up for the large staff of accountants, auditors, bookers, general managers and their assistants. Although the new headquarters of the circuit is not so near to the film district as the Berkeley street building, it is in a central part of the Boston business district.

Gordon Wrighter, otherwise just as well known, if not more as "Doc Rawhide," is celebrating anniversary week at S. Z. Poli's Palace Theatre in Springfield. The occasion began December 14.

The Dorchester Theatre in Dorchester has discontinued the Sunday policy of adding two vaudeville acts to the regular film program. A two reel comedy has been substituted.

E. M. Loew has installed a new Robert Morton organ in his Capitol Theatre in Lynn. The organ that formerly was in the Capitol has been installed in Mr. Loew's Strand Theatre in Gloucester.

The other morning about 10:30 o'clock ye scribe was passing the Washington Theatre on Washington street, Boston, and to his great surprise saw displayed in the window of the box office a sign bearing these words: "House sold out." Now for the explanation: The Washington Theatre is in a district where there are a number of employment agencies. Men looking for work evidently get tired of standing up or walking around and the result is that they find the Washington Theatre a convenient place to drop into for a few minutes.

Louis Gordon, assistant general manager of the Gordon circuit vaudeville theatres, is aiding James K. O'Donnell, house manager, in attempting to put over the Gordon's Fields Corner Theatre in Dorchester. Manager O'Donnell is a New York Stater. He was treasurer of the Empire Theatre in Syracuse when it was a legitimate house.

The Goldstein Brothers opened their annual Yuletide Jubilee Week at their Broadway Theatre in Springfield on December 14.

Henry Hunt, formerly the treasurer of the Copley Theatre in Boston, is now holding a similar position in the new Park Theatre. Thomas L. C. Crowell succeeds Mr. Hunt at the Copley.

Elias M. Loew, head of the E. M. Loew circuit of New England theatres, is giving his employes the theatres for a benefit show for them on New Year's Eve. Whatever remains after the show has been paid is divided equally among the employes. It is a yearly custom with Mr. Loew.

Gorman's Theatre in Roslindale was closed the week of December 14 for redecorating. The house reopened December 20.

Al Teschmacher to Manage Casino Theatre in Buffalo

Al Teschmacher, for ten years connected with the Buffalo Pathe exchange as booker, will resign on January 3 to take over the operation of the Casino Theatre, an East Side community house, formerly operated by the late Chris Ruderich. Exhibitors and exchange men alike are going to miss Al's smile and genial personality.

Mindful of the Yuletide season, Kornblite & Cohen, operating several houses in Binghamton, N. Y., have sent passes to every member of the police and fire departments, inviting the men and their families to a performance in the Binghamton Theatre the week of December 15.

Jim Cardino, owner of the Varsity and Kensington theatres, is taking dancing lessons, so he will be in trim for the Movie Ball to be staged on January 29 by Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y. in Elmwood Music Hall. Jim isn't the only one. Lots of other exhibitors are learning the latest steps, so some real terpischorean exhibitions are expected.

Marcus Loew stopped off in Binghamton, N. Y., the other day to visit his friend, Harry Rubin. Mr. Loew was Mr. Rubin's guest at the meeting of the Rotary Club. There is a possibility that Mr. Loew may consider the construction of a large theatre in Binghamton at some future time, according to Mr. Rubin. From Binghamton, Mr. Loew came to Buffalo to look over the local Loew house.

George Keating, manager of the Jubilee Theatre, Buffalo, is giving his patrons some fine film menus. This week George dished up "The Sea Hawk," directly following the run in the Shea houses. He advertised it big and did not advance his prices. Result: big business.

G. H. Losey of Niagara Falls has started an action in the Supreme Court, Buffalo, to recover $16,000 alleged due him on the sales of stock in the financing of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., a few years ago. The suit is against the J. G. Martin Company, which denies the alleged obligation. The Strand is owned by Charlie Hayman, treasurer of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y.

Manager H. M. Addison of the Binghamton Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., is holding a series of Saturday afternoon parties for the kiddies at which he is giving away valuable Christmas prizes. All the kids in town are flocking to the house.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Circle Theatre, Buffalo, has fallen for radio. He has built a set and after the show every night stays up three or four hours seeking "Dx" records.

E. O. Weinberg who recently resigned as manager of the Olympic, Buffalo, a Universal operated house, has accepted a position with the Schine Theatrical Corporation and is at present stationed at the new Rialto Theatre in Lockport.

Excavation work has commenced on George J. Biehler's new $125,000 picture theatre in Hamburg, N. Y., a house which will be modern in every respect. It will seat 1,000 and have a frontage of 55 feet and a depth of 160 feet. The new house will be on Buffalo street, directly opposite the Palace Theatre, which Mr. Biehler has operated for a number of years.

O. T. Schroeppel has resigned as manager of the Strand and Andrews theatres in Salamanca, N. Y., and has accepted the management of the Star Theatre in Tonawanda.

Pittsburgh

The Grand Amusement Company of Johnstown, of which George Panagotacos is president and which operates the Nemo, Parkview and Grand theatres there, is planning the erection at once of one of the finest theatre buildings ever designed. The new seven-story building will be built adjacent to the Fort Stanwix Hotel. The exterior will be constructed of stone with terra cotta, with a rich limestone effect. The house will seat 2,500. There will be two box office windows. These will center in a perfect-elipse lobby, 36 feet wide. The walls will be finished in Bottocinno marble, with stately columns of black and gold marble. The entire floor will be Travertino stone, cut from the famous lava beds of Italy. The lobby will be illuminated by two handsome bronze tripods, with smaller ornamental lighting fixtures on pilasters. The orchestra pit will accommodate thirty-five musicians.

The New Palace Theatre, newest picture house to be erected in Pittsburgh by the Harris Amusement Company, was opened to the public on December 11. The New Palace is located on Diamond street, adjacent to the Harris vaudeville theatre. The new house will play second-run films and admission prices are 10 and 15 cents. Seating capacity is about 400. The new house is an imposing three-story stone structure and was completed in fifty-three actual working days.

H. B. Dygert, formerly in the publicity department of Rowland and Clark Theatres and more recently manager of that organization's State Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh, has resigned and is now at Loew's Aldine Theatre here in the capacity of publicity director.

Harry Fleishman, owner of the Brighton Theatre, North Side, is once again a proud daddy, Mrs. Fleishman having presented him with his fourth son, several days ago.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors seen on Film Row the past week were Walter Silverberg, Greenville; F. L. Farman, Butler; Theodore Mikalowsky, Masontown; M. G. Rhodes, Hastings; B. E. Cupler of Washington.

East Liberty movie fans during the week of December 8 just naturally had to have a liking for feature films in which a dog player the leading role, for no less than three films of this character were on the bills at as many different theatres there. At the Cameraphone was "The Silent Accuser," featuring Peter the Great; at the Alhambra, "Find Your Man," featuring Rin-Tin-Tin, and at the Rex, "Black Lightning," featuring Black Thunder.

Nick Wagner of Rowland and Clark's State Theatre, Erie, has a boxed light over the rest room doors in his theatre. The open side of the box is covered with parchment. On the men's is pasted three pictures of men cut from a style ad. On the women's three female figures the same way. They show a black silhouette through the lighted parchment and make a very artistic and subtle sign.

Veiller Host of Gladiators at Special Troy, N. Y., Show

Tony Veiller of the Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y., played the part of host last Tuesday night to some thirty or more members of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute football team and incidentally scored heavily, not only with the student body, but with the heads of the institution as well. Playing "Gridiron Glory," with the theatre decorated in the college colors and the organ rendering college selections in which not only the team but many others present joined, the evening was most successful. Mr. Veiller extended an invitation to the team to become guests of the theatre shortly before the end of a successful season. The invitation was accepted, after which Mr. Veiller looked around for a picture that would be suitable for the occasion. The team, accompanied by a host of supporters, marched to the theatre from the college and attracted much attention.

A. S. Thornton of the Walden Theatre in Williamstown, Mass., is another exhibitor who believes in going fifty-fifty with the college boys. In other words, Mr. Thornton attends all the big games both in town and out and is a real fan. Naturally enough, the boys number Mr. Thornton as one of their very best friends, with the result that the Walden draws a big share of the college patronage. According to Mr. Thornton, the college boys are most keen over pictures of the Swanson type.

W. W. Farley of Albany is now president of two theatre operating companies, having just been elected president of the Strand Theatre Corporation of Yonkers, succeeding Michael Walsh, who was recently forced to resign on account of a nervous breakdown. The company operates two theatres in Yonkers and controls two others. Mr. Farley also is head of Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady, operating three houses in that city.

G. W. Hornbeck of Hancock lives in a place of 1,326 inhabitants, but he has plenty of nerve and as a result cleaned up $500 on a four days' run of "The Covered Wagon." Naturally, Mr. Hornbeck did not depend entirely on Hancock for his business, and according to all reports plastered the countryside for forty miles around with placards calling attention to the picture he was playing.

It's a safe bet that any film salesman with a sweet tooth will never skip Bert Griffing of the Lyceum in Red Rock. In addition to running the theatre, Mr. Griffing is manager of a chocolate factory and is liberal with samples of his product. Mr. Griffing has just booked "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and is planning to charge 50 cents admission. In the nearby town of Millbrook, E. B. Kelly, owner of the Strand, booking the same picture, will charge a like admission.

The Van Curler in Schenectady, a Berinstein house, went over to pictures between December 7 and 10 with "Powder River," given under the auspices of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Prices ranged from 25 to 50 cents.

Sol Manheimer, manager of the Robbins theatres in Watertown, announced the past week that Nathan Robbins, president of the circuit, was endeavoring to secure a franchise which would place burlesque in the Avon Theatre at Watertown on the first three days of each week. If the franchise is secured the change will become effective about January 1.

Although Prattsville is not on a railroad it will remain on the picture map this winter if W. W. Mace, who runs the theatre there, has anything to say about it. Mr. Mace has been doing an excellent business throughout the fall, and if the snows do not become too deep and stop out-of-town patronage, he will keep the theatre open throughout the entire winter. Incidentally, the little or no snow so far this fall has meant hundreds and possibly thousands of additional revenue to theatre owners in many small towns in this part of the state.

The Mark Strand in Albany is offering Christmas coupon books consisting of ten admission tickets, which are being sold at 50 cents under the regular price of the tickets singly. The theatre has booked "Peter Pan" for New Year's week.

According to W. W. Farley, president of Farash Theatres, Inc., a court order may be obtained within the next two weeks on the application of the Manufacturers' Bank of Troy, calling for the auction sale of the big State Theatre in Schenectady. There have been rumors from time to time that this sale would take place but when the time arrived nothing transpired. The bank holds a mortgage of $140,000 against the theatre, according to Mr. Farley, and there are also mechanics' liens amounting to about $150,000.

Mrs. William Shirley, wife of the general manager of Farash Theatres, Inc., operating the State, Strand and Albany theatres in Schenectady, became suddenly ill while lunching with her husband at the Hotel Belmont in New York City last week, suffering an attack of acute indigestion. Mrs. Shirley had accompanied her busband to New York and had been the guest of Marcus Loew at the opening of "Greed." Mr. Shirley was obliged to return home, leaving Mrs. Shirley with friends residing on Riverside Drive. Mrs. Shirley recovered and was able to return to Schenectady a few days later.

The Advance Picture Corporation of Syracuse opened the Lyric Theatre in Deposit last week, giving the village two houses, both close together, and with H. A. Matthyer, one of the pioneer exhibitors of New York State, in command of the Opera House.

Jack Mathews is shy several teeth but is feeling decidedly better even though he is forced to remain indoors for a few days after having the molars extracted. Mr. Mathews handles the "Plattsburgh" and according to all reports the house is doing the best business in its history. Bill Benton of Saratoga Springs is planning to give Mr. Mathews a run for his money, however, with his theatre which will open December 29. Several from along Film Row expect to attend the opening.

Although the Barcli is one of the finest downtown houses in Schenectady, it has been definitely decided to keep it closed in the hopes that the State, Strand and Albany will play to bigger business. It is contended by several Schenectady exhibitors that the downtown section is overseated, and it is quite possible that next summer will see at least one other theatre owned by Farash Theatres, Inc., closed. At the present time the State Theatre seats 1,900; Strand, 1,200; Albany, 1,200, while the Van Curler, a Berinstein house, accommodates about 1,300, and the Hudson, playing stock, 1,100.

Well, Bill Smalley has gone and done it again, adding the Strand in Mohawk, N. Y., to his holdings, taking over the house this week from Sam Slotnick. The theatre seats about 400. Now that Mr. Smalley has thirteen theatres one wouldn't naturally expect him to stop there and neither does Mr. Smalley expect to stop. The fourteenth will come within the next few deeks, according to all reports.

Mad as a hatter one moment and laughing the next, when the absurdity of the whole thing struck him, Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany, as well as the two Strand-operated houses in Troy, walked out of the city court in Albany last Monday with a mixture of a frown and a grin. Mr. Hill had been on hand as a witness against Thomas Ross, charged with stealing a purse from a woman patron of the Mark Strand Theatre. It is claimed that police investigations revealed Ross as having been a former convict, resulting in a charge first preferred of petit larceny being changed to grand larceny, with a consequent increase in bail. When Ross was arraigned he was accompanied by a woman friend. She went out to secure the additional bail. Not returning, Ross, practically unnoticed, also left the building, but was recaptured a few hours later when a general alarm was sent throughout the city. According to Mr. Hill, it reminded him of his old show days when he laughed over a sketch entitled "Irish Justice."

An Alley Theatre That Made Good in a Big Way

IN a dark side-alley of Pittsburgh is located a picture theatre. How anyone came to build on this spot will always remain one of the unsolved mysteries of the show business. Nevertheless, it is there—the Aldine Theatre. Vaudeville, burlesque, pictures—practically everything has played there and failed. So the Aldine remained dark for over a year. The leading Pittsburgh exhibitors refused to even consider the house. They were all of the same opinion: "That house will never pay."

Marcus Loew, looking for a theatre in Pittsburgh, saw this side-alley theatre. Now everyone knows that Marcus Loew is a gambler when it comes to theatres. He offered Louis K. Sidney, then managing the Fox houses in Denver, a proposition to open the Aldine in Pittsburgh. Sidney did open the Aldine a year and a half ago and it is still open and claims to be doing the biggest business of any theatre in Western Pennsylvania.

The first thing Sidney did was to put in good shows and good pictures with proper presentations. He then advertised extensively. His exploitation campaigns were placed along sane and original ideas. Sidney sold WCAE, local radio station, the idea of broadcasting his specialties. "Sid and His Gang," as they are now known, are the reigning favorites of the "listeners-in," and he gets plenty of space from the hardest newspapers in the United States.

For the first five weeks after the Aldine was opened by Sidney business was poor. People were skeptical. The Aldine had always been the joke house of Pittsburgh. Then gradually people started to talk about the wonderful shows, and the more they talked the more Sidney advertised. He hasn't stopped yet. His presentations are masterpieces.

When asked the reason for his success, Sidney replies: "Tell the people what you have. Advertise, exploit your pictures, but be sure that you are giving them just what you say."

News of Ohio Theatre Owners

The State Theatre, Cleveland, has built a complete studio in the lobby for the purpose of broadcasting radio programs, which will be done between 7 and 8 o'clock each evening. The programs are in three units, the first consisting of a classical overture by the theatre orchestra, of which Philip Spitalny is conductor, this being followed by two or three popular numbers. The second unit will be made up of a program of vocal and instrumental music in the studio. Whenever a movie star or some person of importance appears at one of the Loew theatres, to which chain the State belongs, a short talk will be given. The third unit will be broadcasted by the new organ which has just been installed. The studio, about ten by eighteen feet, is located on the mezzanine floor just at the head of the grand stairway from the main lobby and has plate glass windows on two sides, giving the patrons of the theatre an opportunity to observe the artists broadcasting.

John Schwalm, head of the Jewel Photoplay Company, Hamilton, Ohio, has arranged a benefit for the Children's Tuberculosis Camp on Christmas Day, when "The Light That Failed" will be shown in connection with a vaudeville program at the Jefferson Theatre. Schwalm has donated the use of the house and will furnish the film and talent, also paying all expenses in connection with the benefit.

The Dutchess Theatre, Warren, Ohio, after having been closed for several weeks, during which time it was entirely redecorated and newly equipped throughout, reopened under direction of Forrest Templin, who has been managing the Hippodrome in that city. One of the new features of the house is a $20,000 concert organ. The Dutchess is operated by the Smith Amusement Company, which also controls the Opera House and Hippodrome.

Managing Director Fred S. Meyer, who features vaudeville at his Palace Theatre, Hamilton, every Friday night, recently presented several artists from the Schuster-Martin School, a famous dramatic college at Cincinnati.

Among the recent Ohio incorporations appears the Toledo Amusement Company, Toledo, Ohio, for $50,000, by George F. Holding, George P. Smith and others.

Indiana

A new picture theatre is being erected at 2703 West Tenth street, Indianapolis, and will be operated by Frank Donas. The building will be completed shortly after the first of the year and will be modernly equipped.

John A. Keyes is the new owner of the Illinois Theatre, a picture house, at 2127 North Illinois street, Indianapolis. The new owner is contemplating several improvements in the interior.

Robert H. Harris, proprietor of the Harris-Grand Theatre at Bloomington, and Mrs. Harris have gone to Miami, Fla., for the winter.

Arend Rosenbush, proprietor of the Royal Theatre at Hartford City, has signed a contract to exhibit Paramount productions during 1925. The Royal is one of the most popular movie theatres in Hartford City and has been under Mr. Rosenbush's management for several years.

The cry of "fire" almost threw patrons of the Grand Theatre at Bluffton into a panic last Tuesday night. Aisles were jammed and fire escapes were in use when the falsity of the alarm was ascertained by Manager Logan. The photoplay, "After Six Days," was being shown and the destruction of Sodom by fire was being depicted. Some boy was responsible.

H. M. Ferguson, a coal operator at Clinton, has purchased the Capitol Theatre in Clinton, which was sold this week at receiver's sale. The theatre formerly was owned and operated by the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, which had a chain in Indiana. It was appraised for sale at $40,000 and Mr. Ferguson's bid was $47,000. Since acquiring the Capitol, Ferguson has leased it for ten years to the Shew & Shew Company, which operates the Wabash Theatre in Clinton.

The case against Maurice Hankinson, manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Gary, who is charged with violating a city ordinance which prohibits the operation of picture machines within the fire limits, has been continued until a later date. He was arrested recently in connection with the attempt to prevent the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation." The city council of Gary, at its next regular meeting, is expected to repeal the ordinance which Hankinson is charged with having violated.

Casanave Becomes Executive of Interstate Co., Chicago

Charles Casanave, for two years sales manager of the United Artists' Chicago exchange, has been made assistant general manager of Interstate Theatres, Inc., the new circuit organized here recently by Lubliner & Trinz and other chain houses. Mr. Casanave is making his headquarters at Lubliner & Trinz offices until permanent quarters are secured.

The new Kozy Theatre at Marseilles, Ill., owned by Grabin and Testa, was opened the middle of this month with a feature bill that pulled capacity houses. The house seats 300 and will charge 10 and 25 cents.

The Liberty Theatre at Davenport, Iowa, has been opened by Bellamy and Rapp and will show pictures exclusively. The house was formerly the Rialto.

The failure to comply with the Chicago health and sanitation codes caused Mayor Dever to revoke the licenses of two picture theatres, the Plaisance at 650 East 63rd street and the Langley at 702 East 53rd street. Policemen were stationed at the theatre to prevent their reopening. Revocation was recommended by Health Commissioner Herman Bundesen.

Joseph Desberger, managing director of the Delmonte Theatre at St. Louis, has taken over the Washington Square Theatre at Quincy, Ill., from Pinkleman & Cory. Vaudeville will be dispensed with. Only presentations and musical acts will be on the programs.

Walter Hill has been made assistant manager and press representative of "The Iron Horse" at the Woods Theatre, Chicago, succeeding J. L. McCurdy, who is now managing director of the Randolph Theatre.

"Peter Pan" will have its premiere at the McVickers Theatre, Chicago, the week of December 29.

T. E. Malone put over "The Mine With the Iron Door" last week at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, and put up fifty window displays in drug stores as well as other displays in the Winchester hardware stores of the city. The Public Library gave away 25,000 book marks to the patrons during the week.

Joseph Hopp, managing director of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, continues his unbroken record of new enrollment of members every week. Last week was his eighteenth straight week. During it he secured the following new members: Mrs. M. M. Warren, Majestic Theatre, Chillicothe, Ill.; Lawrence Schafer, Opera House, Greenview; Lawrence Schafer, Opera House, Athens; Lawrence Watkins, Strand Theatre, Petersburg; Carl Pearson, Princess Theatre, Rushville, and W. W. Geer, Princess Theatre, Vermont.

O. W. Larson has sold the Princess Theatre at Odebolt, Ill., to L. M. Wilcox and L. A. Miller of Lake View.

McVickers Theatre, Chicago, put over a big week with Julian Eltinge in person and Thomas Meighan in "Tongues of Flame." House records were broken for the week and the staff under Manager Bruce Fowler put in a strenuous week.

Balaban & Katz, in co-operation with station WMAQ, broadcast the Saturday night programs from the Chicago Theatre starting at 9 o'clock. For an extra feature last Saturday Milo Luka from the Civic Grand Opera Company put on the principal musical number for the evening. The programs have made a hit with the radio fans in this territory and have added to the popularity of the B. & K. circuit.

A. W. Parker has sold the Princess Theatre at Samborn, Ill., to W. P. Green.

Dale Goldie will complete the building of the American Theatre at Cherokee, Iowa, which was started by Walter James and Harry Sisk. He will spend about $100,000.

J. H. Hardy and Brothers of this city have purchased the Charles City Theatre at Charles City, Iowa.

Strong opposition has developed to the extension of the Luella Theatre on 71st street, Chicago, as the zoning law recently adopted is against business buildings in that territory.

Stanley Lubliner, manager of the Pershing Theatre, Chicago, spent last week on a hunting expedition and the boys are all looking for their share of the game when he gets back. A. D. Natelson was in charge of the house while he was away.

J. Lieberthal has taken over the Model Theatre at 69th and Halsted streets, Chicago, and will reopen as soon as the ventilating system and other improvements have been made.

Balaban & Katz report the demand for the Christmas gift admission books as good. The books are issued in denominations of $2,50, $5 and $10 and are good any time at any house of the circuit.

Will Sohm, manager of the Belasco Theatre at Quincy, Ill., for nine years, has bought the interest of William A. Schwindeler and Herman E. Nelson of the Star Theatre in the Belasco Theatre Company and in the future will have exclusive control of the house. The policy will be changed and first-run pictures will be put on at popular prices. Other changes will be made in the house and Mr. Sohm will put on an exclusive picture policy in the future.

Harry Earl, formerly western press representative for the Loew Circuit, has been made manager of the publicity department of Lubliner & Trinz.

Fire destroyed one of the Gould theatres at Lawrenceville, Ill. It has not yet been decided whether to rebuild.

W. J. Etherton is the new owner and manager of the Grand Theatre, formerly the Edinburg, at Edinburg, Ill.

The J. & J. Theatre at Hume, Ill., has been closed and will reopen during the holidays.

The Metropolis Opera House at Metropolis, Ill., was recently destroyed by fire. It is not known whether the house will be rebuilt this fall or early in the spring.

The Capitol's Plans

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 10.

Editor, Exhibitors' News:

It might interest you to know that the Capitol Enterprises, operating in Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska, have taken over the A-muse-U, Grand and Palace Theatres at Muscatine, Iowa. Change of management to be effective January 1. Mr. Holliday, formerly of the Wareham Theatre at Muscatine, will be transferred to Carthage, Missouri, by Capitol Enterprises, where he will operate the Grand and Royal Theatres.

Palace and A-muse-U Theatres will continue a picture policy, while the Grand, seating 1,200, will play vaudeville and pictures.

Capitol Enterprises is now completing, or has well under way, its new half million dollar theatre at Lincoln, Neb. This house will be finished by April 15.

Most sincerely yours,
THE CAPITOL ENTERPRISES,
Phil L. Ryan, Vice-President.

Michigan

Jacob Schreiber, proprietor of a string of neighborhood theatres in Detroit, and Lester Potter, police censor, have returned from a hunting trip into the north woods. Both shot a buck, all the law allows each hunter.

C. J. Donlin has taken over the operation of the Courtesy Theatre and has closed it to install a $20,000 organ and redecorate and refurnish it. He will reopen Christmas week.

The home of Lou Cohen of Warren and Cohen, operating the Colonial, a first-run theatre, and several neighborhood houses, has been blessed by the arrival of a baby boy known as Elliott.

Practically a whole block of buildings in downtown Detroit are in process of demolition to make way for the new State Theatre being erected by the combined John H. Kunsky and Balaban and Katz interests. A change in plans will make the State on a par with the Capitol as far as seating capacity is concerned. Arrangements have been made to provide for about 4,000.

W. S. Butterfield, president of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, together with Mrs. Butterfield, will sail for Europe early in January. They will visit all the principal countries, returning about March 1.

Milwaukee

Shorewood, Milwaukee's exclusive residential suburb, is finally to be invaded by a picture theatre. Henry Goldman, Green Bay theatre man, and his brother Joe, Milwaukee jeweler, have announced plans for a 1,500-seat showhouse, and it appears that opposition that has prevented previous attempts to build a theatre there have been overcome successfully.

The theatre, according to the announcement, will be part of a two-story building which will house a number of apartments and stores. Detailed plans are being worked out and are expected to be announced within a few weeks.

Although the theatre is assured, indications are that when it opens to the public it will be under the watchful eye of a village censorship board.

Shorewood, with its population of approximately 8,000, has been a location that numerous film men have at various times sought to enter without success.

In line with their policy of public service, Milwaukee's seventy theatres threw open their doors to an army of two minute speakers furnished by the post office in an effort to speed Christmas mailing.

A drive to improve matinee business has been launched by the Saxe organization in Milwaukee with the announcement that afternoon admission prices at both the Wisconsin and Strand have been reduced from 40 to 25 cents. Although patrons were informed of the cut in the form of Christmas messages tending to indicate that the new figures are for the holiday shopping period only, it is understood that the 25 cent admission will be a permanent feature hereafter. Although evening business at Saxe houses has stood up remarkably well, it is felt, it is said, that considerable can be done in building up the matinees. Evening prices at both the Strand and Wisconsin are 50 cents.

A drive to enlist more showhouses in the ranks of those featuring universal theatre parties has been outlined by the Milwaukee branch of the M. P. T. O. At present thirty-five houses in the city honor benefit tickets sold under the Universal party plan.

men of that city to secure a theatre for a benefit performance to establish a sick fund have necessarily been changed. Prior to his illness and death Mr. Suckno had promised the use of the Albany Theatre. Another house will be selected at the next meeting of the film salesmen on December 21.

Donald Bane lives in Hudson but is rapidly spreading out over the territory in his theatre holdings, having theatres in Athens, East Durham and Germantown.

Sam Cummings, in town from Victory Mills last week, stated that he would run Sunday nights only until some time in January, when he will open up on Wednesday nights as well. Although the knitting mills are running well, Mr. Cummings claims that business has been off at his theatre and that he will close to one night a week until after the people get through spending their money on Christmas presents.

Bill Shirley of Schenectady is certainly stepping out these days with a $175 Tuxedo and sporting $4.50 neckties. Mr. Shirley has a novel personal checkbook carrying his monogram, closely resembling a "$" sign. Mr. Shirley plans to dedicate his new organ at the Strand Theatre within a week or so, after which there is a possibility that the orchestra at this theatre may be switched to the State. Mr. Shirley is quite an organist himself and frequently whiles away an hour or so at the console.

Look for a splurge soon from J. F. Sullivan of the Empire in North Adams, Mass. He has a 1,300-seat house. Business has been rather quiet with him, but, as he puts it, election is now over, the holidays will soon be past, after which watch out.

A bank employe by day and a theatre owner by night, Charles Miller, owner of the Columbian Bright Spot in Rensselaer, has little time to himself. His theatre is well run, however, being virtually the "bright spot" in the railroad town.

Although this is the off season in Saratoga Springs, D. J. Harrington of the Palace admitted last week that he couldn't complain about business. Irving J. Goldsmith, Deputy Attorney General, is associated with Mr. Harrington in the management of the theatre.

There is a rather odd situation in Roxbury. The village now supports two picture theatres, the Cronk and the Fanning. Each house charges 10 and 20 cents, each runs two days a week, and the identical two days at that. Later on maybe one of the houses will switch to another two days.

There is little prospect of admission prices ever being reduced at the State Theatre in Schenectady as a means of stimulating business. When the Strand company was operating the theatre prices were dropped but without making any appreciable difference in the crowds. The contention against reduction is also based on recent observations showing that while balcony seats are lower and fully as good as others, that nine out of every ten persons take the more expensive seats without apparently giving a thought to saving 10 or 15 cents by seats further back.

A. A. Elliott, one of the real old-timers in Hudson, maintaining his own poster plant, doing plenty of advertising, strikes Albany once in a while and is a welcome figure along Film Row. Mr. Elliott is a gentleman of the old school and his reminiscences are decidedly interesting.

Mrs. Frank Hickey, wife of the treasurer of Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady, was mistaken the other night for Madam Schumann-Heink, whom she closely resembles. Mrs. Hickey was sitting in the private office of the State Theatre waiting for her husband on the night of the Schumann-Heink recital. A stranger approached, carrying a program, and rather hesitatingly asking Mrs. Hickey if she would not autograph the same. Sensing the situation, Mrs. Hickey explained that she was not the singer.

St. Louis Film Men's Ball Proves Outstanding Success

The first annual mask ball given under the joint auspices of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the St. Louis Film Board of Trade at Arcadia Dance Hall, Friday evening Dec. 12, was very successful. A crowd estimated at upwards of 2,500 attended, many prominent out-of-town exhibitors being among those present. The judges selected Miss Mary Stewart, 18 years old, employed as an inspector by the local exchange of Universal, as the best looking girl present. She was given a cash prize of $150 in gold and also two season passes to the Kingsland Theatre, which house she represented in the contest. The profits from the ball will be used to outfit a club room for exhibitors and film men to be located along Picture Row.

Harry Koplar of the St. Louis Amusement Company has been seen in conferences recently with Frank Tate and Charley Cella of the Southern Realty & Financial Company, owners of the Columbia and Strand, and gossip in realty circles is that Harry is considering erecting a large theatre and office building on the Columbia corner.

A theatre, apartment and store structure to cost $800,000 is to be erected on the site of the Hamilton Skydome, Hamilton and Easton avenue. The property changed hands the past week and it is said the new owners paid $200,000 for the corner. It fronts 200 feet on Easton by a depth of 147 feet on Hamilton avenue. The new owners have not been named as yet.

St. Charles, Ill., is to have a new picture theatre to cost $150,000. It is being erected by Lester J. Norris and wife. The building will also contain stores and apartments.

Frank E. Headley, 1325 East Walnut street, Springfield, Mo., and associates have perfected plans for financing a $250,000 vaudeville and picture house, to seat 2,000. Contracts will be let in the spring.

Youth Week is another innovation that Billy Goldman, owner of the Kings Theatre, has sprung to make the Kings more popular. The theatre will be entirely in charge of boys and girls the week of December 20. They will pick the program, run the orchestra, the machines and be on the job everywhere. The boys and girls to serve will be selected by the patrons through popular vote.

Al Marcks, manager of the Kings Theatre, has been promoted to first associate of William Goldman, owner of the Kings, Queens and Rivoli theatres. Aaron Fineshriver, manager of the Rivoli, moves out to the Kings, while A. B. Williams, formerly salesman for Pathe and later Universal, becomes manager of the Rivoli.

George Skouras in the future will devote his entire time to looking after the Aubert and Chippewa theatres, in which he is interested financially. Harry Koplar will take charge of the bookings for the St. Louis Amusement Company houses, fourteen in number.

The Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, Ill., is now in charge of F. L. Finley. It was formerly owned by R. W. Weber, who has also disposed of his house at Bluffs, Ill.

Lou Menges of the State Theatre, East St. Louis, is convalescent following an operation.

Bob Cluster of Belleville, Ill., is recovering from his recent illness.

Mrs. Curley B. Gould of Lawrenceville, Ill., hopes to reopen her Alvion Theatre on Christmas Day. The theatre was badly damaged by fire recently.

Claude McBrayer, owner of the Auditorium Theatre, Hamilton, Mo., has purchased the Majestic Theatre in Bowling Green, Mo. He takes charge on January 1.

Spyros Skouras and brother Charles have gone to Chicago. While in the Windy City they will confer with Rapp & Rapp, architects, for the new $4,000,000 Ambassador Theatre and office building. Occupants of the present buildings on the site have been paid a bonus to vacate immediately. Work of clearing the site, which is at Seventh and Locust streets, will start in January.

Visitors of the past week included: R. W. Brannon, Royalton, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.; Miss Billy Armstrong, Cairo, Ill.; Tom Reed, Judge Kelley and Commander O. Simms, all of Duquoin, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. O. W. McCutcheon, Sikeston, Mo.; Senator John Rees, Wellsville, Mo.; Gus Kerasotas, Springfield, Ill.; Leo Bernstein, Springfield, Ill.; W. W. Watts, Springfield, Ill.; Billy Sohm, Quincy, Ill.; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; J. Smith, Moscow Mills, Mo.; Charles LaPee, Sullivan, Mo.; Charley Goodnight, De Soto, Mo.; Curley Lawson, Mount Olive, Ill.; Bob Stempfle, St. Charles, Mo.; Bob Clarke, Effingham, Ill.

Scrip Books Selling Fast in San Francisco Theatre

The Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., operating the California, Granada and Imperial theatres, San Francisco, is meeting with wonderful success with its sale of scrip books containing tickets to these houses. These scrip books are advertised on the screen and in the theatre programs, and at each house a girl is installed in the lobby during the rush period explaining the plan and selling the books. The books are in two denominations, a book sold at $5 and containing $6 worth of admissions and one at $10 and containing admissions valued at $12.25. During most of the year the appeal to purchase the books is based on the idea of thrift, since they represent a saving to the theatregoer of more than 16 per cent. Of late they have been strongly featured as holiday gifts, as they most acceptably answer the usual question of what shall be given at Christmas. The books sold during the holiday season did not differ from those offered the rest of the year, but were enclosed in tasty holiday envelopes.

James Beatty of San Jose, than whom there is no more popular exhibitor in the Far West, has taken over the Casino Theatre on Ellis street, San Francisco, remodeled and redecorated it at a cost of more than $100,000, and has reopened it under the name of Beatty's Casino, offering vaudeville and pictures. This house, which seats more than 2,000, has been opened and closed so many times that it is impossible to list the many changes. Under the new management its success seems assured. The house was redecorated by the Robert E. Powers Studios, projection equipment installed by the Western Theatre Supply Co. and a Leathurby-Smith pipe organ was installed by the Leathurby-Smith Organ Company. The policy is continuous performances from 1 to 11 p. m., at 25 and 50 cents. Mr. Beatty will give his latest theatrical venture his personal attention.

The twelfth annual movie ball of Moving Picture Operators, San Francisco Local 162, will be held on New Year's eve at the Exposition Auditorium. Anthony Noreiga is general chairman of the committee in charge. Proceeds of the affair go to the sick and benefit fund of the organization.

Among the exhibitors who have visited San Francisco's Film Row of late have been Charles R. Fraler, of the Grand Theatre, Tracy; Mrs. T. H. Dixon, of Arbuckle and Knights Landing; J. D. Austin, manager of the Portola Theatre, Portola; L. A. Eaton, of Bay Point; A. C. Sweeney, of the Forest Theatre, Boulder Creek; P. W. Brubeck, of the Majestic Theatre, Concord; D. Pezzuto, of the Loring Theatre, Crockett; Everett Howell, manager of the Monache Theatre, Porterville; F. G. Leal, of Irvington, and W. H. Laughead, of Westwood.

Charles R. Fraler showed "Abraham Lincoln" at Tracy, Cal., to the entire school population and was delighted with results, the picture winning many new friends for his theatre.

L. G. McCabe of the California and Liberty theatres, Coalinga, Cal., is now managing the Cabiria and Balboa theatres at San Diego for West Coast Theatres, Inc., leaving the Coalinga houses in charge of a partner. Al Oxtaby of Associated First National made the trip to San Diego recently and booked this service into the Coalinga houses.

The Auburn Theatre, conducted at Auburn, Cal., by W. F. Jacobs, is to be remodeled and many changes made. The installation of an organ has been arranged.

Plans are being prepared by Architect Birge M. Clarke of Palo Alto, Cal., for a 500-seat picture theatre to be erected at Menlo Park.

Seattle

Robbers broke into the Weir Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., on Sunday night, battered the safe open with sledges and chisels and escaped with the Saturday and Sunday receipts from all Aberdeen theatres, amounting to more than $4,000. Apparently frightened away, they overlooked over $500 in bills. The Aberdeen and Hoquiam houses were recently bought by Jansen & Von Herberg, Dolan of the former D. & R. retaining his interest and remaining in the firm.

J. D. Williams was in Seattle on Monday night, the guest of J. G. Von Herberg. Mr. Williams was en route east from California. He left Tuesday morning for New York.

E. H. Haubrook of Seattle is building a picture theatre at First avenue, N. W., and 85th street. Construction has been started. He will spend about $25,000 on the house, which is reported to be a 10-cent policy theatre.

The Ray, Olympia, Wash., one of the houses involved in the recent Jensen-Von Herberg deal, has been closed.

Benjamin W. Fey, who is building the Renton Theatre, Renton, Wash., is convalescent from an operation. He plans to open his new house on Christmas Day.

Montana

Merle Davis while managing a chain of his own theatres is not too busy to consider giving of his time and money to help make a joyful Christmas for Butte's worthy poor. That he is a member of the long famous Joshers' Club goes without saying. This club is celebrating its twentieth anniversary on the twentieth day of this month by giving an amateur show. Mr. Davis has charge of it and is using not only the best amateur material but he has persuaded a number of vaudeville actors to help out in a number of clever stunts.

The club had its beginning some twenty years ago in one of Butte's famous saloons. The story has it that a messenger came with the news of an old-timer ill and in great need. It was almost Christmas and immediately each member of the crowd gave what he could to help the old fellow. Then it was suggested that there might be others in need. The theatre men, among them the late and dearly beloved "Uncle Dick" Sutton, with as many men as could be mustered to a roll call, joined in the good work of feeding the worthy poor, and up to this day the seed planted is still being harvested to spread the gospel of good tidings of great joy.

The Joshers received the name from a news story appearing in one of the local papers in which the reporter expressed the belief that the "Joshers' Club" would never make good its plans. The club is most unconventional in that it has no officers or committees and keeps its membership a secret. Each year the Joshers put on a show at the Broadway.

W. B. Hartwig, owner of the Hartwig Theatre of Dillon, spent a few days last week calling at the various exchanges in the city.

"Hot Water" went over extremely big in Livingston last week at the Strand Theatre. The attendance eclipsed all previous records for Lloyd pictures, according to E. P. White, manager of the theatre.

Due to the fact that W. W. Wisner, manager of the Temple Theatre, has been unable to get the photoplays he wished for his house, he is changing his program every day and giving mixed vaudeville and musical comedy. Judging from the crowds he is drawing, he is pleasing Butte theatre fans and rolling in good box office receipts.

W. J. Sullivan, manager of the Silver Bow Amusement Company, by popular request kept "Abraham Lincoln" an extra day. An unusually fine program of music of a patriotic character was a decided asset.

Butte film men are talking of organizing a F. I. L. M. club along the lines of the Salt Lake club.

Frank A. Boedecker of Bozeman, manager of the Ellen Theatre, visited Butte last week.

Officers of the Montana Film Board of Trade are: President, J. M. Linn; vice-president and treasurer, C. M. Van Horn; secretary and general counsel, Harry Meyer.

Members of the Board of Arbitration: William Hughart, J. W. Rue and C. M. Van Horn, distributor members; Merle Davis, William Sullivan, Mr. Rich and D. C. Scott, Anaconda, exhibitor members.

Los Angeles

Mike Gore of the West Coast has broken "Dante's Inferno" into the Criterion for an extended run. Along the local Rialto it was thought that the film was going into the Million Dollar Theatre but Gore got it for the Criterion.

Harry Arthur has taken over the supervision of the California and Miller's Main street house since they passed under the management of the West Coast chain.

Betty Bronson in Loew Houses

Personal Appearances of "Peter Pan" in New York City, Jan. 5, 6 and 7.

Betty Bronson will make a series of personal appearances in New York City for Marcus Loew, starting Monday, January 5th. On that day she will appear at Loew's Orpheum in the afternoon and at the Avenue B and Delancey Street in the evening. January 6 she will appear at Loew's Palace in the afternoon and the Victoria and National in the evening. January 7 the Burland, Gates and Willard; January 9, Brevoort, Elsmere and Burnside; January 10, Astoria, Alpine and Boro Park, and the afternoon of January 12 at the Circle and Lincoln Square.

A radical departure from the usual routine of film bookings will be made with the picture "Peter Pan," twenty-four Loew Theatres in Greater New York practically playing the feature simultaneously, January 5, 6 and 7, although some of the houses playing pictures exclusively will have it for one or two days.

Additions to Arrow

"Big Boy" Williams Westerns and "Wolfheart," Belgian Dog, in New Series

Coincident with the departure of Charles R. Seeling for for West Coast, comes the announcement that through a contract signed by Mr. Seeling with W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Pictures Corporation, that company is to distribute a series of productions starring "Big Boy" Williams and the famous Belgian police dog, Wolfheart.

The first three productions scheduled in the order of their release, are: "Wolfheart's Revenge," "Fangs of Wolfheart" and "Bad Man from Bodie."

"I was delighted to sign up with Mr. Seeling," says Dr. Shallenberger, "because I feel that he has something distinctly different to offer in western dramas. The combination of 'Wolfheart' and 'Big Boy' Williams is an ideal one and makes possible a most unusual type of Western story. We shall announce the first release in a few days."

"Lena Rivers"

Camera Work Completed on Arrow's Next Whitman Bennett Picture

Closely following the successful premiere of "The Lost Chord" comes the announcement from President W. E. Shallenberger, that the second of the series of special feature productions to be released by Arrow Pictures Corporation will be "Lena Rivers," Whitman Bennett's screen adaptation of the world famous story by Mary J. Holmes, a novel which probably attained wider circulation than any other American romance of its type.

All camera work on "Lena Rivers" is completed and the task of cutting and editing is now in the hands of its producer.

The cast, an unusually large one, has been announced as including Earle Williams, Johnny Walker, Gladys Hulette, Edna Murphy, Herman Lieb, William P. Hayes, Irma Harrison, Doris Rankin and many other well known screen celebrities. Literally millions of readers have thrilled to the drama of this celebrated novel and Mr. Bennett's picturization is reported to have transferred to the screen a faithful reproduction of the original story.

A Personal Message

CONSIDERATION is one of the greatest words in the English language. During the making of "Manhattan," my first motion picture for the Famous Players-Lasky Company, I was the recipient of more consideration and spontaneous courtesy than I have ever before encountered during my many years in the amusement business.

I am taking this advertising space for the purpose of expressing, even though in a slight degree, my appreciation of the consideration and courtesy of the following persons whose helpfulness aided me to no small extent in making a picture which has received nothing but kind praise:

ADOLPH ZUKOR
JESSE L. LASKY

Monty Banks To Produce

Howard Estabrook to Manage Company—Associated Exhibitors Release

Associated Exhibitors announce this week that Monty Banks, screen comedian, has contracted to produce three feature-length pictures for the coming season. Work will be begun on the first picture January 1st on the West Coast.

This announcement follows the incorporation in the State of New York of a producing company known as "The Monty Banks Pictures, Inc.", organized following Mr. Banks' recent return from Europe. The first picture Mr. Banks will make has been tentatively titled "Water Shy," and will be made with Howard Estabrook at the helm as general production and business manager for the company.

Monty Banks left last week for the Coast, where he will arrange for a studio and line up his cast for his first picture. While in Europe, Mr. Banks arranged for the handling of his foreign sales and closed an important deal which provides his recent Associated release, "Racing Luck," as the opening attraction in the newly finished "Cinema Palace" of Rome.

In discussing European theatre conditions, Mr. Banks stated that there are a number of newly planned playhouses either in the course of construction or finished.

The "Palace Cinema" in Rome has just been completed and has a seating capacity of 2,500.

Bernstein Elected a Director

Arthur Bernstein, production manager of the Jackie Coogan company, upon his return from Europe where he handled the financial details of Jackie's trip abroad was advised that during his absence he had been elected a member of the board of directors of the West Coast Theatres. His election to the directorate of West Coast theatres is due to his intimate knowledge of the exhibition and distribution phases of the business. Before joining the Coogan forces Bernstein was a prominent exhibitor in Los Angeles. His duties on the board of West Coast will not interfere with his production work for Jackie.

Two Christmas Releases Announced by Fox Corp.

TWO special productions will be released by Fox Film Corporation during the week beginning December 21, namely, "Folly of Vanity" and "Gold Heels."

"Folly of Vanity" is the big Christmas week feature release that annually marks the Fox output. "Gold Heels" is an adaptation from the stage play "Checkers" by Henry M. Blossom, Jr.

Featuring Betty Blythe, who scored her initial hit in the Fox production "The Queen of Sheba," and coming from the pen of Charles Darnton, former New York dramatic critics, recently added to the Fox scenario staff, "Folly of Vanity" is billed as a "dazzling dramatic fantasy."

The most ambitious release of the month, "Folly of Vanity" boasts of being the work of two directors and is divided into two parts, fantastical and modern. The modern sequences were directed by Maurice Elvey, latest addition to the Fox directorial staff, while the fantasy creations were made under the direction of Henry Otto.

The fantasy sequences of this picture are expected to create a bigger furore than did the sensational "Dante's Inferno," now playing to capacity audiences throughout the country and which is one of the outstanding triumphs of the current season's screen productions.

The scenes of the fantasy are the beautiful undersea caverns of Neptune, King of the Deep, and hundred of beautiful girls, as sirens and mermaids, add to the charm of these sets.

Billie Dove as "Alice", a human who wandered from the path and found herself in Neptune's court, has the leading role in the fantasy. She is the only one in the cast who plays in both parts.

In the modern sequence Miss Dove is also cast in the lead as "Alice," with Miss Blythe playing the part of "Mrs. Ridgeway," adventuress with few scruples and unlimited ambition. Jack Mulhall has the leading male role. John Sainpolis, is "Ridgeway," husband of the adventuress while Paul Weigel is cast as an old roue.

Others playing important roles in the modern scenes of the Christmas special are Otto Matieson, Byron Munson, Edna Mae Cooper, Franzi Gunn, Marcella Daly and Lotus Thompson. Mr. Matieson is cast as a Frenchman; Mr. Munson as an old stage door Johnny; Miss Cooper as a Russian vamp; Miss Gunn interprets a Scandinavian girl; Miss Daly a French woman, and Lotus Thompson a blonde gold digger.

Supporting Miss Dove in the fantasy are, Consuelo, celebrated dancer, in the role of "Thetis," Joan La Motte was "Lorelei," Al Mazola and "The Jester," Lola Drovnar as "The Witch," Bob Klein as "Neptune," Edna Gregory as "The Siren."

The tie-up between the fantasy and the modern sequence is adroitly and originally done and is comparable only with the manner in which "Inferno" was handled.

Bobby Agnew and Peggy Shaw are cast in the leading roles of "Gold Heels," a W. S. Van Dyke production dealing with the romance and thrills of horse racing.

"Checkers" the stage play from which "Gold Heels" is adapted was one of the most popular legitimate attractions a few years back and high hopes are entertained for an even more surpassing success for the screen version.

The humor in "Gold Heels" is supplied by the inimitable Lucien Littlefield, with the villainy supplied by William Norton Bailey. Carl Stockdale, Fred Butler, Harry Tracy, James Douglas, Winifred Landis, Katherine Craig, Buck Black and Betty Hisle are cast in important roles in this production.

"Smilin' Dick" Hatton and Marilyn Mills in the Arrow Great Western, "My Pal."

"Is Love Everything?" Will Open Newest Moss House

FOLLOWING reports from the mid-West and the West Coast states of the closing of arrangements for first run bookings in virtually every big city in those sections of the country, Murray W. Garsson announced this week that contracts had been signed for the presentation of his latest special production, "Is Love Everything?" through practically every big circuit of theatres in the East.

Backed by a national publicity and advertising campaign of considerable proportions, this attraction, distributed by Associated Exhibitors through the Pathe exchanges, gives promise of being one of the most widely exhibited pictures presented by an independent producer in some time.

One of the first units in the East to book "Is Love Everything?" is the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, including The Audubon, Academy of Music, Crotona, The Folly, Japanese Gardens, Nemo, Standard, and the Terminal.

The Poli Circuit also has booked the attraction for early presentation of such theatres as the Palace, New Haven; Capitol, Hartford; Palace, Bridgeport; Palace, Meriden; Palace, Springfield; Poli's Theatre, Worcester, and the Palace, Waterbury.

The entire Loew Theatre Circuit also has been signed to play the production at an early date, as will the Harry Crandall Circuit in Washington. Crandall's Metropolitan will give the picture its initial presentation at the nation's capital.

The Brill Circuit of Theatres, which includes houses in Staten Island, Lakewood, Jort Jervis and Far Rockaway, also will present "Is Love Everything?" at their theatres in the near future. Arrangements are pending for the immediate booking of the attraction through one of New England's biggest circuits, which will be in addition to contracts already signed with more than a dozen key city theatres throughout this section.

The picture will be given its premier New York presentation at the new B. S. Moss theatre at 53rd Street and Broadway, which has not as yet been named. It is announced that the picture will either be used to open the theatre or will be booked for the following week. That it should be selected as one of the first pictures to be offered in this new Broadway picture palace is evidence of its merit, in the opinion of the Moss officials.

"Is Love Everything?" was produced in New York by Murray W. Garsson, under the direction of Christy Cabanne, and features a cast of stars, including Alma Rubens, Frank Mayo, H. B. Warner, Walter McGrail, and Lilyan Tashman. Virtually every one of these players has previously been seen as a star or featured player, thus proving their individual value as box office attractions.

The story, an original screen drama, deals with life in the upper strata of society, where marriages of financial convenience are an everyday occurrence, and where love matches are of secondary importance.

One of the most striking episodes of the story was filmed at sea, where one of the most thrilling shipwrecks ever seen in motion pictures was photographed. This scene shows a yacht, the prize pleasure vessel of New York's society, crushed to bits by a trading schooner.

How Exhibitors Would Write Press Sheets

George C. Greenlund, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Washington: "Publicity, ad layout, highlights of production, accessories—Not reviews but short snappy notices of the coming production—A review don't mean a thing unless it is signed but our public are interested in knowing what its all about—Give me two or three outlines of the story and forget the review."

George E. Guise, Miles Circuit of Detroit Theatres, Miles Theatre, Detroit, Michigan: "Ad mats all sizes and good ones, plenty of news matter, cast, paper list and other necessary items—Brief synopsis, ending should not be published in advance—Blank—Two or three of different length all needed."

F. M. Hamburger, Circle Theatre, Portland, Oregon: "Short synopsis, catchy captions, lobby suggestions—Yes and no—What would apply to one community would not apply to all—A press sheet should not be a bedsheet size, about four pages."

Harry Spiegel, Comerford Amusement Co., Scranton, Pennsylvania: "The same as a road attraction, all information concerning attraction—If they are not the same stereotyped reviews one sees every day—Blank—About twenty-five stories in book all to average about fifty lines."

Morris Rosenthal, Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Connecticut: "Blank—Sometimes brief synopsis of story in advance helps to sell a strong dramatic picture—Several."

W. I. Dagon, Gaiety, Princess, Vaudette, Theatres, Springfield, Illinois: "Good advertisements principally—Yes—You get a line on the picture—Blank."

Vic Gauntlett, Blue Mouse Theatres, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland: "Good snappy stories and tip-top ad mats—Yes—Some of the newspapers want them, others review their own—Four or Five."

John Hart, Jr., National Theatre, Richmond, Virginia: "Proofs of neat artistic matrices, live stories dealing not so much with individual stars as with the production itself—No—They are hardly ever acceptable to our local newspapers. They are sure to be biased—Blank."

W. M. Smith, Rialto Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "Blank—Yes—Blank—We only need one."

Paramount Publicity Plans For "Peter Pan" in 250 Houses

BRINGING the Paramount production, "Peter Pan," to two hundred and fifty theatres for its initial, nation-wide premiere next week, is a big achievement in the history of photoplay production.

When production work began, on September 15th, the Paramount home office publicity, advertising, and exploitation departments, confident that the production and Betty Bronson, its chief player, had been well established in the public mind, turned their functions toward the release date.

Copy and layouts were prepared by the advertising department for a double page spread in the Saturday Evening Post of December 27th, announcing the two hundred and fifty theatres which play "Peter Pan" beginning the following day.

In the exploitation department, Leon J. Bamberger, assistant manager, arranged for what is probably the most complete and the longest linst of national tie-ups that have ever been made for a single picture.

The publicity department, having heralded Betty Bronson as an individual, began to function on the production as a whole.

Last week, three months after work was started, the production was finished and viewed by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production, whose wire to the Paramount home office is the most enthusistic that has ever been received at the Paramount headquarters. Following is a part of Mr. Lasky's telegraph addressed to Adolph Zukor:

"As you know, we have patiently held on to 'Peter Pan' for seven long years. But last night I felt that we had our reward for the wait. We are sending forth for the holiday season the greatest gift that the motion picture has yet offered its patrons; a picture which will add its bit to the happiness of the world; which deserves to live forever, and which will, at least, outlast us all."

Betty Bronson's work in the photo-play has been praised enthusiastically by all who have seen it. The other members of the cast were chosen carefully. For the old pirate, "Captain Hook," Ernest Torrence was selected. Mary Brian, also an "unknown," was engaged because it was recognized that she would make an ideal "Wendy." Cyril Chadwick, Esther Ralston, Virginia Brown Faire, and Anna May Wong are playing featured roles.

Metropolitan Newspapers Praise Willat's "North of 36"

BROADWAY is reminded of the opening of "The Covered Wagon" in both business at the box-office and newspaper reviews by "North of 36," produced by Irvin Willat for Paramount from the novel by Emerson Hough.

Critics on the New York morning papers made comparisons between "North of 36" and "The Covered Wagon" and where the critic did not express the opinion that the "North of 36" is as good as "The Covered Wagon" it was invariably stated that it is better.

Louella O. Parsons in the American, said: "Irvin Willat has achieved the seemingly impossible. He has made a follow-up that is as good as the original, and in some respects better. Both Mr. Willat and the Famous Players-Lasky profited by 'The Covered Wagon' by making 'North of 36' a finer piece of work as to production and detail."

Dorothy Herzog in the Mirror, expressed the opinion that "What the perfect 36 is to the beauty chorus, 'North of 36' is to the western thriller. This Irvin Willat production, written by Emerson Hough, author of 'The Covered Wagon,' slipped unobtrusively into the Rivoli yesterday to win enthusiastic recognition as the greatest Western classic of the season. To say it is better than 'The Covered Wagon' is to say it sparkles with more humor, action, dash."

Cast Now Complete

Panzer and Letty Ford Added to Dix's Picture

The cast of Richard Dix's latest Paramount picture, "Too Many Kisses," has been completed with the addition of Paul Panzer and Letty Ford. Others in support of the star are Frances Howard in the leading feminine role, William Powell, Frank Currier, Joe Burke, Albert Tavernier and Arthur Ludwig. The picture is being made at the Paramount Long Island studio from an adaptation by Gerald C. Duffy of the Cosmopolitan Magazine story, "The Maker of Gestures," by John Monk Saunders.

Paul Sloane, erstwhile scenarist and the director of "A Man Must Live," is handling the megaphone, with Hal Rosson at the camera.

ERNEST HILLIARD

Who takes one of the principal roles in the new Pathe serial, "Galloping Hoofs." Mr. Hilliard has been known for years as one of the screen's most popular villains.

Five Theatre Records Gone in "North of 36" Premiere

ALL records for receipts and attendance were shattered at the Rivoli Theatre, York; Palace Theatre, Dallas; Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City; the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, and the Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, by the Paramount production of Emerson Hough's novel "North of 36."

This production opened in the five cities named above, Saturday and Sunday. Wired reports have just been received at the Paramount Home Office from the managers of these theatres, and all are confident that from the size of the business on opening day the picture will establish new records for a week's business.

At the Rivoli, New York, despite discouraging weather, every record for a single day's gross receipts and attendance was broken, by a good margin.

In Dallas, according to a telegram from Manager John Friedl: "'North of 36' opened Saturday to tremendous business, but Sunday has even surpassed it breaking every record in history of the Palace for single day's business. Picture is proving a sensation and from audience reaction I can predict one of the biggest weeks we have ever had."

George McDermit wired from Oklahoma City: "'North of 36' has broken all house records at Criterion Sunday."

In San Antonio, Texas, according to W. J. Lytle, who runs the Empire: "The consensus of opinion is that 'North of 36' is greater than 'The Covered Wagon.' House record for Sunday was broken; expect record breaking week."

A new record for the Metropolitan was made by the Saturday and Sunday business of this production. Al Kaufman, managing director of the theatre predicts that business will continue on the same high-level for the entire seven days of the engagement.

Rod La Rocque Off to Paris; Supporting Gloria Swanson

ROD LA ROCQUE, who has completed the featured male role in Cecil B. DeMille's latest production for Paramount, "The Golden Bed," will leave next week for Paris, to play opposite Gloria Swanson in "The Coast of Folly," according to an announcement made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"This trip to France comes as somewhat in the nature of a Christmas present for Mr. La Rocque, in view of the splendid work he has done in the pictures in which he has appeared during 1924, Mr. Lasky stated.

"The Coast of Folly" has been adapted to the screen by Forrest Halsey from Coningsby Dawson's novel.

Allan Dwan, who made Gloria Swanson's "Zaza" and "Manhandled," as well as a number of other outstanding successes, will produce the picture. It is planned to make all exteriors for "The Coast of Folly" entirely in France, while the interior shots will be completed in Paramount's Long Island studio.

"Madame Sans-Gene," for which Gloria Swanson went to Paris, is now almost completed, according to Mr. Lasky.

"American critics in Paris who have seen the completed reels are expressing their unbounded belief that "Madame Sans-Gene" will be voted the best picture for 1925, says Mr. Lasky.

"Madame Sans-Gene" has been produced upon a scale equal in extent to the greatest super-feature of the screen. It is certain to attain success in America. There are location scenes hitherto unequalled on the silver screen, and were able to secure these shots only through the co-operation of the French government and scientific bodies."

"Madame Sans-Gene" will bring many new players to the screen, some of whom it is predicted will achieve popularity with the American public.

Story for Ben Lyon

Byron Morgan, popular writer of automobile racing stories, which have appeared on the screen and in print, has arrived in New York to consult with Earl Hudson on a script which he has written for First National. The story is as yet untitled, but is intended as a future vehicle for Ben Lyon.

Lasky Names Cast

MacDonald, Kosloff, Lewis, Joyce and Others in Compson Picture

The complete cast which will support Betty Compson in her new starring picture for Paramount, "New Lives For Old," is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Wallace MacDonald fulfills an eight-year ambition to play in a Paramount picture. He has been signed for Miss Compson's leading man and shares featured honors with Theodore Kosloff and Sheldon Lewis. Jack Joyce, one-legged marvel of vaudeville, has forsaken the stage for an important role. Others are Margaret Seddon, Joseph J. Dowling, Helen Dunbar, Marvel Quivey, Gale Henry and Ed. Faust.

Lois Wilson and Ernest Torrence in Paramount's "North of '36."

Vitagraph Specials Set for Next Month's Release

TWO Vitagraph specials have been set for official release in January, the Nigh-Smith production, "Fear-Bound," making its appearance on the 18th, and the J. Stuart Blackton picture, "The Redeeming Sin," following just a week later. The Vitagraph executives selected productions of widely different types for almost simultaneous release, for between them these specials carry an appeal which would seem destined to reach picture-lovers of every taste.

The scenes in "Fear-Bound," probably the strongest story which Will Nigh has ever prepared for the screen, are laid in the Far West, and the tale abounds in thrills and action, but the author has given it a distinct human interest touch, with dashes of comedy and pathos, which, according to persons who have had pre-views, lift it well above the merely commonplace type of Western.

An exceptional cast was recruited, with Mr. Nigh and Marjorie Daw as the principals, Jean Jarvis supplying much of the comedy element, and Niles Welsh, Ed. F. Roseman, Louis Mackintosh, James Bradbury, Jr., Warner Richmond, Dexter MacReynolds, Frank Conlan and Bill Gudgeon playing other important roles.

"The Redeeming Sin," a picturization of L. V. Jefferson's novel, "The Pearls of the Madonna," takes the onlooker to Paris and not only reveals the seamy life in the shadows of the French capital but offers glimpses of colorful and artistic Bohemian corners in the world's dream city. The forthcoming release of this ambitious production is made further notable by the fact that it marks Nazimova's debut as a star under the Vitagraph banner.

Lou Tellegen plays opposite Nazimova, and the cast includes Carl Miller, Otis Harlan, Rositta Marstini, William Dunn, Rose Tapley and Violet Virginia.

Wilfred Noy is Directing Alice Lake in "The Fast Pace"

ALICE LAKE has been engaged to play the leading role in "The Fast Pace," to be made by Wilfred Noy, the English director, at the Tec-Art studios, New York City. Mr. Noy directed Miss Lake in the Whitman Bennett production, "The Lost Chord."

The conscientious method which Miss Lake invariably pursues in her work, is having its effect on her art. With each picture she becomes more and more the finished artist. The new picture will furnish fresh opportunities for her versatility.

Wilfred Noy has demonstrated a genius for making of pictures with a heart appeal. With a strong story, built around the song, "The Lost Chord," he attained a result that will make this one of the real achievements of the year 1924. He has a factulty for getting the best out of those with whom he works, and his understanding of Alice Lake, and her magnificent possibilities, has produced a team that is bound to be famous.

Miss Lake's concentrated interest, her imagination and ready adaptability, her willingness to suggest and to help wherever she can other members of the cast, constitute unusual qualities of heart and head.

Mr. Noy's vision, experience and sympathetic grasp of the individual characteristics of his players, are making him a director whose name is rapidly becoming a household word.

Bobby Vernon At Work

Third of His Educational Six to Be Titled "French Pastry"

Bobby Vernon has nearly finished his third comedy in his series of six for Educational Film Exchanges while his first is meeting with unusually popular favor where it has had its first runs. The new Vernon comedy will be "French Pastry," a ridiculous war story with comic Prussians for villains, and with a setting in and around the trenches.

"'Bright Lights,' the first of the Vernon series, led off the Educational releases for the new year at Sax's Wisconsin, Milwaukee. The manager, Edward Weisfeldt wrote: "Bright Lights is one of the best comedies that we have ever shown at our Wisconsin theatre. It was particularly fitted to run with the feature, Colleen Moore in 'Flirting With Love.' It was indeed a pleasure to hear the many splendid comments on this picture from our patrons."

When it played at the Capitol, St. Paul, Manager C. C. Perry wrote: "The comedy is a knockout. If this is a sample of what Educational is going to deliver this year, every exhibitor should and will be a big booster."

The Eastman, Rochester, had a special showing of "Bright Lights" on election night. The second Vernon comedy, "High Gear," was pre-released at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, Washington, where the Times commented as follows: "In 'High Gear,' Bobby Vernon offers a speed drama of more than ordinary laughability. In fact, it is a screamingly funny absurdity, done with all the care of a feature picture."

Opens With Vitagraph Film

W. L. Casey, Northwest Showman, Books "Code of the Wilderness"

Opening his new Gem Theatre at Newport, Wash., a few nights ago, and wishing to make a gala occasion of the event, W. L. Casey, a well-known Northwest exhibitor, selected Vitagraph's "Code of the Wilderness," a David Smith production, as his premier attraction.

This picture, a tale of the burnt grass country, with John Bowers, Alice Calhoun, Alan Hale and Otis Harlan in the principal roles, was enthusiastically received by an audience that packed the house.

The Gem, one of the finest theatres in Mr. Casey's circuit, has a seating capacity of about 500. The same exhibitor owns houses in Bonners Ferry, Priest River and Spirit Lake, Idaho, also.

Scenes from "Husbands and Lovers," with Lewis Stone, Lew Cody and Florence Vidor. A First National release.

"Lost Chord" Preview

Arrow Pictures Shows Whitman Bennett Special for Independents.

In an atmosphere and setting ideally adapted to the picture, the premiere of "The Lost Chord" was given before an exclusive audience in Wurlitzer Hall last Monday evening. To the strains of the Wurlitzer Unit Organ, played by James C. Bradford, this latest creation of Whitman Bennett, was successfully visualized on the screen.

The direction of Wilfred Noy, who also wrote the moving, romantic story based on the words of Sir Arthur Sullivan's melody, was most effective.

Commenting on the production, following the showing, W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Pictures Corporation, which organization is to release the picture, said:

"Responding to an insistent demand from State Right Buyers all over the country, I have been searching for productions of distinctly high quality and I feel that in "The Lost Chord" we have a picture which in every way measures up to such a designation.

"This is the first of a series of special feature productions which Mr. Bennett is to make for Arrow distribution and I can confidently promise that 'Lena Rivers,' Mr. Bennett's second picture for us, will prove to be of the same general excellence in theme, direction, cast and photography."

The cast of "The Lost Chord" includes Dagmar Godowsky, David Powell, Alice Lake, Faire Binney, Henry Sedley, Charles Mack, Louise Carter and Sam Hines, Johnny Hines' brother.

"Gold and Grit" Print Here

Buddy Roosevelt's Latest Feature Received by Weiss Brothers

The first print of "Gold and Grit," seventh of the popular Buddy Roosevelt series of eight rough riding romances released by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York early this week, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, head of that organization.

This five-reeler, which was directed by Richard Thorpe from a story by Ned Nye, is said to set a new high mark for this type of high class Western feature, of which its predecessors have already made Buddy Roosevelt one of the most promising of the younger stars in the film firmament.

A trade showing of "Gold and Grit" is planned as soon as the art titles can be completed and returned from the laboratory.

Weiss Brothers Authorize New Press Book on Super-Film

INCREASED bookings on "After Six Days," Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation's super-feature film of the Old Testament, has necessitated the preparation of a new and elaborate campaign guide and plan book on this popular attraction, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, directing head of the Weiss Brothers' activities.

The new press book, which is being prepared by Merritt Crawford, will be of full newspaper size 18-22 inches, and will consist of sixteen pages, printed on one side on regular super-calendered stock, with an art cover of novel and striking design, on India tint coated. It will contain, in addition to an unusually complete collection of newspaper stories, cuts and mats and accessories, material for the most comprehensive exploitation campaigns, so arranged as to be readily applicable to the needs of every type of theatre.

The methods of securing the biggest box office results are all carefully mapped out, so that even the most inexperienced house manager will have little difficulty in adapting the numerous "stunts" and suggestions to his particular needs, all of which, it may be stated, are thoroughly practical and have been fully tried and tested at previous "runs" of "After Six Days" with a record of unbroken success.

"After Six Days" has demonstrated conclusively that it is a "run" picture of unusual quality, its business frequently being greater at the end of an engagement, than at the beginning, proving that the "word-of-mouth" advertising the picture receives from those who have seen it is even more powerful in pulling attributes than the regular advertising and exploitation employed by the theatre.

It is to capitalize on this valuable asset that Weiss Brother Artclass Pictures Corporation determined to authorize another press book on this attraction, which would enable every exhibitor handling it to secure one hundred per cent. returns on its entertainment value.

The new press book and exploitation guide on "After Six Days" will be ready for the exchanges during the first week in January.

(A press book "From the Office of Merritt Crawford" requires no further comment.—Ed.)

"After Six Days" Has Record Bookings in New York State

JULES BERNSTEIN, who is handling New York State for Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation on their feature film of the Old Testament, "After Six Days," reports record bookings on this popular attraction, which is in a class by itself both as a portrayal of religious and historical events of great human interest and as a spectacular, photodramatic entertainment.

The picture opened for a run at the Palace Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., December 14th, and will be the featured attraction at a number of the leading theatres in up-state cities until Christmas.

Every available print of this massive, ten-reel feature, held by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation in this territory, will be called into requisition for showing between now and January 1st.

A noteworthy feature about the increasing number of bookings on "After Six Days," according to Louis Weiss, head of the Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, is the fact that many theatres which last year showed the picture for a run of from one to four weeks are now rebooking it for 1925.

"Daughters Who Pay" Fourth In Banner "Big Four" Series

GEORGE H. DAVIS and Samuel J. Briskin, directing heads of Banner Productions, Inc. announced early this week, that the title of their next feature offering to be made in the East will be "Daughters Who Pay," the title originally selected for this story, and not "Lady of the Night," as recently announced.

"Daughters Who Pay" will replace the latter, which was chosen as a working title for the picture, when it seemed that the original name might cause possible confusion in the minds of the exhibitors and public, through its similarity in nomenclature to another feature announced for release by another company. This difficulty, however, has now been adjusted and the Banner officials have decided to retain the picture's original title, "Daughters Who Pay."

It will be included in the Banner release schedule as the fourth and final feature of the Banner Big Four series, of which "The Truth About Women," "The Man Without A Heart" and "Those Who Judge" were the other three.

Production work will be begun at the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers, during Christmas week, with George Terwilliger directing.

John Bowers and Marguerite de la Motte, both of whom are at present engaged in production on the Coast, have been selected to head the cast, and will conclude their present engagements in time to arrive in New York before Christmas Day, in order to begin work on the Banner feature.

Bowers is no stranger to Banner exhibitors and their audiences, having already won wide favor among them by his clever delineation of the stellar role in "Empty Hearts," one of the outstanding Banner attractions of this season, which was produced by Ben Verschleiser on the Coast.

Others in the cast, which will be all star in calibre throughout, are J. Barney Sherry, Paul Panzer and Alyce Mills. The balance of the cast which is being recruited as rapidly as possible.

According to Banner's present plans, "Daughters Who Pay" will be ready for release about the middle or end of February, their Western production, "Speed," now being made by Ben Verschleiser at the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood, taking precedence in the release schedule, and being listed as the premier Banner offering in 1925.

Weiss Brothers' Stars Billed For Personal Appearances

DURING the holiday vacation, when active production work will be suspended by Lester F. Scott, Jr. and W. T. Lackey, respectively, producers of the popular thrillo-action series, released by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, starring Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., it is planned to have these well-liked young rough-riding stars make a number of personal appearances.

Buddy Roosevelt, who will visit New York for the holidays, the first time he has ever been East of the Mississippi River, will work his way Westward, appearing in some of the first run theatres showing his features, after he has looked the big town over.

He is said to be "rarin' to go" where the White Lights invite and is curious to see how Broadway compares with the main street of Silver Creek, Idaho, where he spent his early years riding the range.

Buffalo Bill, Jr., who, by the way, hasn't seen the Rialto in more than seventeen years, when he played in Newark with the Sells-Floto circus as a stunt rider and rope throwing expert, will also come East for a short visit, but will return to Los Angeles before January 1st to fill several dates that have been arranged for him at theatres in California and Nevada.

Both stars will give a short monologue and an exhibition of trick rope-handling and lassoing at each appearance. They will also answer questions about horsemanship and stunt riding and the proper way to saddle a horse, tie a cinch knot, etc.

Lester F. Scott, Jr., production chief of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation's West Coast activities, is expected in New York next week, and will act as the advance guard for his two stars and proteges.

In addition to making his plans for the 1925 season, he will also arrange for their entertainment and program of sight seeing during their stay.

Next Lowe Star Series

Edmund Lowe's next starring vehicle will be "Trailing Shadows," from the pen of Max Brand, fictionist par-excellent. Chester Bennett has just started direction on this production from a scenario by Thomas Dixon, Jr. Barbara Bedford will have the leading feminine role with Walter McGrail playing an important heavy part. The remainder of the cast will be announced later.

Oscar A. Price at Head of Parthenon Pictures Corp.

OSCAR A. PRICE, formerly President of United Artists and Associated Producers, has announced the formation of Parthenon Pictures Corporation, with offices at 565 Fifth Avenue, New York, to operate in the independent field.

Joseph J. Deitch has been appointed General Manager.

"This company has been formed," states Mr. Price, "to fill the needs of the State right buyer for a consistent output of high class productions with all-star casts of the first water. Just as the name 'Parthenon' has always been synonymous with the highest attainments of man in the field of architecture, so we expect to make it in the field of pictures.

"We have already acquired six productions for distribution through the company, each of which will be found to be of high caliber and worthy of the best traditions of the independent market. Each of them has been produced in a high-class manner, with artists whose names are a surety of merit and box-office value.

"The titles of the pictures are in keeping with the pictures themselves, and lend themselves to high powered exploitations, with numerous tie-ups.

"Negotiations are now in progress for, and we expect to acquire shortly for distribution through our company, one of the greatest productions ever offered independent buyers. This picture has been completed, and, besides having a title which is known to everyone, it stars two of the biggest artists in the film world today, who are now working in one of the most pretentious productions to be offered the public in the coming year.

"In addition to pictures which we have acquired, and expect to acquire, from independent producers, we, ourselves, plan to produce a sufficient number of productions measuring up to the standard we have set to insure the independent exchanges an adequate number of superior productions yearly."

Rayart Pictures Have Exceeded Sales Quota, Says Johnston

WRAY JOHNSTON, president of Rayart Pictures, announces that the sales for Rayart Pictures have already exceeded their sales quota.

"Whether or not this is due to our having tried to strike a diversified appeal—to give the exhibitor a wide variety of product—I cannot say," states Mr. Johnston. "But at any rate we are following this plan of widely different product for our 1925 output, and with this end in view are making comedy-dramas, melodramas, comedies, stunt pictures and serials.

"Reed Howes, under contract with Harry J. Brown to make six comedy dramas for release, has already finished two "Lightning Romance," released November 15, and "Geared to Go," released December 15; the third is now under way at the Harry J. Brown studios on the Coast and is to be called "Super-Speed." Mildred Harris plays opposite the star. Three others will follow in quick succession.

"George Larkin, well-known stunt actor, is also under contract for six Rayart releases. The first two of these series, "Midnight Secrets" and the "Pell Street Mystery," were completed and released before the end of the 1924 season. Work is now going forward on the third of the Larkin pictures. The name is not yet known, but it will be released early in the 1925 season.

"Harry J. Brown is under contract with Rayart to make four melodrama specials for Rayart. The first of these, "Easy Money," six-reel feature with a big all-star cast, including Mary Carr, Cullen Landis, Gladys Walton, Crauford Kent, Mildred Harris, Joseph Swickard and several others almost as well known, is now going through the final stages of cutting and editing and will be released on January 1. Work will begin on the second of these feature pictures almost immediately.

Showmen "Playing Up" Shorts, Says Head of Educational

"TWELVE months ago a serious situation forced the exhibitors of the country," said E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchange, Inc., in a statement to the Moving Picture World, this week. "The over-length features which were being produced threatened the very cornerstone of the industry by depriving the exhibitor of a diversified program—the one quality which has made the motion picture screen the most popular form of amusement ever presented to the people of the world.

"Stories which could have been better told in five reels were being stretched to seven, eight and nine reels through the ego of directors and short-sighted production managers who were envious of the success of some few exceptional super-productions and who desired to equal their records, in length at least, if not quality. Distributors accepted these overlong productions on the theory that more money could be charged for eight reels than could be secured for five, and at approximately the same distribution cost. The exhibitor's viewpoint, and his task of furnishing his patrons with a well chosen, diversified program, were overlooked in the mad rush of production of padded pictures.

"The rection set in when the ultimate consumer—the patron—began to complain of the absence of short subjects on the program and the consequent lack of diversity. Exhibitors, sensing the menace to their future, also began to make themselves heard, with the result that during the year feature productions have returned to a nearly normal footage basis.

"The situation and subsequent reaction on the part of the theatre patrons established for all time the importance of the short subject as an amusement item. Previously regarded as a mere 'filler' by some short-sighted exhibitors, the entertainment and box-office value of these one and two-reel subjects was vividly impressed on them when they found that their patrons literally demanded these short pictures on their entertainment bill of fare. From a subject booked merely to fill out the running time of the show, the short subject became an indispensable part of the program.

"With the value of these short subjects as entertainment items established, the box-office value was apparent to showmen. Although far-seeing showmen had previously appreciated their business pulling qualities and were profiting nicely by devoting advertising space and exploitation to their one- and two-reel subjects in their electric lights, it required just such a situation as had transired to drive home the fact that short subjects, properly and sufficiently advertised, are might valuable box-office attractions.

"Today, every week finds more and more theatres embracing advertising of their short subjects as part of their regular exploitation program. Comedians in short subjects are recognized as box-office stars of high value. Brand names have been recognized as real assets to the exhibitors. The name of Bobby Vernon, Lloyd Hamilton, Lige Conley, Walter Hiers or Larry Semon, or Christie Comedies, Hamilton, Vernon, Semon or Mermaid Comedies in advertising space or in the lights before a theatre, has become recognized good showmanship and good business. It assures the prospective patron of an entire bill of entertainment; it offers him two attractions of known merit; it presents to his view two reasons why he should see the show.

"The coming year will find advertising of the whole program even more general than it is now. It is bound to come. It is good business, good showmanship and good sound sense."

"Dear Pretender" Called Off

Warner Bros. will not make "The Dear Pretender," the novel by Mrs. Alice Roscover, this season. "On Thin Ice" has definitely been decided upon to take its place on the Warner 1924-25 program, and is now in production. This adaptation is from the novel by Darryl Francis Zanuck, and has an all star cast.

Weber and Fields Co-Starred

On March 16th A. H. Sebastian will present the famous stage stars Weber and Fields in the adaptation of the successful stage play "Friendly Enemies."

"Stop Flirting" the second of the Al. Christie features will be released on March 30th. This will be an adaptation from the successful London musical farce which ran continuously for two years at the Shaftesbury Theatre. It will be an all star production and will be produced under the direction of Scott Sidney.

"The Awful Truth" starring Agnes Ayres will be released on April 6th. This will be an adaptation of the play by Arthur Richman in which Ina Claire scored a sensation for two seasons in New York and on tour. It will be an Elmer Harris production directed by Paul Powell and produced at the Peninsula Studios, San Mateo, Calif.

Three Harry Carey series will be released during April, June and July. These will be "The Bad Lands," on April 13th, "The Dark Horse," a racing story, on June 1st and "The Texas Trail" on July 15th. They will all be personally supervised by Hunt Stromberg and directed by Tom Forman.

"Battling Bunyan"

Wesley Barry Feature an Associated Exhibitors Release, December 28

Associated Exhibitors announce this week the release of December 28th of the five-reel feature, "Battling Bunyan." This is the first Wesley Barry production to be made under the banner of William D. Russell.

"Battling Bunyan," a Crown Productions, Inc., picture was adapted for screen presentation by Jefferson Moffit, from the popular Saturday Evening Post story bearing the same name, written by Raymond Leslie Goldman. The story is based on a character well-known to all fight fans. He is the "clown" of the ring. Every fight club has one that sometimes develops into a stellar attraction. Following several pre-release screenings in Los Angeles, it is said that the critics were almost unanimous in voicing the opinion that "Battling Bunyan" is the best picture in which Wesley Barry has ever appeared.

Director Paul Hurst has surrounded Barry with an excellent cast consisting of such prominent players as Landers Stevens, Pat Kemp, Molly Malone, Johnny Relasco, Harry Mann, Frank Campeau, Frankie Fields, Chester Conklin and Al Kaufman.

Goldburg to Use New Location

One of Independent's most puzzling problems is to find suitable, attractive locations on which to shoot Westerns. This type of picture requires plenty of space in order to achieve the proper effect, and it must have uncommonly beautiful natural scenery. Therefore it is Jesse J. Goldburg's constant aim to find new places. This week there was found one which is unbounded in its possibilities. The new location is located sixty-two miles from the nearest beaten path in the northeast interior of California and has never been used before. The next Cody and Bob Custer pictures will be "shot" in this hitherto unused spot.

$5,500,000 of English Capital Back of F.B.O. 1925 Program

BACKED by English capital in the amount of $5,500,000, Film Booking Offices of America are preparing to launch their biggest program since the inception of the company three years ago.

Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of F. B. O., who spent six months abroad studying film conditions on the continent and who supervised the opening of F. B. O. exchanges in London, Paris and Berlin, interested Lord Inverforth (managing director of Grahams, Ltd., owners of F. B. O.), who was Minister of Supplies during the war, in Film Booking Offices. Lord Inverforth, whose position in England is analagous to that of Herbert Hoover in America, now has a large financial interest in the company.

The F. B. O. program for 1925 will consist of 54 features, in addition to the new "Alex the Great" short subjects, which are now being prepared by the scenario forces in Hollywood, and the comedy product recently acquired from Standard Cinema Corporation.

Included in the fifty-four features will be: Two super-special productions, which F. B. O. will either produce on their own lot in Hollywood, or which will be bought for F. B. O. distribution. Further details of these two productions will be announced shortly.

Twelve special productions, including two Emory Johnson specials, one to be made in Sweden and another in Finland. Mr. Johnson's mother, Mrs. Emilie Johnson, is now preparing the manuscripts for the two pictures, and Mr. Johnson has completed negotiations with the authorities in both countries to film his production on native soil.

Included in the twelve special productions will be four from Associated Arts Corporation (Goebel and Erb unit). "Druscilla With a Million," with Mary Carr, Kenneth Harlan and Priscilla Bonner, is now being shot and will be included in the series.

There will be four specials from Gothic. "Parisian Nights" tops the list, with a cast including Elaine Hammerstein, Lou Telligen and Renee Adoree. Al Santell is directing, from an original story by Emil Forst.

Negotiations are pending between F. B. O. and the Estate of the late Gene Stratton-Porter for the purchase of two or more of Mrs. Porter's novels, to be made by Film Booking Offices on their own lot in Hollywood.

There will be forty special program features, to be divided into five series of eight each. These will include the Evelyn Brent-Gothic pictures, the Harry Garson-"Lefty" Flynn westerns, the Fred Thomson westerns, the "Texas Ranger" series starring Bob Custer, and the Van-Pelt Wilson aeroplane pictures, starring Al Wilson, ace of aeroplane stunt men.

A special department will be opened for F. B. O. for the distribution of short subjects, which will include the "Alex the Great" series by H. C. Witwer, with Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara, Kit Guard and Al Cooke, and the short subjects taken over by F. B. O. from Standard Cinema Corporation (Selznick), including twelve two-reel Jimmy Aubrey Star Comedies, starring Jimmy Aubrey; twelve two-reel Stan Laurel comedies; fourteen Screen Almanacs, and fourteen Dinky Doodle cartoons, from the Bray Studios.

Scene from "Sold for Cash," in which Madge Bellamy and Kenneth Harlan appear. F. B. O. release.

Blue, Prevost and Star Cast in Warner Bros. "Recompense"

WARNER BROS. announce they have just started "Recompense," considered the best bet of their unfinished 20 Screen Classics, and intend making it a special production with a feature cast, elaborate sets, and all that goes to make up a high class picture.

This production has been in preparation for several months, and got started this week at Hollywood under the direction of Harry Beaumont, who was responsible for "Beau Brummel" with John Barrymore and six other Warner Bros. pictures.

"Recompense" is the sequel to "Simon Called Peter" by Robert Keable, which had a tremendous sale over the country. The latter novel is now running in New York as a stage play. Several producers wanted to make a screen production of it, but kept off because of its extreme hectic and sexy theme. When "Recompense" came out there was another rush to secure this for the screen, as the author takes the same set of characters and puts them through a realistic action story to a satisfactory conclusion.

Warner Bros. secured it, but held off its making until Beaumont had finished the rest of his schedule, and also with the understanding that Robert Keabue, the author, would come to America and look over the script before it went into production.

The scenes are laid in France, England and Africa. Warner Bros. state they are sparing no expense to make this a faithful reproduction of the book, and while it is by no means a war picture it will bring to the screen in the prologue, some of the most impressive scenes of front line activity ever filmed. Director Beaumont had six hundred ex-service men in action in the opening scenes.

Great care has been taken in selecting the cast, as the parts call for fine delineation of characters. Peter Graham will be played by Monty Blue; Julie Gamelyn, "the gay outrageous Julie," will be portrayed by Marie Prevost, who in her last two or three pictures has won unanimous praise for her exceptional performances.

Stonehouse will be done by George Siegman, of many fine characterizations. Charles Stevenson, famous old player of the stage and screen will be Moseshoe and Captain Donovan will be portrayed by one of the most talented and handsomest leading men on the screen William C. Davidson.

The adaptation was made by Dorothy Farnum, and when word was received that Mr. Keable could not arrive in this country in time to see the production started, the script was sent to England for him to suggest any changes he desired. Mr. Keable will be here to see the final scenes taken, and will make any correction he thinks necessary by cable.

Due to the importance of this picture in the Warner Bros. program, the firm is preparing a big exploitation campaign of national scope.

Artist Chooses June Marlowe

Ernest Linnekamp Includes Her Among Dozen American Beauties

June Marlowe, featured in Warner Brothers' pictures, has been chosen by Ernest Linnekamp, noted Austrian artist, as one of the twelve most beautiful women in America. Miss Marlowe's portrait has been placed on exhibition in Los Angeles, where Mr. Linnecamp has hung his selection of America's loveliest women.

The artist's choice of Miss Marlowe as one of his "Lovely Dozen" only bears out in a spectacular way the farsighted judgment of H. M. Warner, who selected the girl for her beauty alone, and then found out she had exceptional talent. This resulted in her being featured in several productions, her latest being in support of Irene Rich in "A Lost Lady."

The selection of Miss Marlowe by the noted artist is being used all over the country by Warner Bros. in a special campaign to call attention to the pictures in which the girl appears, and exhibitors will benefit by the special exploitation of the young woman.

East and West Productions In Chadwick Announcement

UPON his return from Hollywood last week, I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, announced that he had completed his plans which will start production of two big features in the East, "The Street Singer" for which John Gorman, the director, now in New York, is seeking locations, and the new Lionel Barrymore special, his third for the Chadwick organization this season. No title has been announced for Mr. Barrymore's pictures but it was indicated at the Chadwick offices that a famous stage play has been selected and will be announced shortly, with the director and supporting cast.

Mr. Chadwick also announced that while on the coast he had made plans for the production of two more big pictures. These are "The Romance of An Actress," to be directed by Hunt Stromberg from the scenario by Harvey Gates and "Sunshine of Paradise Alley" to be directed by Colin Campbell working from the script prepared by J. Grubb Alexander.

These two pictures will complete the series called the Chadwick 9, which has been classed as the most important independent unit in the industry. It has already released five pictures to independents this season, namely, "The Fire Patrol," the first Hunt Stromberg production; "The Painted Flapper," a John Gorman production, "The Tom Boy," a Mission Film Corporation Picture now being released, and the two first Lionel Barrymore specials, "Meddling Women" and "I Am the Man."

In addition to the nine productions planned at the beginning of the season Chadwick has added another, "Flattery," a Tom Forman production, for the Mission Film Corporation, which the Chadwick organization has been releasing in the independent field, with great success.

A print of "The Wizard of Oz" is in New York, and those who have seen it say it is one of the finest comedies and feature entertainments this season has produced. Larry Semon has realized every potentiality with remarkable success. Mr. Chadwick has begun a nation-wide campaign, advertising and selling, for a large list of important first runs on this new Semon picture.

Since Mr. Chadwick's return, several other developments announced from the Chadwick offices place this organization well in the front list of producers as an important part of the producing activities of the industry, and certainly as a leader among the independents.

In addition to the signing of George Walsh to a long term contract, Mr. Chadwick has also announced the signing of Theda Bara, famous "vamp" of the stage and screen, for a series of pictures to be made by his organization, and distributed on the independent market. The first will be "The Unchastened Woman," Louis K. Anspacher's play.

Lubitsch Signs Bert Lytell

Warner Bros. Director Will Use Screen Star in Forthcoming Picture

Ernst Lubitch stated this week that he has engaged Bert Lytell for a leading role in the new production he is preparing for Warner Bros., and that the groundwork of the picture was completed sufficient for him to announce that he will be able to begin shooting within two weeks, and perhaps sooner.

The engagement of Lytell is the first of the cast for the third Lubitsch picture, for Warner Bros. It is being prepared entirely by Mr. Lubitsch, who selected the story, adapted it, and will personally select his players, and supervise his sets.

There is considerable speculation concerning who will play the feminine lead, but Mr. Lubitsch is still looking over the field and will not make an announcement of that role until he decides on the title of the picture.

Schulberg and Bachmann Discuss 1925 Productions

"PRESENT indications forecast that 1925 will be a year of sane readjustments in studio as in distributing office," said B. P. Schulberg, head of B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., in a statement this week to a representative of Moving Picture World. "Studios where over-production has been the rule are cutting down their output while others, like our organization, who can with facility increase their program, are doing so. In other words, 1925 will see consistent activity throughout its twelve months rather than the usual alternating periods of over-production and shut-downs.

"This will have a stabilizing and prosperous effect upon conditions on the coast. It will do much to right the profiteering of certain stars who demand exorbitant salaries because so few players are available. On the other hand, it will give hundreds of actors steady employment without long weeks of inactivity.

"Casting has gone through an experimental period which now seems at an end. In that time the question of the star picture has been settled in favor of the all-star cast and 1925 will see the successful picture cast with able players down to the most minor roles. For 1925, producers will find much excellent talent available. Many players popular and capable who have been in retirement have come back to augment the talent recently developed.

"The 'bigger and better' picture will be well represented during the coming year. Practically every company is planning one or two special productions to which they are giving more than ordinary care. From our studio we will send out two Preferred specials—'Capital Punishment,' a feature of huge dramatic power, and 'The Boomerang' David Belasco's play which will be that rarest of all screen fare, a great comedy drama.

"In selecting material for next fall, producers are proceeding with unusual care. Real story values are being bought, rather than story circulation. In this way, film men are abandoning the amusing little game they've been playing which consisted of buying a book, changing the title, and then writing a new story—with nothing to show in the end but the cancelled check for screen rights.

"Books like Wallace Irwin's 'Lew Tyler's Wives' which we recently acquired offer the unusual combination of a fine story and excellent advertising strength—that, of course, is the sought-after type for next year.

"1925 product will, I believe, show special care in story development—in the supplying of clever touches and good bits of business. The successful picture of the past year has been the one in which good plot was improved by inspired treatment from adapter and director."

Mr. Bachmann's Views

J. G. Bachmann, vice-president of B. P. Schulberg Productions in charge of distribution, said. "1925 arrives with very decided reasons for the film man to feel encouraged. The uncertainty which precedes a national election has passed and business is settling down to meet the conditions which are to prevail for the next four years.

"My recent visit to key-cities makes me feel that the significant occurrence in 1925 will be the ascendency of the independent market, now that it has survived the critical times of the last twelve months. The New Year will see more independent production than ever before.

"Our own company has felt the general prosperity of the last few months and consequently has increased its scnedule about seventy-five per cent. Beginning with January first, B. P. Schulberg will deliver thirteen Preferred Pictures at regular intervals until June first.

"1925 will witness a real improvement in the tone of all pictures produced. The salacious story, the suggestive title, the cordial invitation to censorship is disappearing fast and by the end of the New Year will be entirely erased from the industry.

Fight on Censorship

"During the coming year producers will make their biggest and most effective fight against censorship. In many states where it now exists, it is safe to wager that a repeal of the law will be near. By a series of clean pictures on which all producers are agreed, censorship will receive its death blow. While it is fundamentally wrong, it was brought into existence by a questionable type of picture and can only be eliminated when that type of picture is abandoned once and for all.

"I am confident of the prosperity awaiting the industry in general and Schulberg Productions in particular."

F. B. O. Host to Trade Press, Honoring Major H. C. S. Thomson

A luncheon was given by F. B. O. on Friday, December 12, at the Hotel Roosevelt, in honor of Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of the company, who recently returned from the continent, where he spent the last six months making a survey of foreign film conditions and supervising the opening of F. B. O. offices in London, Berlin and Paris.

Representatives of the New York newspapers, trade journals and fan magazines attended, in addition to all the F. B. O. executives in the East.

Mr. Rothstein, director of F. B. O.'s publicity, advertising and exploitation, introduced Major Thomson to the press.

The Major discussed F. B. O.'s huge five and a half million dollar program for 1925 and told of F. B. O.'s increased activities, both here and abroad, making F. B. O. rank with the largest distributing and producing companies in the business.

Alma Rubens Signed by Fox

Alma Rubens has been signed to a long-term contract by Fox Film Corporation, according to an official announcement made by that company.

At present Miss Rubens is engaged in the leading feminine role in "The Dancers," the screen version of the New York and London stage success of the same name which is being made at the Fox West Coast studios under the direction of Emmett Flynn, with George O'Brien, new Fox star, in the leading male role.

Eberhardt Novelizes 'Classmates'

"Classmates," the Grosset and Dunlap book novelized from the William de Mille play which has been filmed by Inspiration Pictures starring Richard Barthelmess, will come off the press within the next week. It will be distributed nationally at the same time that the photoplay is released by First National Pictures. It is illustrated by stills from the production. The novelization was made by Walter F. Eberhardt.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Strange Reasoning

In the affairs of life one often encounters things which seem very foolish, but which nevertheless, by reason of their foolishness, gives one a hearty laugh. An incident of this sort recently developed in connection with my recent visit West.

In a letter received from a city of considerable size in the middle west, the following occurred:

It has been a long while since you have received a letter from a projectionist in this city, but just the same fully fifty per cent. of our men own Bluebooks, and I think fully eighty per cent. of them read the department. Hence the fact that you seldom hear from us is not evidence that we are not studying and keeping ourselves well informed.

A move was started to invite you to visit us as the guest of the local, during your recent trip West. The proposal was killed, though, because at the meeting at which it was proposed, unreasonable arguments were advanced in opposition, such as: "Richardson is using the locals for commercial purposes, and he permits the printing of cartoons in the department showing projectionists smoking cigarettes, reading newspapers and frying eggs on top of the lamphouse.

Of course such arguments are pure tommy-rot. They merely illustrate the fact that those advancing them have no proper appreciation of your untiring efforts in behalf of them and their profession.

As to the cartoons, they were primarily intended as comedy, but also they do illustrate some actual conditions, as I could easily convince the critics, were they able to go around with me a bit. Of course the frying eggs was just pure comedy, though there was an underlying thought that it was to some extent illustrative of careless work and total indifference to projection as a profession, and of the idea that some men still regard it ONLY as a thing with which to "get a living." By that I mean that they have absolutely no love for, or respect for the business of projection, or any belief that it has even the most remote possibilities in artistry, or anything greater or more important than the mere operation of a mechanism.

Surprises

I believe it might astound the men of the local in question, who have spoken thus unthinkingly and perhaps a bit foolishly, did they know the actual number of men of this type who have charge of theatre projection rooms—men who deep down in their souls care very little for the union, except as a means of forcing as much as possible from the exhibitor WITH THE LEAST POSSIBLE IN THE WAY OF RETURN. It might have proven an unpleasant surprise to them had they been with me when, less than a month ago, I entered the projection room of a 2,600 seat theatre, charging 25, 35 and 50 cents admission, and found the projectionist—pardon me—the OPERATOR—(who, when I ventured to comment adversely on what I saw, proudly displayed his union card and informed me he had "been op'ratin for twelve years) seated, with his back to the projectors, his feet cocked comfortably up on a bench, READING THE EVENING PAPER AND SMOKING A CIGARETTE. Under the projector mechanism was a reel can fully two thirds filled with oil which had dripped from the mechanism. It had very evidently not been emptied for several days.

Wrong View

Many union men condemn the publication of such things as this. In my opinion they take a wrong view. There is nothing kills evil so quickly and so effectively as publicity, or the fear of it. I do NOT do it as in the nature of a criticism of the union, except that I do intend to promote the idea that it is the duty of a union to check up the work of its members, and NOT PERMIT ANY MEMBER TO GET AWAY WITH SUCH RAW PROCEDURE AS THAT I HAVE JUST DESCRIBED. Can any one of you find any honest fault with that idea??? I reported this man to the union, but nothing effective was done about it.

You may say that it IS a slam on the union. Well, honestly, my good brother, don't YOU think a union which permits such CRUDE work as that OUGHT to get a little publicity? Mind you I am perfectly sincere in asking that question. If you can honestly say no to that, I would like to know how you square your ideas with RIGHT.

Unions Splendid

The union is a splendid organization. I have said, and I repeat that it has no more sincere friend in all this wide world, BAR NONE, than F. H. Richardson. But I am not foolish enough to imagine the union is perfect, and I don't believe it is either good policy or right policy to hide its faults, or the faults of its individual members, when those faults are such as work injury to the motion picture industry.

However, it is true that the type of man this cigarette-smoking, newspaper-reading machine attendant represents is decreasing in numbers day by day. It may even be now said that his type is now one of few, instead of one of many. But just the same he still IS with us, even in the extreme degree described, and his own cousin, Mr. Machine Attendant (Machine Operator) is still with us in very respectable numbers.

Did Good

Strange as it may seem at first glance, I am well pleased that the good brothers took umbrage at the cartoons, because that fact is evidence that they at least made them think; also it is proof that either they do respect the profession of projection, and therefore resent the apparent slam; either that or THOSE CARTOONS LANDED PRETTY SQUARELY ON THEIR OWN TOES. In either case the result is "not so bad." Personally I have faith to believe it was for the first named reason.

True! Alas Too True!

As to commercialism, why the charge is entirely true. How perfectly terrible! I naturally deal very largely with union men, and every gosh darned one of them who buys one of my books from my publishers in the process pays me a modest royalty. How perfectly frightfully commercial! Then, too, I get a very decent salary for editing this department. Horrible commercialism again! Their general idea is that union men have, out of the kindness of their hearts, given me all the various things contained in this department and in my books, hence I ought to edit the department for nothing and refuse any royalty on the books. Don't look so reasonable in cold print, does it boys? But that really is pretty close to the general idea of a lot of those who put up the "commercialism" talk, and now here is MY side of it. It seems almost too silly a thing to argue over, but just for this once I'll do it.

It is quite true that a great many men, union and otherwise, have, during the almost fifteen years of the life of this department, supplied much data of real value. No union has, so far as I can remember, as a union, supplied one solitary thing. Suppose they supplied it ALL. What of it? What earthly value would it have were Richardson not on the job to PUT IT INTO USABLE, UNDERSTANDABLE FORM, AND TO CIRCULATE IT THROUGH THE MEDIUM OF THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD AND THE HANDBOOKS, plus hundreds of editorials in which arguments were placed before THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY looking to the recognition of the importance of high grade projection, and men of ability in charge of the same. That last has a value to these men which they apparently have entirely overlooked.

As a plain matter of fact, very little of the data and information sent in by the men themselves has considerable large value in the form in which it is received. It takes a trained writer, and a darned well trained one too, let me inform you, to take the dope sent in, analyze it, revamp it, refine it and put it into understandable, readable form. If you doubt that, I wish you had the chance to try it for just one week, or even for one day.

Work

Not one letter in a hundred—yes, not one in a thousand can be or is published as it is received. If they were you would merely exclaim: "Well! What the  is it all about anyhow!" I read the letters, try to extract the writer's germinal ideas, and then I whip them into shape and re-write the whole thing for publication, adding such comment as may seem right and proper. That, gentlemen, is how the old thing really is done. It is the only way in which it could possibly be done, and be successful.

I am paid as an EDITOR and AUTHOR, exactly as you are paid as a motion picture projectionist. Much of my information and data does, as I have said, come from projectionists—men who have sufficient interest in and respect for their profession to try to help it onward and upward by aiding in the spreading of knowledge concerning it for the benefit of all concerned.

Department Yours

This department, gentlemen, is more yours than mine, and I have always regarded it that way. The absurd claim of "commercialism" could, with just as much reason, be turned around. I might say that union men read this department and use my books. By that process they make of themselves more valuable men, as I think they will themselves agree, hence at least in some measure the union is able to get more money for them.

Gosh! How dare the unions use the knowledge obtained through my books and this department to get more money with. How DARE they commercialize the knowledge they have obtained from or through me—no matter where I may myself have gotten it? Oh well, let us waste no more space with such nonsense, though at that the space is NOT wasted. Many men have a total misconception or misunderstanding of my work. Their ideas concerning it are both a bit foolish and entirely untenable. If they can be made to understand this, much lasting good will have been accomplished, because they will then work in harmoney, and cease opposition, however futile, to a work which should have their hearty support.

A Giggle

Some while ago we published a suggestion that the well known substance, used very liberally by surgeons as an absorbent during the late war, be used in the bottom of projector mechanisms to absorb surplus oil.

Now that was a perfectly good, chaste and legitimate stunt, but George Edwards, editor American Projectionist, had the ingrowing caststeel nerve to poke a large gob of alleged fun at it, which merely showed his lack of reverence, or something of that sort. Anyhow here is where I get good and even with him.

In the current isue of the American Projectionist Edwards publishes, page 14, with oodles of gravity, a "Projection room stunt," which we are presumed to assume to be so new and original that it still lacks hair and uses a bottle.

As nearly as I can recollect it was not published in this department until some time in 1914, or maybe 1915, but it does appear in figures 88 and 89 of the Third Edition of the Handbook, and in figure 88 of the Bluebook. George, George! I'm s'prised at yu'. This is 1924!

Y' will take a crack at my perfectly good oil absorbing stunt, will you? Keep still or next time I'll tellum you're bald headed, or sump'n.

Bluebook School—Answers 152-156

Question No. 152—Does making the sides of the picture parallel remove the distortion due to projection angle?

Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Mass.; P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Karl H. Sommermeyer, Marietta, Minn.; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; T. L. Grigsby, Jacksonville, Fla., and Robert D. Schofield, Portland, Oregon, all made acceptable answers to this one, but I'm wondering what has happened to Dobson, Oldham, Burnett and Hobdell. Seem to have crawled into some deep, dar-r-rk hole and pulled the hole carefully in after them.

I believe Gray's answer is perhaps most informative, though most of the rest are very good. Gray says:

I think it well to emphasize the difference between the effect of apparent distortion which occurs when a picture is viewed at a sharp side single, and the actual distortion of objects on the screen when the angle of projection exceeds a certain horizontal or vertical degree. The first condition is an illusion, and can be removed by changing the angle at which the picture is viewed. The second is a reality; an effect inherent in the picture itself, and cannot be changed by making the sides of the picture parallel. This method of making the sides parallel will, of course, affect and possibly improve the appearance of the outline of the picture, but it cannot possibly alter the relative dimensions and proportions of objects in the picture itself, and any distortion will remain as before.

Incidentally, Bennewitz appended this note to his answers to this series of questions:

Well, Frank, I had to rush through this, as a new pair of Simplex Twins arrived at the Strand this A. M., and I will be busy as a cat watching two mouse holes for quite some while. Will try not to miss any of the questions, though. I received a wonderful letter from Arthur H. Gray. It gave me a better idea as to what sort of man Gray is. I must answer it before I go home tonight, even though it be at 3 A. M. Hope you're over your radio scare. How do you like talking to some one you can't see?

Well, Brother Bennewitz, at least it has the advantage that he or she can't get gay and sass me back! Glad you get the expected new equipment. I have not met Gray personally, but look forward to the time when I will with much interest. Would like to see Gray head a chapter of the American Projection Society in Boston. Why not examine into the matter, Brother Gray?

Question No. 153—Describe, in detail, all the various evil effects of distortion in the screen image.

Blah! This proved, as I suspected it might, a poser for them all. I shall therefore take the liberty of replying to it myself.

The evil effects of distortion are many and widely diverse.

FIRST: There is of course the ineviable distortion of side lines, known as keystone effect, or of top and bottom lines if the lens be off center with the screen center, but level therewith, or of both top and bottom and side lines if the lens be above or below screen center and also to one side of it, as I have found to be the condition in a few cases.

SECOND: There will be the inevitable distortion of all objects in the picture, which if the projection angle be vertical, will make them unnaturally tall with relation to their average width, with their lower parts (I speak of a downward projector angle) increased in width in proportion to their upper parts. In other words, all objects will be "wedge" shaped in proportion to the amount of angle between the axis of projection and the screen surface.

THIRD: Since the effect of "depth" is dependent upon both the relative sizes of objects and to their apparent intensity of illumination, the distortion of the picture injures the depth of perspective and tends to thus "flatten" the picture, because it alters the relative sizes of all objects in the picture; also to some extent it tends to alter their illumination, which adds to the injury.

FOURTH: There is the difficulty of obtaining a perfectly sharp focus all over the screen, which theoretically cannot be done at all, and which actually cannot be accomplished under some conditions of distortion, except by a large reduction of projection lens diameter, with consequent diminuition in screen illumination.

FIFTH: The injuries done to the screen image react to the injury of box office receipts in the end, because the thing the public buys is not nearly so pleasing in appearance as it would be were the picture undistorted.

SIXTH: With some types of screen there will be a serious fade-away as viewed from the balcony, if the angle of projection be sufficient to produce very much distortion, though this last is, of course, because the right type of screen has not been selected for the condition, modified by the fact that with a deep, narrow house it is impossible to meet this condition and still install the type of screen surface the house needs.

Question No. 154—How may the sides of the picture be made parallel when there is keystone effect? Watch your step here.

Um, well I dunno. Told you to watch your step. Hanover seems to be the only one who has covered this one in all its phases. He says:

The sides of a distorted picture may be made parallel by the following methods:

(1) By either filling in the sides of the projector aperture with hard solder, or securing a special aperture from the projector manufacturer and filing the sides according to the directions contained on pages 257-258 of the Bluebook, which are too lengthy to recite here.

(2) By tilting the aperture plate itself—which is not really a very practical thing to do.

(3) By tilting the screen so that its surface is perpendicular to the axis of projection.

(4) By allowing the picture sides to extend over upon a perfectly flat, dead black border.

(5) By relocating the projection room so that the lens will be where it should be—opposite the center of the screen.

Gray does not, I think, really answer the question as it is put, but just the same what he does say is well worthy of consideration, hence I shall lay it before you. He says:

In considering this question I shall outline my ideas regarding the advisability of only APPARENTLY paralleling the sides of the picture when a vertical keystone effect exists. I do not think it is best practice to make the sides of a picture actually vertical when a keystone effect by reason of vertical projection angle occurs. Under this condition (that is, always when lens sets above a level with top of screen) any and all objects in the picture having an appreciable height are visibly and increasingly widened in a direction towards the bottom af the picture. Now if the sides be made parallel, or truly vertical, then this distortion of objects in the picture will be accentuated, because heretofore the flare of the outline and that of any vertical object near the side of the picture has been equal, but now this relativity has been altered, and the distortion emphasized. Furthermore, the resultant outline effect of keystone will be reversed and will appear more pronounced in its new position than was the case before. I believe it to be sound practice to "fake" the vertical sides, bringing them down at an angle half-way between the true vertical and the actual flare of the outline, and we thus obtain an APPARENTLY rectangular picture. This correction may be obtained by doctoring the aperture, which is fully covered on pages 257 and 258 of the Bluebook, or by letting the picture overlap onto a perfectly flat jet black border. It is my practice to adopt the latter method.

Question No. 155—Is keystone effect always accompanied by out-of-focus effect? If you say yes, then tell us why.

Bennewitz, Fell, Gray, Thomas, Sommermeyer, Hanover, Grigsby and Schofield all "made good" on this one.

Fell answers correctly and informatively in very few words. He says:

Keystone effect is always accompanied by out-of-focus effect, which is more pronounced when the angle is sidewise, because of the fact that the width of the picture exceeds its height. This is caused by the fact that a projection lens is presumed to form a sharp image at a definite, given distance from its focal center—at one of its conjugate foci points—and when there is keystone effect (distortion due to projection angle) the distance from the optical center of the lens to different parts of the screen surface varies, and varies in proportion to the angle of the screen surface to the axis of projection. Under this condition it is impossible to get a perfectly sharp focus all over the screen, though if the angle be not too great a definition sufficiently sharp to be acceptable may be accomplished.

I think Gray's answer ought also to be published. Here it is. I have not added a word to it, or taken one away. It is very seldom indeed that anything reaches this editorial desk (and pretty high-ups write me not infrequently, too) which shows better form as a written argument. I therefore congratulate Gray on his reply to question No. 155.

Keystone effect is, by the very nature of optical laws regarding lens action, invariably accompanied by a certain amount of out-of-focus-effect in the picture. It cannot be otherwise, because the same factor or condition which causes the keystone effect (primarily the difference in distances between various areas of the screen and the projection lens) prevents the lens from sharply focusing the image of the film over the entire surface of the screen. The degree to which this out-of-focus effect will become objectionable depends upon the extent to which we depart from localized ideal projecting conditions. The ideal condition means one where the projection axis strikes the screen at a point equidistant from its four corners and at a perpendicular to both horizontal and vertical planes of the screen surface. A projection lens which is highly corrected for spherical aberration possesses the quality of sharply focusing the image of the flim in a flat, or more accurately, slightly concave spherical plane. If the screen surface be placed in proper relative position with the projection axis, this condition will allow the entire surface to be included in, or very near, the focusing plane of the projection lens when the working distance of the lens has been correctly adjusted for the projecting distance involved. Now, if a vertical angle of projection exists (which is the case with vertical keystone and the cause of same) then the entire screen surface cannot possibly all be at the focusing plane of the lens. Part of the screen—say, lower half—may intercept the light beam ahead of the focusing plane while upper half will be beyond it. Thus, we may sharply focus a particular section of the picture at an appreciable sacrifice of definition in another area, or we may maintain the best possible mean focus over the entire picture, which, of course, is decidedly the best practice.

I want a photograph of all those who are now answering, or who have been answering Bluebook School questions, for publication. Would also ask that in future those who "join" the School accompany their first set of answers with a photograph.

Question No. 156—Tell us the different methods available for sharpening the definition all over the screen when there is heavy pitch in projection.

Schofield is the only one who covered this question fully. He says:

The question does not say whether methods which I might myself consider impracticable should be included or not, hence I suppose all methods should be given. First, one may set the screen at a slant, which may be such that the surface will be at right angles with the projection axis, or the tilt may be only enough to effect an acceptable compromise.

Second, tilting the projector aperture plate will accomplish the same purpose. This also may be enough to effect a complete remedy, or it may be a compromise.

Third, relocation of the projection room so that the lens will be sufficiently close to opposite the center of the screen to avoid objectionable out-of-focus effect.

Fourth, the diameter of the projection lens may be reduced by placing a disc of cardboard of metal cut to fit snugly into the front end of the projection lens and rest against the front lens surface. This disc should have a hole about one inch in diameter in its exact center, which same should be enlarged until the out-of-focus appears. Then make a new disc, in which the hole is a trifler smaller, paint it dead (non-gloss) black, and install it permanently.

Fifth, it is possible to overcome the trouble by installing a mirror in front of the projection lens to reflect the beam vertically downward, and another lower down to reflect it to the screen. Of course this is seldom if ever a really practical thing to do. I only name it for the sake of completeness.

Gray says: I would first try to reduce the angle of projection, if only by a small amount. It may be possible to lower the projectors a little, or to raise the screen some, or both. Where the screen is located fairly well back on the stage I believe in the tilting method. This will materially reduce the effective projection angle (angle of screen surface to axis of projection) and therefore improve the condition generally. However, this method is not advisable if the screen be located at front of stage, or where the tilting trick will be visible to the audience.

Stopping down the free diameter of the projection lens will, of course, give the lens greater depth of focus, and therefore aid in remedying the trouble. If it be feasible to reduce the size of the picture, it will help in some degree, because in a given condition any increase in size of picture, or decrease in projection distance, or both combined, will add to the difficulty in securing evenly sharp focus all over the screen surface.

Basson Runs

"Joe" Basson, known to you all for years, is running for president of Local Union 306, New York City Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O.

It is not the desire of the editor of this department, or the policy of the department itself to enter into union "politics"—a none too clean thing usually.

However, under the conditions it seems only fair and right to direct the attention of the motion picture projectionists of Greater New York City to the know fact that "Joe" Basson is a clean-cut man, who ranks high, either as a man, an executive or as a motion picture projectionist. HE IS A MAN WHO CAN AND WILL COMMAND THE RESPECT OF THE "BOSSES." He is a man any organization might feel proud to have as its chief executive officer.

I can personally vouch for the fact that Basson is running for the office NOT because he wants the OFFICE, but because he believes that under existing conditions it is his DUTY—with which view this department most thoroughly and most heartily agrees. If the REAL men of 306 all vote, Joe will win very easily. IT IS UP TO THE PROJECTIONISTS OF GREATER NEW YORK.

A Stunt

K. H. Sommermeyer, Marietta, Minn., says:

Take it from me, that idea of looking right into the crater image reflected from the collector lens is a good one. I discovered it while looking for those multiple images, but thought nothing of it at the time.

Here is a stunt for trouble proof rheostat connections. Write the Mueller Electric Company, 1583 East 31st street, Cleveland, Ohio, for a price list of their test clips, from which select a clip designed for about twice the amperage you propose using it for, and use them instead of the regular terminal lug. I have a piece of lamphouse cable (Presumably asbestos covered stranded wire.—Ed.) about two feet long, with one of the clips at either end. This I use as a temporary repair, should a rheostat coil burn out or get loose.

Can't kick on the film service we get except for the punch marks, and short leaders and trailers.

Next time you are going to happen out this way, loosen up and let us know. Had I known you were to be in Sioux Falls I'd have been there too.

Sorry, Old Topper. I'd have been delighted to have shaken your hand and swapped talk with you. Next time—maybe.

The short asbestos cable and clips for temporary rheostat repairs sounds mighty good, but I've my doubts about using them for permanent binding post connections, because the connection, while firm, has not a very wide area, hence I would suppose would develop heat, hence resistance.

Punch marks and short leaders and trailers seem to me to be "not so good," though of course if that is all the faults you find, it might be very much worse.

Mazda

J. Robert Marksbury, Projectionist Hipp Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, asks whether or not I would advise installing Mazda where the projection distance is 120 feet and the picture will be twelve feet wide. He also remarks that if ever I again pass through Sioux City without letting the projectionists of that community know, I will probably catch a brickbat enthusiastically heaved in my direction by the combined hands of them all. That is not exactly the way he puts it, true, but anyhow it is the general idea he hands Yours Truly.

Brother Marksbury, I don't feel a bit guilty —not a gosh danged bit. When Sioux Falls asked me to come to their city and the local offered to pay all the expense of the trip from and returning to Omaha, I accepted their offer, and finding that I would pass right through Sioux City I wrote the Secretary of your local, as per his address in the I. A. Bulletin, offering to stop, provided your union would split the expense with Sioux Falls. That I regarded as only fair to Sioux Falls, which local did NOT suggest it.

The letter was not returned by the post office, so it certainly must have reached some one in your city. I received just exactly no reply at all, which surprised me as I had not expected such unnecessary discourteous treatment from the Sioux City local. Glad to know the local did not get it. Would have been well pleased to have met the Sioux City men again.

As to the other matter: You can, by reason of recent improvements in condenser systems, get results from Mazda under the conditions named.

Samuel Gompers

Samuel Gompers—familiarly known to tens of thousands as "Sam"—has entered the mists of the Unknown. His long, tempestuous voyage over the Sea of Life is done. His ship has tied up to the Dock of Eternity.

I knew "Sam" Gompers personally in days gone by. I have eaten with him, drank with him and, upon one occasion at least, slept with him. Samuel Gompers was more than a wonderful man. He was a marvelous man, and a man of many sides. One of the best "mixers" I ever knew, he could take charge of a stormy meeting of rough men engaged in a near riot, calm them down, conduct the meeting in orderly fashion, make a speech that was little short of an oration, leave the hall and resume good fellowship at the bar, retire in the wee small hours, and next day be as alert and capable as though he had taken his normal rest.

Those who enjoyed his personal friendship could not but like the MAN. He was intensely loyal to his friends. But aside from friendship, it would indeed be a strange man who would not admire Samuel Gompers for his sterling ABILITY and tenacity of purpose.

Last time I was in Washington, friend Daughter and I called at the A. F. of L. headquarters, saw "Sam" for a few moments (he had three committees waiting audience and was very busy) and shook hands with him. I had not met him since 1902, yet he remembered me, and regretted lack of time to sit down and swap talk about old times in Colorado.

Well, his time had come and he had to go, even as you and I, my friend, must one day go. I am so thankful that his ending was peaceful and without suffering. This country will miss him, and I venture the prophecy that even the class we call "Capitalistic" will wish him back more than once in the days to come.

"A sigh for the past, and a tender tear
For those who have gone before,
On the phantom trains that disappear
In the mists of that Endless Shore."

Film Damage!

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

This week we show you another installment of the photograph supplied by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. These photographs were prepared in the Famous Players-Lasky laboratories, under the direct personal supervision of Earl J. Dennison. They certainly should teach a graphic lesson to us all. They illustrate to what extent a comparatively small primary damage to films may and probably will expand, through continued use and CONTINUED ABUSE.

These pictures show film in a condition with which the projectionist is very familiar, and to which the old saw "familiarity breeds contempt" applies, especially if altered to read: Familiarity breeds INDIFFERENCE. The projectionist sees these things almost every day in the films he handles, but we hope that showing them in this form may jar you loose from your indifference, and into a realization of what high projection speed, work sprockets, a too-heavy take-up tension, either separately or combined, means in the way of damage to the thing YOU must work with every day, and upon the perfect condition of which both YOU, and THOSE PROJECTIONISTS AND OPERATORS WHO MUST USE THE FILMS AFTER YOU ARE FINISHED WITH THEM, MUST DEPEND FOR A DECENT PICTURE UPON THE SCREEN.

REMEMBER

Let me drive this thought home. YOU have no right to complain of the abuses to which the films have been subjected by those who used them before you, unless YOU are yourself careful to inflict no unnecessary damage upon them. THAT IS JUST PLAIN TRUTH, IS IT NOT????

In examining plates No. 6 and 7 do not forget that the condition shown is caused by (A) Excessive projection speed; (B) Excessive tension at the projector aperture, which same may be caused by just plain failure of the projectionist or operator to test and adjust the tension to the minimum needs of his maximum projection speed, or may be caused by the fact that excessive projection speed (due to direct order to "speed 'em up," or to the fact that the time schedule is too short for the footage of the show) compels excessive tension; (C) By badly worn sprockets; (E) By a combination or two or more of these various things.

PLATE No. 6

Comment by Mr. Dennison: Shows how film with badly fractured perforations (Condition No. 3) will go to pieces.

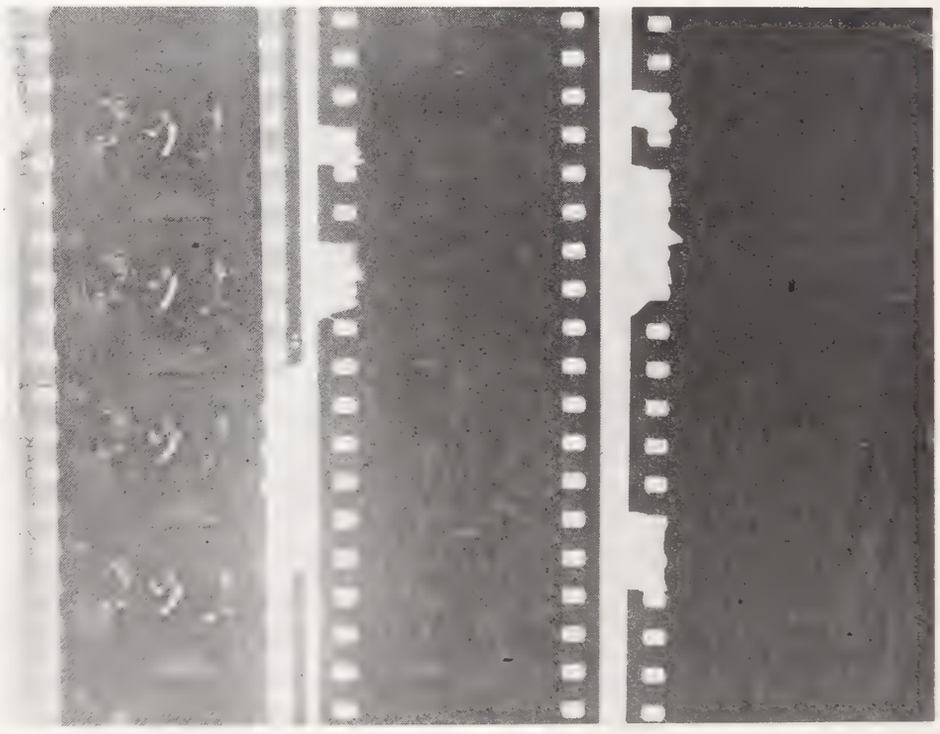

PLATE No. 7

Comment by Mr. Dennison: Other example s showing how film disintegrates by reason of overstrained sprocket holes.

Hot Dog

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota, in course of a letter, says:

I am up against a keystone effect in one of the public schools here. What do you suppose the excuse of the jackass of an architect is? He asked some one who was supposed to be in the know (a supply dealer, I dare say.—Ed.) on such things, who told him it did not make any difference, as they were now making projectors which would swing to either side, and thus overcome it.

Gosh, yes! It certainly must have been a supply dealer, because for some ununderstandable reason they seem to be consulted when projection problems come up, and that sounds like one of their answers.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

More and more are your audiences coming to appreciate photographic quality on the screen. It is one of the factors that count in making your bookings box office successes.

Eastman Positive Film takes care of this requisite—it carries quality through to the screen.

Look in the transparent film margin for the identification "EASTMAN" "KODAK" in black letters.

From a man presumably connected with Sioux Falls, So. Dakota Schools comes the following:

Would you kindly inform me as to whether or not it is practicable to set a motion picture at an angle of say 30 degrees to the curtain? We have an auditorium in one of our grade schools which is used for a combination of purposes, and in order that there be no obstruction in the way of the basket ball frame the picture machine booth (God in heavens what nomenclature. But our friend is blameless, as motion picture people, and particularly the projectionist, has himself taught these terms.—Ed.) was set off in one corner of the room. The room is approximately 40 by 60 feet.

I suppose that a special lens could be provided to correct any distortion which might occur because of the setting of the picture machine at an angle.

In the first place, my dear sir, it is not a "picture machine," but a motion picture projector. A camera is a machine, but you don't say the camera machine, do you? We call the motion picture projector a "projector" for short. In the second place it is not a "booth," but a projection room. Look in your Webster for definition of "booth." Please clearly understand that I am NOT criticising YOU. The motion picture industry is responsible for the rather foolish nomenclature which is used, and the layman is not to be blamed for adopting the terms he hears motion picture men themselves employ. However, you asked to be set right on one thing, so I'm adding to that a bit.

It is, so far as science knows, impossible to construct a lens which will "correct distortion" caused by setting the projector off center with the screen. In order to do that it would be necessary that the lens project light rays which would curve, and up to now that particular feat has not been found possible.

Great Angle

An angle of thirty degrees down is more than twice the angle approved by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and because of the fact that the picture is wider than it is high (when undistorted) the off center to one side is much worse in its effect. A thirty degree angle is not a condition which ought to be considered at all, and if the lens is also above the screen center, then the condition would result in a double distortion.

It seems to me it is largely a question as to whether the motion picture or the basket ball game ought to suffer. Certainly, as you have described conditions, one of them must.

You have a man in your city who is thoroughly competent to advise you with regard to such matters, and that is G. W. Bennewitz, Projectionist at the Strand Theatre. See him and depend upon it that his advice may be followed with perfect confidence.

Rampart Theatre Opens in Los Angeles, Cal.

Another motion picture theatre has taken its place among Los Angeles' elaborate residential district's playhouses when the new Rampart Theatre opened recently.

The theatre, which is considered a first class house in the Angel city was built by W. A. Sobelman in conjunction with John Balk and Lewellyn J. Smith. It is said to be one of the most picturesque cinema houses ever constructed on the west coast and only the highest class of films are being projected there.

The Rampart Theatre is a splendid structure covering a lot 100 by 125 feet and costing approximately $125,000.

Uses Two Motiographs

The projection installation at the new Prince of Wales Theatre, Danforth Avenue, Toronto, is one of the finest for a neighborhood house in the Dominion. The equipment, which was installed by J. H. Coleman of the Coleman Electric Company, Toronto, consists of two model 1002-F DeLuxe Motiograph machines, these having full pilot light equipment, reel end alarms and Bausch & Lomb Cinephor lenses. Alternating line current is supplied to a General Electric two-arc motor generator set which supplies 50 amperes of direct current to the arcs at proper voltage. The projection room, generally, is considered a model in every respect. The Prince of Wales Theatre was build by Ald. Sommerville of Toronto and the manager is Roy O'Connor, who is well known in the moving picture field.

The New Stanford For Palo Alto, Cal.

The Palo Alto Theatre Company, of Palo Alto, Cal., owners of the Sanford and Varsity theatres, has broken ground for a new theatre, to cost $300,000. Entrance to the new building will be between the present Stanford Theatre and the Weingartner Building and will have a width of twenty-five feet.

The length of the vestibule and foyer will be one hundred feet, which will extend to the auditorium, with seating capacity of 1,500. The interior dimensions of the auditorium will be eighty by one hundred forty feet, providing a high balcony, with seating capacity of 500. A portion of the lower floor will be devoted to loges. A $40,000 organ will be a feature.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

The past week proved rather light from the standpoint of motion picture companies incorporating and entering the business in New York state. Six companies were chartered by the secretary of state, the amount of capitalization in all but one instance being comparatively low. The newly incorpated companies included the following: Ruad Producing Co., Inc., capitalized at $10,000, with and Gerson Werner, Nettie Saron, New York City; Newhouse Theatre Corporation, Hempstead, $400,000, F. S. Baldwin, George Baukney, Hempstead; Jacob Newhouse, Woodmere; Baird-Beck Pictures Corporation, $20,000, H. G. Kosch; A. Thompson, E. Bregstein, New York City; Davadel Plays, Inc., capitalization not specified, with E. B. Griffin, H. M. Tewart, New York; C. S. Hoffman, Brooklyn; R. C. S. Amusement Corporation, $20,000, Morris and Louis Rosen, Pincus Cohen, Brooklyn; Ross Pictures Corporation, $20,000, Nat Ross, Hollywood, Cal.; V. A. Matthews, Rachel Marmor, New York City.

Index to Photoplays

Accompanying list includes, in addition to pictures announced for release during months of November and December, all productions on which reviews were published during this period, the date of issue containing this information being also shown. Where such reference is omitted, information will probably appear in next volume.

Serials are indexed under general title. Unless otherwise specified, all subjects listed are five-reel dramas.

Great care has been used to make this information as accurate as possible. If any errors are detected, we would appreciate having our attention called to them, so that our card index may be corrected.

If information is desired regarding any picture, either previously released or forthcoming, which is not included in this list, we will be pleased to furnish same on request.

Story

Wayne Morgan, an artist, learns from his mother that a valuable painting has been stolen, and to get track of it he takes a job as a porter in the Randolph Art Shop. Finally he discovers the picture has been copied and denounces the copy as packing inspiration, and claims the original. Mellon who stole it is sent to prison and Wayne gets his position as store manager. Christine Randolph who painted the copy encourages Wayne who falls in love with her and then tells him it was all a plot to get even with him. The great Chicago fire breaks out, due to Mrs. Leary's cow kicking over a lantern, setting fire to the barn. The whole city is destroyed, Wayne rescues Christine who declares her real love for him.

"Pathe Review No. 52"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"The Gowns of Today," the third and last of the "History of Fashions" series heads the latest magazine release. It shows how straight lines and curves are the basis for every design of milady's gowns. Some interesting Parisian styles are exhibited in this subject. The manufacture of silver products from the raw material to the finished ware is very interesting. The Pathecolor is of the "Visiting Our Own America" series and the scenes are of Memphis, Tenn.—T. W.

"Monsieur Don't Care"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel is featured in this Joe Rock Production, a take-off on "Monsieur Beaucaire." As M. Dont Care he is forced to flee France for England and takes work as a barber. Complications follow—duels, a love affair with the Belle of Bath and the expose of M. Don't Care as a prince. The feature, in which Valentino plays, is burlesqued to the nth degree. Some of the comedy is very effective, while it must also be said that some is weak.—S. S.
